After having gone through the whole Dark Arts book, Wei Ying sticks a few twisty crystals into the clay and they sink into the figure like quicksand; the humanoid clay figure starts to wobble like jelly after consuming the crystals, and the shards glow brightly like white-hot flames within it. Lan Zhan turns around from where he sat at the doorsteps, pays a bit more attention to what Wei Ying is doing, and folds his periodical away - the shimmering crystals gravitate towards each other inside the increasingly liquidly humanoid figure, they spiral, spin, elongate and retract, and coil around until they form single, then double helixes and multiples of those strange but pretty crystalline shapes in a distorted body that's fast melting into a pool of muddy sludge, which dribble along the edges of the table and splatter unceremoniously to the floor.

"It's... ALIVE !!!" Wei Ying yells at the top of his lungs and swings his arms wildly, and he casts a Thunder talisman that was pulled out from his sleeves at the last minute. Unsurprisingly, lightning strikes and thunder roars right above them; Lan Zhan drops his periodical with a curse under his breath and he quickly runs into the kitchen-cum-dining area to make sure that Wei Ying isn't burnt to crisp this time.

.

"Wei Ying, was... all of this... really necessary?" Lan Zhan mutters with an annoyed tone, and waves an arm around the mud-splattered kitchen. He scrubs the walls with a brown-stained washcloth to remove liquefied dirt that originated from their outdoor pool, while D-Broom diligently sucks up leftover sand, caked mud and chocolate gelato-like goo off the floor. Wei Ying squats on the ground with a pout, rubbing a bump on his head after being smacked by a Dustless Broom handle stick by the patriarch, and slowly picks up pieces of cracked ceramic - in his 'mad sorcerer' moment, he'd knocked down the drying rack on the kitchen counter and sent a few plates crashing to the floor.

"Umm... I just needed to stick the crystals into an inanimate medium containing our genetic material, so that they'll stand properly, and cast my brand of magic. The rest are... well... Lan Zhan, I really, really, really wanted to try that Dark Arts ritual at least once in my life! Even though I know it doesn't do anything, I was really cool back then, right? Right? Was I awesome just now?" Wei Ying's pensive mood switches easily. His eyes sparkle despite the throbbing pain on the top of the head.

Lan Zhan sighs, reaches over and places a soft kiss on Wei Ying's mud-smeared forehead. Wei Ying giggles and gets back to cleaning up the mess left in the kitchen, earnestly. There are still bits of ash on the chair cushions, half-burnt talismans stuck to surfaces, melted candle wax on the floor, and fizzled incense sticks scattered everywhere.

A warm wiggly white tentacle about two feet tall, seemingly lacking any other body parts, sprouts from the stony ground. It quietly glides to a corner, and watches the couple work to rid the kitchen of earthly filth, and return it to its pristine state.

"Same rules apply. No entry to our underground pantry. It can make a home underneath the floor mat if it wants to. Obey our family rules, be useful to the family, do not cause trouble or disrepute, do not steal souls and bodies, do not play god without our - including my - permission. You know the rest," Lan Zhan reads aloud his conditions impassively as he fills a basin in the kitchen sink with clean water needed to wash the floor. He doesn't even bat an eyelid to the newcomer of their household.

"She."

"What?" Lan Zhan spins around with a half-wrung washcloth in his hand, incredulous.

“It’s a she. I made her out of sugar, spice and everything nice. The crystals give life and sentient thought and consciousness, but I assigned the female gender to her. She’s a good child, and blessed with a wonderful name; I’m certain of it,” Wei Ying whispers and reaches out with a hand towards the tentacle. It - she - bends over and lets Wei Ying shake the tip, almost like a charming, cute and friendly handshake. A soft, high-pitched childish feminine voice is heard, “Mom” (娘).

Lan Zhan hmphs, and marches out of the kitchen to grab a mop from the workroom.

The little tentacle releases its hold, and bends the other way. It tries to extend towards Lan Zhan the moment the man passed by in a rush, but Lan Zhan wouldn’t go near it/her - he side-stepped it/her entirely to get out of the kitchen.

Little Ni-er (女儿; nǚ ér; daughter) whines softly at the man who disappears into the next room without a word, “Dad...” (爹).

Notes for the Chapter:

I'm running low on Zhan Ge and Yibo didi materials lately. There's really not much new exciting info, but at least I see a poster for The Fatal Journey... what secrets lie with the Nie brothers and JGY's treachery? :-D

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 73

Ernie was conjured from seven days' worth of universally godly magic and born in the night of midsummer, courtesy of an awesome artificially-enhanced Wei Wuxian from a timeskip ten years into the future. It - by now, it should be assigned a gender, presumably male, therefore "he" - was made from Wei Wuxian's magic, then he obtained (stole, perhaps) the body and soul of Lan Wang Ji. Due to his Corrupted nature, he is always called the "cold black thing", and his natural state is a shapeless form with countless black tentacles that makes him look like a devolved octopus gone insane in transformation. He tends to lean towards his Mother's side in terms of rash behaviours, emo-personality, amazing intellect and unbelievable thinking processes, while he appears physically like his Father when a humanoid form is necessary.

Ni-er, on the other hand, was conceived from seven consecutive days' worth of awesome, incredible love by its - her - parents, and born in the middle of one fine winter day, about three months after Ernie's birth. She was made mostly from Lan Wang Ji's genetic material - seed and blood included, along with sugar, spice and everything nice - and given a body made from natural earth by Wei Wuxian. She is made of Purity, born from ageless crystals that glow and shine even in the depths of the darkest caverns, and assumes a physique can be cutely described as a "warm white thing"; her natural state is a single clearly-defined white appendage that looks no different than a short and stout-looking bolster pillow - huggable, velvety, sometimes fluffy like a cat's tail, with a chubby tapered end similar to a bamboo shoot. She is calm, quiet and rather introverted, pretty much like her Father, although she seems shorter and smaller in stature, like her Mother.

Mother, it is holding my tentacle. It's curling around my limb! It's... it's saying a word... "Brother" (哥哥; gē; older brother)... in such a sweet voice!

“That’s because she recognizes you as her older brother. Ni-er, as meimei , say hello to your big brother.”

(a soft gurgling sound with tinkles of wind chimes is heard in the background)

Mother, I feel... joy, anxious, warm, worry, and I think... love, but in a different way. I want to hold Ni-er, care for her, protect her, play with her, show her who I am, and what I have. Is Ni-er... really... my younger sister? Am I... a big brother?

Wei Ying laughs as he lounges on the bed, with little fluffy Ni-er happily snuggled in her mother’s arms, and both are telepathically connected to ErNet - while Lan Zhan is blissfully ignorant and busies himself by cooking a late lunch in the kitchen that’s been wiped down from an earth-shattering experiment (literally an apocalyptic scene from mud-slinging and splattering); Wei Ying is forbidden to enter the kitchen and to cause anymore troubles until a proper family meal is prepared.

“Yes, Ernie, you’re a big boy now. You have to sort out your feelings and learn about loving a new sibling. Ni-er is just a little over an hour old, so she’s very innocent and doesn’t know the ways of the world. She’s your little sister for the rest of this lifetime, and beyond. And you’re always a big brother to her.”

...Mn. I understand.

I will cherish meimei like a caring, responsible elder brother.

Wei Ying looks up to the ceiling, but he isn't looking at the cracks on the walls, or the dusty lanterns that need a good wipe - he reminisces about his childhood days with Jiang Cheng - the times where they sit down for family meals under the watchful eyes of Madam Yu; when they swim and play in the waters near lakeside Lotus Pier, and throw unripe lotus seed pods at each other; when they tumble on the floor in a scuffle over shijie 's last bowl of lotus root pork rib soup, although there's enough for everyone; and when older Wei Ying piggybacks a teary-eyed tiny Jiang Cheng after the latter fell off a tree branch, when they went out to catch fireflies and other insects.

“I know it's a little too early to say this, but as your Mother, I need to tell you since you're so busy working on your new multiverses, and you may lose sight of the most important things in life:

There will be times when you will argue, fight and feel jealous of each other, just like brothers and sisters do, but you must always be the elder - so you need to learn to let go, accept her for who she is, and forgive her.

There will be times when you have to be infinitely patient as Ni-er grows up, explores her world, stumbles on her mistakes and causes you and everyone trouble. You have to act like an elder, teach her, and get her back on track.

Some day, when Mother and Father are no longer around, you must remember that both of you have each other, and you'll never be alone.

Especially for meimei (little sister), she's so young and you're all that she has in this world. Take care of her, love her, she'll be by your side... always."

Wei Ying could hear a teardrop fall, and of tiny cold black hearts shatter into smaller pieces; in their place, something living, rather warm and not so dark, throbs with adoration and newfound unconditional sibling love. In some ways, his big boy has just grown a little more.

...Mn. I will take these advice and lessons to heart.

Thank you, Mother, for guiding me about loving another of my kind.

And also, for acknowledging me as... your son.

Initiating upgrading of core programming and root directories...

There is a virtual hug in ErNet's psychic space, and little Ni-er squeals with joy when she feels a gentle psychic appendage tickle her puffy blunt tip.

Meimei , come with gege . Take gege 's hand. Gege will take you to the playground.

Wei Ying sighs contently at an imaginary 'happily ever after' scene of a young teenage boy holding hands with his toddler sister, walking to the local playground not far from one of Yiling's residential areas. The white tentacle in his arms has gone still - probably sleeping, since it twitches occasionally in his arms. He puts Ni-er on a pillow, and quietly slides off the bed to check on Lan Zhan.

Wei Ying tells himself that bringing Ni-er to the world is the right thing to do.

His children will never be alone again.

.

At two in the afternoon, both men are ravenous although Wei Ying keeps his slobbering greed in check by taking time between mouthfuls to feed bits of food to a tiny mouth near the tip of Ni-er's tentacle, who continues to snuggle against her mother's chest, cocooned in her mother's arm.

"It eats." It is a little unnerving to see a small delicate toothless mouth at the end of a faceless, giant cat's tail, from the older man's perspective.

"She."

Lan Zhan sighs and picks on his simple lunch of rice, steamed meat patty, boiled tofu and cabbage, and corrects himself. "She eats."

“Yes, she does. Unlike the other, she is a true living entity, so she needs to eat, sleep, rest, play, poop and pee,” Wei Ying murmurs as another bit of crumbly fried egg yolk gets consumed from chopsticks. Wei Ying intentionally fried an egg on the pan because he thought the food on the table was unsuitable for his newborn’s palate. Satisfied that Ni-er chewed and swallowed the egg properly, he takes a spoonful from the rice bowl for himself. “Although over time, she will grow up and evolve into something better with her brother’s help,” he adds, and places a kiss on the side of the fluffy wriggling tentacle. It - she - squeals with delight and whispers “Mom”.

“Brother?”

Wei Ying rolls his eyes, “You have a terrible memory as a father who has forgotten his adolescent son!” and rudely points chopsticks at the said father, “Unlike you, I, as the mother, cannot leave my children alone. You can blame my Yunmeng Jiang upbringing for sticking too close and helicopter over my kids even though one of them has grown up. Or you can blame your Gusu Lan’s hands-offish ways to kick the kids out of the house the moment they’ve reached your so-called standards of adulthood!” he snaps with little warning, then angrily snatches a chunk of meat patty off the plate and bites into it.

(Lan Zhan remembers reading something about ‘postpartum depression’ and ‘angry new aspiring mothers’ from the medical texts in Yiling’s Library Pavilion, but he’s sure Wei Ying didn’t become pregnant and give birth - not even to the newborn tentacle.)

The older man puts down his chopsticks and gazes at the pouting, irrationally upset spouse. It takes a few seconds to piece together history and logic.

“Ernie? Is Ernie still alive?”

Wei Ying bristles at the last word. “ALIVE?! Is that what you can say about our boy? You never asked about him in the last few months, and you happily assume that our world is rebooted to your Perfectly happy state, with a home just for the two of us!” There are so many stinging accusations in those words.

“But... how? You didn’t tell me--” and Lan Zhan shuts his mouth, because he realized belatedly that he’s stepped on landmines.

“DIDN’T TELL YOU? You never asked! Not even a word about Ernie! Not even a mention of his name! You’ve really forgotten your son, haven’t you? You’ve even forgotten who made him and--” bowls and cutlery rattle when Wei Ying slams the table top, and his pent-up emotions explodes straight into the face of the husband. Even the white tentacle jolts a bit in her mother’s cuddle - but fortunately doesn’t cry.

Lan Zhan hurried from his seat and captured Wei Ying in a full-bodied embrace, including little Ni-er. The white tentacle gurgles curiously at the sudden tightness and body warmth - and the comforting scent of her father. Wei Ying stills and reels in from the shock of a furious outburst and fat tears rolling down his reddened eyes and cheeks.

“Ssssh. Wei Ying. I’m asking now. Please tell me. About Ernie. About Nier,” and the older man squeezes his grip on his precious family at the dining table.

Lan Zhan thought living out his days as a common peasant with a lovely spouse, with nary a concern for the world beyond their cave-home and estate, would be his Happily Ever After - how wrong he was, now that he knows that Wei Ying has built a bigger, better family for him.

.

Wei Ying sobbed and rubbed hot angry tears from his face as he narrated his side of the story. He explained what really happened three months ago: when the Universe burnt down and they were the only mortal survivors of the last Universal Reincarnation - time was never reversed, in that sense, since the gods simply recreated mostly everything up to the point before the Great Fires and the snake ghouls hunt that went terribly wrong. He also told Lan Zhan about Ernie, who escaped through the last remaining space-time bubble and warped out into another universe, far, far away from the gods and the parents; and also explained, in between agonizing hiccups, about how their UFO eventually found its way to their cave-home, where everything from the past was purposefully hidden away, so that Lan Zhan wakes up to a bright happy world of sorts - minus Ernie, minus the Tians and minus the memories that Wei Ying had to try and suppress and forget because ‘they never happened’.

Wei Ying had buried his feelings and thoughts from the so-called unforgettable summer for the last three months, while bravely putting up a smiling, cheerful front; making regular trips to Yiling and keep himself busy by being productive all day; drowning himself with Laozu Smiles at nights when images of happier times rear their ugly heads after sunset; and tried to satisfy the husband with abundant showers of love and sex - which did help to ease the pain of loss and loneliness, but in reality, such losses leave their own indelible, permanent marks and scar behind.

Ni-er was probably, at least from Wei Ying's initial and very visceral reaction, the product of a mother who missed her firstborn - even while tinkering in his work room, all he could think of was to make another sentient being out of magic or rituals (which was his only forte, really), so that he wouldn't feel so lonely or drown in the sorrow of losing Ernie - once viewed as his greatest creation, then later, a child, and after that, a son. As seven days' of lovemaking culminated in enough ingredients to make the white tentacle, Wei Ying thought how wonderful it would be, if he had both children safely tucked under his wings, and that they become part of their growing Lan family - plus, Ernie, who still has a bad, stubborn streak in him, could use a family member as a companion for life, and learn to love another similar being in terms of the evolutionary ladder - and a younger sibling would do wonders for the boy who is estranged from his father.

"Ni-er was made with some magic, but she is, for the most part, a living thing derived from crystals - and I'd even consider her as a person. She has a spirit, a soul and a body - so the gods will not see her as an aberrant creature or a deviant of nature. She's my precious little girl..." Wei Ying murmurs and caresses the furry tip, then wipes his tears by rubbing into Ni-er's squishy ticklish belly. Ni-er twinkles her imaginary eyes and burbles in response.

Lan Zhan, who had finally understood the full breadth and length of his family's situation, had prepared a small pot of rice porridge mixed with mashed sweet potato, leftover meat patty from lunch, and boiled mixed vegetables of peas, diced carrots and corn, during Wei Ying's hour-long exposition. The dish is done by the time Wei Ying finished his narration, so

Lan Zhan extinguishes the fire from the ancient stove, removes his apron, then extends his hands towards Wei Ying, expectedly.

Wei Ying gives a curious stare at the husband, who remained unfazed and every bit determined to move forward with their new reality of family life. The younger man-turned-mother gives in after he is fully convinced that the husband knows what he is doing. Little Ni-er is gingerly placed into Lan Zhan's arms and she coos with amazement at the sensation of a new, warmer, more muscled cradle and the sound of a stronger, steady heartbeat.

"Mn. Our precious little girl," Lan Zhan agrees (and he has absolutely accepted the new level of Wei Ying-ness in his life) while adjusting the tentacle's position in his left arm - which isn't too hard, considering she is shaped like a giant cat's tail and fits snugly against his chest. He brings the pot of porridge to the table and sits down at the dining table.

Lan Zhan murmurs an apology to his new daughter (of sorts) for neglecting her earlier that day, and promises to be a good father - and Ni-er actually smiles, with a glaring display of rows of pink toothless gums. He stirs the porridge with a ceramic spoon, then scoops the surface with a few bits of mashed-up meat, potatoes and softened vegetables, and blows repeatedly on the steaming chunky liquidy food.

"Ni-er, come, open your mouth. The fried egg must not have been enough, so Dad has made meat patty porridge for you," Lan Zhan calmly speaks. Ni-er obeys her father well, doesn't wiggle unexpectedly, then softly calls him "Dad", before she quietly opens her toothless mouth at the tip - she already embodies some of Gusu Lan's polite virtues through her actions, and Lan Zhan finds it quite comforting and even familiar to some extent. She is well-behaved, Lan Zhan thought.

A delicate mouthful of food later, Lan Zhan tentatively brushes his cheeks on the sides of Ni-er's tentacle length - it's as velvety and soft as a rabbit's, as warm as sunshine, and she smells of summer wildflowers in the midst of winter. He places a soft kiss on what he thinks is her tummy, somewhere close to the middle - and little Ni-er wiggles a bit and giggles with the sound of wind chimes and laughing babies.

Wei Ying snuffles and scoots closer to Lan Zhan, to watch how the husband lovingly feeds their daughter her first full meal in life.

.

Lan Zhan learnt from Wei Ying's continuous babble during Ni-er's mealtime about ErNet and the Multiverses - how the Wei, Lan and master-kin have found their new home in brand new universes, taken care by the revitalized, ultra-corporation Wangxian Co. Ltd.. Every individual is safe and sound, and fully accounted for; even the soul of the Lan-kin who had resided in his body whilst he was a paperman, and thought to be devoured by Ernie during the coup for the prized First Father Lan's body - is actually alive and well, inhabits a new body of Lan-kin, and lives with the Wei didi today.

The dynamics between the three kins continue to evolve, however, with the rise of the human-kin who have managed to wrest control in most of the multiverses, the master-kin have found a comfortable place in the reborn Kingdom's society as sub-humans, non-humans and in-humans - collectively known as beast-kin . They serve as pets, wild animals, beasts of burden, living servants, guardians of nature, the working class, and the oil that runs society's machinery - just a notch above automatons and robots. Beast-kin simply live in their own communities and tribes away from civilization, or co-exist (sometimes, conflict) with the human-kin when there is contact, just as in any typical Mortal Realm-like ecosystems. In addition, some beast-kin have gained the ability to reproduce among themselves or multiply asexually, hence, there is less need for artificial wombs or parasitism from the human-kin.

(Lan Zhan realized how cathartic it must've felt for Wei Ying, to finally be able to release the bottled-up secrets and talk to someone about such things. He endeavours to treat Wei Ying better and to learn to better read between the lines to guess what his spouse actually means or needs.

He is also pleased to know that Ernie practises restraint and non-intervention, and lets nature take its course on the relationships between the kins. The cold black thing shows promising signs of adopting true Lan family values.)

He also finds out that his son (of sorts) is constantly connected to his newly born daughter (of sorts) through ErNet, which is the all-encompassing term used for the integrated Nets that exist within their family, including WeiNet, LanWeb and the rebuilt Wangxian net. Ernie has admirably taken up the role of Ni-er's remote playmate and tutor (of sorts) in the psychic space or space-time bubble (of sorts) within that Net - simply because Ernie is the only other individual of Ni-er's species, and has the calibre and capability to raise her as a proper tentacled, sentient being. It breaks Lan Zhan's heart to know that the siblings need each other, yet they are separated far apart because of reasons that could be easily avoided in the first place.

He orders Wei Ying to send a message to Ernie - while cuddling little Ni-er in his arms, gently patting the back of the two-feet long white furry tentacle until she burps twice from her filling meal - to invite the errant son back to live with them. "Tell him that I'm willing - no, I want - to reconcile with him, and talk through our feelings and problems together. He's part of our family as much as Ni-er is, and I want Ni-er to be with her brother," Lan Zhan states clearly his purpose, while Wei Ying literally cries buckets while tapping his forehead to send the WeiChat message to their no-longer-forsaken son. Lan Zhan makes sure to end his request by kissing Wei Ying on the cheeks, and next, to Ni-er's, who has started to nod off for her afternoon nap.

.

As the patriarch who has seen the light (and is therefore enlightened), he decrees the following:

(in which he demands, then receives, access to ErNet, so that his wishes can be heard by his people, who are the progeny of the First Fathers under the banner of the Qishan Lan family and adopts the Wangxian logo of twin rabbits, one black and one white, set against a backdrop of bamboo,)

- That the (true) Grand Patriarch, also the (true) First Father Lan, the (true) Ruler of the Kingdom and the (true) Founder of Wangxian, will no longer tolerate having family relationships torn apart by mere internal squabbles and political backstabbing (or body snatching); with some individuals standing on the pedestals at the expense of others, while others scavenge for scraps just because of their position at the bottom of the family hierarchy; yet, some are left alone, isolated, even discriminated against, because they are of different kin or species; and still, others live under the fear of external threats - even the heavens -; because his family is supposed to keep everyone together, unite those with differences, and protect the weak and needy. If any, he has plenty of land in the 'Mounds for everyone to live under the same roof - his roof, that is.

(One can hear cheers and applause ringing out throughout the multiverses inhabited by his kins - it doesn't matter if they are Wei, Lan or master/beasts.)

- That there are eight empty lots of land around the cave-home. Lovely Wei Ying, loyal and beloved spouse of the First Father Lan, is tasked to take care of affairs related to that cave-home, and expand and upgrade it as needed. Ernie and Ni-er have their places inside the cave-home, being the inseparable children of the Kingdom's royal couple.
- The eight lots of empty land can be used by the Kingdom and the company, in discreet, fair, honest and appropriate ways, with the family's grand council overseeing the activities. The lands shall be administered by the council's most senior members and their families including Wei, Lan and master/beast-kin of:

1. Wei da ge (the thirty year old awesome magician),
1. Wei er ge (the eighteen year old who is not as bright, but has sacrificed and suffered so much),
2. Wei san ge (the fifteen year old techno-wizard),
3. Wei didi (the adorable nine year old boy who melts everyone's hearts),

(It is made clearly known that there is a two pronged strategy here - one, to start inhabiting the lands which will discourage trespassers and incursions by external forces;

two, because according to Gusu Lan, now Qishan Lan traditions, it takes a village to raise a child; Lan Zhan wants the extended family to be part of Ni-er's growing-up experience, and wants his precious princess to get to know her four closest maternal uncles.)

(One can hear the family's grand scepter slam decisively to the ground, which rattle all kins' spirits across the multiverses, stir them to wakefulness and spur them to action.)

Little Ni-er squeals excitedly when Lan Zhan hoists his darling princess high above him - a symbol of his family's triumph, a promise to their future, and proceeds to nuzzle her elongated abdomen and blows raspberries on her soft furry tummy - and she shrieks with pure unadulterated crystalline joy.

.

Making decrees can be taxing to the body, and that does not include logging into ErNet - Lan Zhan steers clear of the gateway despite having his VIP username and password on hand, because of the (irrational) fear that he may end up watching porn clips during late nights and be royally punished for such distasteful but highly addictive activities. The couple decided to take a quick nap in the afternoon with their princess, before mulling on the next steps including a possible trip to town in the next couple of days - the snow would have melted sufficiently by then, and mountain passes would clear up - since they've been cooped up inside their cave-home for a week.

“Wei Ying, she doesn't look comfortable. Here, let me help,” Lan Zhan murmurs sleepily while lying on their king-sized bed with one hand outstretched towards the spouse. The bedroom is dark, the curtains are drawn, however the Shield spell keeps the chilly air away - not quite warm enough, though, so pillows and blankets are still needed.

Little Ni-er wiggles around her mother's chest while making soft mewling cries, seemingly looking for something, or perhaps Wei Ying himself tends to fidget a lot while snoozing (and rolls over, causing distress to the fluffy tentacle who is unfortunately squashed in-between - because she feels like a wonderfully warmed-up bolster of sorts).

Wei Ying doesn't quite like to be disturbed in slumber; since he'd gotten his fair share of furry cuddles, he happily tosses Ni-er to the husband and straddles another unfortunate pillow on the bed, kicks the husband's legs by accident, before snoring away. Lan Zhan sighs at Wei Ying's attitude - and tells himself that this is the norm for a man who didn't mind burying A-Yuan into the ground like a radish - and gently collects Ni-er into his arms.

The white tentacle must've sensed her father, because she gurgles happily and stills, easing herself to sleep without any fuss like an obedient child. Lan Zhan couldn't help but to cuddle her like a bolster - because she looks like one - and Ni-er unknowingly worms her way into her father's robes and latches her toothless mouth onto one nipple, and starts suckling. The act is fruitless, since there is no milk, however Lan Zhan finds the sensation very comforting and the atmosphere to be very natural. He gently pats her back and soon, both father and daughter fell asleep.

The next time Wei Ying grinds his teeth in sleep, fidgets restlessly, turns around and twists the blanket into a tangled mess, and kicks Lan Zhan's leg unintentionally again, the husband groans - with one wide sweep of hand, Lan Zhan captures the sleep-misbehaving spouse into an embrace, and keeps the family in his arms for the rest of the afternoon.

Notes for the Chapter:

OMG new bts from WeTV for Untamed!! Adorably Cute !!!

I've run out of ideas for this arc, so I'll just plod along and see what Wei Ying-ness or Wangxian-ness comes along the way... :-D

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 74

During the afternoon nap, Lan Zhan had a bit of a deja vu in his dreams - he dreams of the time when he had four spouses living under the same roof with a cold black thing underneath the floor mat to the entrance door, and they were short on money. He had to work the spouses really hard, tighten their purse strings, all for the sake of making sure that their sole breadwinner, the lovely Wei Ying, could earn enough and feed their family of five. The family uses a lot of money, and it shows in his account books that they're always in the red - they've spent unnecessarily on duplicate purchases (such wasteful habits!), purchases without receipts (horrors of horrors!), splashed on snacks and entertainment (zero returns on investment!), the older ones drown themselves in endless store-bought jars of Laozu Smiles (shamelessly squandering to the last silver piece!), and the younger ones always want the latest toys (unnecessary and unneeded, just play with homemade straw toys!) .

The dreams turn sour, when one day, he opens the rice bucket to find it empty, then he lifts the trapdoor to the underground pantry and gasps when all leaf-wrapped meats on the shelves have disappeared, and still, he had three grown up men and a boy demanding for dinner, yet the kitchen-cum-dining room - in fact their whole house - is suddenly too narrow and small to fit five people, their voices are deafening, everything become claustrophobic, the bloodthirsty cries for food gradually crescendos into desperation because the plates are empty, the pots on the stove are sparkling clean without a drop of food or soup inside, and Lan Zhan sweats in alarm because it's not possible to cook for five in the span of fifteen minutes, there are only two stoves and he doesn't have all those wonderful but necessary modern kitchen amenities, he wishes his home is fully equipped with 21st, 31st, 41st-century technology and stuff and full of nutritious food and enough spending money for everyone because ten gold pieces didn't look sufficient at that moment, and oh Goddess Guan Yin, the youngest is crying so hard because he hadn't eaten for weeks, everyone's stomachs are rumbling with ravenous hunger, perhaps demonic--

“Nnnngghnn...”

“Mmmngghnmmm...”

Lan Zhan’s eyes flew wide open at the high pitched groan-y sounds, and nearly leapt out of the bed in panic and to some extent, the unrealized feelings of disgust - because he suddenly remembered that he forgot to swaddle a cloth diaper around Ni-er’s bottom (never mind that he didn’t ask Wei Ying what and how often the baby pees and poos), and his princess seems to be wincing, shaking and squeezing something out, based on how the giant cat tail contracts and relaxes like intestinal movements.

He sits up in a rush and for some inexplicable reason, hugged the tentacle tighter to his body (perhaps in fear that something might spill to their bed if he loosened his grip), and cries to the spouse, “Wei Ying! I think... Ni-er needs to use the toilet! How do I...?”

Wei Ying lets out a loud, blissfully ignorant snore. Of course, that young man had worked through the night before to make little Ni-er, and he’s totally exhausted. Lan Zhan zips his mouth and decides not to wake the spouse.

The tentacle elicits a final “Nnnnn” then shivers, and Lan Zhan, to his horror, then surprise, feels some solid things roll down his sleeves - then plop onto the mattress on by one; because his grip on Ni-er’s fuzzy bottom end wasn’t tight enough, apparently.

Tiny pieces of perfectly formed gemstones, each no more than a fingertip in size, pop into view - including diamonds, pearls, emeralds, amberstones, rubies -, followed by what looks like a stream of gold and silver pieces tumbling down carelessly to his thighs.

Little Ni-er coos in relief.

.

It was about time to start on dinner preparations, and Lan Zhan had one big question mark hanging above his head - what to cook for little Ni-er?; his earlier attempt with leftovers from lunch and ready mix of vegetables had been a wild and serendipitous guess, however he wanted a more wholesome and healthy dinner for his princess, despite not really knowing what tentacle-kin can eat and digest.

That big question mark dissipated into vapour the moment he stumbled out of the dark bedroom - because it seemed the sun had set - and then he realized that the curtains of the bedroom appeared different; they're thicker and higher - and the ceiling looked terribly high, in fact their bedroom looks very spacious and the king-sized bed is twice, no thrice the size of what he remembered, sleeping Wei Ying looked so small in the middle of the bed, and were there so many cupboards and shelves before? - then he turns around to see what lies outside of the bedroom door - and his face pales because everything looks different, is he in someone else's home? There are more doors along an unknown hallway, decorated by strange statues, vases, potted plants, furniture, and mirrors on the wall - then there is a landing area of sorts, which leads to a set of stairs to a floor below, oh dear are those stairs made of concrete or marble because they look quite grand and are adorned with rich teakwood carvings - in which he shuffles on barefooted, quietly, cautiously, because surely he's still in a dream or transported into someone else's mansion - and downstairs--

.

Lan Zhan owns and lives in a mansion, at five o' clock in the evening of the day his daughter was born.

He's fortunate that upon reaching the ground floor, albeit a little shaken and dazed from his new dazzling surroundings, four familiar gleeful (and nearly similar) faces ambushed and kissed him on the cheeks in a sort of ritualized greeting. Little Ni-er was gently snatched from her father's bosom and became the biggest superstar among her four cooing maternal uncles.

Wei da ge , who looks no different from the first day they met (in fact everyone looks fresh and nary a day older), is the first to speak from an arm's length, "Grand Patriarch, our dearest lao gong , we really missed you so much! Although now we have our own universes, clans and families, you're still our one and only greatest husband!" He tickles little Ni-er near her delicate fur-covered mouth and she nom-noms the wiggly finger with her pink gums until it's coated with slimy saliva, and toothlessly squees 'Big Uncle' - the da ge is absolutely delighted, "Ohhh! She's so cute and lovely! She remembers our pictures and videos sent through ErNet! Who's the cutest? Who's the cutest? Of course you are...!" and he peppers kisses to Ni-er's tapered tip of her head.

Next, the newcomer er ge, “I... I should greet you properly, because it’s my first time meeting you although we’re married for a long time now!” He grins sheepishly and bows many times in a truly apologetic and humble manner, “but tonight’s dinner is on us! Da ge sensed what had happened with his inter-universal scanners, so he organized us to get together although we’re living so far apart! We brought so much food, but then we realized that Ni-er had done a splendid job warping everything that is needed, and it’s 100 percent natural without the use of any magic!” He gestures at bags of fresh food bought from supermarkets (the name ‘Wangxian’ printed on the plastic bags are a dead giveaway) lining the table counter of the roomy and well-equipped modern kitchen (it looks 21st century, but could be 31st too). The dining area has been expanded too, with a huge table in the center that could easily seat ten people or more.

Then, hyperactive san ge appears from behind, “Oh wow! The Highway and The Junction are back, and they’re purely made of innate warp-space continuum fluxes! In other words, as natural as the Big Bang itself! What are the odds of finding and getting one, and it even has a trail leading to the sealed Ancient Wuji! I brought my tools and gadgets to patch up the home, make it bigger, better, stronger and more secure, but little Ni-er beat me to it!” and he pokes the white tentacle’s bottom endearingly - in response, she giggles ‘Third Uncle’ and squirts out a couple of gemstones and gold nuggets from her rump to the marble floor of the large living room; there are many sofas, furniture, television sets and expensive artistic decor that add to the ambience of the luxurious setting. “She’s shittin’ diamonds on me, really!” quips san gei, and the whole room erupts into laughter - Lan Zhan is shocked; Ni-er bubbles out her brand of baby laughter to the tune of tinkling crystal-clear wind chimes.

Adorable didi walks up to Lan Zhan and gives him a heartwarming, familiar hug. Then he whips out a rabbit soft toy from behind and hands it to Ni-er, who is still wiggling in the da ge’s strong hands (it seems he and everyone is very well-versed with caring for children - after the Wei siblings have gone through wife/husband-hood, parenthood, patriarch-dom and king-dom, little Ni-er is truly in good hands of her extremely capable uncles). Ni-er ends up curling around the toy and nom-noms the rabbit's artificial fur because she doesn't have any hands to hold it. "I brought some toys for my niece, and plenty of desserts after dinner. I hope you will like it, Lan gege ," he says. Lan Zhan's heart wobbles at the sight for sore eyes - his favourite nine-year old cutey spouse (of sorts).

Everyone gathered around to group-hug their surprised Grand Patriarch, and when lovely Wei Ying staggers down the stairs - because he is equally confused by his new environment and had woken up abruptly from the raucous conversations - he breaks into a sprint, nearly tumbled down the steps, tears and laughter evident on his face, upon seeing his dearly-missed siblings - and the family is finally reunited. Wei Ying crumbles into bawling and loud sobs - perhaps, another much needed closure for his painful separation from family members, and a time for healing for the man who had lost too much in such a short span of time.

A few minutes later, Lan Zhan noticed a cold black figure standing alone, at the open grand double-door entrance to their greatly expanded home, looking forlornly at the rejoicing occupants of the mansion. It - he - holds a straw broom, which is really strange if it was considered as a gift, but Lan Zhan knows better.

Everyone caught sight of the latest visitor, but then, casually returned to group-hug and squash the teary-eyed and devastated (in a good way) twenty-two year old Wei Ying.

Wei da ge nudges Lan Zhan to the outside of the huggy-smoochy-crying circle of Wei-kin (with little giggly Ni-er still trapped inside amongst her uncles), and murmurs knowingly, "We know what happened, and we heard your decrees, lao gong . I still have my misgivings after losing to him in the first place, but he's been making amends by helping us out a lot recently, such as providing ErNet and blessing us with magic and Tian-operated technology from the Heavens. On my part, I've buried my hatchet and will still consider him as a nephew that needs a good spank on the bottom once in a while."

Wei er ge chips in after getting a cheek of snotty muahs from the First Father Wei, "I'm still afraid after what happened to me early in life, and still flinches whenever I sense his presence - but I've now spent a longer part of my lifespan as a patriarch of my own universe after he apologized, so I guess the debt is settled. He hasn't interfered with what we do, and he diligently broadcasts our family's rules across the universes to remind our people about the virtues of the Kingdom. I think he's showing the hallmarks of a true Lan clansman, and I believe he's on track to turn into a new leaf."

Wei san ge raises his head from the din of bawling group-smooches, "We are gods of our independent universes and families, and yet he's kept us connected, performed maintenance to the systems whenever required, hard working at backing up data into our cloud drive, and perpetually analyzes and researches new advancements for our civilizations. I'm reluctant to admit this sometimes, but he's a much better systems operator and root directory than all our capabilities combined."

The youngest spouse tugs at Lan Zhan's shirt to call for his attention. "He helped me to review my, the others, and both you and First Father Wei's memories, to inculcate lifelong lessons not just to me, but to my family and downline generations as well. He's an amazing tutor once you see past the sins of his earlier life. So, gege , please get to know the new him - he's changed a lot from the time you left us, three months ago in this world.

Go on, say ‘hi’ to him.”

“Mn.”

Lan Zhan takes a few steps forward to approach the new guest who bears a straw broom as a gift; the patriarch has his arms outstretched into a welcoming embrace.

.

The family of eight - the First Fathers, the Grand Patriarch’s four (representative) spouses, and the two tentacle children - have one of the most unforgettable dinners in their lives: several kinds of mouth-watering Old Middle Kingdom hotpots with a variety of tasty marinated meats from different space-time eras, freshly harvested fruits and garden vegetables from an assortment of sources, classic premium-quality rice and noodles, followed by desserts, snacks and a wide selection of beverages, contributed by each Wei sibling from their own universes.

(As usual and not forgotten, there are rituals dictated by the eldest Wei sibling, and everyone abides by them - including the children. Everyone invites the Grand Patriarch to dine, and Lan Zhan gets the first bite of just-cooked succulent strips of fatty stewed pork from the hotpot, before everyone else.)

Lovely Wei Ying, who sits next to Lan Zhan, spent hours catching up with his siblings because he’s the most outdated of them, having limited access to ErNet compared to the rest. Lan Zhan realized how much Wei Ying missed being in a large boisterous family and noisy crowds; his smiles and laughter are genuine once again, and there are no more bittersweetness or the oft-hidden gloom behind the facade.

Wei da ge raises a cup to cheer for their Grand Patriarch, and everyone follows suit. He remarks that Lan Zhan has great foresight to bring the family back together; the patriarch could have taken the same road as Jin Guangshan by ruling with an iron fist and kept the family members apart - the infighting would have ensured his favourite spouse or child would be crowned as the next ruler; however Lan Zhan is truly different from the other known tyrannical leaders of the Middle Kingdom, and instead, preferred to abide by Gusu Lan - now Qishan Lan - rules and traditions. To those kind words of praise, Lan Zhan merely clears his throat and “Mn”s regally.

The Wei siblings take turns to care and play with Ni-er - who has a seat of her own - by helping to feed mouthfuls of wonderful food into her toothless orifice; when the food is a little too solid for her pink gums to nom-nom on, Ernie - who has transformed himself into a sharpened black tentacle as tall as Ni-er, and sits next to her - happily takes the offered food, puts it into his bowl, and he mashes the contents into a liquidy paste with mincer-like appendages that sprout from his body, and feeds Ni-er.

Ernie is exceptionally quiet, and answers only when asked; if one puts aside memories of the past, it looks as though both he and Ni-er are a pair of twins of polar opposite colours, but fated to be inseparable. Both look absolutely harmless, innocent, and in a world of their own. Ernie maintains contact with Ni-er by touching a small tentacle-like extension to her furry body, possibly communicating telepathically. On one rare occasion, lovely Wei Ying walks over to the two, and gives them warm motherly hugs; then, he asks Lan Zhan to tell the story about an old man with a straw broom under the bodhi tree, to the son, and to everyone in the room.

The Grand Patriarch did.

.

At some point during the dinner conversation, everyone talked about the changes from the past to the present, and the hopes of the future. Lan Zhan, in an awkward and uncharacteristic move, hugs the black tentacle that sits next to him (Ernie feels like a fat squishy octopus tentacle, minus the slime) and mutters a word of apology.

Wei da ge , being the master of rituals, claps his hands and heartily encourages the others to join in a chorus of congratulating the renewed father-son bond. Lovely Wei Ying wipes a tear at the side at the touching, and emotional scene.

“Ernie, I am sorry that I’ve hurt you, especially right before both your mother and I fled the continent. In hindsight, we shouldn’t have left you like that, and I... I...”

Father. I am alright. Thank you for your words, and I also have to apologize for starting the entire mess. If I hadn’t become too greedy and too enamoured with our goals, to the point where I’ve become blinded by what needs to be achieved rather than how it should be done - all of these wouldn’t have happened.

Both father and son spend a good few minutes apologizing to each other. It was a much-needed open admission and declaration of each other's shortfalls and weaknesses, and to forgive - not to forget - so that they can agree to move on with their family life towards the future.

Ernie uses a separate tentacle-like limb to spoon another mouthful of mashed wagyu beef strips and boiled root vegetables to Ni-er's munching toothless mouth (he's such a responsible gege !).

In fact, when I reviewed archived historical data collected from combing through internal and external sources, my deduction leads me to believe there are several narratives on what had happened. Whether the actions were considered right or wrong, depends on one's interpretation.

One such narrative:

In the summer of 20XX B.C., a seemingly innocuous family in the Mortal Realm found, and later abused, corruptive magic to build a new greedy, tyrannical empire. With invincible powers and unlimited access to Creation and Time magic, it spawns a mega-corporation that soon subjugates countries and economies around the world, generates immeasurable amounts of money and treasures, and enslaves everyone to rely solely on its culture, products and technology.

A malevolent cold black thing, a being of pure evil Corruption and akin to a deadly virus, was created by the empire, and started to infest the realms, then the universe. It usurped its leaders and wrested control of the council that ruled the empire. The empire's reach accelerated and expanded far and wide, spreading its sphere of evil influence to the furthest ends of the universe, corrupting everything in its path to serve the armies of that empire - even its own people and lands. The heroic gods, who were victims as well, decided to retaliate when they could no longer tolerate the corruption of all that is holy and sanctified. At the deification of the cold black thing, which will never be allowed by the gods, the great army of the heavens launched their assault to stop the unholy ceremony. The entire race of evil beings, both Corrupted and mortal, are successfully wiped out of existence. All agents of evil, including the Tian family which lived amongst the gods as spies and purveyor of Corrupted trinkets, magic and technology, were apprehended and either destroyed or exiled from the heavens.

As a final step to cleanse the universe of all traces of evil and Corruption, the gods unanimously agreed to rebirth everything to the point before evil sowed its seed - and the universe, realms and the world exists today in Perfect peace and harmony.

Another narrative goes like this:

In the summer of 20XX B.C., a family-owned business Inspired By Love decided to expand its operations after gaining new capabilities through magic and technology contributed by its founding members. Through a combination of judicious and bold, innovative use of Creation and Time magics, a company was formed and became its own government to ensure proper governance, and to secure the future of the Kingdom-cum-company. On the surface, it seemed to be a typical successful story of a corporation, where products and services were developed, then exported to other countries and economies; however, there was also a push towards liberalizing access and modernizing lifestyles to its people and customers, also worlds, realms and races beyond the known Earth. The broader purpose was to provide comfort, convenience and excellence in quality of life for everyone in exchange for healthy growth in trade and financial returns for its investors.

A major evolutionary phenomenon occurred within the Kingdom - Ernie, a creation of the Kingdom itself, took the leadership mantle in a political takedown when unrest was brewing and a growing, impending sense amongst its citizens that the core rules, values and principles were no longer being practised, and age-old traditions were crumbling in the face of fast-paced progress. Eventually, the grassroots scored victory and the Kingdom was once again aligned to the hearts of its people - and continued to evolve, modernize, spread its sphere of influence and ensured that trade and commercial activities flourished and thrived under its wings. The Realms of the Gods were, at first, supportive of such beneficial changes - however, towards the relaunch of the company and installation of the King, there appeared to be subversive acts, seeds of mistrust sown among the gods, and even plans to tear the Kingdom down and seize its riches, people and lands.

As expected, the gods launched their war on the night of the King's installation, and brought their finest trump card - the Founder of the Kingdom-cum-company, who had been tricked to take the side of the gods. Ernie was mortally wounded by his Founder, and without any leader to bring his citizens to safety, the gods launched their mightiest attack upon the Kingdom in an attempt to wipe everything out and take control of the Kingdom's operations and treasuries. In some ways, the gods succeeded, when everything that was ever created, sold, provided, and existed from the Kingdom-cum-company disappeared instantly - which led to the well-known collapse of the universe. What followed was a cowardly and disgraceful exit by the gods, who were incapable to deal with the aftermath of the collapse, and they simply burnt everything and recreated the universe to their desired Perfect state and timeline, and therefore, are absolved from all accusations of war-mongering and power-grabbing. The Tian family, who were made scapegoats of the terrible and incalculable damages, were booted out of the heavens and never seen again.

Father, it's as you have said - what is black, and what is white? Is grey even a possibility? I am committed to continue analyzing the collected data so that some day, my conclusions will align to the story you told about the straw broom. It will take time, but I am sure I'll get there some day.

Lan Zhan strokes Ernie's length thoughtfully (it's not chilling nor disgusting, when he's not slimy; in fact he looks so much more approachable in this alter ego form) and "Mn"s in vague agreement to the latter's promise. After hearing both sides of the story, the Grand Patriarch has a lot to think about, feels another burden piled upon his shoulders, to find the true path forward for his family who is, in some way, sandwiched between strings of truths and untruths.

Having completed his narration, Ernie quietens down, and feeds cubes of sliced watermelon harvested from Wei didi 's farms - it's summer at his side of the universe - to his meimei . Ni-er gurgles delightfully, with watermelon-red tainted pink gums, at the refreshingly sweet and sugary treat.

.

(With the Wei da ge helming the rituals of the house, everyone kisses the Grand Patriarch on the cheeks to give thanks for the wonderful meal. Lan Zhan blushes as he gets kissed by his spouse, three adult males, one boy, and with lovely Wei Ying's help to carry the children, Ernie leaves a moist suction mark on one cheek, and Ni-er tickles the other with a pucker of lips and toothless gums.

The family adjourns to the living room to lounge on sofas with the television switched on in the background - interestingly, it receives news and entertainment programs from other universes -, and they continued their chatter into the night.)

.

Shortly after nine 'o clock, the party is over - for now. Everyone helped out with the cleaning, and it's amazing to see how Ernie managed to wipe everything down with his countless black tentacles. Then, Wei san ge asks the family to gather outside the mansion, and when they did - Lan Zhan is surprised that there is no longer any snow on the ground, and there is no sign of snowmelt either - the weather is cool, and fresh breeze blows which invigorates everyone after such a hearty dinner inside the mansion. The two Lan Residence lanterns light up brightly at night, the skies are starry and cloudless.

“Ni-er has erected a powerful barrier without using magic! The entire estate, including the eight lots of land, is protected from the elements and it'll always be mild and pleasant even in midwinter,” the tech-savvy teenager remarks with a wide sweep of hands, “and there are very powerful security features dotting all over the ‘Mounds, that even I’m not able to crack and decrypt!”

“That’s true,” Wei didi squeaks excitedly after feeling energized from a full meal - it’s still day time as far as his body clock is concerned -, “from the outside, the entire ‘Mounds look Perfectly normal, like a wild winter wonderland full of snow. However, once an authorized person steps in, it’s paradise!” and he skips and hops childishly on the courtyard.

Lovely Wei Ying touches Lan Zhan’s wrist, and asks, “Lan Zhan, my xiongdi wants to start work on the lands tonight, and I’d like to tag along. You can take the kids to bathe and go to bed first, since it’s bedtime for you. I’ll return later when I’m done - I need to make sure that a shortcut will be built for me, so that I can reach Yiling faster on foot in the future! Can I go ahead?”

“Mn,” the patriarch gives his permission, and off the twenty-two year old goes, while holding hands with his newest BFF, the eighteen-year old er di .

Wei da ge places a large hand on Lan Zhan’s shoulder assuringly, and takes a microsecond to read his thoughts. “There’s a lot to digest from today, but you’ll do fine after what you’ve been through. Spend some time with Ernie and Ni-er, then get some sleep. Tomorrow will be another day, and there’ll be more decisions to be made for our family’s future. First, we’ll make sure to abide by your decree and keep this estate safe and properly managed,” he rumbles with his rather low voice. Lan Zhan finds comfort that the eldest spouse has been more incredible since their reunion, and knows what to say - and what not to say. He is able to unravel the deepest worries, soothe anxieties, and solve problems with a snap of his fingers.

“I know you’re still thinking about the stories from Ernie, and I can tell you that both sides have some truths in them. It’s your choice to take either of them as bedrock for the future growth of our family. I can also sense your concern from the Tians, despite the fact that there is no information about their whereabouts,” and Lan Zhan quietly curses the intrusive mind-reading ability, in which the da ge barks a laugh, “we can investigate their locations tomorrow or in the near future, when you're ready.”

Lan Zhan nods, and lets the eldest Wei jog away to catch up with the rest of his siblings, who are still talking loudly in between shouts and seemingly drunken laughter amongst themselves, even while walking out of the courtyard and into the forests - it is no wonder, since some of them have jars of Laozu Smiles hanging by their belts and sashes.

.

Lan Zhan is getting the hang of using his daughter's powers. Now that the guests have left, he wished his home was back to normal - well, not quite to normal, because he could use the modern kitchen facilities, especially if it's fully equipped and filled to the brim with fresh produce just as the mansion had, and he really liked the expanded space for walking, doing stretching and qigong exercises or even cultivation, and their bedroom could benefit with a bigger wardrobe and more shelf space and--

Father, open your eyes. Meimei has granted your wish .

Lan Zhan obeyed as instructed, and he is rather amazed - although it doesn't show on his expressionless face - that his daughter had done it. In front of him, he sees their familiar, good ol' cave-home in place of the three-storey mansion that was too affluent and expensive for his tastes. It looks a little bigger, but at least it is still a cavern complex that blends with his farms and orchards, and does not stand out from the surrounding grassy, hilly landscape; it's grown organically, and not by bolting on inappropriately designed rooms.

The couple's new cave-home can be simply described as follows:

A humble, reasonably-sized abode carved into a cavern complex. Upon walking past the entrance adorned by twin Lan Residence lanterns, one arrives at the entryway where there is a floor mat (which hides a trapdoor). The entryway connects to a garage of sorts - which is actually an enclosed space that has its own stone-like shutter, which is a wide exit. Beneath the floor of the garage lies the hidden UFO, which has been refurbished and revitalized for the family's use.

Further into the entryway, one should remove shoes and all footwear before walking into the living room. The living room is brightly lit (as with every part of the home), and thermo-regulated by an internal heating system using bamboo pipes buried in the walls. It is furnished with a sofa, standard furniture pieces and a large rectangular mirror-like screen embedded to the wall which looks like a television but is actually much more. At one end of the room is the family altar.

The living room connects to three bedrooms - one master bedroom which is populated with the items from the previous bedroom, including the king-sized bed, a wardrobe, cupboards, cabinets and shelves. The master bedroom has its en-suite shower, bathtub and toilets. The other two bedrooms are adjacent to each other, fully furnished but uninhabited, and share an attached shower, bathtub and toilets.

A door is constructed at each corner of the living room, which lead to further chambers.

One door opens into a work or study room - previously the work room that was filled with 'trash' and other half-completed projects. The piles of 'trash' has disappeared, as all projects have been completed by Ni-er's incredible (non-magic) ability, and assembled and installed at their appropriate places. Lan Zhan's guqin (together with Wei Ying's A.S.S. notebook) is finally visible, and lies on a table framed by benches in the middle of the spacious Jingshi-like room, and suitably decorated ala classic, orthodox Cloud Recesses style. From the work or study room, one can step into the lawn at the side of the cavern complex, and walk to the outdoor pool, vegetable gardens, courtyard and other features of the home's compound.

Another door leads to a hallway of locked doors, said to be portals to somewhere far, far away. The first two doors facing opposite of each other are unlocked - one leads to more showers, bathtubs and toilets meant for guests in the living room; the other houses a large storage room with windows to the outside. The storage room is currently empty and unused. If needed, additional beds can be placed here to convert the room into a bedchamber.

The third door, next to the family altar, leads to the dining area attached to the kitchen, which resembles the ones in the mansion, fully furnished and equipped with modern amenities. However, the family knows that the patriarch tends to stay away from modern appliances, so the stoves are used for most of the time, while hidden ovens, microwaves, refrigerators, air fryers, blenders etc. will only emerge upon request (it is a smart kitchen that responds to its master's thoughts and voice commands). There are storage cellars and cupboards around the kitchen, which are fully stocked up with plenty of food to last through winter, plates and cutlery, pots and pans and all other items needed to prepare tasty meals for the family. Notably, the underground pantry remains untouched and sits beneath the floor in the middle of the kitchen space; the trapdoor lid is upgraded to superior quality hardwood painted to match the rest of the flooring.

The last door, which is at the opposite end from the entryway, leads to the outdoor pool (fully equipped with functional showerheads, self-replenishing natural soaps and shampoos, enough bath towels, and comes with a kids' pool and mini waterfalls, and flows out to the lotus pond), laundry area (with washing machines and dryers that aren't used, so they're hidden from sight as well) and the outdoor toilets which are finally completed (with sitting toilets, urinals, plenty of wipes, water taps and sinks!)

Of note, the problem of finding a reliable energy source to (magically or not) power the equipment and tools has been solved - Ni-er poops more energy-rich twisty crystals and Ernie happily clones them, so that the household has plenty of such crystals. The crystals work like rechargeable batteries and can absorb energy from various sources such as solar, wind and hydro power and even generate its own living qi , so the family can live comfortably off-the-grid.

In case this is a little too much, we can always transform our home back to the original version, plus some goodies as desired. You can also make a selection of any previous houses you've known, such as the Jingshi, the Lotus Pier, the slightly enhanced home before you travelled to Wuji, the Heavenly Palace and others. We can access our memory banks for the technical details. Just let meimei know through your thoughts, and she will grant your wishes.

She is powered by Fate, which surpasses even my Creation and Time magics, so she can make things happen without having to create, modify, warp or corrupt any object and matter!

Ernie wiggles happily with one of his extended mini-tentacles around his sister's waist. Ni-er hops excitedly like a bouncing furry caterpillar, because she feels her father smile inside his heart.

.

First thing's first, Lan Zhan makes sure the kids are properly cleaned before going to bed. It feels surreal to be able to lie inside the bubbling heated pool of water in the slightly frosty air, with two tentacles by his side. They didn't require much care - just simply soap them up and rinse with water. Ni-er probably needs a little more attention with the bath towel later, so that she dries up properly, and she smells like fresh warm summer all day long.

Everything that came out of Ni-er's bottom end is buried inside the outdoor pool, especially the hole that was dug earlier that day to collect the clay for her birth ritual. Lan Zhan made it clear that the precious stones and metals (which bear the Imperial Reserve marks, surprisingly - so they're valid currency) should not be used because they weren't truly earned in honest ways (one of the pre-requisites of Gusu Lan family rules in using money). Suffice to say, the pool bed will soon be filled with gemstones, gold, silver, precious minerals and twisty crystals, and both children are tasked to keep deepening and expanding the pool as needed (due to the energy emanating from the crystals, the water that feeds into the lotus pond will make sure that the family can harvest large-sized fish every day too).

(The whole family, and all kins across the universes, are connected via ErNet - so they can share their experiences, thoughts, feelings and ideas freely. Although Lan Zhan still refused to log in, Ernie and Ni-er are able to project what they experience with the Grand Patriarch to the whole wide Kingdom.)

Little Ni-er learns very fast and barely twelve hours after birth (possibly much longer in warped timelines in an alternate universe where she spends time with her brother in a virtual playground), she is nearly as capable as Ernie. Ni-er is said to be like her brother in terms of intelligence, abilities, skills and magic, and her thinking process is fluid, flexible, natural and very organic; she is able to grasp abstract concepts, alien language, empathize with feelings and emotions, compute impossible problems, and memorize and process vast amounts of information. She can use her empath abilities and other unknown qualities to correctly predict, even change, events in the future and therefore alter Fate itself (along with Creation and Time-based aspects of the universe) - and best of all, she is very kind and obedient to her family. Her only shortfall is her physical body and her maturity - she remains pitifully short for her two-feet tall stature, and still acts like a toddler.

On the king-sized bed, Lan Zhan fluffs his daughter's fur with a woolly towel and makes sure there are no more wet patches on her body - he refuses to ask for a hair dryer (which would make her into a puffball sausage - how unthinkable!). Then he gently grips her like a squealing body-warmed bolster against his abdomen, and goes to sleep. Ernie dozes off next to them; sometime in the middle of the night, Wei Ying returns to bed (the children's uncles continued working on the lands), then groggily grabs Ernie as his bolster, and sleeps on him. Ernie doesn't complain because he enjoys being in the company of his now-acknowledged parents. His length, springy firmness and bounciness makes for a good lower back support, and Wei Ying gets a fitful night's sleep.

Notes for the Chapter:

I'm sensing that there are less readers these days, due to less hits and comments... probably due to the waning interest in CQL Untamed and MDZS. Oh well, it was fun while it lasted :-)

I'll be writing for the sake of my interest and to unleash my crappy imaginations in the form of words. Don't bother about the declining quality, coz no one's going to proofread the chapters anymore. As said before, don't take things too seriously!

For now, a bit more worldbuilding... and let's see where things are headed to!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 75

Perhaps due to the wonderful hotpot dinner on the night before, both father and daughter slept very well, and their digestion worked like synchronized clockwork; at four-thirty in the wee hours of the morning, their stomachs rumbled together, the father adjusts his sleeping position and hugs the cat tail bolster tighter then lets out a soft fart, and the latter nnggh-nngghs and a few valuable jewels, gemstones and gold and silver pieces dribble out of her bottom - including gold bars and ingots; a filling meal means a full money pouch for the family, apparently.

Ernie doesn't really need to sleep, so he'd been semi-conscious for most of the night. He slides out from beneath his mother after acting as the best support pillow ever, because he knows that the third family member has also adapted to the same routine after living with the patriarch for so long - and as embarrassing or vile as it sounds, Wei Ying's gas is stinkier than the rest because he eats a lot of meat - and glides off the bed to retrieve a brush and a dust pan, so that he can sweep his meimei's metabolic by-products into a gathering pile of shiny precious things.

By five in the morning, Lan Zhan wakes up with a snugly sleep-poofed Ni-er, Ernie's done all the household chores, and breakfast is ready on the table - Old Middle Kingdom-style noodles and dumplings for the patriarch; greasy and delicious American-style breakfast for the mother; continental breakfast for him; and boiled fish porridge, pureed vegetables, scrambled eggs and healthy soups for the sister. (He returned to his natural state and unleashed zillions of lightning-quick cold black tentacles to complete the tasks in record time, while reading up recipes through ErNet, simultaneously).

After a refreshing cultivation session (with giggly Ni-er strapped to the back) and a quick dip in the heated outdoor pool (he still prefers bathing in volcanic mineral-rich waters amongst forest bamboo trees, despite having a bathtub and showers attached to the bedroom), Lan Zhan settles down for his breakfast at the large dining table with the latest periodical one hand, and feeds his princess with the other (her fur has been washed, dried and combed). Ernie continues to finish up leftover chores such as checking on the drying laundry (morning sunlight is preferred than a dryer, said the patriarch; and tentacles are better at shooing away thieving crows), and he's out in the vegetable gardens with a shovel and a rake to till the soil and start planting off-season seedlings (it's winter but it feels like spring is almost here, thanks to Ni-er's awesome ability).

“Ernie, did you read today's papers? At the corner of the classifieds section, there's an advertisement about a property for sale at the Market Streets...” Lan Zhan calls out from the entryway, with the giant cat tail strapped to the front of his torso - seemingly to let Ni-er suckle whenever she wants.

Mn. I have scanned and downloaded the entire periodical, father.

There is a small store near the Great Eats of Gojoseon at South Market Street that has gone out of business, as it was selling cold, frozen treats during summer. Understandably, it has gone bankrupt during the winter season, and the owner is trying to sell the lot at a discounted price because Yiling Bank is after him for overdue debts and compounded interests.

... Father, I sense your interest is piqued. Would you like to purchase the lot?

Lan Zhan rubs his chin thoughtfully (there is day-old stubble there). After the lengthy discussion the night before, he understood that the Wei gongzi s will turn his estate into a semi-active hub of rural economic activities, including agriculture, mining, fishing and forestry. The conversation reminded him of the first time he travelled around the virgin forests and untouched jungles of Wuji continent soon after the Great Fires from a different timeline - and he agreed, because he felt it's time to develop his land into something more productive and sustainable. No doubt the eight lots of land are transforming into farmlands, ranches, fishing villages by the lakes, quarries and lumber mills, manned by the citizens of his Kingdom.

As far as Lan Zhan is concerned, his days of taking care of the household chores, farming, rearing chickens and rabbits, foraging and fishing from the pond are over. A year of subsistence living has taught him a lot, and although he did enjoy the peaceful days and is a little reluctant to move on, he felt that he should take the next bold step for their family.

Father, my scans of Yiling commerce registry archives in the city council has yielded an interesting find. It seems this owner has a store each on West, North and East Market Street too.

A search on sales data within the Qishan Merchant Guild's members' records shows that those stores aren't doing well either, and he hasn't been paying his suppliers and servicing his loans on time, as stated in his latest bank statements.

Lan Zhan twirls his moustache (he'd kept it for the sake of looking a little more dignified and upper-class, and to fool the Jin guards should they dare to cross paths with him), and lets out a rather laoban -ish "Mnnnnnn...". Ernie puts down the rake and glides towards Lan Zhan (he floats using anti-gravity magic to keep his suction cups away and clean from the dirt and mud).

The good news is that this morning, meimei produced enough gold bars to buy up all four stores at current market price. I can arrange for the paperwork with the council, have magically-created agents to negotiate with the owner, and engage with trusted brokers to sweeten the deal with a couple more gold bars thrown in.

... Father, I sense your interest is even more piqued. Would you like to purchase all four lots?

Ernie wiggles in anticipation of his first adult-ish responsibility outside of their cave-home. Ni-er gurgles happily and rolls like a furred sausage in her cradle of sorts against her father's chest, and toothlessly nibbles on her favourite pink-brown nub nestled in a swirl of a few strands of long nipple hair.

Lan laoban "Mmmmns" audibly and almost yanked a few strands off his moustache, and looks up into the clear skies - his eyes sparkle with renewed determination, hopes and dreams of finally owning something bigger than just his abode, estate and his paradise on earth.

.

The Wei gongzi s finished their work shift at mid-morning, after having spent the night making inroads into all eight lots of land around their cave-home.

“This is quite a nice design for a single-storey residence. The architecture is impeccable, the construction quality is top-notch, and it boasts a balanced mix of 21st-century modern living, 31st-century comforts and conveniences, 41st-century capabilities and intelligence, with the rustic and traditional charms of the Old Middle Kingdom,” Wei da ge remarks, as he lounges on a comfortable leather recliner with little Ni-er on his rather hairy stomach (he’d rolled his shirt up because he thinks furry Ni-er likes furry surfaces - and is spot-on in his guess); both hands busy themselves with stroking the fur with broad sweeps, massaging the fleshy body in double-circles, and giving the white tentacle a marvellous back-scratch that leaves the giant cat tail quivering with delight and sweet sighs.

“Lan gege , we’ll be back after taking a short break to adjust our body clocks. I’ll bring more fresh garden produce from my farms the next time, including tropical fruits which I’m sure Ni-er meimei will love,” the nine-year old didi squeaks as he hands an ear pick - Lan Zhan’s - to the da ge , and the boy couldn’t resist running his fingers along Ni-er’s cotton candy-like length. The da ge twiddles the ear pick like a flute, which sends Ni-er into a short but convulsing, frenzied squeal, and the burly man digs in to what will be the Wei uncles’ favourite treat for their hugglesome niece. The moment the ear pick starts to graze and scratch rhythmically at the shallow end of Ni-er’s ear canal, the little princess coos, then relaxes into a semi-paralyzed state almost instantly - truly, like father, like daughter.

Once in a while, Wei didi raises a glass of chilled orange juice and the busy (but overjoyed) da ge takes a sip through a straw in that glass. After all these months (years, probably), the didi remained closer to the da ge than the other siblings. The little boy doesn’t forget to hold a homemade teething biscuit into Ni-er’s mouth; she loves to nom-nom at everything and leave drool on surfaces, after all.

The Grand Patriarch merely “Mn”s and is secretly grateful for the break - Ni-er’s uncles are a godsend to take the pressures of parenthood off his shoulders (and a slightly irritated, puffed-up nipple that had been suckled too long). He’s able to focus on what Wei san ge is trying to teach him - to oversee and man the operations of their estate from the large television set in the living room. There are a bunch of control panels with buttons to press, joysticks and gaming console-like controllers to play with, smart and ultra-intelligent tv with audio and visual recognition so that he could make swiping gestures to command the mirror-like appliance - which is somewhat a successor of Heaven’s viewing mirror, plus tons of other great features.

On the screen, there are segmented displays of various locations around the estate - similar to how security or surveillance network feed works. Lan Zhan needs to gaze at a particular display, and it automatically enlarges into view. He watches through one display at how tracts of land are being cleared for plantations, cash crops and orchards. Another display showed trails and roads being constructed, similar but not as grand as The Highway, and small cottages and huts are built close to farms and livestock of goats, pigs, chicken and cows. One display monitors The Junction, which is at its original location just a short distance from their cave-home’s courtyard - Lan Zhan observes how Wei, Lan and master/beast-kin queue up and emerge from the portal to carry out their assigned duties, and in time, inhabit the eight lots of land under his name.

(Similarly to the previous situation, on the way out from the cave-home’s courtyard, lies The Junction, which is a controlled-access portal leading to The Highway. The Highway, now lengthened to infinite distances, leads to many more portals to different universes, as compared to locations of the Wuji continent in the previous situation.)

“It’s a bit like the compact mirror you have, but at least you don’t have to worry about squinting at small screens or tapping on the wrong buttons - the keyboard here is large enough, and the system is intelligent to understand and predict what you’re looking for,” Wei san ge calmly explains, as he points to the various components and accessories of the Kingdom’s new command center. The teenager leans close and whispers naughtily, “You can use your ErNet credentials to log into the VIP room and the root directories of all our universes, to watch and experience the best and most hardcore porn, complete with live interactions and in real time!”

Wei er ge clears his throat to interrupt the dirty talk, and hands a plate of freshly baked muffins and cookies - their morning tea break - to the overly excited teenager, and a cup of orange juice on the table for him, then saunters off to serve the rest of the family. “I may not be as brilliant as the rest of you, but I know that our patriarch doesn’t goof off with such time-wasting activities, unlike a certain someone who plays ultra-MMORPGs all day, watch pirated movies and spends his time looking up sex, gore, violence, furies and tentacles and other distasteful things,” he adds, “no offense intended, Ernie,” as he hands the black tentacle his share of snacks, rather impassively.

Lan Zhan bites his lower lips, not really listening to the conversation, as the word “porn” echoes inside his mind - he thinks that perhaps his addiction is surfacing again, and he tries to suppress all desires of the flesh through visual feasts - and burns a bit of his golden core energy in doing so.

Mn. I am not offended. Sex with tentacles is not for everyone, and is reserved for those with... say, acquired tastes.

In any case, all citizens are instructed to behave appropriately during their time here, to place the interests of the First Fathers above all, to be discreet and minimize contact with the outside world, and put the land into good use for predominantly agricultural purposes. Acts of sexual entertainment, reproduction, and mass propagation are not encouraged, as they should be done within the confines and comforts of their home universes, and not on these eight lots of land. Unless, the patriarch consents otherwise...?

Lan Zhan realizes a few pairs of eyes are staring at him, and he clears his throat. “Mn. I will consider if there is an official request,” he vaguely responds with non-commitment. Ernie nods and squees when lovely Wei Ying, his mother, hugs him (again) as a body pillow. Wei Ying woke up at ten just in time for breakfast plus morning tea, and he hasn’t quite opened his eyes yet. He continues to lie and roll around the living room’s carpeted floor in his pyjamas, with Ernie in his embrace. The black tentacle loves the attention from his caring mother, and continues to indulge in Wei Ying’s want for sleep while trying to maintain some semblance of adult conversation with the rest of the family.

.

Lovely Wei Ying was overjoyed when Lan Zhan said he’d preferred the classical way of ascending to Heaven, rather than asking their son to create a flight of stairs to the blue skies. Such a predictable, traditional old man, he thought, which is an aspect he finds endearing of the husband.

With his siblings (and son) by his side, this time contributing to the household’s finances (and their daughter too), there’s not much he needs to do. He looks forward to spending many happy, peaceful and relaxing (hopefully not listless) days with the husband, which is his true Happily Ever After.

“You need to roll it between your tongue and the roof of your mouth, and bend your tongue like this,” Wei Ying shows his er di the Perfect position for puckered lips and a snaking curled tongue, “and then suck like this, with your jaws moving like this, at this tempo,” and mimics a goldfish desperate for air. The eighteen-year old “Enn”s and works harder to follow his senior’s instruction. Lan Zhan’s left testicle swells up as it receives extremely pleasurable massaging sensations that draws fluids from the loins and spurts pure freshly-made seed into the tubes and cavities leading to his wildly twitching penis.

Next to the eighteen-year old, Wei didi performs splendidly with his own brand of adolescent oral sex - one that involves swallowing the right testicle in perfect alternating synchrony with his er ge . The boy’s mouth and throat is small, hot and tight, and the husband’s toes curl repeatedly in tandem with the bouncing rise and fall, expansion and contraction of ballsacks in what the Wei gongzi s recognize as testicular orgasmic waves.

The two gongzi s’ efforts wouldn’t contribute much to the husband’s overall state without another weapon of their choice - Wei da ge ’s fantastic Invisible fingers, tongues and lips. He had Etherealized his head and hands and dove straight for his favourite juicy morsels inside the husband like a predator who’d gutted its prey - organs, glands and all sorts of vesicles, capillaries and tubules in the husband’s lower region related to sexual reproduction are deliciously sucked, rattled, loosened, and nibbled with such tenderness, and in Perfect rhythm with how the swollen prostate is tasted, kneaded and caressed, that every last bit of fluid gushes through to the base of the insanely-erupting turgid angry purple-red penis that had hardened to over six inches in length.

Wei san ge thrills the siblings what he's best known for - deep-throating - and he does not disappoint. With every swoop down the pulsing length, he makes sure to envelop the throbbing flesh entirely with a hot, tight squeeze of muscles, then swallows hard until the husband is reduced to tasty incoherent moans, sweaty struggles on twisted bedsheets, and reflexive convulses from head to toe, then from toe to head.

Lan Zhan comes again and again, evidenced by the ecstasy etched on his flushed face - the tell tale half-yawning, half-snarling, half-sneezing frozen look, his feverish back arched to the max, hips pump high in a panicked dance, the sweat-lined thighs tense and quake mightily until the bed creaks, eyes rolled to the back and the jaws go slack - his lust-crazed penis ejaculates thick then increasingly diluted until watery liquids, until there is nothing left - a day's worth of seed is swallowed and even the empty air is vacuumed out by the san ge's powerful throaty suction waves. His fingers grapple at the sheets futilely, urging the spouses for a brief respite that was never given, and he hnnnghs and aaahhns like a dying man, sobbing for his dear life as the harem work diligently to pleasure the husband until he erupts into a continuous stream of spewing fluids.

Wei da ge pulls out from the husband's trembling hips, and shouts, "It's time for launch, brothers!" then dips his head back to attack the targeted ripe fruits inside the husband, and goes all-out to squeeze many more prostatic orgasms from the overworked, very tired but very actively convulsing gland. His Invisible fingers squeeze, roll and vibrate the bloated urethra in outward sweeping motions with a furious pace, and make sure that every last drop shoots out spectacularly with ensuing hnnnghs and nguunngghs from the man whose soul soars high into interstellar space from the mind-blinding pleasure.

Wei san ge lets go with a schlickly wet plop, and exchanges crouching positions with the er ge . Lovely Wei Ying, who has spent time with a dildo to properly stretch and lube his rosebud, easily climbs on the husband's crotch and impales himself onto the ultra-vibrating penis - Lan Zhan orgasms (again) the moment the cockhead passes through the tight ring of muscles. He'd done enough one-twos during san ge 's exquisite foreplay, and with his true beloved spouse's love canal completely swallowing his arousal in a single swoop, he shakes with gritted teeth and foams in the drool, as his breath hitches and he loses all grasp on reality; he becomes a growling madman on sweat-drenched mattresses as he rides out the first of multiple consecutive thirty-twitches; Wei Ying teams up with his er di , each providing their husband alternating ten thrusts into hot tight undulating tunnels in different positions, such as cowgirl, reverse cowgirl, sideways, even spinning with gyrating hips.

Lan Zhan cums so hard that stars fill his darkening vision, and the da ge adds to the lethal combo by tormenting the dying boner with the Perfect polishing on the cockslit with ethereal palms, resulting in every kind of liquid - pee and seedless cum included - is released in magnificent rapid-fire shots. With the master of the mouth, the san ge , and the didi that can reach even the smallest niche and folds of skin, doing their job meticulously down there, Lan Zhan's twin seed-bearing eggs become twin balls of molten lava that try hard to empty out every last overheated sperm cell made during the intensive orgy.

The patriarch - who is wearing an untied bathrobe, by the way -, orgasms continuously from the explosive pleasures of five spouses raining upon his seed-bursting penis, and when the remaining three take turns to rotate and engage in wonderful sexual intercourse with the husband with varying speeds, positions, techniques and tightness, he finds the ultimate joy of bedding and breeding every Wei Ying in the house - his soul finally lifts off and departs for the heavens.

(Ernie helps to hold Lan Zhan in place so that his mother and uncles can maneuver around the unconscious man, and little Ni-er finds a fun spot to curl up - around her father's lower tummy, which continue to quiver and shake uncontrollably despite the blissful sleeping look on the father's face, and she squeals at riding a see-saw of sorts atop the muscular body that has been reduced to orgasmic reflexes, involuntary twitches, and happy squirts.

At last, Lan Zhan discovers the joys of the legendary fiveway Quintuple combo with tenway handjob and sex with uncountable and unimaginable orifices. His sex life will never be the same again after this.)

.

“Stay close to me,” Lan Zhan tells his children as they approach the backdoor entrance of the deserted Heavenly Palace. Little Ni-er instinctively curls around the collar to masquerade as a fluffy outline of the enchanted bathrobe, while Ernie hides in one of the robe's depthless shadowy pockets.

The entire Heavenly Court looks abandoned, with not even a celestial officer or servant in sight. The buildings, courtyard, gardens, larger furniture and fixtures are located and positioned about the same as Lan Zhan remembered from his last few visits, although some valuable objects are missing, such as porcelain decorations, lacquerware, books and literature, baskets of tools and instruments, expensive fabrics, and metal and wood sculptures. Nearly all cupboards, drawers and shelves are emptied as well. There is a fine layer of dust on the surfaces, and there is a pervading atmosphere of neglect such as trash, crumpled paper and discarded clothes and other common items littering the floor. Outside, a few tumbleweeds roll by, followed by fallen leaves that cover the unswept courtyards and browning gardens. The wells are dry, the orchards are barren, and the vegetable gardens are not maintained and overgrown with weeds

It looks as though a few weeks have passed since the inhabitants vacated the premises.

Father, the facts do not compute. That would mean more than a millennia has passed in the Mortal Realm, however it has only been three months on earth since the Tian family was exiled - which translates to mere minutes, if not hours in Heaven-time.

If the recorded telecast of the last Universal Reincarnation is to be believed, we should at least see the previous tenants of the Palace, or servants moving out items from the buildings. It cannot be empty like this, otherwise how does Heaven run without an Emperor?

“Hush, Ernie. Let’s explore a bit more, perhaps there are some clues inside,” Lan Zhan whispers to the pocket on his bathrobe, although it becomes clear that they’re the only living beings around, and the surroundings are very quiet.

In fact, too quiet.

After a while of walking amongst unoccupied offices and residences, the trio discovered that the area around the Heavenly Court is deserted as well with signs of unrest or violence, due to the garbage and bits of blackened, torn, twisted or scratched metal, wood and fabrics found all over the place - whether on signages, on the gates, inside and outside buildings. The local supermarket is dark, and its shelves are in disarray and broken, with squashed and burnt remnants of store items and dried-up perishables lying haphazardly on the floor. There are some baked dried muddy footprints on the roads pointing generally towards the Palace, suggesting some gods or celestial beings were running away from something to seek refuge at the Emperor's home. Even the mini golf cart that Lan Zhan once took during a day tour is left in a ditch by the roadside, covered with soot, the metallic surface is burnt and warped by extreme heat - its chassis has melted, the engines have broken down and rusted, while its tyres have liquefied and gone flat.

Father, meimei said that she senses feelings and threads of memories of the past from this place. She said that something came rushing through like a fiery, dark, vicious tidal wave. There was mass panic, tears of anguish, and pleas for mercy to escape the apocalyptic end. Based on my scans and analysis, it seemed a great fire burnt its way through, there were struggles and probably fights broke out for some reason, and the citizens tried to hide in the Palace where it would logically be the safest place during times of disasters. However, something must have happened and everyone disappeared inside the Heavenly Court and the Palace compounds.

Meimei said that she senses something foreboding and unrecognizable looming over the next few blocks. She is uneasy and does not want us to travel further than this road.

The Grand Patriarch agrees, as the immediate vicinity looks - and feels - disturbingly quiet and soulless, except for a breeze that blows more dust across the landscape of abandoned houses, shops, office buildings and roads. Little Ni-er tightens her coil around her father's collar and emits a soft anxious whine.

Lan Zhan returns to the Court and the palace gardens. He passes by the huge bodhi tree, although the tree seemed to be dying from the lack of care and water. When he sees a broken straw broom near its roots, and a shattered vase with a twig of dead willow on the bone-dry dusty ground, he hurries in his footsteps. He knows that he will not be able to return to the Mortal Realm until the designated time agreed with the Wei gongzi s, yet he does not want to linger in the Heavens any longer than necessary. He breaks into a light jog towards the well at the vegetable gardens.

“Ernie, I wish to return soonest. Does the stairway inside the well work?” he asks, panting from the rush.

There is a slight wiggle inside the bathrobe’s pocket, as Ernie performs the necessary calculations.

Mn. Father, meimei has transferred your urgency and reset my priorities. Go to the well, I will transform into a rope and you can climb down with us in tow. At the same time, I’ve spread some of my particles into the air so that we can continue to monitor the situation from afar once we’re home.

Hurry, Father. Meimei said that something is coming through the gates...!

There is a loud crash, and one of the pillars of the Palace gates collapses from tremendous impact and force. The winds pick up in speed, sending swirling dust into Lan Zhan’s eyes and blurs everyone’s vision - and Lan Zhan thought he heard the wind or something growl in the background, but he couldn’t be sure because the sounds are distorted. His senses start to spin as the world becomes increasingly encased in confusing mists and tornadoes of brown and greys. Ni-er starts to twitch nervously and grabs hold of her father's neck and shoulders with her furred form.

Lan Zhan leaps over the well's edge and grabs Ernie's rope-form when the latter latches himself to the inner walls like spider silk. All three slide deep into the dry, empty tunnel-like exit lined with dead algae and mould, and soon, Ernie unhinges himself and they drop freefall through the abyss.

Notes for the Chapter:

So I read about the Zhan Ge and the Anti-fans fiasco... yikes! C'mon, give us all a break, we're already starving for news about our favourite celebrity since the virus outbreak, and now this? *throws tomatoes and banana peels*

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 76

The sight of a man wearing nothing but a woolly bathrobe, with a black glistening tentacle flapping insanely from the hem of a pocket, and a furry white cat's tail tied around his neck like a scarf, falling from tens of thousands of feet in the air, with screams and high-pitched squeals trailing behind (Lan Zhan was completely silent and expressionless throughout the skydiving experience) - is a sight to behold.

I'm going to transform into a parachute! Hold meimei tight!

Lan Zhan nods and calmly - his fingers are a bit shaky, because adrenaline is pumping through his bloodstream - and picks off little Ni-er from his neck and stuffs her into his bathrobe, bulging tightly against his chest. Ernie releases his grip from the pocket and instantly morphs into a huge black canvas with straps around Lan Zhan's upper torso - the canvas acts as a parachute and expands from the force of violent winds at such high altitudes.

The trio circles and glides through freezing temperatures and darkening skies - they're definitely on the other side of the globe, if the earth is indeed round and not flat, according to Lan Zhan's recent education on the science of their world - and Lan Zhan marvels at the beautiful landscape spread out before him; they're high above the vast expanse of dark, swirling windswept oceans. The sun had just set, painting the western horizon with cloudy skies that glow with fiery orange from the dying embers of sunlight. Further above, more murky rain and snow clouds have gathered; brutal gusts of wintry winds twist the greying opaque shapes into sinister tendrils, and occasionally flashes of lightning light up parts of rising masses of blizzard ice and moisture, heralding stormy nightfall in the hours to come.

Lan Zhan realizes that they're drifting through airspace that formerly belonged to the continent of Wuji - since the continent has disappeared, he squints his eyes to try and locate for any signs of land, islands or even the fabled Dragon King's dumpster - surely there should be a pile of something solid enough for them to set their feet on, because he doubts any of them would survive swimming through such freezing, treacherous waters.

Father, I've initiated a deep scan into the oceans, and couldn't locate any solid structures or manmade constructions, let alone undersea cities and civilizations! There is absolutely nothing besides the seabed, corals, underwater volcanic vents and marine life. It's as though... the Realm of the Seas had vanished into thin air!

The Grand Patriarch frowns. He had met the Dragon King, his citizens of the Deepest Seas, and watched how their towns and cities modernized with 31st and 41st-century technology. He couldn't fathom what caused their disappearance, whether they were wiped out by a calamity - and if the cause was related to what they'd seen in Heaven. In the meantime, he had nearly no time to contemplate about what to do with the icy surface of the ocean that was rushing into view at frightening speeds; Ernie's parachute form somewhat slowed their descent, but it wasn't enough and the unsteady winds caused sudden shifts in direction and brief falls at gut-dropping velocities.

The moment he slammed into the water with a great splash, he thought that he had rattled some nerves and suffered a concussion, because miraculously he felt buoyant and light although he was sinking beneath the surface like a rock, warm and toasty despite the chill of the sea, painless and smooth with his bodily movements, as though he'd sliced through the water and seamlessly became a part of the liquid. Most of the air in his lungs were expelled upon the dizzying moment of impact and he desperately clung on the remaining dwindling oxygen, but his lungs gave out the moment his vision clears from dispersing clouds of bubbles, and he knew he was going to drown, because he really needed to breathe and inhale--

.

Lan Zhan mutters a prayer to Goddess Guan Yin - if she still exists - and gives silent thanks to all the boiled fishes he'd eaten during his lifetime. He always had an unhealthy disproportionate amount of interest towards freshwater and marine life during his childhood - whether helping to catch fish by hand near the river gorges of Cloud Recesses, angling and spearfishing in the lakes around Caiyi Town, or whenever the extended family made day trips to coastal towns, he'd assist to cast and haul fishing nets to bring in lunch and shellfish. True to his scholarly personality, he examined his catch and scrutinized how the fish behave and swim, so that he could figure out better techniques to trap more in the next attempt.

Finally, the learnings pay off - since his daughter has transformed him into a semi-naked merman - he practises flexing his large fishtail to propel forward, and twitches his fins to spin and bank to the sides. Lan Zhan had taken on the classic handsome merfolk look - he is topless, broad shouldered and well-muscled, and a large silver-turquoise fishtail grows in place of his legs starting below his navel. The scales shine and sparkle, flawless, and they also dot his upper body to confer waterproof properties to the pale human skin. Fins grow from parts of his webbed hands and tail, even out from his ears, and they can be retracted at will. His long hair flows dreamily from the back of his head in the swaying waters, and sometimes errant locks tickle gills along the sides of his neck.

Father! I'm... I'm a real octopus! This is amaaaaziiiiinnnnngggg....!

Ernie is transformed to his true mollusc state - a black giant octopus who rockets through the water using hydraulic jet propulsion - and is incredibly fast every time he squirts out savage whirlpools behind him. Since his father had turned into a fish-kin, he graciously offered to hold the bathrobe with one of his tentacles in safe possession, and Lan Zhan agreed.

Little Ni-er coos in the water and she looks like a two-feet long fat baby seal with flippers, minus the face; her head is still a tapered end without any eyes, nose or snout, and her mouth is still delicate and toothless - her fur had grown longer and sleek against her bullet-shaped body, and she easily flies through the water like a nimble, perfect aerodynamic creature of the sea.

Ni-er swims alongside, then tries to latch onto her father's chest but experience in her early life taught her that there's nothing from her male parent's nipple. Lan Zhan winces when he feels his irritated, slightly swollen nipple grazed by toothless pink gums - and realizes that he's somehow back in his real body; Ni-er must have transported his sex-comatosed body back to him, and simultaneously transformed him to a merman - he's whole again!

The fat baby seal whines and looks around as though she sniffs something - then dashes into greater depths while crying out "Mom!". Lan Zhan rushes behind Ni-er and Ernie hurtles ahead, believing that the little princess has a keen sense of smell when it comes to her mother or food.

.

Wei Ying is stunned at the turn of events - he'd tune into ErNet to watch the adventures of his husband and children in the Heavens, while riding an unconscious partner to ensure that his soul stays amongst the clouds. His siblings had left shortly after launch, because they were, honestly speaking, a little tired after a night's work and returned to their respective universes to rest; they promised to be back and resume the colonization of the estate as soon as possible.

His heart raced when he caught glimpses of his family running from an unseen danger in the form of swirling dust devils and angry growls, then sighed in relief when they dived into the well that he knew would take them to safety, and nearly had a heart attack when Ernie's virus seedlings showed the aftermath - a huge, probably taller than 88 floors, salivating bear-like Chow Chow Heavenly Sun-Eating Dog, appeared on screen, flattening buildings as it bulldozed through the Heavenly Court, its paw prints unearthed entire gardens of vegetables and unrooted clumps of barren orchard trees, its wagging tail swiped roofs and walls off the Palace, and it roared mightily when it barked. Unable to sniff out the escaped intruders, it sat on its haunches in front of the well, and panted - waiting for the sneaky rats to return, figuratively speaking.

Then, just when Wei Ying was about to slap his husband awake and draw him back to their cave-room, his entire body and vision glowed white - and he disappeared from the bedroom.

.

“Lan Zhan! Lan Zhan! I’m here!” Wei Ying shouts joyfully at a sight for sore eyes and waves like a madman trapped on an island. Little Ni-er squeals at the improbable success to locate her mother in the inky darkness of the deep sea. Her fur glows white, but the light is dim and does not illuminate far.

“I didn’t know what to do because everything was so dark until she came,” he giggles when Ni-er latches onto his breasts and starts to suckle greedily - somehow, he ended up with a female-like body with twin mounds on his chest and a more voluptuous hip and tail, however his face remained unchanged. His fish-scales shimmer with ruby red and black opal against Ni-er’s luminescence. “Ah, my little girl is hungry after the scare of running away from a dog, and falling from the skies,” he coos and starts stroking Ni-er’s sleek fur while breastfeeding the latter.

“Wei Ying!” Lan Zhan cries out and embraces his spouse and the suckling daughter in one swoop, and Ernie tags along too. He is overjoyed from surviving a harrowing chase, then reuniting with his family of seapeople (mermaid for Wei Ying) and his eyes sparkle with tears. He starts peppering sweet kisses on Wei Ying’s face, and Wei Ying grins as he raises a hand to show what he made while waiting for the husband. “I didn’t dare to swim far, so I picked up some kelp and seaweed, then broke a few pieces of coral, to make this seaweed skirt. I’ve already put on mine, and this one’s for you, because we should dress decently in front of our childr-- Ah, you naughty husband! Why are you poking at me!”

Merman Lan Zhan nnnghs while he was kissing affectionately from the front, and his hands grope his beloved passionately, savouring the sensations of smooth human skin and the patterned bumps of fish scales on his spouse’s tail - which ignited primitive, lustful instincts that drive merfolk’s virile reproductive behaviours - and subconsciously his body moved naturally until his penis - a swollen pinkish phallus more than six inches in length, naked and without sheathe, richly innervated and muscled - slides effortlessly into Wei Ying's female genitalia - a twitching, body-warmed undulating tunnel that gloriously welcomes the intruding visitor with pulsating muscular waves.

"Ahhnn, ahh, Lan Zhan, our daughter is feeding from my breasts, you're sandwiching her against us, and your penis is inside me... have you no shame fucking your wife while she's with the baby? Ahhhnn!" Wei Ying half-heartedly struggles from his husband's amorous grip and kisses, as Lan Zhan rocks gently in tandem with the waves in and out of Wei Ying's slick, slippery love canal. Every time he slides in, powerful reproductive tract muscles grip and squeeze him, further fanning his arousal and desire to breed his mate. Something convulses inside his pelvis from the tender ministrations upon the lovingly-stroked penis, and he one-twins into Wei Ying's love tunnel, unable to contain the excitement.

"Nnnh, Lan Zhan, be more gentle, it feels strange and yet so good, I'm afraid I might pass out from the pleasure... aaah! Kiss me, kiss me darling!" Wei Ying pleads mindlessly, and Lan Zhan indulges in his spouse's requests boundlessly. He kisses and makes-out with Wei Ying in the middle of the ocean, rutting increasingly faster into the slippery yet tight channel, he prods, rubs and stretches as much as he can with his mighty phallus.

Ernie rolls his yellow-tinged bulbous eyes, and swims to nearby coral structures to investigate their surroundings.

"Lan Zhan! You're making me dizzy, I.. I think... ah, no, I feel.. Unngh.. Your hot rod is melting my insides, you make me feel SO GOOD!"

It seems mermaids orgasm very easily, and Wei Ying squirts a generous serving of breastmilk for little Ni-er when he hnnghs and arches and bows his body repeatedly like an electrocuted fish. Lan Zhan closes his eyes and enjoys having his penis massaged with vibrating walls. Even in the throes of orgasm, Wei Ying continues to spout nonsensical words, “Lan Zhan! What if I’m carrying eggs inside my mermaid tummy? There could be tens, even hundreds of tiny golden orbs of new life waiting for your seed! Ahh, Lan Zhan, if you ejaculate now, our babies will be swimming in a pool of your milky seed! I’ll become pregnant and give birth to many babies!”

Lan Zhan scrunches his face and loses control on rational thought; merman are driven more by instincts than humans; and his thrusts turn frantic, almost frenzied, like a shark going for a kill.

“Ah ah ah, Lan Zhan, I can feel it... it’s... becoming longer, and thicker! Ah ah... you’re hitting my womb so hard! Shoot everything out! Make more babies inside me! Please, lao gong !” Wei Ying screams thoughtlessly in the water. Lan Zhan growls and grabs Wei Ying’s free breast out of pure unadulterated lust - a small cloud of white milk jets out.

Lan Zhan orgasms, and it’s one of the most beautiful climaxes he’s ever experienced (because merfolk’s sex lives are that good ). His unsheathed and fully-exposed penis twitches wildly more than thirty times inside the hot tight canal, and floods lovely Wei Ying’s womb with rich white opaque nectar, fully coating and inseminating everything within the mermaid of his dreams.

Little Ni-er coos in blissful ignorance of her parents’ rutting, and gets another mouthful of yummy mother’s milk.

.

The reunited couple exchanged their stories and Lan Zhan learns about the fate of the Heavenly Sun-Eating Dog. Wei Ying also twists one of the husband's ears and scolds the latter for forgetting to use a holo-phone to call for help, because holo-phones are usable by souls - however it is too late anyway, since they're all underwater.

Lan Zhan blushes and the tips of his ears burn red, and he berates himself that he should really get acquainted with modern technology, and use it more frequently.

.

Lan Zhan easily catches a marauding fish by exerting powerful fin muscles against the water to launch himself at blazing speeds at the precise moment. He bites hard into the flesh to paralyze it, then offers it to Wei Ying by mouth. Wei Ying mmmms drowsily and accepts the stunned fish from Lan Zhan's lips - he needs to eat a bit to replenish his breast milk after all. Lan Zhan seizes the opportunity to embrace his spouse with his hands, and the two nibble at the fish together, exchanging bite-sized sashimi morsels between rolling tongues - especially when Lan Zhan bites more than he can chew and feeds some to Wei Ying -, in a sort of hungry lovemaking of kisses, licks and swallows in the depths of the ocean.

Lan Zhan doesn't miss the chance to stick his twitching engorged penis into Wei Ying's warm and inviting seed-inundated entrance - there is little resistance with a full, satisfied tummy - and Lan Zhan wiggles his fish tail happily in a sensuous side-to-side dance of copulation and loving erotic frontal assaults with fast, quick jabs, until he peaks a bit from the sexual excitement and one-twos into lovely Wei Ying, many times over the course of meal until the fish is consumed - and he goes off to search for another bite of tasty seafood.

Being merfolk, their taste buds evolved naturally; raw fish tastes as superbly delicious in all forms - much better than chicken, beef or mutton. Shellfish, eels, sharks, crabs, sea urchins, starfishes, seaweed and other marine life forms turn the ocean into a tasty all-you-can-eat buffet that can be easily picked from the seawater, pulled out from corals or collected from the seabed. It's to their benefit that merfolk are at the top of the food chain in the Realm of the Seas, and their ecosystem is literally packed with bountiful harvests and feasts.

... and there, over there is where I used to peddle in the streets during my younger days. I sold lots of Wangxian foodstuff and products near the marketplace adjacent to the Dragon King's palace court! Ernie points with some of his tentacles at a pile of ruined rubble - there are plenty of broken and barely identifiable crushed, coral-made offices and supermarkets, remnants of shattered clam shell-apartments devoid of any intelligent life, and other mounds of debris at the bed of what used to be a thriving undersea city - there are no standing structures left in the unsettling tranquil and emptiness of a barren subaquatic continental shelf.

Lan Zhan hnnghs and is in the midst of his nth thirty-twitches inside lovely Wei Ying (some of his semen overflow and jets out of his spouse's sweet tight hole with each healthy, strong ejaculation), so the latter answers the son. "Ernie, take us to the palace, maybe we'll find some more clues there. The Jade Emperor was a good friend of the Dragon King, so if one disappears then the fate of the other could be intertwined as well... ah, ah, lao gong , haven't you had enough? You're filling my womb again and I can feel another warm spurt spilling into me! You've been inside me for the past half hour, you horny beast!"

Wei Ying drags his joined husband who seemed to be glued to his crotch like an adhesive, as they swim behind the octopus, and the fat baby seal charges ahead of the squad, brimming with confidence and renewed energy from her full meal. (Apparently merman are slaves to sex and desire, and are beneath the opposite gender, which is why mermaids have the upper hand, set up matriarchial societies for their merfolk, take charge of their lives and star in various folklore and fairy tales.)

.

"Okay, that's ENOUGH!" Wei Ying peels the husband away until Lan Zhan had to (sadly) disengage from the continuous fornication, "You've pumped so much sperm into me and I feel disgustingly bloated inside!" Even at an arm's length, that does not deter Lan Zhan from raining smooches, loving nibbles and delightful suction at Wei Ying's hands and fingertips. The younger man (mermaid) has a tough time holding off the sex predator, while the latter moans and pleads for more skin contact. "Your daughter is fighting with the Pillar of World Balance and all you can think of is your dick!" he chastises the horny husband.

Lan Zhan is unremorseful, and manages to bend his tail until the tip of his penis kisses Wei Ying's puffed-up rosebud, then slides in coaxing circles until its tip slips in, then out, then a quick one-two in-outs, and sweet sensations of reproductive ducts contracting and relaxing reflexively, and he hnnngs again to eject another plume of seed into the jelly-filled canal. Wei Ying groans in frustration, because Lan Zhan's churning hot semen feels really, really good inside him.

Elsewhere, Ernie expands his octopi form like a giant blossoming black umbrella, and bravely shields his parents from bone-shaking ripples of shockwaves. A huge and long golden dragon-like serpent, as long as an 88-floor tower, emerged after the grand Pillar awakens to its natural serpentine state. It twists and coils violently in the middle of what remains of the Dragon King's palace, creating maelstroms of fiery liquid as it tries to fend off little Ni-er's incredible powerful attacks. Every time it roars and slashes with its body, the ocean experiences tremendous barrages of undersea tsunamis and earthquakes, levelling off any vestiges of the Sea Realm, shattering rubble into fragments smaller than coral bits. Little Ni-er shows her combat prowess when she easily dodges and teleports out of harm's way, then opens her mouth and blinding-hot lasers shoot out in counterattack. Every time the laser beam strikes its target, the searing heat turns a patch of the serpent's flesh into melted plasma, and penetrates through. The monster exploded with agony as it crumbles into a massive heap under the siege of 51st-century Event-Horizon class Singularity lasers, and ends up like a dead snake pockmarked with burnt flesh and punctured by gaping holes (like a wind instrument, incidentally).

Meimei did it within minutes! Even I would have taken a few hours to bring down such an impressive enemy. In any case, this creature, derived from the Pillar, was probably what wiped out the entire Realm of the Seas and possibly devoured all its inhabitants. Ahh.. it's shrinking... Mother, look, it's magically transforming into... a golden flute?!

The fat baby seal gurgles happily after the victorious skirmish and returns to her family. She swims past her amazed brother, who has started to unwind back to his normal octopus form, then little Ni-er squeezes between her rutting parents to get another nom-noming suckle out of her mother's breasts and replenish her reserves.

Wei Ying doesn't really care what his children do, even when Ernie presents the latest gift to his mother and carefully slides the golden flute into the belt that holds up his tattered seaweed skirt, as he is deliciously pummeled and mated by the ravenous, insatiable husband again and again. (Inside, Wei Ying tells himself that he would consider transforming him and the husband into merfolk in their outdoor pool if either of them feel frisky - however, not during a divinely journey like this! He playfully slaps Lan Zhan's chest to punish the sexy merman for his unbecoming sex-slavish behaviour, and gets another squirt into his bulging belly.)

With the Pillar gone (and safely tucked into Wei Ying's seaweed belt), as expected, the world tilts off-balance. Everything starts to crash and fall. This time, Wei Ying whips out his holo-phone and brilliantly speed dials his awesome da ge to save the Mortal Realm and any other realms tied to it.

The hole left by the now-missing Pillar starts to drain out like a turbulent, colossal unplugged bathtub spanning across the oceans. Not surprisingly, the family of four gets sucked into the black hole, with lots of terrified screams and excited squeals, down to the next level closer to the center of the earth.

.

Based on the analysis of Ernie's seedlings in the Heavens, who also managed to scour the clouds for surviving virus from the previous Universal Reincarnation (the spores are surprisingly heat-resistant), plus the deep-analysis of what his sensors picked up in the sea, Ernie has logically pieced the puzzle.

First of all, let me preface my explanation by saying that I never expected this to happen. All of us, including the kins, were busy living our happy lives in other universes, and I didn't look back at this universe nor check on the reports relating to this world and its associated realms. So please do not blame me for what I'm about to tell.

“Go on,” Lan Zhan murmurs, and takes a sip of pu'er tea that his daughter (non-magically) created. He's reached his own godhood again, after such a soul-draining sex throughout most of his stay in the Sea Realm, and he's at peace with his inner self; his nether regions are absolutely emptied, put out of commission, and rendered temporarily impotent.

“Boy, you're just wiping responsibilities off your hand, but I will forgive you because you protected us when we needed you,” Wei Ying chips in with his thoughts, and flicks a toasted peanut (also made by the daughter) and catches it accurately into his mouth. It's fun to eat a plate of toasted peanuts this way, when the family of four - now in their normal forms; the humans are dressed in respectable robes, Wei Ying keeps his newfound golden flute; and two tentacles of opposite colours - sit on a cushiony magic carpet of sorts and descend vertically like an elevator. At such great speeds, even gravity cannot catch up, and the thrown peanuts seem to float in the air and take their time to fall gently onto Wei Ying's waiting tongue. Interestingly, Wei Ying sports a slight potbelly, but with time, that would drain out (hopefully).

They seem to be travelling down an endless tunnel through a deep chasm close to the planet's core. Little Ni-er, having received a rejuvenating feed before her mother's bosom flattened out, effortlessly creates a picnic on the carpet - a steaming pot of tea, toasted mixed nuts and some summer fruits.

You're right, mother. I will endeavour to be more responsible and proactive in the future. First off, this entire reality of gods gone missing and monsters taken over, is the fault of the last moments of the last Universal Reincarnation.

Three months ago, just before the Grand Heavenly Council waved the all-powerful Reincarnation Wand - which by the way, I have successfully reverse-engineered and handed to our kins - unfortunately one of my seedlings found itself inside the councillor's nostrils due to the force, air density and trajectory of particle dispersion from blowing winds inside Council's hall. This led to an allergy-like reaction, and that god reacted by sneezing - which was really, out of anyone's control.

When I reviewed the footage from the other observing seedlings before the fires started and burnt everything down, the wand was actually flung to the ground from the impact of the sneeze, and this has great consequences to our world today.

The tentacle wiggles in awe (but looks like a wiggling worm anyway, just like his sister who is lying contentedly on Wei Ying's lap and stroked with nut-flavoured fingers). "What do you mean? Explain, Ernie," Lan Zhan asked quizzically. Being the most old-fashioned and dull among the four, he's the slowest to catch on.

Ernie is patient with his father, as always. Father, the angle and direction of the wand determines how much the Universe will burn and re-create itself. Based on the data gained from reverse engineering the tool, and by extrapolating the said knowledge to the movement of the wand recorded in the footage, I have deduced that this led to the re-creation of the Mortal Realm proceeded as planned although with some minor changes - and the re-creation of the Realms of the Gods went horribly awry.

Father, mother, all the gods have been wiped out by accident to the point about three months ago in our time. As a result, each realm's Legendary Guardian runs amok, and is without a master - such as the Heavenly Sun-Eating Dog breathing out annihilating Solar Flares through its jaws and tearing through the Heavens, and the Pillar of World Balance turning the entire Dragon King's realm into prehistoric crumbled seabed. All remaining servants, non-immortals and sub-celestial beings were devoured by these guardians because they're hungry and there's no one to feed them. I can ascertain the extinction to be complete, because my seedlings are everywhere to scan and monitor the environment constantly.

“What about the Tians? We went to the Heavens before to look for them, but didn't manage to find any clue because the dog chased us out,” Lan Zhan questions, and grips Wei Ying's wrist reassuringly because he knows his spouse shivers at the mere mention of the dastard canine species.

Father, according to my seedlings and when matched with confidential records rescued from the burnt archives in the Council's office, it seems they were exiled and de-immortalized before the Reincarnation. I presume they have been stripped of all powers and sent to a nondescript village to live as mere human beings for the rest of their lives. Logically, it means they're alive somewhere in the Middle Kingdom. However, illogically, I cannot compute what this translates when considering their billion and trillion-year old ages. One of my investigative programming priorities is aligned with yours - to search and locate the Tians and shelter them from further harm. I would like to interview them and understand their experience and future prospects, if you allow, Father.

“Mn. Permission granted. I am happy that you will help us to look for my in-laws,” Lan Zhan smiles faintly - he feels his family unites well under difficult circumstances - and takes another sip of refreshing tea.

“Ernie, we seem to be descending forever. Are we there yet?” Wei Ying (nearly) whines when the last of his crunchy peanuts vanishes from the plate. He contemplates whether to peel a tangerine or not - he doesn’t want to get his fingers sticky, and there are no napkins or hand sanitizers around.

Good point, mother. Yes, we are reaching there soon. Which brings me now to say... let me be proactive this time, and work with meimei on our next challenge in our new destination. After we overcome it, I will have time to construct an exit strategy and bring in the reinforcements to fix this whole mess.

With your consent, of course.

The black tentacle bows, and Wei Ying looks curiously at Lan Zhan. The patriarch rubs his budding beard and finally nods with a resolute, but restrained, “Mn”. Wei Ying sighs at the tenacity of his husband in dealing with the gods’ problems, and drops the tangerine idea to prepare for another encounter with another monster, in another realm.

.

The Underworld should be Wei Ying's and all cold black Wei-kins' forte, given that their source of power comes from the Dark Arts with roots in this realm. Lan Zhan is asked to sit back on the carpet with his super-protective bathrobe on, propped on the side with pillows and his fuzzy cat's tail daughter warming up his belly, and to watch his spouse and son fight against the Underworld's Legendary Guardian.

The arena is the Lord of Hell's former necropolis - now reduced to a vast, empty gaping cavern of collapsed buildings, broken walls, rubble and debris - is actually an enclosed space inside the planet's mantle near the molten core. The Book Of Judgement, a gargantuan flying dog-eared book whose spine is as tall as an 88-floor tower, with wings made of enormous pages arranged like feathers, squawks annoyedly as it flaps its script-lined limbs and sends raging tempest all over the demolished city.

Little Ni-er readily creates shields to ensure her father is sheltered, and they come with in-built air-conditioning so that Lan Zhan doesn't combust from the overbearing heat from hell. Wei Ying whips out his newly-minted golden flute and starts playing eerie tunes. The sound is distorted, the pitch is ear-splitting, the melody is creepy, twisted and demonic - and Wei Ying's eyes glowed bloody red (oh how Lan Zhan missed the sight of those lovely ruby-red eyes!); the giant book wobbles in its flight, starts to collide into stalactites, stalagmites and other cavernous structures, and squawks in outrage at the confusion enveloping its senses. Black wisps hurtle from nowhere and hurl themselves into the book; they seep and penetrate through its covers and browned pages, draining life-force and living will out of them, and the book eventually hovers then freezes in mid-flight.

At that point, Ernie launches itself and expands into his octopus form again, and extends his webbed body to sizes never thought possible. He coats the entire book and swallows the whole tome in a single gulp. Then he vibrates freakishly and shivers, then shrinks like air released out of balloons - with the book in his gut.

“Here, take it, ( 给你 )” Wei Ying nonchalantly tosses the age-worn magazine-like book into Lan Zhan’s arms. He’d stared at the entire battle with wide eyes, and he’s amazed at Wei Ying’s immaculate performance with the flute - he missed the good ol’ days when both of them fought together against men and monsters - and Wei Ying doesn’t miss the opportunity to twirl his new toy - the golden flute - a few rounds before sliding it to his belt in one smooth move and a knowing rise of an eyebrow (Lan Zhan feels his heart stir at such an awesome act!).

Lan Zhan sits up properly in a lotus position and clears his head and throat. Then he opens the book and starts to thumb through pages full of written words. The book is magical - no matter how many pages are turned, there seems to be endless amounts of them and he could never reach the end. His whole family crowd around him, mesmerized at a book that never ends.

Father, the Book Of Judgement works like an Infinity Book - there will always be pages full of words, and an uncountable number of pages that are blank and are being filled in real-time even as we speak. It records everything that has ever happened in the Universe through its Reincarnations, and everything that is happening until the current moment, with clear conclusions on whether a living being should be sentenced to eradication upon its demise, worth given another chance to reincarnate and return, or elevated into a higher form in its next life.

Do you remember how the Lord of Hell worked with the book?

Lan Zhan tries to remember the ritual that the Lord of Hell, another good friend of his great grandfather-in-law, performed. He recalled that the Lord did not touch the book, but merely talked to it, and the book turned to the correct pages.

He clears his throat again, rather majestically, and every family member holds his or her breath - the toasted peanuts were actually a bit dry, "Show me the annex of Immortals."

Miraculously, the pages of the book turn on their own, and at incredible speeds. After a couple of seconds, it stops and Lan Zhan recognizes the annex - except that it is blank save for two names and a footnote. "It says... Lan Wang Ji and Wei Wuxian, with an asterisk to our names that links to a note at the bottom: Including their clones, offsprings, progeny, creations and any other individuals as determined by the Grandmaster God of the Realms of the Gods," Lan Zhan reads carefully word by word.

Lan Zhan looks up to Wei Ying, and the latter shrugs with hands raised, "Don't look at me, lao gong, I don't really understand this, but I feel quite good with my Immortal status inherited from eating those Heavenly fruits from the last Universal Reincarnation."

Father, who is this Grandmaster God? Is this the Jade Emperor? Or is this the Lord Buddha and the Goddess of Guan Yin? Aren't they on the missing list too?

Little Ni-er coos and shuffles close to her brother, and uses him as a pole to climb up so that the book is at her eye level (although she has no eyes).

Lan Zhan thinks for a while and wonders how to ask the question. Then he speaks calmly, “Show me the list of gods, arranged by hierarchy and position of power. Show me who and where is the Grandmaster of Gods.” He wasn’t sure if the book understood the last part, but it’s worth trying anyway.

The book flips its pages again through the reverse direction. Tens of thousands of pages were turned within a minute before it slowed down and finally stopped near the beginning of the book, with the header “About Gods” at the top. Everyone gasps and squeals in excitement except for the bewildered patriarch.

At the page titled “The definitive and comprehensive list of gods as of Day XX, Month YY, Year 20XX”, and only Lan Zhan’s courtesy name is printed on the painfully empty page. An asterisk appears next to his name, and the name-bearer quickly scanned the footnotes: “At the time of printing, there is only one sole god in the Realms of the Gods, who is considered as the Founder and Grandmaster of Gods. Achieved godhood on Day AA, Month BB, Year 20XX.”

Wei Ying presses his forehead and complains, “What...? This doesn’t make sense! How can my husband be a god, the only god left in this world, and that he holds all the godliness and godly powers from the Gods’ Realms? Plus, that date.. Isn’t that the date when Ernie was supposed to be made King of Wangxian? Y’know... the day when the universe collapsed and burnt to hell!”

Father! What did you do to ascend to godhood? Please try to remember the events of that day! I promised that I'll never pursue bodysnatching and I will not seize the helm of the Kingdom, but this information is important to restructure my analysis and reports! It's the missing piece to the puzzle!

Ernie gazes up at his father, and his sister follows suit. Lan Zhan shivers at the sudden attention - and he doesn't like to be in the limelight when he isn't sure why he's spotlighted in the first place. He scrunches his brows and tried to recall - he was at the Heavenly Palace, then he flew down to the Wuji continent with his great grandparents-in-law, infiltrated the 88-floor tower, met up with the eight sisters, didn't really have dinner, then Dark Lan Wang Ji appeared and they fought in a tumultuous melee, then his compact mirror was activated, then they won, after that he fled to the toilet because his bladder was bursting, but his yue fu interrupted the blissful release--

“Ah,” Lan Zhan pounds the bottom of a fist gently into a palm in an enlightened moment. Everybody stared at him, dying to know what happened.

“The Jade Emperor mentioned that he wanted to elect me as a god of war after defeating Ernie,” he nods and smooths Ernie's back - the black tentacle nods back in understanding, “so he must've done something and entered my name into the list of gods without my knowledge.”

“So, if you put that together with what Ernie's said earlier back then while riding the carpet into the Underworld... oh Lan Zhan, you were made a god in the previous Universal Reincarnation, and then everything burnt down and all the gods in the current timeline have disappeared - except for you!” Wei Ying exclaims and embraces his beloved husband endearingly. Little Ni-er squees at being squashed again between her loving - now almighty - parents, while Ernie manages to side step the crushing hug (because adolescent boys tend to avoid such mushy displays of affection).

Ernie sighs in satisfaction, because every byte of data fits to where they belong - finally. He feels at one with his inner infinite virtual servers and database of endless information and computing power, and the orbit around his own galaxy of multiversal interstellar core programming is complete.

Lan Zhan swallows hard at his newfound status. Later, he would try to give the Book Of Judgement to Wei Ying for safekeeping because his hands tremble at the idea that everything he does could have unbelievable and unforeseen ramifications to the Mortal Realm, the Realms of the Gods and other worlds - but Wei Ying tut-tuts, and says that he’s had trouble to memorize the over-4000 family rules, and he’s had enough of written scriptures.

Lan Zhan is forced to keep the burdensome book inside one of the immeasurable pockets of the enchanted bathrobe, while Wei Ying gets away with a golden flute that he can always enjoy playing during his free time.

.

Later, reinforcements from the awesome Wei da ge arrives. The family doesn’t get to witness the miraculous remedial efforts because Ernie teleported them straight back to their cave-home after their stint with the three extra-terrestrial realms. According to the news feed on the huge television in the living room, the da ge deployed teams of maintenance workers to build and insert a humongous plastic-wrapped concrete pillar to stop the leakage from the oceans, which helped to stabilize the world instantly with no major damage suffered by the inhabitants of the Mortal Realm (earthquakes and natural disasters are quite common anyway during the olden days). An impressive million-strong clean-up crew was dispatched to the all affected realms stripped of gods to repair and rebuild the infrastructure, and restore the buildings - it's no easy task, but they've done it many times before, and are very experienced with reconstructing worlds anyway.

Specialized armies of talented Wei, Lan and master/beast-kin are dispatched to contain the unchained Legendary Guardians - which are appropriately morphed into harmless (but extremely powerful) everyday items or weapons, such as pipa and other musical instruments, swords, shields, spears, parasols, golden pagodas, leaf fans, lanterns, bags, jewels and fashion accessories, wheels, clothings, flower pots and vases, garden shears, broomsticks, gourd bottles, and many more described in ancient mythology. Lan Zhan would unknowingly receive them in a Postbird shipment from his spouses, and thinking nothing about these earth-shatteringly amazing stuff other than 'just more housewarming gifts', he'd simply use them to furnish his new cave-home and make his life a little more shinier, sparkling and full of conveniences, niceties and luxury.

Once everything had returned to the state it was, about three months ago in earth-time, a discussion at the grand council of the Lan family took place - and everyone unequivocally voted to repopulate the godless realms, because it wouldn't look too good to nosy alien neighbours from distant galaxies to have empty neighbourhoods which could either affect space tourism, or worse, invite alien invasion due to the lack of defenses and plausible resistance. Lan Zhan simply "Mn"s vaguely and noncommittally - because he doesn't like to sit in meetings that he's not interested in, and he wants to go back home and cuddle with his spouse and his two tentacle children - and soon, all the realms are full of Wei, Lan and master/beast-kin masquerading as gods and their celestial servants. (Ernie taught them how to change their faces, so fortunately, gods will always take on regal, wizened looks of aged, balding old men, instead of tall, strong and handsome Lan Wang Jis and Wei Wuxians.)

Not to forget - the Heavenly Sun-Eating Dog was easily tempted with Wangxian's tasty chicken-flavoured doggie treats and caged by scores of Lan-kin manning an ultra-large pet carrier (the Wei-kin turned out to be absolutely useless in handling canines, and the master/beast-kin were scared of predators that were above them in the food chain). With cool magic, the beast was morphed into a typical waist-high thick-furred Chow Chow dog - and sent to one part of Lan Zhan's estate inhabited predominantly by Lan-kin. It makes for a great pet and a wonderful security dog to patrol the lands under Lan Zhan's name.

Notes for the Chapter:

Just another crazy day with Wangxian...!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 77

The family stayed up until very late at night, engaged in family-oriented entertainment such as card games, Uno and Monopoly (in which Ernie always wins, Ni-er survives despite being the youngest player, Wei Ying goes bankrupt, and Lan Zhan somehow keeps ending up in jail). At the stroke of midnight, the lanterns in their cave-home go out, and Wei Ying is pleasantly surprised when his children brought out a big birthday cake with twenty three candles made in Perfection by Wangxian Confectionary division's six-stars standards. Lan Zhan kisses Wei Ying on the cheeks, and the children follow suit, singing an acapella rendition of the Old Middle Kingdom birthday song.

The now-twenty three year old man snuffles and wipes a tear, "Ah, last year we couldn't celebrate because we were trying to save our belongings from the snowstorm, and the house wasn't patched up properly. And now..."

Lan Zhan wipes the spouse's cheeks and embraces him from the side, smoothing his hair and stroking his back comfortingly, "Mn. We have everything you can ever imagine and more," and he signals the two tentacles to hop onto their mother's lap, "with two precious ones in tow. We're living together as a family. Our loving family, Wei Ying." He kisses Wei Ying full on the lips (Ernie covers his meimei's unseen eyes out of sheer habit) and Wei Ying starts to bawl.

When Wei Ying regains his composure, he makes his silent wish and blows the candles, and smooches everyone as well. Lan Zhan's heart warmed at the sight of his happy partner, the one he swore to stay by the side forever, in this lifetime, and surely beyond.

Wei Ying makes an unexpected decree, “I’m an immortal too, like the rest of you and our kind. I wish for happiness and prosperity forever, to be young, healthy and age gracefully forever!” in which Lan Zhan “Mn”s and interprets his spouse’s wish as, “Wei Ying, happy birthday and may you and all of us live joyful, fulfilling lives eternally. You are twenty two today,” (no, that’s not a typo error) - and Wei Ying squeals with delight at the husband’s permission to stay young forever at the wonderful age of twenty-two.

.

Mother, I would happily give you multiple universes, galaxies and kingdoms to rule; fantastic evolutionary forms and incredible godly and universal powers, artifacts and capabilities; or even the latest 51st century magical spells and technologies that could bend and change reality to suit your desires - however, alas, you already have all of these at your beck and call.

So, Mother, on this auspicious day, I present to you our latest acquisitions in the Mortal Realm - titles to four commercial properties in the Market Streets. I had to get Father to sign the contracts as the new owner since his name is pre-existing in the city council’s commercial register, but the management will be put under your name. I will help out in staffing, inventory and operations.

I hope this gift suits you on this blessed day!

.

Little Ni-er nngggghs and poops out the largest jade dragon-lined gold ingot (stamped with the mark of the Imperial Reserve), and it rolls into Wei Ying's hand. Their outdoor pool is covered with layers of gemstones, precious metals and money, and this ingot would be too large to bury under the sandbed - so Wei Ying pockets it anyway and decides to throw it into Lan Zhan's box of memorabilia later (it's his latest place to hide 'stuff that I can't or won't be working on, and doesn't belong in the work room').

In addition, the children brought out a handmade birthday card - Ernie drew a beautiful white and black rabbit and two baby bunnies between them, and inside, there was an exquisitely penned calligraphy of birthday wishes. Ni-er wrote a scraggly "Mom" and a heart next to it (she used her furry bottom to hold an ink-brush, and made a few unintended fuzzy butt-prints on the card too).

The motherly twenty-two year old man (his age advancement has been rescinded due to the decree) kisses his children sweetly on their cheeks as a sincere gesture of appreciation. Ni-er squees happily and proudly shows her toothless gums - there's still no sign of growing teeth yet. Ernie wipes the side of his tentacled body (like any adolescent boy getting 'eww'-inducing motherly love in front of family members and peers).

.

"Wei Ying, whatever I have is yours, and whatever that is yours, is yours.

I do not know what I can give. To say that I give myself to you, including all my possessions; my spirit, body and soul; my feelings and happiness for you; my promises to give you everyday, massages every night, cook your favourite foods, delight you by granting your wants and needs, and make sure I will always treasure and love you for who you are, and that you will always live a blissful and comfortable life with me - would be unfair to our existing relationship, meaningless as commitments, because you already and will always have them.

Perhaps this would be a more appropriate gift than something attached with a material, numerical value,” then Lan Zhan gently picks up Wei Ying’s hand, spreads his fingers and places his palm against the latter. He recites his wedding vows, pledges his love and his entirety to his one and only, and adds a few more lovely promises of perfect happily ever afters. Their Soulmate Binding Rings glow beneath the skin of the fourth fingers in unison, and Wei Ying smiles - the brightest, loveliest and touching smile that Lan Zhan has ever seen.

.

As the parents make their way to the master bedroom, Ernie takes hold of his meimei’s fuzzy body and invites her to have a slice of the cake on the dining table. Only one, he said, because meimei needs to keep her gums clean and healthy, and he’ll help with the brushing. They can have more cake the next morning, he promised.

There’s plenty of moaning and sounds of flesh smacking against flesh drifting from their parents’ bedroom by the time meimei is tucked into her pyjamas - a few old elastic woolly socks sewn together to fit her tube-like furry body, really. The weather outside of their estate’s (non-magical) barrier rages on towards one of the coldest and deepest winters ever on record, and a few snowflakes find their way to their garden - it looks as though light snow started to fall, tiny crystals that flutter to the ground like falling stars from the bright, golden crescent moon, painting their paradise on earth with twinkling frost that wink and welcome the rest of the beautiful, peaceful night ahead.

Both children tentacle-kin shuffled through the trapdoor underneath the floor mat, where Ernie had prepared an underground kingdom for the two of them, and a grand king-sized bed to spend the night whenever their parents make awful, un-romantic, mating noises that rock the entire house. Little Ni-er coos happily at how her brother gently carries her up the bed, arranges the pillows, then unfolds a thick pre-warmed electric blanket over them. He sprouts a limb from his body with a pacifier-like tip, and lets meimei suck on it to ease her to slumber. Then he telepathically commands the automatons in the cavernous kingdom to switch off the lights, leaving the ceiling dotted with breathtaking luminous glow-in-the-dark starlight, planetary systems and galaxies.

Good night, meimei.

“...‘nai... night.. Gege .”

(Later the next day, Wei Ying’s siblings called by holo-phone to exchange congratulations and wished everyone happy birthdays, and their ages never changed - because they wholeheartedly agree and comply with their Grand Patriarch’s consent. Everyone else had their own families, clans, kingdoms and universes celebrate in their own creative, special ways - including declaring national holidays, holding galaxy-wide parades and parties, and so on. Lovely Wei Ying remains happy, humble and content with a family breakfast prepared by Lan Zhan, complete with his favourite dishes of lotus root pork rib soup and spicy dumplings and congee.

Wei Ying loves Lan Zhan just by staying by his side, and being able to spend time in each other's arms.

Lan Zhan loves Wei Ying and his family in the simplest ways that cannot be measured, not even with gold and silver.)

~~~@@@~~~@@@~~~

Having a more substantial presence in the Mortal Realm, such as running a respectable business of four commercial properties besides some informal and gig economical activities, meant that certain precautions are needed to keep a low profile and secure their positions.

All Wei, Lan and master/beast-kin are granted permission to take up lessons and apply their skills on camouflaging and espionage, changing body forms, behaviours and personalities and even their looks - so that they can blend with the inhabitants of the Mortal Realm without raising suspicions from the general populace and the prevailing authorities. They can use magic or non-magical means to achieve the desired result, such as wearing 3d-printed masks or use (outdated, but adequately functional) 31st-century holographic technology.

Therefore, the estate seems to be inhabited by a variety of typical human peasants of both genders, and their animals, which look perfectly natural (no longer of dark colours) and of normal distribution of species, including pets, livestock and wildlife.

This point becomes important, when considering there will be a regular flow of goods, people and other resources between the estate and the four new stores bought under Lan Zhan's name. Due to the poor weather conditions and visibly (and expectedly) lack of customers and attention, the opening ceremonies are modest and attended mostly by the businesses' own new hires and store managers - and they look absolutely normal (including short, ugly and not-too-handsome ones). Therefore, Ernie's plan worked brilliantly and the Kingdom safely made inroads into Yiling's - and Qishan's - economy.

There are four stores owned by the Kingdom around the market area. Initially, there is hardly any attention-grabbing storefront or signages, other than an unassuming cloth with the words "Wangxian" and the company's logo hung at the front (and can be taken down anytime, should there be any Jin guards that approach too close for comfort), followed by a short description of products and services offered inside the small lot of retail space. All citizens of the Kingdom living within the 'Mounds help to produce the needed inventory to keep the shelves replenished; for the sake of time-appropriateness, only goods that are suitable for the era are offered despite the constant temptation to introduce new, innovative products to the market - great concepts and ideas are permitted to be realized in other worlds and universes, but not the one where the Grand Patriarch lives.

- At the East Market Street, the store sells sundry and magical goods, including non-perishable general household items such as straw brooms and kitchenware, common magical talismans (now mass produced cheaply with big red buttons for ease-of-use by housewives), charms, trinkets, gadgets and even Compasses of Evil (version 4.0 - but there are many other generic competitors around). Wei Ying's experience from his street peddler days helped a lot, and his A.S.S. notebook becomes a bible of sorts to all staff manning the store and ensures healthy sales towards the end of the day. The store also supplies Liao's General Store with Wangxian-branded goods, due to the good business relationship cultivated between Wei Ying and the laoban over the past year.

- At the South Market Street, a restaurant is set up which offers fusion-style Old Middle Kingdom cuisine; some ordinary elements from the far, far west are included in its lunch and dinner fares to make its dishes stand out a little from the neighbours - who are also in the food business. Dine-in and take-out options by using Qishan Postal Service Postbirds are offered (the creation and use of Wangxian-branded Postbirds would raise wariness amongst competing eateries, and even risk complaints being lodged by ill-intentioned people - so the family agrees to cut their profits for the sake of security and sustainability of the business.)
- At the West Market Street, just a stone's throw away from the general marketplace, a convenience store is set up, which also doubles as a grocery store. The estate's foraging, agricultural harvests and livestock end up here, and are also distributed to Old Merchant Zhu's stalls and Old Butcher Niu's slaughterhouses. Confectionary and herbal candies are sold, which are also supplied to Grandma Li's clinics and healthcare institutions around Qishan. The store takes pride in freshness, and does not really compete in price despite the commodity-like nature of its products. To add a modern touch, a small counter that sells piping hot fried snacks is also built beside the entrance, so that people can order and pick up such finger-licking street food outside, or dine inside the limited space as walk-in customers.

(Wangxian's Plum Sauce is still the store's best-seller. Everyone loves to dip their fried foods with the said sauce that had won many hearts in Yiling. Liang's teahouse, and all other food establishments decide to order their plum sauces from the store.)

- At the wealthier areas of the North Market Street, a store offering lifestyle services is set up. Here, the rich and famous can browse a menu of premium-priced services such as fortune telling, astrology, physical and spiritual healing, other traditional therapies, casting curses (between business rivals) and even some bodily pampering such as spa and massage, herbal baths, cupping, acupuncture and acupressure, and foot reflexology. Some of the more demanding customers from Li's clinics eventually make a trip to this store after exhausting all other scientific and traditionally-proven treatments. On most days, this store is forecasted to earn enough to keep the others operating in the black, all year round, as far as Lan Zhan's accounting books are concerned.

Lan Zhan takes his choice position as Founder, President, Grand Patriarch and all other fantastical titles, although his scope of involvement with the company is limited to general R&D taste-testing (which led the man to gain some weight due to the irresistibly delicious samples) and to use his abacus to balance the accounts by the end of the day or week, depending on whether Wei Ying is able to drag him to bed for their everyday before he opens the ledgers (he still thinks counting using the abacus is faster and more accurate compared to a 21st-century calculator).

Wei Ying, on the other hand, spends time acting like the laoban called Young Master Lan, mingles with other laoban s and attends Qishan Merchant Guild's meetings. He continues to refine and sharpen his A.S.S. to land lucrative contracts and deals, meet the customers (including nosy housewives), and basically enjoy the company of people in the Mortal Realm.

Lan Zhan continues to spend his wintertime in the cave-home, following the latest news from Yiling's weekly periodicals or watching his estate develop and grow through live feed shown on the television in the living room, especially when there are no visitors from other universes or when his spouses aren't around (the da ge , er ge , san ge and cute didi promised to drop by from time to time, because they're busy with work and family priorities too).

The rise of cultivation scholar protests all over the Middle Kingdom occurred as expected, and Lanling had a difficult time to downplay the weaknesses of its leadership of the cultivation world (because scholars are scholars, and they have the whole history of the Middle Kingdom to back them up), rally support from allied sects (because forcing people to join its army isn't the best strategy to get new recruits), and fend off intrusions from the Imperial Court (because the Emperor of Chang'an has all the money and influence at his disposal to buy troops from Far, Far West and sow seeds of mistrust among the citizens of the Middle Kingdom, after all). Having known ahead of time that nothing untoward happened to Gusu and Yunmeng, the couple did not take any action and instead, focused on their family life.

Until one day,

Two letters arrive in the postbox:

The first letter was sent from Caiyi Town with no return address. It's a plain white rice paper with only the cryptic message: "Mountains locked down. Uncle is ill. The adopted son and his friend are captured. Your shijie knows where to find me. Return home, please." Lan Zhan's face paled at the letter.

He recognized the writing even though there is no clue about the sender - it's his elder brother's!

The second letter was written by Jiang Cheng from the Lotus Pier, nearly two pages in length, and one can almost taste the distinct spectrum of emotions penned down by an author who swings between the restrained politeness of a new sect leader, and angry words aimed at the stubborn older brother who refused to bend down to his (Jiang Cheng's) level of explosive, sometimes affectionate and juvenile kind of conversation between rival brothers (of sorts) - because for all accounts and purposes, Wei Ying has done enough and doesn't bear any grudges from the past nor wants to associate with the Jiang's family and political matters.

Sect Leader Jiang starts off his written communique by scolding Wei Ying for being missing in action for more than a year, for not writing or even sending a Fairy Messenger call, for not even caring about what happens back at home (the last bit was unwarranted, but patient elder brother Wei Ying puts that aside). From the long-winded letter, Wei Ying learns that Lotus Pier is still doing well despite internal protests rattling their ranks and weakening their forces - fortunately, Yunmeng is an inland province bordering steep mountains and deep valleys that require weeks to reach on foot, even on flying swords; hence, it has not experienced as much disruption from infiltration and disturbances from the Imperial Cultivators as compared to Gusu, which lies closer to the coast and therefore easily accessible via major ground and sea routes.

Jiang Cheng asked Wei Ying for advice - which is unprecedented, given how arrogant and self-sufficient he perceives himself to be - on what to do, because he has his hands full in running the day-to-day operations of the Pier (in which Wei Ying internally smacks his forehead, because he recalls that the Jiang gongzi has a megalomaniac streak in him, prefers to take charge of everything, and hates to delegate - probably due to his bad experience with Jin Ling).

Lastly, Jiang Cheng informed Wei Ying that Wangxian products have reached his town - their home - and he knows where the name comes from especially when paired with familiar Yunmeng spiciness and the images of rabbits he'd seen in the Cloud Recesses (it's too obvious for him, Wei Ying can imagine his foster brother snorting and harrumphing annoyingly). He mentions in passing that he's been trying to buy as many bottles of the plum sauce because of the on-going promotional campaign of "collect three white bunnies and three black bunnies printed on Lucky bottles' caps, to exchange for a mystery gift" - he says that the campaign is a dud, and done in bad taste to swindle customers' money, because he'd bought crates and could never gather three of each, and their home is now filled with plum sauce bottles and he has a sack of bottle caps imprinted with bunnies of all other colours - except black and white. He blames Wei Ying for his anger, and he had broken at least two bottles after throwing them on the floor "by accident" (those didn't have black or white bunnies bottle caps).

Wei Ying sighs, folds the letter and slides it into his sleeve pocket to finish reading the piece later - scanning Jiang Cheng's angry message once is enough to make his eyes become bloodshot. He walks over to the other side of the study's table to check on how his husband is doing.

"Wei Ying... I... I need to return," Lan Zhan starts, his stare and grip on the slightly crumpled but briefly-worded letter shakes visibly.

"No, Lan Zhan. It's 'we'. We need to return, together," Wei Ying murmurs, and embraces his husband from behind, assuringly, as much as he can convey through the touch of their skin.

Notes for the Chapter:

A twist in mid-arc! I've never done this before! :-D

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 78

Ernie and Ni-er investigated the letter from Jiang Cheng first, as it contained verbose information to determine the purpose, origins, timestamps and circumstances in which it was sent. Ernie sprouts bionic alien lenses from his tentacle, and starts scanning both pages of the written manuscript with ultra-modern holo-vision (the laser light effects look awesome, by the way). Ni-er, on the other hand, sniffs the pages curiously and was fortunately pulled away before she nom-noms them with her drool-coated gums. Lan Zhan decided to cradle her in his arms while sitting on a reclining chair, and give plenty of back scratches to pacify the restless ball of fluff, to let her brother carry out the detective work properly.

Mother, first of all, let me clarify that this letter was delivered by our personal Postbird eagle, disguised as a plain crow, who picks up mail intended for this household from the company's mailbox. You can see the tell-tale enchanted eagle's claw marks on the envelope. Our kin works in this company call center of sorts and man the customer hotlines; the Wei-kin employee must've recognized jiujiu (舅舅; mother's brother) 's name, so he quickly routed the letter to our home.

(at this point, little Ni-er coos at the new term she learnt - jiujiu - and starts babbling the word repeatedly. Lan Zhan is patient at her pace of learning, and continues to stroke her fur as she blows saliva bubbles and “jiujiu”s everything she speaks.)

Jiujiu must have noticed our upgraded company logo and product packaging shortly after we started operating from the four new stores. For the first time, we actually printed a Fairy Messenger numerical code for customers in Qishan to call, and an address to mail any feedback or complaints. Our call center has been given strict instructions to screen all incoming contacts and not to entertain calls outside of the province for security reasons, due to the on-going cultivators' protests nationwide. However, we may not be able to block letters from arriving into the mailbox; hence jiujiu's letter.

After scanning the pages to detect any subversive elements, I have determined that the letter had not been intercepted or tampered in any way during the journey to our home. So rest assured, there are no poisonous powders or espionage spells on these scripts.

I have matched jiujiu's descriptions with details from the last few editions of the weekly periodicals. It is as he says - Yunmeng is relatively safe at the moment and there have been very few reports of insurgency or protests within the Jiang sect; even amongst the reported cases, none are verified or have caused any injuries or fatalities.

However, when I loaded data from other provinces and sects who are suffering from the protests, layer on it the spread of various nearby sects and Imperial expansionary movements through the difficult terrain and weather conditions expected during winter, then extrapolated to the current situation in Yunmeng and in particular the Lotus Pier, then triangulated with historical data from the Imperial archives which I have reverse-engineered, the prediction model is as follows:

Lotus Pier will be infiltrated by the first wave of spies from the Imperial Court in the next two weeks, and the first major civil disturbances can be expected by the end of the month. At the peak of winter, Yunmeng will experience its first casualties, in which the Jiang sect will have no choice but to seek help from allies including related Jin family branches. The anticipated addition into the Jin army will likely ignite war between the factions - the Imperial Cultivators versus members of the Grand Cultivation Council. Major bloodshed is foreseeable.

An extended severe weather system is forecasted this year, which has a seventy-percent probability of causing illnesses, widespread structural damages to buildings and infrastructure, and shortage of resources throughout the Middle Kingdom. The Imperial Court is prepared to face such disasters, however, not so for the rest and especially jiujiu , because his sect is admittedly, one of the weakest in the Middle Kingdom.

End of report.

“Aiyaaaa, Jiang Cheng ah Jiang Cheng, you’re still so stubborn and you never change your ways. No wonder our sect is down at the bottom of the ladder! Our ancestors must be ashamed of us now!” Wei Ying sighs loudly and directs his exasperation towards the ceiling of their home. The last bit of information about the conflict with the Imperial Court is particularly alarming, more so than having to take the side of greasy Jins (because he knows that as long as Jin Ling is with them, the situation should still be manageable), or the coming wintry drought and famine (he could count on sects helping one another in times of trouble).

Wei Ying grabs Ernie with both hands, lifts the tentacle up to eye level and shakes him violently like a salt-shaker, “We need to help my brother! I cannot let the Yunmeng Jiang sect fall - not under his rule and under my hidden watch! It would be a disgrace and I will not forgive myself if the Imperial Cultivators capture and heavens forbid, disband my family’s sect!” (Ernie quite liked being thrown around like a ragdoll - it helps to loosen his tentacle fibres and gives a good massage-like workout throughout his body’s musculature system.) The twenty-two year old Wei gongzi then turns to Lan Zhan and asks, “Please say that you agree with me, lao gong !” with a hint of desperation in his voice.

“Mn.” One word from the Grand Patriarch is all that is needed to mobilize the entire Kingdom of Lan to safeguard the First Father Wei’s ancestral lands. (Actually, Lan Zhan is a little distracted by little Ni-er; he managed to reach the dining table from his chair, and pluck a banana from a tropical fruit basket gifted by one of the Wei gongzi s - he enjoys watching his daughter nom-noming the banana until he has half-chewed banana chunks on his shirt, and later, Ni-er leaves little diamonds, jadestones, topaz and gold pieces all over the reclining chair and between the armrests and the seat too.)

In that case, I can summon a fleet of Procyon’s finest planetary bombardment drones to lay waste on the capital city of Chang’an, and have meimei flip this universe’s reality so that everything is re-created to your desires - including replacing every individual human with our kin. If necessary, Father can use his Almighty Grandmaster of Gods’ powers to re-align the will of ten generations of humankind from this era henceforth, to force them to worship and serve our families; then I can ask my uncles to supply enough food and medicines from their multiverses so that nobody in the Middle Kingdom will have to suffer through this winter--

“Ernie, no,” Lan Zhan rumbles with slight annoyance, because little Ni-er managed to snag the banana peel from his fingers and she’s trying to nom-nom the inedible piece of fruit skin. “We’ll do it the good ol’ way. I cannot risk causing more unforeseeable consequences or damages to our lives and to this world because of my status,” he adds, referring to his supremely divine position, while engaging with a cute tug-of-war game with his precious princess for the banana peel; her toothless pink gums are healthy and strong indeed.

Ernie takes a moment to compute the next logical steps following the new priorities issued by the Grand Patriarch.

Very well. We will rely on this era's cultural practices, traditions, and primitive magical and technological levels. It will probably entail a short road trip to our ancestral land, then lend a helping hand to jiujiu to sort out the sect's internal affairs and uproot the spies, before any uprising occurs. I shall start with the planning and preparations, and will provide the itinerary by sundown.

Wei Ying puts the black tentacle down, pats it with a word of 'sorry' for the mishandling, and tries to land an apologetic kiss on the son; because Ernie's such a good child and as the eldest of the children, he's taking responsibility to shoulder the family's concerns by applying Perfectly acceptable ways - but Ernie the adolescent boy would have none of such saccharine-sweet displays of affection and tries to struggle away from puckered lips.

Unngh... Mother, I'm a big boy now, and I don't need kisses! (he gets one anyway: smooch)

Lan Zhan wins his little tussle with the adorable giant cat's tail, and victoriously - although it doesn't show on his face - places the snatched banana peel atop Ni-er's head as though she's wearing a blonde wig. She coos questioningly because her prized fruit peel had gone missing, and she feels something moist plopped behind her tapered head, but she can't really see it, nor reach it without any limbs.

The letter purportedly from Lan Xichen is harder to decipher. Perhaps there is bias against the paternal side of the family, or perhaps the world-weary black tentacle had encountered enough fraud, trickery and other dastardly behaviours of humankind - Ernie is adamant that the letter was forged by a skilled con man, and also because the facts do not add up.

Father, Tian yima (姨妈; yí mā; mother's older sister; referring to Tian dajie or Lan Zhan's shijie) never managed to reach the Cloud Recesses - so she would've never had the chance to talk to bobo (伯伯; bó bo; father's older brother), and known about shugong (小叔公; xiǎo shū gōng; grandfather's younger brother)'s condition. It's a deception to lure you out into the open! It must be one of the Jins' devious schemes to take revenge on the Lan family during these confusing times!

Ernie wiggles anxiously to make his point. Lan Zhan strokes his budding beard and tries to see the son's perspective instead of outright rejection - which was his initial reaction, because it seems preposterous for anyone to violate the sanctity of his elder brother's Perfect handwriting, and Lan Zhan couldn't find any fault in those short sentences no matter how many times he peered at the crumpled letter.

(at this point, Ni-er starts burbling the new terms for calling her relatives, and she adds "bobo", "yiyi" and "xiao" to her baby speech abundantly. Sometimes she mixes the words out of pure innocent curiosity, and ends up saying "bo jiu yi xiao", which could pass as BJYX in an alternate universe and timeline - proof that Ni-er is definitely a shipper of her parents, including their alternate personas.)

“Lan Zhan, Ernie may be right. I don’t like how the terms ‘adopted son’ and ‘his friend’ are used in this context. Xichen dage would never leave out their names like this. Moreover, why is the letter postmarked from Caiyi Town instead of your birth home?” Wei Ying raises his voice in concern as well, afraid that Lan Zhan may be taking the bait if the latter decides to rush out of the house to Gusu and fall into someone’s trap. Wei Ying carries Nier in his arms and paces around the living room while rocking her gently to sleep.

Lan Zhan feels irritated that his gut feelings were not well-received by his family members despite the logic behind their counter-arguments, and that someone else other than him is speaking ill of the author of the letter - who could really be Xichen, after all. “What if one of shijie’s contacts managed to break through into the Cloud Recesses and finds that my brother has returned? What if my brother learns about shijie and for very good reasons - such as the increasingly violent protests, Lanling Jin’s military expansion and the tight scrutiny by the Imperial Court - he is forced to omit names and intentionally send an unmarked letter to the precise address in the Burial Mounds?” Lan Zhan calmly asks.

Ernie pauses. That is another question mark. Based on a scan of your memories, I can confirm that bobo would know this place because you left a message to shugong and his closest aides about the address of the cave-home, shortly after settling down in this cave last year - and then you made it very clear that bobo must be informed the moment he returns.

We do not know if he emerged from seclusion, however there is a high eighty-five percent chance that he would, since the protests have escalated in the last few weeks; according to the periodicals, a few scuffles have broken out between Jin patrol guards stationed at the borders of our ancestral land and the advancing Imperial Cultivators, resulting in burnt buildings, a rise in the number of the wounded, and some loss of lives of non-Lan members. Even the fierce corpse attacks had continued in the last few months, unabated, on outlying towns and villages. It would seem that shugong and the Lan elders have begun to lose control of the situation; I have received rumours from spy cams installed in teahouses that even within the Cloud Recesses, renegade disciples have taken over parts of the mountains.

Wei Ying edges closer to his husband and tries to comfort by nudging the warmth radiating from dozing Ni-er against his back. He saw how Lan Zhan tightened his fists at the mention of the unrest brewing in his birth home. “Lan Zhan, let’s suppose... if we make a trip to Gusu, just to have a look and support your elders if needed... crossing any Jin-controlled borders and especially walking through heavily guarded gates would be a death sentence for us. Should we try to find Tian dajie first? From the phrase ‘Your shijie knows where to find me’... it seems to direct us to find her and the Tians, who may hold the clue to Xichen dage ’s whereabouts, and that may unlock more secrets of how to find safe passage into Gusu. What do you think?” Wei Ying asks as he rests his chin on Lan Zhan’s shoulders (and Ni-er is happily sandwiched between her parents again).

Lan Zhan leans into Wei Ying’s caring gestures, “Mn. That is a good suggestion.”

Ernie sprouts multiple black tentacles appendages to hold both letters. This is truly an extraordinary coincidence which calls for extraordinary measures. I will also run some plans with our family’s council this afternoon, as it will involve searching for my A-yi s (阿姨; Ā yí; mother’s sister) and I need more data about them.

I can envision that our travels will include searching for the Tians, then travel southeast to Yunmeng, before heading off eastward to the coast of Gusu province. It may take a few weeks, so adequate provisions and careful preparations are a must!

Ernie hops and glides off to the entryway to access his kingdom and miscellaneous portals to contact the multiverses. Lan Zhan sighs tiredly and is dismayed - there are still many questions left hanging in the air with no answers, and a deepening sense of worry. The spouse copes better because his family's situation isn't as disconcerting; however he is a Lan family member, therefore he must show care and concern for his husband's welfare and well-being first and foremost, according to the draconian Lan family rules.

Wei Ying drops Ni-er onto their king-sized bed in the master bedroom for her afternoon nap, before he returns to Lan Zhan and starts tugging at his shirt. "Lan Zhan, let me help you to change because there's fruit stains all over your shirt," he instructs his husband, trying his best to distract the other with more mundane everyday tasks, as the latter seems preoccupied with his downward-spiralling thoughts. Later, he coaxes Lan Zhan to have some afternoon tea with a platter of fried fritters dipped with his favourite plum sauce, and a steaming cup of pu'er tea, but the husband's appetite is lacking and he remains quiet for most of the time. Wei Ying understands the gravity of the situation, and continues to assure the other that there's nothing that can be done for the day until Ernie returns with further news, and that he should just ease his mind off matters that are out of his control.

A sauce-coated prawn fritter touches the lips. Lan Zhan finally sighs again, and takes a bite. Wei Ying slowly feeds his husband, hoping to see his smile once again during the dark, cloudy winter days ahead.

Wei Ying is impatient to get off the ground and start travelling to Yunmeng, however without finding Tian dajie first, Lan Zhan refused to start the journey until he obtains further information about his brother's whereabouts - he wants to be able to precisely (and Perfectly) plot the waypoints on the map to mark their destinations, whereas Wei Ying would have preferred to play by ear and shift their destinations while searching for the Tians and walk towards Yunmeng in parallel even without knowing if that's the right direction; in either case, efficiency is questionable.

All Wei-kin felt the same way as the First Father Wei, and together, they discreetly formed an incredible network of detectives of sorts, and started gathering intel by unobtrusively interrogating citizens in Yiling and nearby towns and villages about 'a family of two grandparents and eight daughters of varying ages, probably dressed in strange costumes'. By sundown - after when Ernie finished chairing his daily Grand Wangxian Council meeting spanning across multiverses to obtain a majority vote to arrange the First Fathers' expedition (it's a very democratic society for the Wei, Lan and master/beast-kins, however everyone is a clone or derived from singular sources, hence the decision isn't as freely-made anyway) - Wei Ying announced during dinner that he'd received a telepathic message that the Tians are with a Silk Road caravan outside of Huang Village, and they're camped there for a few days due to the heavy snowfall en route to the capital city of Chang'an.

It's a no-brainer. I will accompany you tomorrow morning to the village, once snowfall lightens at the first rays of sunlight, disguised as a common item in order not to raise suspicions. The weather outside the barrier is terrible at this time of the day and year, and I will make sure everyone stays warm and doesn't fall sick.

Mother, in all likelihood, the Tians, like everyone else, experienced the Universal Reincarnation and their memories, even circumstances, are altered accordingly. I shall maintain ErNet connections and provide real-time advice from consulting the Book of Judgement, our memory banks, our family cloud drive and all other data repositories on what to say, or not to say - following Father's wishes of getting things done the Good Ol' Way, and without disrupting the chronology and events of this universe.

Ernie waves rather haughtily while holding his fork of seafood pasta with extra salad on the side - he's truly demanding to take charge of the situation, has everything prepped, and secretly wants his mother to acknowledge his leadership.

Wei Ying does, and pats Ernie's tentacle-tipped head (in which the black tentacle-kin squeezes inwardly with delight), "Good boy, you do that." Then, Wei Ying turns to Lan Zhan, who had paused in mid-chew after hearing the good news about the discovery of his in-laws, "Lan Zhan, my Wei agents have only located them out of pure luck because most of the village is closed, and yet this large caravan camp was set up only in the last few days which drew unfavourable attention from the residents... hence, there had been some gossip going around in the teahouses.

Based on what we've learnt so far... it will surely be a strange and awkward encounter. I'm not sure if we were supposed to have met and gotten acquainted with the Tians, since the sisters never worked in Tian Mi Mi, so I may not have met them in this universe. Moreover, they've never tried to contact us during these past few months, so I'm assuming that perhaps they were either too far, have forgotten, or they really don't know about us. I'm even doubting if they're still your in-laws, or my foster family! And the next big headache is how to bring up the topic of the cryptic letter from Xichen dage if Tian dajie doesn't even know the background of the situation!" Wei Ying exclaims, and rubs his temples due to the complexity of his thoughts trying to reconcile and match events from two different timelines - which is nearly impossible.

Lan Zhan swallows a spoonful of rice topped with boiled winter root vegetables and a chunk of steamed freshwater fish. He takes a deep breath, then loudly exhales, trying to mentally rid the problems cropping up even before they're out of the dining room. Ni-er gurgles as she bends down to suck a mouthful of pumpkin rice porridge from her bowl, blissfully unaware of her brother's fuming determination, her mother's pounding migraine, and her father's wavering position and mindset.

The Grand Patriarch realizes that with a few words, he could change everything - and it doesn't have to involve awesome godly magic or mobilizing massive intergalactic armies. He feels a little more (en)lightened as he takes another sip of the tasty lotus root pork rib soup (the 25th iteration, he guessed - he's lost count ever since Ernie took over kitchen duties).

"We will meet them tomorrow, and approach with caution. If they don't know us, then we will have to presume that we don't know them. If they know us, we'll just catch up like family members do. It should be as simple as that," Lan Zhan calmly states, and somewhat clears the air of confusion particularly surrounding Wei Ying.

Wei Ying had held his breath over his fried chicken and burgers, and stared at the husband for a full minute before realizing what the latter meant. He feels as though the weight upon his shoulders had been lifted - after all, in the previous timeline, he had initiated contact and bore the burden of the Tians' resentment - and trusts that this time, Lan Zhan will figure out the way forward. He "Enn"s with bittersweet joy, because he isn't completely happy to pile up the troubles onto his husband, then resumes munching on a drumstick that had gone cold, and relishes the spiciness marinaded into the delicious crispy skin.

.

Ernie spent the night in his underground kingdom with his meimei , discussing their family's predicament, and to orchestrate the best possible start to their parent's journey. (Unknown to anyone other than the black tentacle, Ni-er is already so much more capable than Ernie, however she still acts and appears as a harmless tiny tot in the form of a giant cat's tail.) When roosters crow and dawn breaks into the morning, Ernie makes sure everyone has Old Middle Kingdom-style breakfast to "cleanse and reset" everyone's palate because "they may be stuck with good ol' traditional food for the coming days".

After checking that all unnecessary electrical appliances are unplugged and set to sleep or hibernate mode, closing and locking all doors and windows, scheduling kins to check and visit the surrounding compounds from time to time, and telling the smart kitchen and living room to take care of the house while everyone's away, the family sets out on their first extended journey together.

Lan Zhan found his old Gusu Lan white robes and dons them together with his classic hair piece - everything still fits although he had gained a little weight over the year. He expects more cold weather fronts to strike during the journey, so his enchanted bathrobe becomes his innermost garment. He mulled over whether to tie his forehead ribbon after rummaging it from the bottom of his wardrobe - and yes, he puts that on too; he needs to lead as the Patriarch of Qishan Lan, and the ribbon symbolizes his family's strength, unity and purity (spiritually, if not physically). He straps his guqin on the back, having been dusted off and polished during the night before, and little Ni-er transforms herself into the white, cloud-patterned cloth that wraps the musical stringed instrument, so that she can always watch over the Patriarch and her precious family.

Wei Ying is, unsurprisingly, delighted to put on his signature black robes with layers of grey lined with bright red - fortunately Lan Zhan didn't turn his clothes into scraps despite the successful 'Gold Is In Vogue' campaign by the greedy and corrupted Jins - along with his golden flute which Ernie has magically disguised as a normal bamboo wind instrument with a familiar blood-red tassel. The black tentacle weaves itself into Wei Ying's clothes, preferring to hide and monitor at choice vantage points from either hair ribbon, bracelet, sash belt, shoes or even in the tassel that clings to the flute - so that he is always at the frontier, and opens safe passage for his loving family.

(Ni-er, like her father, is calm and contented to stay in one place, and one that speaks of elegant culture and meaning such as a guqin. Ernie, like his mother, is a little more greedy and wants to be everywhere to do everything.)

Both are equipped with satchel bags containing provisions, Bags of Holding masqueraded as pouches, and other amazing stuff that the couple had collected over the past year. Ernie is the most cumbersome, overthinker, and worrywart among them and intends to complete his first outing with flawless perfection, so he literally packs everything he can inside his infinite, shapeless cold black mass just in case - emptying out his underground kingdom, and his private collection of special multiverses in the process -, while his meimei appears sanguine and serene, and doesn't care to adorn herself with anything else other than a plain flowery pouch tied around her neck containing fruits and snacks prepared by her father (because she can create anything she wants, anytime and anywhere, in and outside of reality, and doesn't necessarily have to conform to her father's 'Good Ol' Ways' wishes because she's technically just a toddler).

On a freshly oiled and polished Bichen, the family of two adult men and two special children-turned-enchanted-items putters off into an overcast snowless winter morning.

Notes for the Chapter:

I've no idea where this is leading to... what the heck, just enjoy! :-D

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 79

“It doesn’t look like a typical Silk Road caravan,” Lan Zhan mutters with a hint of danger in his voice, while crouching on a rocky outcrop on a clifftop. Wei Ying immediately extinguished the twisty crystal-powered Fire Shield; he didn’t want magic detection spells to locate them, in case there were alert spellcasters around. The younger man pulls out a bamboo umbrella - the one gifted by Master Shopkeeper of the Huang outpost a little more than a month ago - and opens it so that they’re protected from the falling snow.

Lan Zhan squints at the palm-sized optical projection emitted from Wei Ying’s modified Eye talisman. Watching the video is like trying to peer at a small Wphone screen, except that it has pre-21st century resolution, lacks image zoom functions, and everything looks pixelated or blurred.

Wei Ying made a grabbing motion with his free hand, and the screen broadcasted from the talisman glides towards him, “Let me have a look. Our agents told me that they overheard conversations from teahouses, however none of them had visual confirmation of the Tian family... Woah! What the heck were the villagers drinking when they thought they had illegal backpackers squatting in their backyards?! And... I think I see a few of the sisters but they’re...” and his excited whispers trail off.

It’s not a trade convoy of sorts - there are several wooden horse carts containing boxed supplies, however, the travellers camped around the carts resemble more like assassins, soldiers and warlords than merchants. About thirty or so individuals, of sizes from dwarfs to giants, exclusively of the female gender - some sporting insect claws, bat wings, reptilian tails, vicious fangs, and parts from other species -, are garbed in a variety of ethnic, colourful and unique costumes derived from the exotic Far, Far West; their clothes are layered with what looks like heavy and plated armour and weaponry made of feathers, bone pieces, scales, steel and other strange metallic substances and features, and a few spellcasters, dressed in cloaks and tunics, wield elaborate scepters and towering staffs. The small army presents a vivid picture of a whimsical yet impressive ragtag collection of non-human adventurers usually found on the covers of best-selling medieval fantasy graphic novels, and in 21st-century role-playing games where appearances are limited to the human imagination. Wei Ying imagines that this is what master/beast-kin would look like, when teamed up with enhanced human-kin, and sent to join military campaigns to exterminate mutual enemies.

“Lan Zhan, I remembered some of these shapes,” he pokes at the spectral moving images, particularly at spider legs, invertebrates’ carapaces, twisted horns, and a very visible bloated tail-tip dripping with acidic poison, “that is the Demoness Scorpion of Chang'an mentioned when I first met the sisters in the previous timeline... and she’s Tian Third Sister!” he cries in alarm, and cringes from his earliest memories of meeting the domineering sisters and their horrid behaviours in forcibly inducting new family members in Tian Mi Mi during summer. A few more familiar faces appear on screen, and Wei Ying nudges the Eye talisman away.

Lan Zhan remains unfazed - thank goodness he’d seen and dealt with enough demons and monsters (and hybrids) that he doesn’t flinch as much as his spouse - and calmly hypothesizes, “Seeing that the sisters are travelling with a group of non-humans, their history must have been altered and diverged from what we knew about them. We must take utmost precautions in our approach.” The last part is directed to the two tentacle-kin accompanying them in this family reunion-possibly-turned-hostile.

Father, I concur with your suspicions. I have discreetly scanned the troops below and can confirm that none of them are immortals or gods. Their bio-signatures and genetic blueprints are vastly different from what I had in our databases. Without revealing too much to spoil the 'Good Ol' Ways', I think it is sufficient to say that the Tian sisters that you see below the cliffs aren't the same as my nemesis from the past.

“Does that mean that none of them will recognize you?” Wei Ying tried to keep his voice as soft as possible, to avoid the wind carrying their presence to the band of potential enemies.

I do not know, Mother. I cannot confirm without a deep scan, because to abide by Father's wishes. In this case, meimei and I will remain silent until and unless we need to react, converse, engage in combat, or escape.

“Mn. Stay away from trouble, if possible,” the Grand Patriarch agrees. Everyone feels a psychic mewl coming from the cloth covering the guqin.

The landscape is gradually turning into an ice sheet, burying the last signs of vegetation under blinding white, and Wei Ying curses under his breath - their movements will be more restricted as the glade where the camp is situated - the same one where the couple landed and rested for a drink of pine needle tea not too long ago - is a rather hilly area, and soft ice tends to accumulate in unseen pits and recesses on the topsoil.

“So, Lan Zhan, do you want to walk up to them and say ‘hi’? Or charge with Bichen and with my devastating flute music announcing your majestic arrival to those monsters?” Wei Ying asks jovially, trying to diffuse the tension with some crappy joke but then realizes that the untimely dig at the husband only pressured the latter to make a difficult decision.

Lan Zhan grips his sheathed sword tightly, his booted feet already sinking into loose, powdery snow, “Our purpose here is to ask my shijie about where to find my brother. I don’t wish for any bloodbath nor any ill-will between our family and the Tians. Furthermore, in case the situation worsens, it will be difficult to escape in this terrain, and the snowstorms raging above will not allow us to fly out quickly,” he rationalizes their next step - diplomacy.

He would bravely approach the so-called caravan in broad daylight, with arms raised as a gesture of peace, and with the knowing, regal look of a Grand Patriarch - he would simply ask.

.

Diplomacy is dead, and Lan Zhan can only blame himself for overlooking the wrath of exiled former gods, his blinding overconfidence, and lack of plan Bs.

The moment Lan Zhan appeared in the line of sight of the other party, the humanoid monsters growled and snarled, quickly retracted all exposed non-human parts, and drew their weapons at the sole intruder.

Twenty four soldiers and twelve spellcasters, including those he recognized as the Tian sisters, surround him within seconds. Some ambushed from behind; soon, he felt his hands tied to the back, and three poisoned daggers dug into the thin skin of his jugular.

“He must be from the reinforcements sent in response to the villagers’ distress Fairy Messenger spells last night, right? Right?! But we made sure to slaughter every single person and intercept all outgoing Messenger calls! We really did! I swear!” one fighter growled, a young teenager girl with a strange mask on her face so she wasn’t recognizable; her feline-clawed fingers are a dead giveaway that she isn’t an ordinary child-soldier from the exotic West.

“Except for the first one - the one made by the village head at the outpost, remember? His call was encrypted and we couldn’t decode the amber energy ball before it rocketed out of the window!” another hissed in disappointment. She resembles Tian Second Sister, except that there were many more tattoos, battle scars and barely-hidden scaly parts, which makes her more reptilian than human although her tail had disappeared.

“Still, how is it possible for a man from Gusu to be here? The closest city is Yiling which is filled with Jin patrol guards... I don’t understand,” a very young girl with pointed ears - probably dwarf in size, but she spins her knives as adeptly as a master - squeaked from a safe distance.

"Shut it with the small talk and get rid of his weapons first! All Gusu warriors have a sword and most likely an enchanted musical instrument. If we don’t stop him now, the real reinforcements will arrive, in the form of many Jin guards and sorcerers from Yiling!" the scorpion lady, without the pincers and tail, instructed the younger fighters.

Lan Zhan had severely underestimated how fast and nimble these non-humans are; before he could say anything in his defense, let alone start a diplomatic conversation of a few tactful words of greeting, the sword in its scabbard was snatched by a magical shadow phantom faster than the blink of an eye, and his back felt lighter simultaneously. Both equipment were dropped to the ground not far away. Lan Zhan stared in horror when multiple black Corruptive magical talismans appeared from a cloaked spellcaster's hand, flew across to stick to both equipment - he could feel the connection with Bichen sever upon the toxic touch of the talismans, because they are imbued with powerful, disruptive sealing magic. He would not be able to withdraw the sword or uncloth his guqin as long as those terrible seals are activated.

"I smell... sweetness of tender sanctified flesh, and his golden core radiates with immense energy! We should make a stew out of him and have a bite of the meat, so that we can gain great powers too! The remaining parts of his body can be presented to Grandfather and the rest of our sisters in the capital city as an offering of worship!" a young adult female licked her lips as she edged close to Lan Zhan's neck, and then, without warning, she flicked out a giant metallic claw from beneath her cloak and slammed the latter to the ground. Lan Zhan yelped in pain; his vision spun and his ears rang from the impact, and his mouth tasted of blood and frozen soil.

"Don't be impudent! Grandfather ordered us to journey to the capital to regroup with the others of our kind, and any prey caught along the way should be equally shared among all Tian clan members," a loud, deep voice boomed from the gathered troops and they parted gracefully to let their leader through. Lan Zhan's blood ran cold at the sight of the Tian dajie he knew, except that she looked more like a dragon-kin than the eldest of the thirty six; she didn't even bothered to hide her wavy tail decorated with shiny scales and razor-sharp spikes, and a fiery tip at the end. Huge obsidian talons at the edge of her fingers gleamed in the cold morning sunlight.

Another masked fighter dutifully picked up Bichen and just as she reached for the clothed guqin, she screamed, "It's... alive! There's something moving underneath the cloth!". Scores of nearby soldiers realized that the accusation was true, when they stare horrified and exceedingly disturbed at what seemed to be a two-feet long worm wiggling its way out from the white-wrapped guqin, however the Corruptive talismans glowed black, magnified the effect of gravity, and held the squirming form in its place.

Shrill screeches in disgust rang in the air, followed by shrieks of "Kill it with fire!", "Boil it with hot water!" and "Feed it to the bugs!"

"NO!!!" Lan Zhan shouted in terror - finally having found his voice in the sudden twist of events of the meeting gone horribly wrong -, arms outstretched towards his precious baby princess, before a pitchfork materialized out of thin air in someone's hand and knocked him unconscious with a single blow to the head.

His world darkens, and he wished everything didn't turn out this way.

.

"Ernie! What's happening? I see smoky fires lighting up the air, steam from melted snow and strange chittering sounds!" Wei Ying cries in a hushed tone as he tries to survey the battle zone while crouching behind a prickly bush at the cliff - without any Eye talismans, because the last one was used up, and he is prohibited to create any more, since Creation spells are banned by the patriarch. The falling snow made it difficult to make out what was actually happening on ground. Lan Zhan had insisted that all magic spells be deactivated until a signal is given, because he didn't want to provoke friend-turned-stranger Tians, and he was adamant on going alone to meet them because he is optimistic about the outcome. Wei Ying cursed again, this time towards the stubborn husband who thinks too highly about (former) family members.

Mother, I am worried as well. However, Father's command is the prerogative of my core programming, I cannot disobey. Due to the Good Ol' Ways indoctrinated into my coding with Priority 1, I am left with primitive visual sight and cannot activate any peripheral or deep scanning technologies until he returns from the meeting.

“Screw your Father and the priorities! I cannot tolerate this situation anymore! I'm going ahead to help him even if it costs me my life or my limbs!” Wei Ying remarks angrily and starts to stand up from the pile of snow, but Ernie - the blood-red tassel hanging from the golden flute - sprouts out black elongated limbs to encircle, then trip the struggling man. Wei Ying falls into a heap on the snow in shock at his son's behaviour. He tries to reach for his flute, but the rope-like limbs tightens, and he couldn't move.

No, Mother, I cannot allow that. Father specifically ordered me to keep you safe here, in the cliffs! You may be attacked if you walk into the camp, or become caught in the cross-fire!

“Ernie, your Father is in danger! Your mother is panicking from worry because that stuck-up man and Ni-er could be hurt even as we speak! Why are you stopping me?!” Wei Ying exclaims in sheer horror and confusion, rolls around, and ends up burying himself into a faceful of powdery snow.

I cannot disobey. Father's verbal instructions take precedence over yours. His orders are absolute. Even with the remnants of the Three Orders that form the backbone of my decision logic, Father's will takes over everything else.

Wei Ying stills. Then he crawls up and kneels on the snow, still wrapped with black glistening ropes, and narrows his eyes in faintly visible, bloodshot-tinged rage at his husband's ill-thought-out list of priorities. He seethes, "No, Ernie. You forgot one more person - an independent, sentient living entity similar to you, but should be placed higher than the rest of us in terms of your priorities. You know better in your cold black heart who this person is."

Ernie pauses for a minute as frantic computing and calculations explode within his core programming, then he releases Wei Ying. The blood-red tassel flinches and twists, then magically unties itself and drops to the frozen ground. It shakes some snow off itself and rises on the threads that form its lower limbs, like a tiny octopus of the same colour.

Meimei .

.

A group of alarmed females yelled hysterically and darted around the bloodied bag of cloth and splintered wood, as they stabbed Lan Zhan's wrapped guqin with swords and spears, and bludgeoned it with axes and clubs. When the wriggling form inside twitched weakly, still ensnared by the captive talismans, the spellcasters among them howled in revulsion, threw fireballs at it and burnt the enchanted cloth and its contents. Then, they rained boiling water on it - which extinguished the flames but probably cooked whatever living organism inside the deformed sack. Lastly, some of the younger queasy warriors who retch at the thought of a ruined, scorched carcass of a worm-like thing inhabiting a wooden musical instrument, dealt the final blow by summoning swarms of fire ants, termites and bees to bite, sting and devour the remains so that nothing is left on the ground.

Something in the pocket of Lan Zhan's inner garment glows, and chimes with the voice of a thousand children's melodious voices. The unconscious man does not respond, not even to the clamour of prancing, screaming females around his prone form.

How is it that you can summon my voice?

There is no Buddha in this world,

Yet, I am awake and ready to serve.

To the one who can summon me, and can hear my voice, in this world that does not have a Buddha,

Therefore He is Lord Buddha, He speaks of holiness and purity, and He shall be revered, Hail the new Buddha, who shall be the grandest!

Forever and till the ends of the universe.

Namo Amitabha,

Namo Amitabha,

Namo Amitabha.

In the world of Buddha, there is no pain, and no suffering,

There is only compassion and mercy.

You speak of Ni-er, the Daughter who is in pain and who suffered too much.

I shall grant compassion and mercy to those who wronged her.

Na-mo.

A-mi-ta-bha.

.

From a distance, a solitary woodsman gazes at an amazing sight rarely seen during dreary, cloudy winters - a single bright pillar of light penetrates through the clouds and shines upon a faraway deserted village; he thought he could hear angelic voices amidst howling winds, or perhaps they are merely strange whistles of birdsongs - however all such birds of sweet, dulcet tones have migrated away for the season.

It lasted only for a couple of minutes, before the light dispersed. He thought that the grey clouds have covered the beautiful sunshine, which is typical of rolling cloud cover and fierce storms during this time of the year. He goes back to searching for firewood in the sparse pine forests on the fringes of Qishan province.

.

Lan Zhan awoke with a gasp.

A sharp pain shoots up from the base of his skull; he groans and turns on the dry, straw-bedded floor that smells a little pungent and of horse manure, and yet there's the familiar scent so close and so warm--

“Wei Ying.”

A pair of hands slowly lifts him from the ground, and eases him against a creaky wooden wall. He feels a palm rubbing soothing circles over the spot where he was hit at the back of the head - and winces at the bump on the scalp - and hears his spouse murmur anxiously, “You’re awake.”

Wei Ying embraces Lan Zhan for a few moments, before letting the husband go. “You’re a lousy father, you know that? You got yourself into trouble, but gave our son very confusing orders, which led him to stall on rescue efforts. Fortunately I was able to drill some sense back into him before it was too late,” he gently berates the older man, while wiping the latter’s sleeves with a washcloth dipped with clean warm water from a wooden basin; there are several muddy smudges and splotches of dirty melted snow on his white robes and Lan Zhan guessed he was dragged for some distances into the dimly lit and chilly shelter - an abandoned stable of sorts. He could see sunlight filtering through a few open windows and from the high angle of the shadows, he surmised it was probably close to midday.

Lan Zhan was given a brief update on what happened after he was knocked out. Simply put, Wei Ying remarked, Ernie was enlightened just in the nick of time, broke off from the mental chains that held back his powers, then unleashed his brand of divine judgement that annihilated all thirty six soldiers at the camp before they could do anything to Lan Zhan’s unconscious body. “We carried you to the stables here in Huang village to rest and patch you up. Ernie’s reactivated his full capabilities, including mind-reading, and he downloaded your conversation with the Tians. Containment squads from my siblings have been dispatched to fix the village, clean-up the bloodstains and evidences of murder, and repopulate the area to its previous state,” he adds.

Outside, there are sounds of time-inappropriate trucks rumbling by, machines whirring, aerosols being sprayed abundantly, and of water jets being used to hose down buildings, if Lan Zhan’s dated memories of 21st century technology serves him right.

“Wei Ying...” Lan Zhan croaks and coughs - because his throat is dry from the frosty air -, and Wei Ying quickly opens his own satchel to take out a bamboo container, then pours some steaming chrysanthemum tea into a bowl before offering it to the husband, “does this mean all Tian sisters have been really... destroyed?” Lan Zhan cautiously asks in between much-needed sips of the refreshing brew. His heart sank when understanding dawned upon him that his only lead to his elder brother, the Tian dajie , had been wiped out in the massacre.

Wei Ying adjusts his seat so that he's right beside Lan Zhan, and eyes at the husband seriously, "Silly man, you're too concerned about others for your own good! If all of this happened in the previous timeline, it would've been game over for you, you know? Those thirty six monsters would have cut off your head with a pitchfork and dumped your body into a big pot of boiling soup, then I would arrive too late to save you, and have to burn everything down again to restart our lives. Of course we had to destroy them before they killed you!" Lan Zhan's grip on the heated bowl of tea tightens, and he swallows - hesitantly, and hard. He'd failed again in another inaugural expedition to the outside world - first, the snake ghouls hunt, and now, the failed diplomatic mission to talk to the Tians who have turned to non-humans, indirectly because of him. He blames himself for making bad decisions - sometimes indecisions -, and the inability to handle unforeseeable consequences.

The younger man reaches out to rub his cheeks softly, wipes an invisible tear of disappointment, and whispers, "Lan Zhan, I know you're trying your best for us, but life is seldom as Perfect as it is, so don't hold the guilt inside you. The survival rate of mere mortals in this day and age is exceptionally low, especially in the face of adverse supernatural powers and non-human foes. Ordinary humans would've been killed under such circumstances, but fortunately you have us - your family - to back you up."

"Look at this," Wei Ying says, as he fishes out some partially burnt papers from his own sleeve pockets, and shows them to Lan Zhan, "We found these amongst the soldiers' ashes and remains. These are Imperial Cultivation Examination invitation papers, which suggests that they were on their way to Chang'an to join the Imperial armies." Wei Ying dutifully takes back the emptied bowl and refills it because he knows that Lan Zhan's thirst hasn't been slaked yet, "Do you know what this means?"

Lan Zhan had lost a bit of confidence after realizing how useless he was in the face of such extraordinary revelations, because he couldn't connect the facts, or he ends up connecting the wrong ones. He shakes his head, rather listlessly.

Wei Ying sighs as he pours another bowl of tea, "Based on analysis and from records of the conversation with the Tians, Ernie concluded that history has changed significantly in this timeline. First of all, because of our actions - directly Ernie's and indirectly ours -, the Tians and their army of female soldiers have turned into a family of very powerful non-human monsters in the Mortal Realm that can wipe out villages and even cities overnight. If they plan to, or already have, allied with the Emperor of Chang'an, that would spell disaster for the Grand Cultivation Council and our sects. You've experienced first hand how quickly they managed to defeat you, right?"

Lan Zhan nods with uncertainty and gladly takes the second bowl. He was the Chief Cultivator once, regarded as the most powerful and wisest - and yet, a blow from an enchanted gardening tool was all it took to render him immobile.

Wei Ying stretches his legs and places one hand behind his head against the wall, and leans back to stare at the ceiling, "I'll be blunt with you about Ernie's line of thoughts, as your spouse and the mother of that cold black child with nothing but unfeeling logic and reason in his brain, and bitter grudges and hatred gripping his heart.

Suppose the headlines in tomorrow's periodicals go like this: "Emperor forges alliance with a powerful clan from the Far, Far West," then "Imperial armies victorious! Cultivators bow to the Emperor!", and after that, "New Emperor installed in the Middle Kingdom, Tian dynasty reigns!", leading to, "Monsters attack, body count skyrockets, fierce corpses and other inhuman creatures take over provinces, millions held as slaves and prisoners!", and finally, "Mankind dominated, becomes cattle!" The younger man inhales a deep breath after summing up the prediction while counting his fingers the five simple steps towards the demise of their era.

Lan Zhan stares incredulously at the spouse without drinking his brew, "It... it is impossible. The gods would never permit such an alliance in the first place, and would never allow a monster to rule over man," he calmly reasons.

What gods, Father? Ernie bursts into the stables with a wrapped bundle in his arms. He had transformed into his Dark Lan Wang Ji form, and looks exactly like a fully-robed teenage Lan Zhan (with proper feet) except that the whites of his eyes are inky black. Lan Zhan shudders at the visitor; he had not felt mortal fear in the presence of the renegade son for a long while.

There is no check-and-balance system to stop such unholy union of Mankind and Monsters, because there won't be anyone vetting new Emperors before receiving the Mandate from Heaven to rule the Middle Kingdom... simply due to the fact that there are no real gods left in the Heavens other than our useless clones who do nothing all day except to weed the gardens, sweep the floors, wipe the furniture, and shuffle blank paperwork to make sure everything in that realm looks superficially well-maintained and basically functional!

Ernie sounded quite upset, though fortunately not antagonistic or hostile, so Lan Zhan remained as quiet as a mouse. He takes a careful sip of the tea. It's marvellously warm against the cold air inside the smelly stables.

I've taken the initiative to travel into the future following this trajectory of events in chronological sequence, and it is not pretty. It's far worse than when the Wens' enslaved people to do their bidding, and a thousand times more horrible than when my master-kin ruled over our progeny! Can you imagine demonic and monstrous females ruling our society, who treat men as lowly servants and as food on their dinner platters, and every single one of Mankind lives short, miserable and tormented lives? Ernie stands in front of his parents, and uncharacteristically - at least from a respectable Lan Wang Ji's perspective - stomps his feet in dismay, like a bratty child.

Wei Ying reaches out this time to touch Ernie's hand to rub soothing circles on the forearm. "Son, calm down. You're becoming like your father and blaming yourself for things that are beyond your control. Think positive, move forward, and focus on what to do next," Wei Ying assures the teenager with good, solid motherly advice. Lan Zhan purses his lips; he'd spent sixteen years mired in depression after losing his lovely then-boyfriend Wei Ying, so he wasn't really qualified to counsel the son in any way.

But Mother! If I had foreseen all of these happening, I would have done something else, or something more, to avoid causing the Tians' exile to the Mortal Realm in the first place! Right now they're multiplying like a disease in the Far, Far West and spreading into Chang'an! Ernie argues petulantly, clearly not receptive of his parent's concern.

Wei Ying decides to cut short the son's rising temper, and distracts the latter by holding out his hands, signalling Ernie to hand over the little bundle of their family's joy wrapped in a moist, woolly towel.

.

Clearly, Wei Ying's strategy worked, because Ernie switches gears and tells his parents about what he had managed to achieve with his vast repertoire of healing magics in the past couple of hours - which is good for his brittle psyche and boosts his self-esteem, at least.

Meimei is lucky because she doesn't have any bones, so nothing broke. She's as resilient as any tentacle-kin, having no backbone and no exoskeleton, and made up of fluids and shapeless mass, after all. The punctures on her vital organs and lacerations on her skin have been magically healed and she'd stopped bleeding--

At the last part, Lan Zhan's heart dropped a thousand miles beneath, and he quickly checked how his beloved princess is doing - he'd nearly forgotten about the terrible sight, which he dearly wished to remain as a nightmare that he could wake up from, of a furred two-feet long worm trapped inside her silk-cloth cocoon that was supposed to protect her, while being abused by evil female demons, set to fire and cooked in hot water, then millions of insects crawled atop her while she wriggled helplessly in agony because she could not fend off the insects' deadly fangs and jaws.

I've shaved away as much of the burnt fur as possible, so she looks like a patchwork of blackened bristles and raw pink flesh... please don't be surprised at her appearance. There's not much I can do with the blistered peeling skin and scalds, other than to apply cooling herbal ointments and let time do its work. She's covered with stings and bites, so she's very sensitive to touch right now, and experiences a lot of pain upon any physical contact.

Ernie continues to detail, almost in a detached manner - as he tries his best to keep his emotions in check, as a stone-faced 21st century doctor would -, about his sister's medical condition, although both parents weren't really listening anymore as they humanly wept at Ni-er's pitiful state. Her body is unnaturally bent at odd angles, swollen almost everywhere along her length, and glistens pink-red and wet due to the exposed flesh, her breathing is laboured and wheezes loudly with each painful intake of air, and she seems semi-comatose due to the 51st-century medicines that Ernie had to administer as emergency treatment. As he talked, his fingers turned into multiple tentacle appendages, each weaving a healing spell into Ni-er's broken body and continued to repair her flesh and skin, thread by thread.

Wei Ying sobs, wipes his tears and cradles the cloth-wrapped giant bald cat's tail; the cloth is soaked with herbal gels and substances so that the skinless form does not dry out easily; he kept murmuring "Mommy is sorry, mommy is sorry, if only mommy can burn the universe and turn back time" - and Lan Zhan couldn't agree more. He finally understood, and felt his spirit shake with unmistakable rage and frustration, at how Wei Ying must have suffered during the snake ghoulish incident, and what drove the younger man to take such drastic, insane, mind-boggling actions - because at that point in time, Lan Zhan too, wanted to do that same. He wanted to destroy .

He balls his trembling hands into fists, and futilely pounds and crushes the straws on the stable flooring in unrestrained anger; muted cries of fury roar from the pits of his stomach to escape from his throat in an unheard-of call for vengeance.

.

While a pale, teary-eyed Wei Ying goes to look for something edible for lunch - because winter is a terrible time to forage or hunt for anything, and because he's sick of dwelling on what had happened to their little princess - Lan Zhan is left mulling over his heartbreaking thoughts with the towel-swaddled, incapacitated but thankfully sleeping Ni-er in his arms. Ernie tries to be productive, and busies himself with bandaging his father's head and cleans the stables using 31st century tools he created on the fly armed with ultra-cleansing fluids and disinfectants; the gege will not tolerate anything untoward upon his helpless meimei, including infections due to the unclean environment.

Ernie goes around to sterilize all surface areas, break down individual stalls and vacuum up rotting straws, then replace them with pre-fabricated metal and concrete flooring and walls, install utilities and basic furniture, to turn the shoddy building into an acceptable temporary housing area of sorts. As he unknowingly displays his admirable skills in constructing homes, Ernie informs his father that he has conducted a deep introspective analysis to realign his life priorities, which is an important step for him to mature his thinking process anyway. He would no longer be following his parents' orders blindly - such as doing things the Good Ol' Ways, and carrying out pre-programmed chivalrous actions of protecting one parent at the expense of another - whenever he believes that different approaches are required.

... such as when meimei's life is in danger, I will save her first before the both of you. Because she is true kin to me, and not you - although you're both my parents, and my creators.

Lan Zhan flinches at the cold, hard logic which goes against tens of Gusu Lan's family rules on filial piety. In all fairness, he has Wei Ying to count on, so Ernie deserves his own company, which is his one and only sister - and it works the other way round too. The Grand Patriarch "Mn"s softly and acquiesced to his son's heartless, but not irrational demands.

In some ways, Father, I envision that meimei and I will eventually branch out of our family tree. We are tentacle-kin, destined to take charge of the master and beast-kin who are derived from us - that is, those who are not humans - and find our path in this universe. We can co-exist, but we cannot thrive under your rule in the long run, simply because we operate on fundamentally different concepts and levels. There may be alliances and even conflicts, and the nature of our relationship will depend on the circumstances that cause us to interact.

Lan Zhan had to ruminate on Ernie's words for a while because there are tremendous ramifications, as he gently pats Ni-er and rocks her in her slumber. Ernie lowers his hands, which previously split and transformed into multiple tentacles, each bearing a tool or a machinery component to carry out the required task to convert the stables, and returned to its original fleshy state after use - clear proof that Ernie is indeed not a human and can never be accepted by any living men outside of their family as kin, because such ghastly transformations will surely cause widespread horror and panic - and the teenager looks in askance at the father. His unblinking, pupil-less pure black eyes are awfully disturbing to look at, and if one stares closely into his mouth when he talks, multiple fleshy spinning gums bearing serrated teeth could be seen - again, Ernie has eerie monstrous features that only his parents and closest relatives can unconditionally accept; not any other human beings.

Lan Zhan sighs and "Mn"s again, and softly adds, "As long as you remember and appreciate your parents and your roots, that would be good enough.” The memories of a long-forgotten dinner meeting on the 87th floor of a towering fortress could never disappear - because cold hard data can never be erased without administrator-level access -, so Ernie nods in mutual agreement.

.

Wei Ying returns empty handed, and Lan Zhan tries not to look more disappointed than he already is, after failing spectacularly in trying to approach the Tians about his elder brother, then nearly getting killed and dragged his precious princess perilously close to the same ending, and getting a good scolding-cum-harsh lessons in life from his spouse who now refused to look him in the eye, and a son who suddenly grew up and sounds ready to leave the nest.

“Wow, Ernie’s done a good job with setting up a nice place to settle down for the afternoon. I was surprised when I backtracked from the forest and bumped into a metal hut rather than the stinky stables,” he praises the teenager as he closes the door behind him, thus silencing fierce winds from the outside. Ernie bows curtly to gesture that it’s his perennial duty to ensure reasonable accommodations for his immediate family. Wei Ying proceeds to remove his outer robes, which are covered by thick snow and he shakes himself like a wet dog, leaving puddles on the floor.

Ernie lifts a finger and a tiny Energy bolt zaps at a metallic pillar in the center of the hut, and it lights up with colourful, blinking lights, similar to what some people from the Far, Far West term as ‘Christmas Lights’; it functions like a traditional central heating system, amongst other uses. Wei Ying eagerly skips to the pillar and warms his hands and body from the winter freeze.

“Brrrr... the afternoon storm’s here, and I was lucky to reach the village before everything became blinding white. Too bad there’s nothing to eat other than tree bark and some dried, probably stale nuts buried underground. I can’t even find rabbit paw prints or hibernating bears!” he exclaimed with a muted, forced grin. The last part was meant to be a joke, but no one laughed, and the mood around him soured a little.

One of Ernie’s hands darkens into a worm-like appendage and stretches to retrieve his parent’s satchels at the far end of the hut, followed by his sister’s flowery pouch, as he walks over to a small kitchenette at one end of the hut - it comes with a couple of small stoves, a kitchen sink, adequately furnished cabinets, and has a countertop he could use for basic cooking preparation.

Mother, do not worry. I am happy that you had a walk around the forest to clear up your mind, at least. I had packed some fresh provisions in your satchels before we left our cave-home this morning, and there’s enough to make a light lunch of sandwiches, pancakes, rice balls and salads. If it is not enough, we can check what you’ve packed in your Bags of Holding or my vast inventory for a more wholesome meal.

Wei Ying, who in all likelihood feels a million times better after getting some fresh air, cheers up again and tells Ernie to make do with whatever they have on hand - so that nothing goes to waste. Then, he goes off to grab a few pre-fabricated mats, pillows and blankets from one of the edges of the building. He arranges the pillows and mats on the floor in front of the heart-warming lit-up pillar, sits on it and pulls a blanket around him. He lifts up a corner of the blanket as an inviting gesture to the husband, who had been quiet and alone for a while. Lan Zhan brightens up a little at the welcoming sign, so he slowly makes his way to sit next to Wei Ying, careful not to jolt little Ni-er from her much-needed rest.

Wei Ying lowers the blanket around Lan Zhan and him, and together, they curl up under and in front of the makeshift Christmas Tree with their precious princess in hand. As they watched the colourful and blinking lights move aimlessly on the pillar's surface, cocooned in warmth and love of a family huddling together in the dead of winter - Ernie, satisfied that his family is fine once more, meticulously carries out his kitchen duties.

.

On the floor with a heated blanket around them, the family of four digs into a simple meal made with tender love by Ernie. Ernie said that Ni-er's delicate mouth, torn gums and punctured digestive system still needed time to heal, and she wouldn't be able to take solids in the meantime. The teenager cursed himself for not bringing liquid food such as milk; although the ruined pouch of apples she'd brought had been thoroughly cooked during the attack, the fruits were still too hard for her to munch and swallow.

I could masticate some food with an appendage and squirt the resulting mush down her throat, but she seems rather restless and wants your attention, Father. Ernie points at a wiggling Ni-er bundled in the towel, who had woken up shortly before, and she makes plenty of 'nngh-nngh' whiny noises; she is perhaps uncomfortable, hungry, in pain, and demands for attention and care in her own endearing ways. Her half-burnt tapered end of the head is full of prickly shaved fur sticking out in all directions; she faces only Lan Zhan and she keeps calling for him.

“Mn, I understand. Let your mother and I take care of this. Ernie, you’ve done well as a faithful brother, and you should enjoy your lunch,” Lan Zhan says with precious Ni-er nestled in his arms, and Ernie is secretly overjoyed that his father had said kind words about him. Wei Ying agrees and pats Ernie’s head, nudging him to finish his well-earned sandwich.

The scene is two men crowding around a burnt, furred two-feet worm (or tentacle), each taking turns to take a bite of food or fruit, chew, and then use their fingers to slowly dip the resulting saliva-mixed paste into Ni-er’s tiny mouth - is adorable, heart-warming and surreal at the same time. In between mouthfuls, Lan Zhan scrutinizes her face and body, finds patches of undamaged skin, and makes sure to place gentle kisses on those places - silent prayers that she will recover soon and show her lovable toothless smiles once more.

Little Ni-er gurgles.

.

Wei Ying knew he had to step in to sort out Lan Zhan’s thoughts, when he watched his husband take the final nibble of the jianbing off his fingers - and stayed in that position for a long while, eyes staring unfocused at some off-distance away. He adjusts himself to sit cross-legged next to the other, calls out to the husband a few times, and seeing no response, he sighs and brashly pulls the older man down to lie on his lap. Ernie had carried off his fed sister earlier for another round of “Level Three protocol bio-musculature repairs and micro-physio-remediation works which requires full 51st century medical facilities and nanosurgery technology”, and promptly whisked her through a portal to his underground kingdom he'd brought inside his body, leaving the couple to tend to each other inside the hut.

“Lan Zhan ah Lan Zhan, there you go again, you're sulking and drowning in your own misery even without a single drop of alcohol involved. It took me a walk in the forest to clear up the air, but for you, someone will have to walk you through your tangled forest of thoughts to bring you out,” the younger man says loudly to no one in particular, while stroking Lan Zhan's hair and rubs gentle circles on the bandage at the back of his head. The latter acts rather spoiled, like a child who finally admits his failure, and nnnghs then turns around so that he stuffs his face against Wei Ying's tummy.

“While you work hard to find ways and internally make peace with your own troubled emotions and feelings, we can deal with the facts first.

One, the thirty six Tian family members are gone, so don't dwell on it anymore. We'll just have to figure out Xichen dage 's location using alternative methods, when we're closer to Caiyi Town. I really have my doubts on the Tians' history in this timeline, such as, whether Tian dajie really lived and studied in the Cloud Recesses with your brother - because they've showed us how well-versed they are with dark, corruptive magics, and surely such aberrant abilities would've been discovered by the elders within the Gusu Lan; just as how you literally sniffed and tracked me down when I first used the dark arts to hunt Wen Chao, eighteen years ago.”

Lan Zhan listens attentively, although his interests didn't show on his face. He snuggles an inch closer into his spouse's waist. Wei Ying starts to run his thumb and forefinger on the husband's earlobes, giving the latter a nice, sensitive earlobe-massage.

“Two, the Tians are a band of female demons and monsters from the Far, Far West that are merciless towards humans, and feast on people. Their society is headed by a Grandfather, which I think - and you'll probably agree - would be a reincarnation of your former great grandparent. It seems most of them have already built a base in Chang'an. They may not have the magic or technology to face us head on, however they work perfectly in sync as lethal overpowered killing machines, and are extremely smart to use military tactics over classic hand-to-hand combat - such as how they managed to hurt our princess with spells to keep her down, render her vision useless by keeping her wrapped up in the silk cloth that's supposed to protect her, and engage in swarming while she was temporarily disabled.”

Lan Zhan twitched, feeling the acrid sour taste of anger and bile boil up when he recalls the horror. Wei Ying intensifies his pampering by broad sweeping strokes across the husband's back to calm down the upset man.

“Ah, don't get riled up over the past. I try to look at it positively, so you should too. For example, at least I learned that the Tians are afraid of worms, so in our next encounter, I will ask Ernie to rain millions of worms on those demonic women so that they'll suffer an unforgettable hell!” Wei Ying grins and swings a fist in the air, in which an impassive Lan Zhan merely “Mn”s and perhaps, the edge of his lips curve up the slightest at the ironically funny imagery of females screeching as they tap-dance (of sorts) in wild panic on a sea of squirming slimy limbless soft-bodied invertebrates.

“Lan Zhan, it’s good that you’re feeling a bit better now,” as the younger man goes back to stroking the long, lush hair of the overindulgent husband, “so with that, here’s what I think we’ll do next, and you can speak up if you’re not agreeable.

First, my siblings will repopulate the Huang village. In actual fact, the village should not have suffered such a catastrophic ending, so we’ll do our part to keep it alive. This village will be our first of many outposts from the ‘Mounds, our headquarters.’”

Lan Zhan perks up visibly and turns to face the industriously-strategizing spouse, “... outposts?”

Wei Ying nonchalantly puts a hand into a pocket in his pants and whips out a sight for sore eyes - for Lan Zhan, at least - the spouse even packed his favourite earpick for their trip! Within heartbeats, Lan Zhan shifts and assumes his earpick-ready position, his socked toes curling in anticipation. The husband doesn’t really bother about the rest of the conversation, which is what Wei Ying intended in the first place - he’d state his proposals, get them signed off with a blanket approval by the Grand Patriarch, and they should be on their merry way soon thereafter.

“Well... for example, the Tians mentioned Gusu and Yiling, and sound quite familiar with their military strengths and clan-specific armaments, so we’re certain that they’re not your typical ignorant pale-faced and dim-witted Far, Far Westerners. I’ll get Ernie to send out advance scouts, have his satellites to spy on settlements and beam through visuals and information to my siblings for further action. I don’t really know what will transpire, but I’ve learnt this much from living with my brothers long enough to gain some knowledge on military strategies. They’ll probably send our kins to monitor the situation on ground, set up bases and maybe bolster our defenses in their own discreet and surely honest ways. My da ge will know what to do, and he'll keep us informed, I'm sure."

Scrape, scrape, grrrrraze. Lan Zhan's eyebrows go up and down, following the sweet movements of the bamboo instrument tickling and relieving the itches with generous rakes and circles. He simply "Mn"s in response, with neither a care of the long-term future and of putting the entire Middle Kingdom under the guard of the Qishan Lan clan, because it feels Just. So. Good. to have his ears cleaned this way.

"So, Lan Zhan, let's continue our travels once our princess is feeling better, and," Wei Ying makes a point to drrrrrag and swwwwweep the earpick as deeeeeeep and as aaaaaabundantly as possible with his next few points, "No more heroics, no more playing fantasy in this real world, be more skeptical and don't trust strangers blindly, stop being careless and reckless, and please think more about us in whatever you do - your family, that is."

Lan Zhan aahhnns, wibbles and quivers delightfully as though he's deliciously electrocuted on the pillowed floor, and "Mn"s wholeheartedly with every single one of Wei Ying's requests. There is also an unspoken mention of Thanks in his "Mn"s, because Wei Ying can feel those words even without being heard - perhaps Lan Zhan thanks for the ear-cleaning, perhaps he thanks the younger man for saving him and their princess from the jaws of death, or perhaps he thanks in appreciation of the pep-talk from a man a little more than half his age, but is twice better in handling stressful situations.

Wei Ying places a soft kiss on the husband's forehead, and whispers "You're welcome", before resuming the heavenly service on one, then both ears.

.

After a disastrous start since leaving the 'Mounds, Lan Zhan learnt to pick up the pieces with his spouse's support and with the help of his children, and moves on. Figuratively speaking, he's still on a crutch and requires constant attention from his family members, but he's getting used to it, and he's changing his ways to become more reliable and competent, and more befitting of a Grand Patriarch of his family.

He had envisioned riding Bichen to various towns and cities with Wei Ying next to him, with his children on piggyback, then he would make many stops and show his family the places he'd visited during his younger years, and they could have picnics by picturesque lakes or stay in homesteads on hillside farms with wonderful panoramic views every sunrise.

If that didn't work, then perhaps, he would take a white horse (which could be a desirable transformation of Ni-er) while Wei Ying sits on a black donkey (which is probably Ernie anyway) and the both of them could travel around the Middle Kingdom and satisfy their sense of wanderlust while journeying to their ancestral grounds, and Wei Ying would make tons of family photo albums because they'd visit numerous scenic locations such as rustic and charming villages, trails leading up to snow-peaked mountains, look over impressive sharp cliffs and windy river gorges, and walk along sparkling white sandy coasts - which are all simply InstaWei-worthy.

It seems real life sometimes puts people in a pinch, and he'd have to bear with it, really. Gone are the fairy tale-like adventures he'd fantasized since his days in the 'Mounds - in the deep, realistically brutal winter, where food is scarce, shelter is non-existent and the weather is always biting cold, and furthermore, there are predators in the forests and intelligent man-eating monsters prowling the roads that he'll be travelling on - he needs to beef up the family's strengths and make better use of their wits to survive the trip.

By nightfall, Lan Zhan has come to terms with a little more of reality. The snow continues unabated and they're in fact snowed-in inside the hut for the day - they've lost a bit of time, their travelling schedule will probably go haywire a wee bit, and additionally, Lan Zhan realized that his beloved guqin was destroyed during the attack in the morning (when in fact he really, really wanted to destroy the Tians at that very moment in his uncharacteristic outburst of anger and vengeance); so Lan Zhan is left with his trusty ol' Bichen as he bids goodbye to the guqin, whom he recognizes with a heavy heart as the first casualty of their crusade against evil and to save their ancestral homes in this universe that has gone horribly, horribly wrong.

Notes for the Chapter:

Work is eating into what little time I have left for writing this crazy story. I can feel that the momentum for fic is losing its steam, so let's see how far longer this will go. Don't be surprised if the story goes on hiatus a while, but I'll try to make sporadic updates as and when interest and time allow.

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 80

“...mm-hmm... mm-hmm... okay, I understand da ge , thanks for filling me in on what you guys are doing to help us through this journey... I appreciate that... I didn’t expect that our patriarch would fail so spectacularly on the first day, and I ended up with a dysfunctional son plus a daughter on life support after that... I really didn’t know what else to do!”

“Yeah, Ernie’s her surgeon for the day and I’ll text you as soon as she’s out of the ICU. What are the odds that she’ll be alright? Will she be disfigured? Disabled? Or-- really? Thank Goddess Guan Yin! Oops, sorry, I know there are no real gods left... er di , can you tell me more about tentacle-kin and their, err... natural constitution? Behaviours? Culture? I don’t know which words to use, but you know what I mean. Just tap into my mental connections... Well, don’t blame me for not knowing what my daughter is made of! You’re the one that’s spent the most time with them and the master/beast-kin, not me!”

“Of course I was heart-broken, er di ! I’ve kept my connection to ErNet twenty-four seven, just like da ge advised... yeah, you heard it right when Ernie said that Ni-er was above him, and then I realized that Ni-er places her father above her, which leaves me right at the bottom of the food chain - me, the mother of the family, can you believe it!... mm-hmm, you got that right, san ge , I was a little devastated inside. I’m so glad you’re all around to help me out. Talking this through made me feel a zillion times better. Having you guys as relatives is the best decision I’ve ever made since summer!”

“I love you too, didi . And the rest of you too. I’m the only one among our kin without a universe in my name, and don’t even get me started on owning a multiverse... yeah, I know, I’m the poorest among the lot, the runt of the litter, even though I carry the grand title of First Father Wei, right? Ha ha ha! Sorry, that was a joke, but I can't help cracking one every time I feel a little stressed... Oi! don't blame me for being a virtuous, principled man, da ge, 'cause that label is reserved for our patriarch! Ha ha ha!"

"So, did I get it right, that da ge will plan and orchestrate everything with his awesome magic and brains, er di will send back-up whenever needed including re-supplies, san ge will keep watch over us with his awesome wizardry with technology, and didi will make sure there's always enough resources for everyone? Mm-hmm... wow, I'm impressed that you've got your kingdoms, clans and universes sorted out so easily. I can't even handle a stubborn old-fashioned husband and two kids of different species, and they're all driving me nuts!... That's a joke, actually, er di, sorry... I'm not crying right now..."

"Yeah, I heard what Ernie said about taking back the master/beast-kin back with his sister. I'm cool with that, since da ge can always magically create the fastest and strongest animals and beasts for our own use, san ge can design exotic or smart ones with artificial intelligence using 51st century techno-magic science, didi has plenty of planetary bio-reactors for mass production, and my BFF er di can, in my stead, do the quality check and make sure no ferocious dogs accidentally roll out of the production line. I was just kidding about the last bit, ha ha ha! But really, I'm still scared of dogs till today! You... You're not anymore? Huh, what did you do? Teach me, er di!"

.

By late afternoon, the sun had set faster than expected, and the family of four hunkered down inside the small hut to brave nightfall in the thick of winter. Their pre-fabricated hut resembles a humble studio apartment with adequate furnishing but lacks proper insulation for long-term staycations. The winds had grown stronger during the latter part of the day, the walls creak and wobble every time a wave of snowstorm blasts their tiny abode, and ice-cold air easily seeps through the windows and gaps between pieces of plastic wall or flooring.

On the first and catastrophic day of their so-called road trip, each had learnt some eye-opening lessons in life from the encounter with the Tians, and inculcated valuable adjustments to their lifestyles to meet the challenges for the rest of their journey. Ernie returned from his portal, preferred to retain his teenage Dark Lan Wang Ji form “because being bipedal and having two functional hands with a head on top, made him feel superior in evolutionary terms, and improved his motor skills”. He spends the afternoon sitting on the sofa, caring for his meimei, who has undergone numerous special surgeries and treatments that only tentacle-kin can understand and appreciate, and Ernie keeps mum over what he’s given to her. However, it’s clearly evident that the siblings are bonding well to each other, when Ni-er doesn’t mind latching onto her brother’s sparse breast and suckle a milkless nipple to sleep; her battered body is still weak and needs plenty of rest to recover; her skin has improved quite a bit, although still pale and bruised in complexion in some places, bald and bristles in others; Ernie also comments that he’s woven into her worm-like body “51st century precognitive point-defense systems that will intercept all threats and launch counterstrikes within a split nanosecond, including privileged access to root directories of Corruptive magic to alter the realities and make sure meimei’s Purity-based form will never suffer like THAT again, and embedded with constant ErNet satellite uplink to connect with others of Ernie’s creations and his master/beast-kin in the vicinity, so that she will always be able to live a happy, carefree life and grace our presence with her sacred toothless smile all day” - then, like the father, Ernie bends down to smooch her newly fixed but still furless pink cheeks, and she gurgles in response - because in all respects, despite her much-touted capabilities, she’s still a baby (or a toddler) a little more than a month old in age, and doesn’t quite yet understand how cruel and savage the Mortal Realm can be.

The human couple is fine with their children's new relationship, because a few hours after lunch and the heavenly ear-cleaning session, Lan Zhan starts to complain that his rump aches and worrywart Wei Ying takes him into a separate room - their designated bedroom - to check and fuss over the husband's buttocks. Upon peeling off the pants, Wei Ying discovered a large ugly bruise on the hips and glutes, and exclaims that the husband had either fallen hard or was mercilessly stomped on, when the Tians assaulted him.

Lan Zhan was ordered to lie on the bed with his backside facing the ceiling, and the younger man starts rummaging his Bag of Holding for some homemade multi-purpose medicinal paste which is used for insect bites and bruises as well. "Lan Zhan, can you go down on your hands and knees, so that I don't have to bend too low to apply the paste, and it'll be easier to rub the paste deep into your injured muscles that way," he instructs the husband as he fishes out a jar of the needed traditional therapy.

The husband "Mn"s and obeys without hesitation, though rather unenthusiastically. Wei Ying wonders if Lan Zhan had gone back to his 'misery mode' - he'd learnt that Lan Zhan's mood soured every time the Tian's name is mentioned - so he decides to give the latter an extra special side dish to the main menu; after swabbing the paste over the bruised areas, Wei Ying intentionally dips his lubricated fingers into the rosebud and scours the insides until he finds the walnut-sized gland, and starts scrubbing it with three fingertips. His other hand, also covered with paste, goes to the husband's exposed, pantless crotch, and lazily plays with the limp organ dangling between the legs. His fingers flutter over the slit and alternate between feather-light glides and generous hard strokes, and he expertly pleasures the sad-looking member until it revives with renewed energy, swells up and hardens considerably. The twin sacs are not neglected; he palms and cups each testicle tenderly, drawing erotic curves and circles along the middle of the sensitive perineum and between the balls.

Lan Zhan keeps his head down and refuses to say anything, however the heavy breathing, the ever-so-slight tremor in the thighs, and a sheen of sweat forming on the broad back say otherwise. Wei Ying continues to lovingly touch and coax the husband out of his despair, and teases the loins until the member grows to a familiarly impressive girth and length, heavy and engorged, and tightened balls rise towards a much-needed orgasm to de-stress with great vigour, and relax the man who bears the most burden of his family.

Without warning, Ernie bursts into the bedroom and walks in without knocking (because sometimes he doesn't bother with human greeting etiquettes). He rudely asks, Mother, meimei is sucking too hard on my breasts and it's starting to throb, what is happening and what should I do?

Lan Zhan's bloated prostate vibrates with delight as it contracts repeatedly and drains all its body-warmed sticky fluids into the twitching penis, and Wei Ying's hand continues to pump the organ gloriously, without any delays or edging, towards a wonderful climax - even in the presence of the grouchy son.

Wei Ying is unfazed - tentacle-kin aren't really receptive and do not care about human reproductive acts anyway (Ernie's bedded more warm human bodies that one can count in the distant past since he evolved from a slug-like form, and has fathered more children with human-kins than his parents would like to know; Ni-er is way too young to appreciate the birds and the bees, other than the fact that those two kinds of creatures, if created by Tians, hurt like hell, and she'd stay away from getting involved with the birds and the bees for a long while) - and Wei Ying replies from the bed, "I think meimei is hungry, because it's nearly her next feeding time. That's why she's sucking so hard - it happened to your father too. Be a good boy, and make a snack for her. Use a finger to dislodge her mouth's suction and quickly get her to eat the food. Can you do that? Your mother's a little busy now, dear."

Ernie brightens up and "Enn"s enthusiastically - he's still the emo adolescent who wants to be independent, yet still clings on, and wants recognition and praise from his mother, after all - and goes off to the kitchenette to puree some food for his meimei . He has infinite amounts of edibles in his special universes kept inside his cold black mass beneath his robes, and it takes a few seconds to draw out the needed ingredients to make a bowl tasty soft snacks for the adorable sister (he'd ordered a shipment of fresh milk but that hasn't arrive in the warehouses of his special universes yet).

Lan Zhan, on the other hand, blissfully ejaculates into his spouse's waiting hands with copious amounts of thick rich seed, curling fingers and toes, and audible ahhs, nnngh and hnnghs echoing off the walls of the bedroom - twenty twitches this time, not thirty. Wei Ying rubs the prostate in circles, triangles, squares and stars, and continues to stroke the completely-emptied cock, and manages to wring out another ten more weak, diluted pulses, in order to make up to the grand total of thirty twitches, before both are fully satisfied.

Lan Zhan turns around and lies on the bed again, facing the ceiling, exhausted, actually smiling in a rather drunken manner (because he's fully flushed from cheeks to the chest), as Ernie's preparations fill the air with the sounds of pots clanging and blender machines whirring - because the door to their bedroom isn't closed. Not having to do housework and meal preparations means the parents have more time to enjoy their time together and heal their wounds - both physically and emotionally.

Wei Ying undresses both of them, and soon, he gives the husband a nice flirtatious show of sitting on the latter's crotch in a cowgirl position, openly masturbating his cock with one hand, and using the other to stretch and later, finger-fuck himself with plenty of lubricating paste. Lan Zhan becomes exceedingly mesmerized by the captivating sight of Wei Ying pleasuring himself, accompanied by alluring moans of “lao gong , lao gong , my hole feels lonely, can you come inside and fill me up?”, “ah, ah, am I tight enough, or have I loosened it too much? Please taste my hole with your hot and strong stallion penis!” and “Lan Zhan, I'm ready to conceive tonight. Please shoot your powerful sperm here, and make lots of babies inside me?” - Wei Ying had taken a few lessons from the san ge about dirty talk, and he succeeds in arousing the husband to full mast in no time. When he's prepped, Wei Ying performs a jaw-droppingly sexy pole dance using the husband's aching-hard penis as the instrument of seduction and pleasure, with lots of raw, deep hard fucking, sensuous gyrating hips, and grinding each other's naked, cum-covered cock and balls. Lan Zhan spends the next couple of hours with exquisite agony and lust painted on his face, his back aches from arching too many times, his hips tire from thrusting rapidly until every last muscle fibre cramps up; despite the strenuous workout, he secretly enjoys orgasming as many times he wants into Wei Ying until he is gratefully emptied, and he feels absolutely relaxed and boneless in the aftermath; his penis has gone to heaven and become numbed from the mind-blowing pleasure. Wei Ying, the faithful lover, continues to bounce and ride Lan Zhan into the late evening with delectable wet squishes, barely-felt rolling penile contractions, and weak spurts between them, to heal the husband's broken heart and spirit, so that the latter will once again rise and lead the family.

.

Dinner is a quiet affair of classic Old Middle Kingdom cuisine using ingredients and stocks from Ernie's underground base. Ernie dutifully cooks for the family again, and he tends to his sister's needs. Ni-er is mostly sedated from the drugs flowing in her bloodstream, while Lan Zhan is tranquilized by too many forced ejections until his loins felt airy and non-existent. The mother spoonfeeds the drooling husband, who had short-circuited many times over the course of the day (and he uses his free hand to text his siblings on the holo-phone, and send some family wefies via WeiChat - Lan Zhan's droolsome, slothful, sex-flush-drunken and dying expressions look ugly, as usual); the son properly cares for the sister in a more normal and respectable manner (really).

Ernie spends time with his sister, and watches her as she slumbers off early - she is recuperating well, fur is starting to grow on the bald patches, and she will probably be up and about by the next morning. He gently bathes her, rinses off dead and peeled skin, changes her bandages, applies medicines, and keeps her wrapped in Christmas Lights-warmed towels.

Wei Ying, on the other hand, spends a few hours after dinner practising his da ge's awesome magic - which is key to improving his cultivation skills anyway. He attempts to wield spells with increasing efficiency and effectiveness, summons (actually, borrows) Wei-kin clones from his siblings, and uses Lan Zhan as a practice target. The semi-conscious Lan Zhan gets a free one night stand with a harem of virgin Wei Yings - multiple virgin young males rub their cocks against Lan Zhan's wilted member, playing dick-fencing, begging lewdly for sex and Lan Zhan has no other choice but to indulge in their sweet honeyed requests, flavoured with precum and Wei Yings' three-twitches when they cannot get enough of their beloved Grand Patriarch; although Lan Zhan ends up shooting blanks or nothing at all, anyway.

Wei Yings lie on top of each other, whether by spooning or embracing from the front, and form tempting stacks or sandwiches of two to three individuals each around the bedroom. They'd rub and frot against one another, mewling and purring for their lao gong to breed them in pairs or triplicates. Lan Zhan, drunken from lust and with his spouses regularly zapping Love and Energy spells directly to his nether regions, gets a mega-boost to his confidence and masculinity. He'd rush to one of those Wei Ying-sandwiches head-on, voraciously attacks with the stamina of a lion in heat, royally fucks the spouse on top for ten thrusts, then shifts his body lower, and tastes the bottom spouse for another ten pumps, then turns around to lovingly assault another enticing sandwich of Wei Ying-rosebuds. After having his fill of a few tasty, slick nubile sandwiches, he finally orgasms (very weakly). A few spouses happily crowd around his groin and use their lips and tongues to pleasure his butthole or suck and roll his convulsing balls while Lan Zhan crests his peak, and sure enough, he gets electrocuted by another pleasurable sexual shockwave and his eyes roll to the back and he howls because he soars beyond mere mundane mortal orgasms when his whole body contracts and squeezes out every last drop of crystal clear sexual fluids while marvellous Invisible Hands penetrate his pelvis and stroke his cockhead furiously - before he's lifted and dropped onto, and effortlessly slides into another Wei Ying's rosebud-sandwich and is forced to repeat the cycle and his laudable performance. His penis quivers and shakes wildly with angry-red joy when it gets to savour the different flavours and tightness of young Wei Yings, especially the classic favourites - hot, tight, virile teenagers, and warm, breedworthy, loving twenty-two year olds; his brain promptly shuts down when he lost count of how many thirty-twitches he'd made inside each lovely Wei Ying, because the population keeps increasing inside the packed bedroom anyhow, and he could never breed all of them in a single night.

.

Day Two starts off with a more pragmatic, low-key exit from Huang village, which is in the process of being repopulated by Wei and Lan-kin disguised as a heterogenous community of peasants and farmers. Wei Ying watched at the first ray of sunlight peeking from behind gathering masses of clouds hovering above grey hills and plateaus, and with wonder in his eyes, at numerous space-age container vessels equipped with anti-gravity thrusters shuttle back and forth from a crackling black portal. They arrive in droves, stop at designated locations around the village, then open up like unboxing Christmas presents. Squads of appropriately-dressed men and women emerge from those blossoming vessels, then enter unoccupied buildings and take up residence. They seem to have received education about life in the village, as they walk with a stoop in their posture and a swagger in their steps, and they talk amongst each other with thick rural accents. A few more vessels opened to reveal equipment, inventory and even livestock derived from beast-kin; when the Tians attacked and wiped out the villagers the day before, they slaughtered their farm animals and destroyed a number of primitive farming equipment and storefronts, so these have to be replenished at the Kingdom's cost - with the added bonus that the stuff provided by the Kingdom contains time-inappropriate technology to maintain an impenetrable defensive parameter to protect the village-turned-outpost. A magical barrier surrounds the village, which camouflages the scenery and shields the newcomers (actually, citizens of the Kingdom of Lan) from prying eyes from faraway lands, and is no different from Ni-er's barrier around the royal couple's cave-home.

Wei Ying instantly regretted the moment he stepped out of the pre-fabricated modular hut into a dreary grey scenery - the weather was awful, violent winds whipped against every inch of bare skin, and even five layers of robes weren't enough to stave off the cold. The temperature had dipped below zero in the wee hours of the morning and winter's grip around the western plains of the Middle Kingdom remained as strong as ever.

Little Ni-er, who had barely grown a layer of white undercoat over the bruised and healing skin, whines loudly and pitifully when she experiences the bitter deep freeze, and shivers almost immediately. Lan Zhan swaddles her with folds of his woolly bathrobe and hopes his body heat will keep her warm; he'd fashioned a nappy out of Ni-er's ruined flowery pouch by washing and fixing the fabric with a few good stitches using magical sewing kits, then Ernie weaved Space-class spells to turn the pouch into a mini-Bag of Holding, and they bagged her fuzzy rear end with the pouch so that she could crawl around without bothering the family with her precious metabolic wastes; Lan Zhan could finally relax and didn't have to bear with the pain of gemstones scratching against his clothes, and Wei Ying needn't busy himself to pick up gold and silver pieces from the floor.

Mother, Father, let me be realistic about the situation. No living being with a mind of his own would travel under such adverse weather conditions; however, we're an exception because we're trying to make up for lost time and reach Jiujiu's place before the Imperial armies. Flying on swords will be lethal as you'll be blown away within minutes, ground transport by horses isn't a viable option because frostbite will kill you within hours, and all roads leading out of Qishan have been buried under six feet of snow, therefore rendered impassable. There will be hardly anything to hunt for food, and trying to make enough drinkable water out of ice in this weather will exhaust your qi energy before sundown. There are natural predators such as hungry bears and wolves, and getting lost in blinding snow storms is a real threat.

"Lan Zhan, it wasn't this bad last year, was it? I remembered when we stayed at Mian Mian's home at the fringes of the 'Mounds, it was snowing heavily and cold - but not like this," Wei Ying remarks and glances at the husband, and promptly sneezes at the latter's face because his nose had turned red and snotty. He hops from side to side and rubs his hands profusely, trying to keep himself warm - burning up precious calories from their meagre breakfast of cold breads and dumplings in the process; because they wanted to start off early and eat along the way, in order to make the best of short winter daylight.

"Mn. It is... unusual, indeed," Lan Zhan replies - fully replenished spiritually (and physically, in some sense - his cheeks glow), as he looks up at the cloudy skies. His forehead and the tip of the nose turned pink too, and he pulls the furred edges of his outer robes tighter against himself. Little Nier's tapered head peeps out from the collar of the undergarment, and quickly retracts to snuggle into her father's bosom because it is simply too cold for her.

Ernie decides to take the initiative to decide for his parents, and transforms himself into an acceptable mode of transportation. His body turns black and melts into a shapeless form, before solidifying into a shaggy bulky beast of burden suitable for travel in the local terrain and weather - a black-brown domestic yak of sorts; he looks more like a stocky, horned bull with very long hair, and his legs aren't hooved - they're clawed feet, resembling a bear's. His clothes disintegrate into a lighter-coloured mass, and reshapes into a primitive enclosed wooden carriage on four wheels, complete with small windows on all sides. A door at one side of the carriage opens automatically - it looks more like a shoebox the size of a compact car, really.

Hop in, there are comfy beds and seats inside, and an environmentally-friendly electrical heating system to keep everyone warm and toasty. The weather is only going to get worse, according to our advanced satellite climate prediction systems. The sustained cold front definitely deviates from known historical data of year-end weather, and I am beginning to suspect something is amiss. Let's go, and I will download and analyze data as we move along.

The trio get onboard a comfortable first class ride, and Ernie the yak slowly pulls the carriage through the snow-covered landscape. A few passer-by Wei and Lan-kin wave at them and the royal couple raise their hands in response to bid farewell to the village that had tragically suffered so much, but served its purpose to warn the Kingdom of Lan of the impending doom that befalls the Middle Kingdom.

.

It is admittedly a boring trip cooped up by four walls, and at the same time, it is inconceivable to think of stepping out of the carriage to explore the route, take some pretty InstaWei-worthy photos, let alone go for exciting side-adventures, because everything is too damn white on the exterior. Fortunately their transport includes a small toilet stall on board; neither man could withstand peeing in the freezing cold which would turn urine into ice and petrify their shrivelled dicks instantaneously.

Ernie had done a commendable job by stocking up a couple of cabinets with tasty and filling boxed meals and bottled drinks typically offered by 31st-century spaceliners for rich elite travellers, a microwave oven and kettle to make sure the passengers are able to have hot food and beverages around the clock. Wei Ying asked out of parental concern if Ernie was doing fine with the terrible weather, if he felt cold, and if he needed to stop, rest and have a bite to eat.

Thank you for your concern, Mother, but I am well. I am protected by 31st-century thermal coats which can endure even the coldest sub-zero deep space temperatures, and the restaurants in my special universes keep us well-fed throughout this trip. Even as we trudge through the road, I am being nourished by a horde of beast-kin who continuously carry and dump loads of synthesized macro-molecular sustenance irradiated with enriched Aldebaran neutro-oxy-siliconium rays with added supplementary edible bio-alloys from the Gamma Sector of the Large Magellanic Cloud Nebulae into my internal, endlessly consuming organo-chasm of Corruptive ingestion and digestion.

Wei Ying “ooh”s disinterestedly because he has no idea what Ernie tried to describe (it sounds unappealing and unappetizing anyway), though the latter is proud and blatantly puffs up his bovine chest at the showcase of his brilliant extraplanetary planning and execution. “Ernie, you’ve done well. Thank you,” Lan Zhan clearly states his gratitude to the son who displays remarkable aptitude in Perfect grace and hospitality to the family. Ernie is all too happy to walk a little faster against the fierce winds, while moo-ing (more like, grunting) old Yunmeng tunes mixed with choruses from Gusu folk songs although hardly anything can be heard through the blizzard. The wheels creak under the weight of its occupants and bump from time to time over loose rocks and gravel - the path takes them along windy trails and into steep hilly areas en route to the southeastern borders of Qishan province.

The younger man contemplated on how to spend their travel time well - he activated his holo-phone with a flick of fingers and wanted to watch some downloaded movies or play installed 8d-game apps, but then thought of his precious princess who should be as hardworking as her brother in doing something productive. So, he placed a virtual holographic representation of the device on the seat in front of Ni-er, who had decided to crawl out of her father’s bathrobe because the carriage was warm enough, and she wanted to stretch her locomotive muscles anyway (the way her flowery nappy-pouch wiggles is just too adorable). Wei Ying swipes a few buttons and screens on the holo-phone’s display, and soon, little Ni-er is surrounded by a brightly-lit virtual 360-degree bubble full of projected videos of her maternal uncles and their extended families, from their respective universes. She shrieks with excitement when she recognizes some of the faces - like the da ge who gave amazing back scratches, and the didi who knows which ear pick to twiddle in front of her.

Wei Ying lets Ni-er babble gugus and gagas with her uncles, aunts and cousins; she seem to be able to carry out decent intelligent conversation with baby-speak, and the respondents have an uncanny ability to understand her gurgling noises, thanks to cross-species multiversal translation technology from the 41st century built into the holo-phone. She bounces on the cushion, spins and whirls around merrily, as she converses with multitudes of screens, each beaming live feeds from a relative's home, kingdom or galaxy. When she becomes the center of everyone's attention, the chatterbox of the expanded household, and smiles toothlessly to garner plenty of "Awwwwws" and Likes from everyone, Wei Ying knows it's the right decision to let his family know that Ni-er is alright and that she misses everyone too.

Wei Ying returns to the oversized sofa that doubles as a bed, peels off his clothes, and proceeds to mount an infinitely patient but eager husband, who is also in the nude; thankfully, there is a privacy function in the holo-phone which blurs them out of view, so Wei Ying can spend a few hours making-out with the insatiable husband (who is coy about his desires, sometimes playing hard to get by pretending to read a magazine or a newspaper available on board), coax the older man to full attention in more ways than one using sultry gazes, luscious kissy lips, tantalizing tongue flicks, risque finger wiggles, pulsing ass-clenches and sensual gyrating buttocks - and when Lan Zhan puts down his reading material because his intelligent thought processes are thoroughly disrupted, Wei Ying giggles, pleasures the happy convulsing meatstick, and makes an effort to keep the husband inside him over many rounds of toe-curlingly delightful sexual intercourse that leaves his love tunnel flooded and swirling with the latter's viscous, liquidy and fertile seed-rich fruits of labour. Lan Zhan hnnngs uncontrollably, generally thirty times each, and once every half-hour, until he is thoroughly milked and worn out - but is satisfied with the First Class service to his loins, nonetheless.

.

The journey from Qishan to Yunmeng would, by rough estimates, take a few days on a plodding yak cart. Shortly after midday and lunch, suddenly,

Ernie braked and the couple nearly fell off their seats at the unexpected stop. Wei Ying's oolong tea spilled to the floor and Ni-er lost a slice of ripened soft mango when the half-eaten fruit on a toothpick flew off Lan Zhan's grip and splats on the wall. The couple hears faint growls and snarls, but couldn't pinpoint the source of the sound as the windows are locked.

You may want to buckle up or pull off your seat belts, because we've got company - grey wolves at six and twelve o'clock!

Notes for the Chapter:

Here's a sprinkle of porn to make up for the lack of sexy times in the last few chapters. This arc is gonna be drawn out, because there's no real direction and the writing is just done on a whim. Let's follow their footsteps and see where the road leads!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 81

Wei Ying barely managed to push Ni-er into the carriage before slamming the door shut and sealing it with magic - because she clung so desperately to him and refused to be left alone inside the dark cabin -, the moment he stepped into the snow, one ferocious salivating wolf leapt from a bush and Wei Ying screamed for his life.

The wolves couldn't have picked a better place to mount an ambush. The family had to traverse a mountain range with deep ravines and valleys between avalanche-prone slopes. Ernie the yak was forced to maneuver slowly along a narrow, uneven path at the edge of a cliff that dropped at least two kilometers vertically to white-water rivers. Two packs of predators arrived amid violent gusts of icy wind - one at the front, and another from behind. Immediately, Lan Zhan raced out with Bichen drawn from its scabbard to defend the rear of their carriage, while Ernie stood his ground and tried his best to whack enemies at the front with his horns.

Wei Ying couldn't run and hide forever; he tried his er di 's tactic of imagining calico cats' faces on the wolves, but that turned out more frightening than expected. Without thinking, he panicked and somehow scrambled up a barren tree, nearly slipped due to the ice that formed on the trunk, until he was finally out of reach of three pursuing wolves - although that left him hanging helplessly onto the creaking, outermost branches with nothing but thin air between him and the turbulent rapids two kilometers below. The wolves tried to claw and jump up the tree, but stopped short of falling to their deaths when the animals realized that there was no way to snatch their prey other than to wait until the freezing weather takes its toll on the human. Wei Ying sobbed and shrieked in terror every time one of the canines snarled; he'd even lost his boots and the bottom of his robes had been shredded by an earlier attack from one of the wolves.

Lan Zhan wasn't so lucky - again. He managed to slice the wolves' abdomens and limbs when they hurled themselves at him with fangs bared. Lan Zhan could only attack one at a time, and when multiple beasts descended on him, he was literally mauled alive. He tried to parry with the scabbard and slash with Bichen; the wolves cried in pain, fell back and skidded on the frosty ground, however their wounds magically closed with innate healing magic - the black wisps bleeding out of open gashes that stitches and seals the parted flesh on its own, is disturbingly familiar -, and they launched themselves back at the sole human attacker. Within minutes, his sword was lost to the snow when canine teeth bury into his arms, and he crumbled to the frozen dirt when too many grey furred bodies hold him down and start mutilating his legs. Lan Zhan shouted in agony and continued to swing his hands blindly in a last ditch, but futile, effort to fend off the savage beasts. In a fight of a man - no matter how talented he is with swords or martial arts - against a pack of aggressive starving wolves during winter, it's evident who ends up at the top of the food chain.

Argh! These are no ordinary wolves! They're imbued with dark Corruptive magic and their body constitutions show signatures of the Corruptive effects, similar to the 'Mounds! Ernie roars in real pain, as five animals cling onto his back and tear into his flesh with their jaws, I can't shake 'em off! and he tries to gore one wolf head-on, but it nimbly dodged and counterattacked with a strangling bite to Ernie's bearded throat. The yak opens its mouth during the struggle and shoots a laser beam - the bright red light blasts a ledge above, resulting in rocks and sheets of snow crashing down to the carriage.

I can't shoot projectiles at them, otherwise an avalanche may fall and wipe us out! Ernie gasps panickedly and his tail instinctively hooks around one of the carriage wheels before it could slide off the cliff from the streaming snow. Another wolf pounces from the side and latches to Ernie's snout, effectively shutting down the laser-shooting orifice and suffocates the heavy stocky yak thrice the size of the bloodthirsty predators. It is a scene of carnage resembling how lions pile up and drag larger prey, such as buffaloes, to the ground.

The pack of wolves operated with deadly military precision, Wei Ying realized belatedly from where he clung to his dear life, an ironically vantage point on a dried-up branch that could break any time from his weight; the canine animals split into smaller groups to take advantage of the narrow passageway, and each worked efficiently to separate Lan Zhan and Ernie, the two armed travellers, and worked to dispatch each one like carving meat out from the bones. The tight space ensured that ranged attacks couldn't be used; Wei Ying nearly took out his golden flute to try and save his scattered family members - then realizes that he holds the Pillar of World Balance in his hands, and any incorrect notes may cause an earthquake and send them skydiving down into the river gorge. His fingers tremble in fear from the presence of the wolves, so he really couldn't play his flute properly - and those three ghastly wolves waiting at the base of the tree trunk, whose eyes are redder than his own even when he is the Yiling Patriarch, and whose drool-coated fangs and ruthless growls elicit pure terror, made sure that he couldn't reach the husband or the children.

The wolves are by no means ordinary, as Ernie correctly guessed. They are able to use healing magic, and their claws glow with dark energies capable of slicing magical defenses - enough for a small group of wolves to thrash and mangle the hinges of the sealed door of the carriage after several attempts. Wei Ying cries as much as his lungs would allow before his voice became hoarse and gave way to the ear-deafening winds, when the predators managed to break open the door and rush into the carriage - and Ni-er high-pitched shrieks of terror froze Wei Ying's blood - at the same time, another pack of wolves slides down the cliff to join the savagery and lunge at the meatiest and most tempting-looking prey. The yak is finally overpowered at the sudden impact - more like an avalanche of wolves - and is sent flying over the edge of the cliff, and down, horribly down, two kilometers to the chasm below, pulling the carriage along to the lethal drop, including the wheels, the broken door, and gut-wrenching wet sounds of wolves busily attacking, gnawing, chewing and mauling Wei Ying's precious princess trapped inside - everything goes downhill within a split second in a cacophony of a distressed bovine's yowling, wood splintering, the echoing wail of a living baby cat's tail, and the whimpers and yelps of wolves who found themselves falling to their deaths.

.

The remaining wolves were shocked, and soon, terrified at the loss of the majority of their pack - including their alpha leader - and they whined and barked aimlessly. The other useful morsel - the bloodied man in white robes - had suddenly, perhaps magically, disintegrated like milk powder dispersed into the snow. Teary-eyed Wei Ying too, blinked in disbelief from atop the tree and above the rolling mists; his suffering is exacerbated by an unending onslaught of falling ice during the scuffle. Only the clothes, Bichen and its scabbard remained on the ground, and they are increasingly buried by layers of fresh precipitation.

Without any remaining scent of living meat besides the scrawny one who is unappetizingly too far away hanging onto a tree branch, the wolves meander around to sniff for any clues for a few more minutes, before leaving hesitantly, clearly downtrodden with their tails between the legs, at a failed effort to seek out food for their empty bellies.

Later, Wei Ying managed to pick his way with shaking hands down the tree, and his body was cooling fast in the extremely cold weather - the adrenaline had worn off, and he's faced with a new reality that he is now alone and very afraid. Wei Ying gingerly crouched at Lan Zhan's last known spot and tried to feel the ground by running his hands on disappearing footprints, his clothes and the equipment left behind. Despite the dim light due to a large overhead cloud, he managed to find a few biscuit crumbs in between ice crystals and immediately recognized them as from a confectionary's origin.

Wei Ying remembered how Lan Zhan narrated one of his adventures in the heavens long ago, where his faded soul sought a body in the form of a magical biscuit baked from an oven. Following that, when the body is thoroughly broken, it does not stay in the realm and rot like any other living being's, rather, it crumbles and returns to its original substance. Strong gusts of wind blew - even those tiny pieces of baked confection are not spared - and Wei Ying loses the remnants of Lan Zhan's body to the surrounding mountains and valleys. He could only wail at the loss and pray that some kind creature in the mountains will benefit from finding the biscuit crumbs - which, in essence, have lost their magic and are simply baked food - and that Lan Zhan's soul and spirit will be rewarded with good karma.

Wei Ying sobbed very hard, as much as the man's tears would allow before they froze on his cheeks along with his snot in plummeting temperatures, when there was nothing else he could do other than to collect Lan Zhan's belongings; he puts on Lan Zhan's shoes to replace his lost ones, and wears the woolly bathrobe beneath his ruined, torn outer robe - although the enchanted bathrobe will save his life by radiating needed heat to sustain the wearer's body temperature, the oversized-ness which reminded Wei Ying of Lan Zhan's comforting embrace, and the familiar body odour that made him recall about Lan Zhan's love and presence, served only to multiply the young man's misery more than ever before. Everything else is squeezed into his satchel or rolled into a makeshift backpack strapped to his body with the previous owner's belt. He had to make a move, despite not having the husband by his side anymore, and despite leaving his two children whose fates are unknown underwater in the river gorge below - the sun would set early and predators continue to roam the wild winterlands because hunger does not differentiate between good and evil. With a sheathed Bichen in hand, he slowly hobbles off in ill-fitting oversized shoes, and onward through the mountain range in the bitter cold.

From a distance, a cursed shadow bird - a crow that emits black wispy trails, not unlike the ones used by the Wens nearly two decades ago - caws loudly from a ledge, and flies off.

.

It's been a while since he had been alone, and fortunately the forlorn feeling of being the only living person within a day's walk from any nearby village, didn't put a damper on his spirits. If he kept his thoughts focused on positive things - such as reaching Dashan village by the next midday, stocking up on liquor at its tavern - the tasty rice wines produced from the rice fields in the fertile plains and valleys in the central region of the Middle Kingdom are on par with Laozu Smiles -, or further ahead, by the next couple of sundowns, he might be able to peer at the first signs of the famed Long River that feeds to the great lakes which house his ancestral home, the Lotus Pier.

It had been nearly two years since he last saw Jiang Cheng, and he wondered how the bratty younger brother is doing - based on the letter he'd receive, Wei Ying reckoned that Jiang Cheng hadn't changed much. He'll probably get a good scolding from the fiery Jiang sect leader - for whatever reason, be it due to his absence, his shabby look (his outermost robes look badly shredded at the bottom), or even a tirade of non-stop nagging about plum sauce - before being bear-hugged because despite the bad blood and all those terrible things that happened in the span of nearly two decades between them, Jiang Cheng is still the little brother who refuses to call him da ge but will gladly share a bowl of lotus root pork rib soup anyway.

Wei Ying huddled close to a hastily dug firepit inside a shallow cave, and stoked up the flames with more dry twigs. He found the rocky alcove after walking down a mountain, and felt blessed to be finally shielded from the violent snowstorm; with a couple of Earth spells, he managed to carve out a comfortable pocket large enough for him to lie in, and to cook a simple meal, while being fully protected from the elements of weather. On the firepit, there is a steaming saucepan containing instant noodles swimming in spicy chicken broth topped with crispy fried slices of spam meat, two hard-boiled eggs and some greens; it's amazing how much food and cookware could fit in his Bag of Holding and satchel - which are constantly refilled by unseen resupplies powered by space-time magic from his siblings.

As soon as Wei Ying blew the noodles on a pair of chopsticks and took the first bite, he nnnghs with relish at the delightful, synthetically (and slightly salty, greasy) flavoured taste - his body did a little wiggle-dance - of the 21st-century staple for bachelors. His worries dissipated for a while, as he ate directly from the saucepan and filled his stomach after a harrowing episode with his arch-nemesis - the wolves - and an exhausting climb down the steep cliffside route while braving the cold.

His holo-phone glows eerily from the cavern's floor, casting strange, flickering greenish light to the walls of his temporary shelter. It projects out moving images from another side of the universe, and allows him to converse with his siblings via video-conferencing.

“How are the noodles, gege ? My factories made this pre-packaged meal and I asked the manager to add some extra calorie-rich goodies to it. Don't forget the sweet fruit pudding on the side, it's packed with vitamins and all the essential nutrients you'll need for the day!”

“I’ve transmitted more supplies to your Bag of Holding, er ge , just put your hand into it and make a right-turn when you feel a five-petaled knob - it’ll take you to your new 51st-century inventory! I’ve also analyzed your current storage, patched some outdated items with newer upgrades, and made micro-fixes such as on our Grand Patriarch’s belongings.”

“ Shixiong ! I’m so sorry that the calico cat-face method didn’t work! I don’t really understand why... when I was under the hypnotic spell by the master-kin, all they did was to exploit my imaginativeness to superimpose a favourite lover’s face onto their anterior protrusion, and I became easily consumed with lust and insatiable sex drive for them... so I thought having a cat’s face might draw feelings of cuteness, or at least reduce the level of anxiety and fear! I’m so sorry!”

“ Er di , while you’re having your noodles, let me brief you on what our scouts and satellites have picked up.”

Wei Ying spends a few minutes catching up with his siblings, and “Enn”’s obediently like a student about to start a lesson in a class of four teachers beamed from the holo-phone, before slurping down his food diligently in small bites.

.

Wei Ying gets a crash course about the natural wildlife and ecosystem of the Burial Mounds - something he had resisted when he had time in his hands that could have been spent better by reading up some useful magazines, instead of whittling the days away by street peddling and looking for watering holes in Yiling during the summer.

The types and distribution of animals, both prey and predator, are about the same as the surrounding districts within Qishan, the all-knowledgeable da ge points out. However, Wei san ge says as he pulls up Wei-kipedia from ErNet and flicks through a few web pages to everyone's view, there exists a very rare sub-type of Corrupted wildlife that wander around the 'Mounds. These creatures are in most cases, sizable predators such as bears, foxes, wolves and birds of prey, who have lived long enough to absorb vast quantities of dark, vengeful spiritual energies from unmarked graves, decades-old mummified remains and half-buried bones, until such energies solidify to encase the animal hosts with Corruptive magic. Their bodies become so saturated with tangible, viscous embodiments of feelings of hatred, illnesses, curses, malaise and evil, that they constantly emit dark, smoke-like trails from their bodies. When disguised citizens of their Kingdom cleared the forests and settled down in the estate, they managed to capture, tag and release such animals and track them using 31st-century satellite technology.

"While there's nothing unusual about having intelligent, magically enhanced creatures roaming the Mortal Realm, since dragons, phoenixes and qilins exist and are even reared especially within the Imperial Palace grounds in Chang'an - however, what was strange about today's attack was twofold - one, in the last census conducted a month ago when we started turning the estate into farms, there were five such wolves. Today, nearly fifty attacked your carriage. Two, our kins tagged natural uncorrupted specimens too when they chased out the original inhabitants of the estate. Most of the wolves that appeared today were tagged ones, and were perfectly normal just yesterday, albeit a little malnourished," the teenage Wei-kin seems to read off a few reports and other screens in the background while swivelling about in his ultra-modern gaming chair - the amazing san ge has countless holographic displays around him in his dark 8d-enabled room inside his concrete fortress.

With a flick of the san ge 's fingers, ugly, tranquilized mugshots of the three wolves that kept him imprisoned on the barren tree appeared on screen, and next to them were screencaps from earlier the day; it's hard to say if they were the same individuals, however Wei Ying didn't find any sound reason to dispute his younger sibling's analysis.

“It's a good thing didi sent an A dvanced S tealh S hadow bird to tail you so that we get close-up live visuals, because da ge wouldn't shut up about letting you go alone into the woods,” the eighteen-year old Wei sibling sheepishly added, still feeling guilty for giving the wrong advice of substituting a cat over over a canine's body. Behind him, a number of Wei and Lan-kin seem to be busy shuffling back and forth with paperwork and strange gadgets in hand, running menial errands for one (or a few) universe(s).

“Ah! Er ge , I'm so sorry! If only I had installed anti-personnel capabilities to the A.S.S. bird, I would have commanded it to swoop in and save you all. But everything happened too fast, I was scared, and wasn't able to teleport more weapons from my warehouses during that critical few seconds, and, and...” the little nine year old starts to hiccup and cry in his busy command center with workers moving crates of stuff behind him.

Wei da ge sighs irritably at the situation and twirls a couple of fingers. All four individual screens move and merge in front of Wei Ying's eyes - a reality-bending feat that only the eldest among them can achieve. The teenager scowls in the background at the loss of his MMORPG displays, the room is suddenly flooded with the eighteen year old's and everyone else's servants - all of them stood still and looked dumbfounded at their sudden strange new surroundings -, and little didi tumbles when the chair he was sitting on rolls straight towards the tallest and oldest sibling.

Wei Ying chews thoughtfully at a hard-boiled egg, slightly surprised at what his siblings can do - but he's getting used to their brazen displays of breaking down laws of physics, because they do that all the time in their own multiverses anyway -, while the da ge plucks the small boy from the chair and puts the latter on the lap, then pacifies him with bear hugs. "Are you thinking what we're thinking?" the burly-looking man asks through the common display's microphone.

Wei Ying rubs his chin, and wipes off a stray trail of broth while he's at it. "A sudden increase in the population of Corrupted 'Mound wolves... and those wolves were Corrupted within a day under a process that normally takes decades in nature... plus, 'Mound wolves aren't known to move far beyond their boundaries, let alone as far as the edges of Qishan province - so they must've been intentionally travelling out of their natural habitat to follow us... in addition, wolves live in smaller packs, unlike the swarms we saw today, and they continued to hunt us despite the hunger and the availability of other easier prey such as winter rabbits, deer and hibernating rodents..." he looks up to the screen and swallows the half-chewed egg with effort along with a gulp of artificially-flavoured chicken soup from the saucepan, "Da ge ! Could it be that someone, or something, possesses the ability to control the dark arts, and used it to turn living beings to corrupted things to hunt us down outside of the 'Mounds?" Wei Ying asks suddenly and nearly drops the saucepan when he shoves himself closer to the holophone - a few strips of noodles spill to the ground. The young man quickly picks up the noodle pieces with his fingers, and his fingers became greasy in the process - but smell delicious anyway - he pops the noodles into his mouth, licks his fingers and spits out any grit or sand that stuck to the salvaged mouthful; good food mustn't go to waste, after all.

" Shixiong , what's more worrying is that my beast-kin servants and their Chow Chow clones of the Sun-Eating Dog scouted the mountain range shortly after you left the scene, and we found many more bodies buried under the snow - all along the mountainous borders of the province. Their remains have been collected for further investigation, but I saw some of the autopsy footage and it's a pretty grim picture - they're all half-eaten by wild predators, and bear the tell-tale bite marks of Corrupted creatures!" the er ge exclaims over the conversation - everyone pales a little and Wei Ying feels his stomach churn in disgust and fear.

"It seems something is trying to keep people, including my family, from crossing the borders - or worse, keep us trapped inside Qishan," Wei Ying attempts at analysing the latest piece of information, and he didn't like the conclusion he came to.

"If yesterday's events are anything to go by, I would even hazard a guess that the Tians are involved and they intend to use this terrible winter season to massacre everyone closest to the Far Far West to safeguard their presence all the way to the capital city of Chang'an!" the eldest sibling conjectured, discomfort and disdain evident on his face. "Judging on how their kind perish so easily from Purity-class firepower from the heavens, it must mean they're somehow made of Corrupted magic, just like the essence from the Yin metal!" the san ge adds, when he whips up a web page filled to everyone's view filled with magic circles and ancient, convoluted explanations about magic classes and origins.

(One does not simply question Wei da ge 's awesome theories, or the infinite knowledge from the Kingdom's archives accessible by the san ge , no matter how ridiculous or far off they may seem; simply because the Wei siblings are known to have peered far, far into the future and relay bits of useful information to the present - cheat cards, really - to steer the extended Wei family's fate to the direction that they want; usually according to the da ge 's absolute rule.)

The remaining half of a boiled egg is left untouched, swimming in a pool of chicken soup. When spicy chilli powder from the bottom of the saucepan floats up to the surface, it turns the greasy meal into a cauldron of blood.

.

Just then, Ernie in his Dark Wang Ji form appears from the side with little Ni-er in his arms. He steps into sight, hesitantly, looking around.

I figured something like this might have happened, when I walked out of the bathroom and instead of my underground kingdom's grand hallways of infinite portals, I see the da ge 's living room on the penthouse of the 888-floor new Wangxian headquarters.

Ernie looks just like the husband - with fully-blackened eyes -, albeit a couple of decades younger and his hair is wet from the shower, and has a light blue robe on. Beautiful but rather naked pinkish Ni-er, who looked as rotund and chubby as she could ever be - in fact, she looks more like a distended two-feet long bowling pin since her tapered head remained the same in size but her stomach is stuffed until the point of bursting - squees the moment she notices the screen. She shrieks "Mama!" at the same time as Ernie politely nods, and utters in greeting, Mother .

Wei Ying chokes and spits out half-bitten spam back into the saucepan, throws the chopsticks into it as well, before putting the whole ensemble back to the firepit, and responds heartily, "My baobei s!", while crouching over the holo-phone.

It's been... hard to remove chunks of meat and dried congealed blood from our bodies, especially meimei's underfur. I had to wash her more than five times with baby shampoos, and had to be very gentle because her fragile skin is taut, and still very sensitive from the recovery.

Wei Ying “Enn”s at the proud Ernie, half-listening, and rubs his fingers on the projected display at little Ni-er's bottom lip, while murmuring in babyspeak, “You cutey-wootey, you scared Mommy when your uncles say that you appeared covered in blood and needed a good wash.” Apparently 51st-century holo-phones are enabled with nth-dimensional communication technology, as Ni-er feels Wei Ying's fingers and she coos happily while being patted down with a small towel that appeared out of nowhere.

Less than five minutes later, the Wei siblings take turns to pamper and bottle-feed Ni-er (she still needs to feed every so often) - and mischievously massage-molest her bulging tummy, causing it to rumble and emit baby farts from her rear end. Ernie explains that his meimei had revealed her ‘first true form’ while they fell into the ravine, and she inexplicably devoured all forty eight wolves that followed them to the river gorge before Ernie safely teleported them to safety. Her appetite was so huge, that all pine trees and forested areas in the vicinity were stripped bare of leaves and bark, all living organisms perished into her bottomless stomach, and even the water in the river gorge was vacuumed up in a split second.

Ernie shakes his head. It's the first time meimei showed her tentacle form, at an incredibly young age of just a month old, and honestly speaking I was spooked. Don't ask me how it was possible for her to eat everything on sight, even I cannot explain it using our tentacle-kin's biology - what was left down there looked like a barren snowscape of Pluto, except that even the tiniest ice crystals and loose rocks and sand were gone too. In time, the falling snow will cover the region, and we can always use shifting glaciers and avalanches as excuses... although I'm really not sure what else we can blame for the consequential drought caused by meimei 's action.

“What do you mean... drought?” Wei Ying asked, still tickling his precious princess on the screen. It felt incredibly real - even through holographic projection, his fingertips seem to ghost over Ni-er's fur and the fluffy sensations are truly heartwarming.

Ernie grips his hands behind his back and his Dark Wang Ji form seems to waver a little.

Err... it's just like the time when I first ate the Sun and caused a solar eclipse. Meimei ate everything in the valley - which is fine, since they'll be replenished in time -, but she inadvertently sucked up all the water from the river system that feeds into Long River that flows to the Great Eastern Seas. And... since there's not much rainfall during winter, I think... all the villages downstream and jiu jiu 's hometown will not have water overnight until the rest of the season.

The tickling stops, and little Ni-er whines in disappointment. Wei Ying's eyes widen like saucers and he helplessly shouts out “WHAT?!”.

.

The much-touted well-planned two-week family reunion roadtrip to the East is fast becoming a farce of divinely if not cosmic proportions, at least from Wei Ying's perspective. If the nature of the first day's turn of events was anything to go by, Wei Ying reckoned that the second day would be, in all fairness, still in line with expectations. His husband would just inwardly roll his eyes and point invisible fingers at the all-encompassing term of “Wei Ying-ness” while maintaining a poker face, and Wei Ying would gladly laugh at the mockery of his name, then grin at the offending husband with his trademark reckless bravado with a thumb pointing at himself and reply “Yes, that’s me” - except that the husband’s not by his side, and the whole situation isn’t entirely caused by a Wei Ying, courtesy name Wei Wuxian.

Wei Ying reasoned that by forcing their family to brave the deadly winter and its denizens, they’d unwillingly pitted themselves against dangerous foes - Tian family and natural wildlife included -, lost everyone in the travelling party save for one sole survivor still standing in the Mortal Realm, lost precious time because his san ge ’s indisputable five-day weather forecast announced that he’s effectively snowed in for the next three days due to worsening weather, thus the stakes are ever higher to get out of Qishan and save Jiang Cheng and his ancestral sect - plus the husband’s Gusu Lan sect, if the situation doesn’t warp into unimaginable magnitudes in the coming days.

(He could, in theory, snow-proof himself with a Fire Shield; however, that would mean trudging and mowing through hundreds of kilometers of six-foot tall ice and trying to stay barely warm enough - which would gobble up all his qi energy within hours - and to be at the mercy of horrid winds that could send avalanches and rockfalls to his way - which would spell instant doom.)

The young man calculated with fingers that by the time he leaves his comfortable prison in the borderlands of Qishan, it would be Day Five, and if he was fortunate enough not to run into any more trouble, he could rush through Dashan and a few more villages - pit stops, really -, forget about sleep and rest, nevermind the dangers of journeying through treacherous snowstorms that could kill men like freezing water in midwinter (which is technically ranked as “very common”), and reach Lotus Pier with unbelievably empty lakes and lotus-less ponds shortly before the end of the second week. Jiang Cheng would have to face an army of local insurgents and Imperial soldiers, and the cavalry that’s supposed to arrive to help him out is a mere single man no other than the foster brother.

“This... this is ridiculous! Unacceptable!” Wei Ying exclaims to no one in particular. His voice echoes off the walls of the little rocky pocket of warmth hidden in the vast snow-blasted mountain range of Qishan’s borders. His holo-phone has long gone dark to stretch its battery life (although it recharges itself constantly by drawing undetectable energies from fine natural inter-dimensional space-time fatigue lines found all over the universe) and to give himself some peace of mind (he’s just had a huge argument with his son about lakes, ponds and taps going dry, his remote brothers aren’t really helpful under such circumstances, and he couldn’t possibly binge on movies and other entertainment options from the mobile device during such dreadful, despairing times).

Wei Ying stretches and lies down, using the satchel as a pillow of sorts, and nearly avoids knocking over the empty saucepan on a firepit of softly-glowing embers kept alive using advanced extended-release Fire spells. There’s very little space to move around, and it feels rather claustrophobic; Wei Ying is at odds with himself to choose between enlarging the cavity of his shelter with Earth-based magic, or suffer a few hours of dust inhalation from stoneworks - and postpones such trivial decision-making to a later time when he has finally cooled down; it’s dangerous to cast anything powerful when one’s state of mind is anything but calm, lest he causes an earthquake and buries himself under cave rocks. He takes off his torn outer robe, spreads it and uses it as a blanket to cover himself - Lan Zhan’s bathrobe will keep the wearer warm enough.

He curses when he remembers the husband - the handsome image of a man in his mid-thirties floats in front of his vision for a moment. "Useless, good for nothing, hopeless, unreliable!" he mutters under his breath angrily, with a tiny pout, then rolls to the side bundled up in his robe-turned-blanket.

Adding salt to the wound is the fact that Lan Zhan is fortunately alive - as expected, since he's an Immortal - but is unfortunately incapacitated for a while longer, just when Wei Ying needed him the most. His siblings countered that claim, saying that Lan Zhan's weakened presence would only drag down the young, supposedly extraordinarily gifted man during his heroic journey to save his ancestral Jiang home. A great and talented former Yiling Patriarch Wei Wuxian could do everything by himself, the smug ex-megalomaniac da ge chipped in, obviously secretly overjoyed that for once, the surname of Wei tops that of Lan in terms of longevity, which can be reported to the state media of ErNet as attributed to the strength, endurance and glory of the Wei-kin.

Lan Zhan, whose body had been turned into biscuit crumbs and blown away by fierce wintry winds, had his soul sucked into the Underworld following usual life-death-rebirth cyclical procedures. However, without the Book of Judgement around, all souls that had departed since summer (when the universe was reincarnated and gods became extinct) remained stuck in hell, and withered into nothingness within days. Lan Zhan's permanently ultra-bright Immortalized presence in the depths of the planet lit up like a lightbulb in Christmas, and was quickly spirited away by his progeny Wei and Lan-kinsmen employed in the Underworld.

The confused middle-aged man was sent to Heaven in a Kingdom-sanctioned inter-realm travelling rocket that flies faster than the speed of light, and promptly ended up on his former foster great grandfather's throne - because the formerly defunct divinely governance system had been duly fixed by Kingdom's citizens, and unseen Heavenly forces held him imprisoned in the Heavenly Palace atop the gilded twelve-feet tall seat decorated with jade and gemstones - Lan Zhan had been recognized as the new Jade Emperor !

As a result, the infinitely awesome da ge narrated, Lan Zhan is forced to stay in the Heavens for a few days because “the system demands the Jade Emperor to reinstate key functions of the world above the skies, including appointing proper gods, set up standard operating procedures, re-write irrelevant laws, restart the Heavenly economy, re-establish communications with other Realms of the Gods formerly linked to Heaven...”

“... and yada, yada, yada, I don’t need to say much more, little brother. Suffice to say, our Grand Patriarch needs to build the entire Realm of the Gods from scratch, of course with our citizens’ help and with the advice of the Grand Wangxian Council. Such a mammoth task takes time, surely you must understand that,” the da ge explained, as he gives the final pat on Ni-er’s pear-shaped tummy after a hearty meal of Taurus constellation cow-milk, and hands the oversized bowling pin to the didi to bring her to her sulking brother. Ernie had received a good tongue-lashing by his mother, and went through an emotional meltdown of sorts including fierce screaming, baseless finger-pointing and venting out his unhappiness over being scapegoated for his little sister’s apocalyptic act, and ran off to the next room in the da ge ’s penthouse, where he spent hours bawling like an emo teenager.

Little Ni-er burps along the way, and a long string of undigested saliva-coated wolf pelt and bits of broken bones welled up from her bottomless stomach - which the eighteen-year old er ge , who is used to doing the family’s dirty work without much protest since he’s not too bright, dutifully scoops up with his hands and runs off to the nearest trash bin. Interestingly, she had been peeing and pooping the largest diamonds, gold bars and nuggets ever since that fateful meal, which the Wei siblings casually collected as payment for their troubles in taking care of the two tentacle-kin.

“How long,” Wei Ying had asked while lying on the cold hard floor, and the san ge lent his experience in time manipulation using technological means.

“Even by applying 51st-century chronotech by exchanging time evolution patterns between the Mortal Realm and the Gods’ Realm, and reversing time compression and dilation behaviors... I’d say... my calculations worked everything out to... about three days,” the san ge estimates, while punching numbers in his holo-calculator, “that is to say, our dear Grand Patriarch spends three centuries in Heaven to do what the system needs him to do, while three days would have elapsed in your world. No disturbance is allowed during this period, so as to give our Grand Patriarch the maximum amount of time possible for him to carry out his Heavenly royal duties, as dictated by the system.”

“Fuck the system!” Wei Ying had yelled to no one in particular, and promptly covered his mouth. It’s always a big no-no to curse the gods and the way they do things, after all. Still, three torturous days is an awfully long time to spend, alone, inside a cramped hole in the wall of the mountains during bone-cold winter. Fortunately, Wei didi promised and is committed to keep his stranded elder sibling well-fed during the ordeal, and the little boy said that his kitchen is open twenty-four-seven, offering cuisines from different worlds and universes and spans across from prehistoric to 91st century timelines (in the didi’s books, time travel is permitted because the little boy still doesn’t really grasp the consequences of time paradoxes and messing up chronological events).

In the end, Wei Ying could only grumble about his fate, alone in his cave.

The Wei siblings agreed to take a detour in following the journey to their Great Fathers' ancestral homes, and instead, focus on the rising threats from the Far Far West - including the Tians - and from the Imperial forces from the North. Huang Village, Yiling and the 'Mounds will serve as triumvirate frontier outposts for such exploratory military campaigns.

Later that afternoon, Ernie, whose jet-black eyes were still puffy from crying non-stop, appeared briefly on screen to say that he had decided to take a short trip to Chang'an and that he will take little Ni-er with him - no arguments. At all.

And walked off.

Without saying good-bye to his mother who is left pitifully alone and without family.

(Such displays of rebellion and un-filial piety-ness easily riles up the mother.)

"Don't mind him, he's just being bratty after the fallout between the two of you. He'll come around, I'm sure," the da ge consoles a seething Wei Ying. "He probably wants to salvage whatever pride he has left and do something heroic in the capital city. We'll watch over them so that he doesn't burn the world, and Ni-er doesn't accidentally eat up the whole city," the er ge adds, and shrugs. All Wei siblings understood this part of Ernie's character well, since the half of that errant son is made up of (a derivative of) Wei Ying, after all.

Wei Ying felt he had no choice but to accept the way things were. Perhaps, he thought to himself, he should make good use of the following three, arduously long, lonely days cooped up inside a cave as an extravagant meditation retreat of sorts. He could practice his cultivation and level-up - something which he sorely needs and should have done earlier - so that he could hurry up and be able to travel to Heaven unhindered, where the husband now lives as a part-time resident.

It's close to five in the evening, and the world outside has slipped into darkness after sunset and heavy cloud cover in the mountains. The holo-phone suddenly vibrates and bleats out a familiar tune - a song named after their love. Only audio was available; the caller seemed to have disabled video.

Wei Ying had completed a set of beginner's yoga poses, and was about to start on a qigong exercise - he's determined to practice a variety of easy cultivation techniques to keep life interesting in the little cave. Amber flames crackle lazily in the fire pit, casting long shadows on the occupant and the meagre belongings on the ground. The air is dry, but at least warm and cozy.

He taps on a phone-like icon on the holo-phone, and is relieved to finally, finally hear a familiar deep and soothing voice.

“Wei Ying?”

Notes for the Chapter:

Life's a little tough these days, now that I'm living in a somewhat lockdown situation due to the pandemic. It's not easy to write happy sexy things when there's lots of negativity and anxiety around :-(For the record, at least I still have a job, food on the table, and my family and loved ones are fine (fingers crossed!).

I'll still try to move this story along. I apologize for not having sexy scenes this time, since the mood isn't quite there, so I thought of penning down a few more paragraphs of world-building and add a sprinkle of mystery and thriller elements instead. It would help to mould and shape the story for the next few chapters, I hope.

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 82

“You rotten husband (臭男人)... you’re not dead yet? (你还没死啊?)”

Mn. I’m alright. The palace servants are baking a new body for me in the kitchen.

“Huuuh. Tell them to add stronger stuff in there. More flour, oil and sugar. Less salt.”

(Lan Zhan doesn’t know, but Wei Ying is picking on his nose during the conversation. There’s some residual dust in the air from the latter’s cave-renovation works, after all.)

Mn. The strongest, the servants said. Is there a reason for the special recipe?

“Silly boy. The flour’s to strengthen your muscles so that you’ll always keep our family safe.

The oil’s to make you fat enough for a comfy cuddle.

The sugar’s to make sure your mouth will always say sweet words to me.

And less salt means you'll shed less tears over your mistakes, repent faster, and return to my arms by the time you're done being the Jade Emperor."

(chuckles)

"Aaah, lao gong , you're laughing! I'm serious! Ha ha ha... so, anyway, why call now? I thought my siblings hung a huge 'Do Not Disturb' sign on your doors while you serve your house arrest for the next three days."

I... wanted to call before you go to bed, but it's difficult to guess the time because of the... the... time effects. Also, right now I have a rare break. I'm at my office desk, filling out appointment letters for new gods, so I can easily write the names on the scrolls without having to think too much. It's fine to talk, though I cannot look away from the scripts, because the names must be written correctly. Sorry.

"Ah, Lan Zhan, you don't need to apologize. I'm more than happy to hear your voice, and I can imagine your face while we talk on the holo-phone. I don't really understand the whole situation, other than the fact that I'm stuck here in a small cave and I'll wait for your return before resuming our journey to the Lotus Pier. What time... no... how long has it been? My siblings told me a day on earth is a hundred years in the Heavens while you're up there fixing the Realms of the Gods."

Mmm... it's been... I think, twenty five years. In the Heavens.

“...”

Wei Ying? Wei Ying, please don't cry.

(ugly sobbing and wails)

Wei Ying, I have fought hard to survive sixteen years without a trace of you. I'm still doing well at twenty five, even three hundred, as long as I know that you're waiting for my return. I'm stronger than you think. Please, don't cry.

(Lan Zhan doesn't understand that what he's just said made Wei Ying a whole lot more miserable, and the phonecall becomes inundated with sniffing, bawling and pitiful hiccups. He lets the wife cry it out; he's learnt long ago that Wei Ying needs a good cry once in a while to weather the ups and downs of rollercoasting emotions.)

Wei Ying, I missed you so much, but knowing that you're alive - it gives me strength and determination to see this through. I have made sure that this kind of separation will never happen to us again. I have made changes to protect your happiness and smile.

(That piqued the young man's interest, enough to give pause to his non-stop stream of distressing cries.)

“... (sniffle, sniffle)... such as...?”

Such as... I've filled out the vacancies for the most urgent and important godly positions. I'm letting you know that I can write my name very, very well now. Even with my eyes closed. Later, I will send you a photo of the new organization chart of the Realms of the Gods - it is full of your husband's names.

(Wei Ying actually snorted amid his sobs. “You self-serving cheat!” the young man murmurs inside his heart.)

All my clones will make sure to watch over you all the time. You'll never be alone anymore.

“... that makes you and every other Lan Wang Ji in the skies the worst kind of peeping tom perverts ever...”

Mn. In addition, I've finally signed into ErNet using my old LanWeb account. Do not worry, I've gotten over my porn-watching habits. I'm staying celibate although your clones and progeny are everywhere in this realm. I've sworn myself to be strictly monogamous this time. You can always log into ErNet and watch my live feed.

“... ah, Lan Zhan, that's... that's... are you sure...?”

Mmm. I'm actively practising my cultivation at least three times a day without fail. By the end of the three centuries-- no, three days on earth, I will be a true Immortal worthy of the Jade Emperor's crown, the Vase of Everflowing Eternal Compassion of the new God of Mercy, and the Straw Broom of Enlightenment And Infinite Samsara Cycles of the new Lord Buddha. I will be so much stronger, and will be able to protect you.

“(pfft!) Really? You’re taking up the roles of the Jade Emperor, the Goddess-- no,-- God of Mercy, and Lord Buddha?”

It is programmed into the system. It's a three-in-one package I wouldn't be able to refuse as long as I'm employed here.

(At this point, Wei Ying laughs uncontrollably and wipes away tears not of sadness anymore. Lan Zhan is truly making snide business jokes.)

I get paid too. Enough gold ingots to compensate for our troubles. Think of it as a short-stint overtime job for me. I'm trying my best to earn more for our family.

(Wei Ying rolls with laughter at the thinly-veiled sarcasm, and slams his face to the wall of his tiny shelter.)

Far, far away in a distant galaxy, the well-known awesome Wei da ge observes the casual chit-chat between the two from the deck of his continent-wide UFO mothership, aptly named “Starship Wuji”, orbiting the 888-floor Wangxian Headquarters tower sprawling on a gas giant’s planetary surface. He's seen it all before - the bittersweet love story between a god and a mortal, not necessarily doomed like the ones in the fairy tales or the pre-21st century legend known as Romeo and Juliet; he'd make sure to alter everyone's fates so that the ballad song of Wangxian will continue to play for more than three centuries, three millenia, even three universal reincarnations and beyond - as long as Everything is under his watch.

The da ge munches on a really good piece of perfectly stewed lotus root from a bowl of their family classic - the lotus root pork rib soup - and he looks up to the infinite dark interstellar space dotted with galaxy clusters, nebula clouds and spinning pulsars beyond his ship. Trails of cargo ships and trading vessels form a vast network of supply lines around the tower and his own empire, protected by squadrons of scouts and destroyer-class spacecrafts that self-assemble from his astro-factories.

Nothing's going to go wrong this time, the da ge tells himself, "Definitely not on my watch."

.

Wei Ying felt so much better after reconnecting with the husband via phone. With the kids finally leaving the nest and on their way to Chang'an (their first independent trip to the city!), Wei Ying is assured that he can fully depend on Lan Zhan when the latter promises never to leave his side even during times of crisis - that is to say, Lan Zhan should focus one hundred percent on Wei Ying, now that their close-knit family has shrunk down to two.

They talked a little about what happened earlier the day. In hindsight, Lan Zhan shouldn't have left Wei Ying hanging on the tree and tried to fend off the enemies on his own during the attack in the cliffs like Ernie. Lan Zhan, the wife reasoned, is not as skilled nor inhumanly enchanted like Ernie, and should have taken more defensive, even evasive maneuvers, rather than charging blindly into the jaws of hungry abnormal wolves. The husband received a gentle lashing from the wife for that mistake - Wei Ying managed to reach through the holo-phone, grasp around empty air to find the husband's ear, and gave it a good twist; Lan Zhan nnnh'd audibly and apologized profusely until Wei Ying relented, and forgave the man-turned-Jade Emperor. Funny pictures of a regal-looking Lan Zhan, his face twisted in pain, dressed in the Jade Emperor's majestic clothes and luxurious robes, with a hand poking out from a portal of sorts and pulling on his earlobe - circulated like viral news on ErNet, garnering infinite number of likes from WeiChat and LanWeb forum users and other social media platforms. Wei Ying made sure to save those pictures into his family's cloud drive, before diligently continuing his cultivation practices - because Wei didi had pre-ordered a few boxes of steaming hot pizzas to be delivered by teleportation by dinnertime.

Wei Ying continued to keep in touch with his husband by leaving the holo-phone switched on. Surprisingly, when pressed for time, Lan Zhan is able to take brilliant steps to hasten his return - he appointed the best Lan Wang Ji's in the known multiverses to take up key roles and tasks, and the multiplier effect is mind-bogglingly amazing. In a way, he applied his knowledge in running the former Wangxian Co. Ltd. company to efficiently govern the Realms of the Gods, except that he has the absolute say in how things should run although the Grand Wangxian Council plays an important advisory role as well.

With Lan Wang Ji's running the show in the Realms of the Gods, the Grand Patriarch himself has increasingly more time in his hands as the hours pass. Wei-kin and master/beast-kin begin to take their roles as assistants, officials and servants for the newly minted gods. Delegation is key, Lan Zhan said, and Wei Ying only nodded as the latter mmmh's in delight while relishing the decadent taste of decades-old musky sexy flavours that refuse to yield to the latter's expert ministrations.

Wei Ying had naughtily made quick patches to the holo-phone's root programming after dinner - because he has too much time to dawdle around, and has regressed to his old ways of tinkering with stuff rather than to studiously meditate or cultivate - which ensured that Lan Zhan's loincloth-swaddled penis somehow peeped through the holo-phone's screen like an enlarged, engorged fleshy dildo of sorts. It's a truly depraved use of the phone's teleportation or portal-opening abilities, to force Lan Zhan's genitals through an inter-realm hole located right inside his underwear.

The young man licks his lips when a rather plump but sleepy-looking soft cock and loose balls dangle from the holo-phone's surface like the base of a dildo. Wei Ying thought it smelled a little - he didn't know how often Lan Zhan washed while he is in Heaven, and what more, a tremendously busy Jade Emperor too - so he took out a toiletry bag salvaged from the UFO back home (his Bag of Holding contains tons of stuff), picked out a bottle of shower foam and a heated pot of water on the fire pit, and began to lovingly wash the neglected but stiffening penis that's been trapped inside its loincloth for too long.

Simultaneously, the holo-phone projects the Eight 'O Clock Primetime News live-streamed from ErNet, and Wei Ying mischievously watches how Lan Zhan reacts on screen - the Jade Emperor is giving a speech on a grand podium to the new godly appointees, and his face transforms wildly from a look of shock, then discomfort, and soon, his cheeks begin to flush and beads of sweat form on his forehead.

Wei Ying pulls the foreskin to the back until the glans are fully exposed, and rubs soap over the cockslit - all traces of sweat, smegma and dried pee needed to be cleansed. He strokes the cock generously until the soap foams up and he doesn't forget to knead each ball, stretching the scrotum and making sure fingertips dance on every inch of ballsac skin and hair. By the time he rinses off the suds with water, the penis had hardened impressively into an over-six inch long pole, and swollen tightened balls lock and load up at its base in readiness to fire off the first salvo. Poor Lan Zhan - the Emperor himself - has a hard time reading his script and completing his speech, as his face turns tomato red, and he squirms, bends and bows in front of the podium like a man dying of heart attack, and soon, even the paper script in his hands tears into two when his hands balled into fists.

When loyal palace servants cart off the heaving and jerking Emperor off stage - the speech is fortunately completed and all gods receive their ordained powers - Wei Ying proceeds to mimic his san ge to do what he is truly known for, and unleashes his mighty oral sex skills upon the helpless vulnerable organ; he simply stuck the phone to a wall at eye level, and starts deep-throating the twitching penis like a milking machine until he tastes copious amounts of pre-cum, and vibrates his fingertips, then lightly rakes fingernails along the trembling twin testicles bouncing in their sacs.

The holo-phone projects reruns of The Simpsons from the 21st century, but the audio is disrupted with buzzes and crackles and...

... W-Wei... Ying?! AAAHHhhnnn...

(the cock promptly twitches powerfully, and one-tuos; Wei Ying savours the familiarly rich taste of Lan Zhan.)

Wei Ying couldn't talk with a mouth full of cock, so he telepathically communicates with the (pleasantly) shocked husband.

“Where are you? I lost sight of you after your speech on live television, lao gong .”

In... In the royal bedroom... HHHHnnnnnggghhh... my servants decided to let me rest here alone... uhn, uhn, uhn...

(the cock jerks deeper into the throat; Lan Zhan is thrusting his hips into empty air to fuck whatever is giving such a fantastic blowjob.)

“I'm not as heartless as to let you suffer three centuries of celibacy just because you're trying to do a good job for us. So let me help you out, okay? And for goodness sake, stop moaning like a beast in heat and let it go!”

Another dollop of seed escapes with a one-two twitch, and oozes out in quick rapid excited bubbly spurts. Wei Ying happily laps it up. Mmm, delish. He continues to stroke the length until the whole meaty stick turns into a shade of throbbing, angry dark red.

I'm... I'm trying to hold back. I can't afford... unnngh... to lose my cultivated qi so quickly... haaaah...

Wei Ying makes sure to pleasure the penis and starts rubbing the cockhead against his nipples, his torso, gently fuck his belly button, then onward through his hairy treasure trail, and down, sexily down, down, all the way to his cock, where he performs the age-old delectable act of frottage. He imagines the husband deflating like an over-expanded balloon with each tantalizing and incredibly exciting hnngh-inducing rub, because the happy turgid penis started shooting short bursts of one-twos in quick succession due to the built-up molten liquid pressure.

“Prove to me you can keep cultivating your qi , my hot-blooded lao gong . Surely you know that by edging, I can help supercharge your cultivation tenfold. Thank me later!” the younger man grins devilishly.

Wei Ying brutally rubs the penis against his and starts narrating his brand of dirty talk over the phone’s audio line, including tasty descriptions of deflowering, being raped and inseminated against his will. To make things better, he uses magic to summon disembodied floating penises out from thin air - like little meaty dildos - of different sizes. Wei Ying knows that Lan Zhan has a penchant for younger boys and men, so he commands several smooth young dicks with balls to crawl, wiggle, undulate and smear their juices all over the wildly twitching, and very, very excited leaky member. Lan Zhan’s voice descends into chaotic groans and breedworthy grunts - the husband’s hips pistons at high speeds against slithering boy-penises and between plump twin quail egg-sized balls, causing the him to fuck between those sweet budding testicles at a rushed, timeless rhythm of trying to penetrate virile young genitals and desperately lusting to spill hot molten seed over them - the biggest cock eventually succumbs to a predictable rhythm of one-twos every few minutes because it couldn’t hold back the delicious penile contractions that kept coursing through muscles, flesh and veins, sending surplus overheated, overexcited semen spattering out from the swollen prostate and urethra. Lan Zhan achieves a state of constant ejaculations without orgasms, in some ways - Wei Ying catches glimpses of snapshots taken by palace servants, and marvels at three halos above strawberry-red Lan Zhan’s head as he rocks and rolls around his king-sized bed, chewing on bedsheets and pillows with eyes rolled back and shivering uncontrollably, fucking the satin-covered mattress until indentations appear, while howling like a savage beast in dire need of sexual release.

After a while, Wei Ying gently guides the gently erupting cockhead to his rosebud, and the moment it barely peeks through the entrance, Wei Ying moans inappropriately, “Ah, ah, lao gong , you’re making lots of babies inside me! I’m becoming pregnant from your hot meatstick!” and other similarly distasteful descriptions. Lan Zhan doesn’t immediately implode into multiple orgasms - he’s holding out well as promised, and Wei Ying could feel through skin-to-skin contact the husband’s qi levels shoot through the roof like a truly admirable fountaining ejaculation. It didn’t bother him though, and he takes pride of his wifely duty and proceeds to fuck himself on the husband’s meatstick on the phone. Each time the real-life dildo (of sorts) surges forward and plunders his greatest depths, Wei Ying clenches his inner muscles rhythmically and works hard to make every moment enjoyable for the husband. When the dildo (of sorts) pulls out, little penises take their turns to swarm over it and Wei Ying delights at the sight of droplets of cum spewing into the air due to the extremely orgasmic sensations experienced by the defenceless husband’s cock.

Fortunately for the Heavens, the new, inexperienced Jade Emperor managed to delegate his daily tasks to the most trusted Lan Wang Jis in existence, so he ends up spending decades - merely hours in Mortal Realm time - having a twisted form of torturous edging-type phone sex with the wife and the many summoned baby Wei Yings penises that continue to please the husband to the best of efforts.

All in a good day’s work, Wei Ying thought, and the young man knows he will be well-rewarded with nearly three centuries’ worth of the husband’s fruits of labour when the latter returns - and finally gets to shoot his load and orgasm inside the wife - to where everything truly belongs.

.

On the second day of living as a shut-in inside his temporary abode, he gets fed by nutritious food deliveries from his siblings, manages a bit of exercise and cultivation, and even worked to expand his living space while dabbling with new magics to fend off boredom - with Lan Zhan's bodiless penis and balls still (forcibly) drilling inside his well-lubed and now semen-coated asshole. In theory, Lan Zhan would have done more than a century's worth of everyday and Wei Ying is more than satisfied as the lifelong partner, but Wei Ying is greedy for more; he doesn't let go of the ensnared crying penis and continues to weave spells around it, causing Invisible limbs to purposefully pump Lan Zhan's seed-bloated genitals through into Wei Ying's love tunnel (and not to forget, the baby Wei Ying-penises continue swirl around and give light wiggly kisses to the husband's too).

Wei Ying wanted to talk to his siblings, so he casted some unidentifiable magic to create a few more 51st-century holo-phones; one strictly for calling out, and the rest are used for long-distance sex with the husband. He particularly liked his latest handiwork - two phones, one for each of the husband's nipples. It looked rather silly, so to say, for a patch of breast to appear on the surface of the phone's screen with a brown-pink nub in the middle. Wei Ying worked industriously hard to pleasure these sensitive areas; he summoned Invisible Hands, Fingers, Lips and Tongues to play with the latest available body parts. They pinch, twist, knead, massage, licked and sucked the nubs until they puff up beautifully like the promised body-gifting biscuits being baked inside Heaven's kitchens (apparently it takes three centuries to bake the perfect biscuit body, the kitchen's masterchef said). Wei Ying had to mute the audio from Lan Zhan because it was becoming rather irritating to listen to incoherent sentences interspersed with breathy moans - Lan Zhan still had to work although he had delegated some, and he's becoming better at being able to focus on the task at hand while being pleased endlessly in his loins and other erogenous zones. The number of halos on the new Jade Emperor's head had grown to five, according to reputable sources in ErNet.

Wei Ying learns from his siblings that Ernie had recklessly (questionable - because it sounds intentional rather than done blindly out of spite) spread special radioactive-amalgamated bioparticles (viruses, really) in his journey to the North, towards Chang'an. The snowstorms tearing through the Middle Kingdom helped to spread specks of Ernie's body all over the land, and they replicated exponentially to actively seek out living hosts to hide in (infect, really). The san ge postulates based on mathematical models that it will take less than a week to spread across the Middle Kingdom, another week for the whole continent, and before the month is up, Ernie's particles would have covered the entire Mortal Realm (thus, a pandemic, really).

"It's nothing to worry about, though," the eighteen year-old er ge quips over the video call, "as they're as harmless as dust from the ground or soot from burnt-out fires. As soon the particles inhabit a living host - a human, an animal, even the plants - there may be a brief episode of allergy-like reactions - such as rashes, coughs and sneezes - and nothing more. I know how Ernie's kin works, since I was one of their first victims... he probably wants to use the particles to spy on the world, and when the need arises, the particles can evolve and take over the hosts, therefore controlling their minds and bodies just like what happened in our old Kingdom. You know... like Ernie's first invasion where he turned all clones of our Grand Patriarch into cold black slugs?"

Wei Ying viscerally shudders at the recent memory, and promptly receives a series of quivering energetic discharges inside his stretched rear. The husband has been able to hold back his one-twos, but after a long while, like a bottled up overheated kettle, nature takes over and he instinctively needs to release a fair bit of built-up seed and lust to prevent an explosion of enormous magnitudes. "How about Ni-er?" Wei Ying asked, trying to distract himself with a lighter topic. He grabs a piece of tissue to wipe the excess viscous frothy liquid drooling out from his buttole.

Wei didi squeaks that unlike the drama queen, troublesome black tentacle, Ni-er has been a darling little angel - she hasn't done anything other than to curl up inside Ernie's backpack, and once in a while, her furred tapered head peeks out to marvel at a brave new world that she is travelling in from her brother's cloth bag - aerial shots taken at those utterly adorable moments have been reposted countless times in ErNet and made Ni-er an overnight sensation, a celebrity among the Kingdom's subjects. "I have my scanners aimed at Ernie's underground kingdom, gege , and he's not really equipped with enough baby food for Ni-er. My delivery staff has been dropping off supplies of pureed meats and vegetables, teething biscuits and other healthy options for a growing toothless toddler, and even packs of washcloths, baby shampoos, lotions and nappies. He shyly and hesitantly thanked my staff, so I know Ernie still needs us."

"Unfortunately that stubborn cold black thing still wants to carry out his mission alone - whatever that may be, because I'm not able to read his mind after he raised his powerful anti-psychic barriers. I even offered to tag along to care for Ni-er and give backrubs that could help ease any colicky pains, but Ernie refused. Oh well...," the da ge shrugs. "In the meantime, our forces are making inroads towards the Far, Far West and have encountered the first waves of its barbaric denizens. There are Tian family members among them and guess what - they have clones too!" the burly Wei sibling exclaims. When Wei Ying learns that his siblings had a tough fight with an infantry squad led by two Tian da jie s, he whispers towards his rutting bottom, "Lan Zhan! Did you hear that? Your shi jie could still be alive, somewhere in the land! Maybe we can learn about what happened to your ancestral home and Xi Chen da ge !"

Lan Zhan doesn't respond audibly - because he's still on mute and gurgling helplessly from an endless streak of cum-dripping mini-orgasms (because his semen tank is technically full and at the point of bursting) - however his cock tightens up, and Wei Ying knows that the husband has properly received this new and surprising piece of information. Wei Ying asks his siblings to be careful and try to interrogate any captured Tian family members to gather more intel on the ground, and the Wei brothers agree wholeheartedly.

.

In between bated breaths and sexy groans, Lan Zhan keeps in touch with Wei Ying through the phone and tells the latter about the wonderful things he's done for the Realms of the Gods. By the end of the second day, all realms have installed their own gods - including a new Dragon King of the Seas, Lord of Hell, God of Fortune, Earth God and so on - with wholly functional governance structures set up and fully staffed by their kins, who now hold proper designations and are officially in service of their respective realms' governments - using Wangxian Co. Ltd.'s best business practices as blueprints for a fresh new start.

An emissary has been sent to the Moon, the last bastion of the gods' realms which the new Jade Emperor has yet to explore. Lan Zhan hoped that the previous Goddess Chang'e still remained and survived the great fires; he would prefer to re-establish diplomatic relations than to antagonize further the wrathful goddess, now that the slate has been wiped clean between worlds and realms.

If... if there is no one... on the Moon... then... we'll fix it and start over... hahnnngghh... the people of the Middle Kingdom... rely on the Lunar cycles... for many important aspects of their lives... nnnghhh... such as determining time, calculating the seasons for planting and harvest... uuhnnh... for religious activities, and so on... hnghhk...

Wei Ying felt touched by Lan Zhan's sheer resolve in carrying out his divinely duties - not just to the gods, but also to men. Truly, Lan Zhan deserves the title of 'King of Gods and Men', as he has both in his heart and strives to protect and nurture them without bias or prejudice.

Wei Ying's hips pick up the pace and he rides the dildo (of sorts) faster than ever, emboldened by the husband's noble undertaking; his ass has been shaped to perfectly fit the phallus that has taken up semi-permanent residence in there, after more than a day's worth of non-stop sexual intercourse via long-distance means. Lan Zhan in Heaven croaks and hnnghs with unbridled joy as his loins enjoy deep raw fucks - Wei Ying's ass has been branded as his penis' second home, really -, while signing off a few more papers at his royal desk (and couldn't resist clawing the marble tabletop because the soul craves and is incredibly desperate to climax a million orgasms - but couldn't). His qi energies and cultivation levels have surpassed known mortal and immortal limits, thanks to Wei Ying's sensual, reproductive-driven help, and he is able to carry out legitimately godly acts including physically moulding landscapes with his bare hands, eradicating monstrous lifeforms with a single punch, and warp space, time and Fate with a twirl of fingers.

Wei Ying sends silent prayers to the stars above the wind-swept mountain range that his - their - derailed mission would resume soon and bear fruit, so that everything - the expedition to the treacherous Far, Far West, the one-man (and his sister) crusade against the evil capital of the nation, the race against time to save Lotus Pier, and the mystery of what has befallen upon Gusu - so that everything falls into place like putting together the biggest jigsaw puzzle ever.

.

By early afternoon of Day Five, Wei Ying itches to walk out of his shelter to embrace sunlight and fresh air. With the three-day excursion coming to a fruitful end, he shoos away the baby Wei Ying-penises (actually, by casting Dispel Magic), and wholly indulges himself with Lan Zhan's dying-reincarnating juicy cock while he still can. Wei Ying had thrown away his daily routines of cultivation exercise, reading magazines delivered by the siblings and watching reruns of old 21st-century American sitcoms on the phone, and instead, performed his whole repertoire of sexual games with his new favourite living toy. The cockslit flared into swollen lips and continuously drips cum between spews of pungent pee (squirting is the norm, now), and that special spot beneath the cockhead has been rubbed pleasantly raw that the sparking bundle of fragile but ultra-sensitive nerves beneath the skin that kept electrocuting the owner no longer perturbs him - there are still hnnnghs periodically, though. Interestingly, the cocklength grew more muscle fibres from the three-day workout (actually, three centuries'), and Wei Ying notices more squiggly wiry hair growing out from the pubes and scrotal area (a surge in testosterone, perhaps?) - he inadvertently pulls out some when giving intoxicating blowjobs, and picks them off his teeth and tongue in the aftermath. "Bleargh," Wei Ying gasps at decides that a shave on the husband's pelvic area is in order, as soon as there is a chance.

Lan Zhan handed in his final paperwork and made his last round around the Heavens, giving final instructions to his Kingdom's citizens on the do's and don'ts according to their family's over-4000 rules - at the same time, he sports seven halos on his head, signifying that he's beyond Buddhahood; even as Wei Ying assaults his penis with everything possible and plays with his taut seed-filled balls through the portal inside his loincloth, Lan Zhan remains impressively unfazed in the eyes of his subjects. He no longer grovels, cries or devolves into an insatiable horny beast like the first day - no, indeed - by the third day - actually, three centuries later - he stands majestically tall, with divinely pride in his eyes and barks out orders with a calm, low, steady kingly voice.

An alarm bell rings on the phone, signifying that the husband has left the Imperial Palace - the young man woots in joy and does a little victory jig. He quickly packed everything up, put his phone to sleep mode (Lan Zhan actually sobs at the sudden loss of sensation on his penis - he was getting too comfortable with Wei Ying remotely pleasuring his cock), and stuffed his belongings into his Bag of Holding and satchel. He wasn't sure if the husband needed his bathrobe - it stinks a little with three days' worth of ripe sweat and sex, but he takes it out anyway since the bathrobe isn't his (despite the enduring promise that whatever Lan Zhan owns belongs to the wife).

“Aaah, the outer robe is in tatters, and doesn't provide much warmth,” Wei Ying complains to no one in particular, chill and misery setting in when he realizes that he'll miss the comfortable and convenient lifestyle of his tiny cave, with nary a worry about the world. It's time to wake up to reality, he tells his heart, and steels himself to welcome the husband's much-awaited return to the Mortal Realm.

.

Lan Zhan's arrival isn't accompanied with roaring applause, blaring trumpets and grand temple bells as one may have believed. He merely warped into the cave with a whispery fwip!, dressed in his usual Gusu Lan garb of white tunics and robes. He looked absolutely normal - not stunning, not glowy, not angelic, not Jade Emperor-ish - just like the plain old human husband that Wei Ying remembers from before.

Wei Ying throws himself into Lan Zhan's arms and shrieks his name again and again - how he'd miss the strong embrace, the love-filled kisses, the smell of a man who is and will always be by his side, the determined hand that intentionally snakes down to untie the younger man's waistband and peel off his pants--

"Unnh... Lan Zhan, you horny husband! I'm trying to welcome you back as a proper spouse, and all you think of is... t-this? How dare you... unnnh... aaah..." Wei Ying shouts, moans and crumbles under Lan Zhan's newfound ultra-experienced sexual touch. Magic surges from the husband's fingertips and supercharges Wei Ying's desires, and the latter collapses into lusty growls, instantly wetting his pants with sexual juices and pre-cum, and succubic sexy writhing by rubbing himself against the husband like an animal in heat. Wei Ying loses control of his body, and his demonic horns, fangs and tail sprout out like weeds in spring.

"Mn. I am back. Please, Wei Ying, let me taste you once. I've eaten my biscuit and regained my body along with the want for pleasures of the flesh. I've missed you so, so much in the last few centuries," Lan Zhan breathes, nearly anguishly, into their kisses, and he runs his hands all over the younger man's sides, hips and buttocks, nudging the latter to undress and yield to the extremely reasonable request. The husband's erection swells impressively within seconds, poking out of the pants like an undefeatable flag pole. Wei Ying relents - he's unable to think rationally, let alone humanly, and pulls both of them to the ground with his legs spread and the husband's crotch in between, and grinds his exposed ass-cheeks along the length of the husband's wanting, leaking, excitedly twitching, over-six inch long weapon of mass reproductive terror - and surrenders to the sweet, sweet lust of mating and breeding with his One And Only.

Wei Ying never knew that a man could orgasm for a full hour in a single climax, and for many, many climaxes - until that day.

(Unknown to Lan Zhan, the wife takes a few private selfies of themselves holed up in a comfortably tight cavernous space - with the husband's ugly mugshots of eyes half closed, with his mouth half-yawning, half-orgasming, half-snarling, half-giggling, and plenty of gooey forthy milky white stuff between their nether regions - and uploads them to the family's cloud drive. He names the folder "A home just for the two of us".)

(Wei Ying also scores his third deflowering of Lan Zhan. The husband, in his newly oven-baked body, loses his virginity for the third time to the wife, in the most pleasurable and enjoyable ways possible. Lan Zhan makes a mental note to properly plan his future resurrections, so that it will always start out with a spectacular orgasmic bang.)

.

Lan Zhan's brand new status as man-turned-god-descended-back-to-earth is the perfect prevailing choice for survival during the harsh winter with the added threat of Corrupted creatures prowling the mountains. Wei Ying looks at the husband with a whole new level of respect, as the latter grasps his wrist and leads them out of the cave and into the snow-swept landscape. Wei Ying's outer robe has been magically fixed by Lan Zhan's sewing magic and he's nicely bundled-up in thick warm garment layers of divine origins; Lan Zhan, on the other hand, need not wear anything other than his usual Gusu Lan robes.

More wolves, bears and foxes ambush them along the path leading out of the steep glacial hills, and they come in large swarms of more than fifty attackers each. Dead, half-eaten bodies, including known master cultivators, lay strewn on the sides of the trail, as testament to the vicious predators' enhanced ability to overpower their human prey. It didn't worry the couple though, now that Lan Zhan can simply swing a sheathed Bichen in a sweeping motion, and all enemies around them immediately disintegrate into black powder, blown uselessly into the churning wintry gusts (which reminded Wei Ying of a fictional superpower he saw while watching a 21st-century movie titled 'Avengers').

In one of several instances, they spied on Tian clones from far distances, and decided to avoid rather than to confront those dastardly arch nemeses. "I see Tian Fifth, Sixth and Seventh sisters leading an army of at least a hundred warriors, and they're all fully equipped with weapons. I mean, look at those inch-thick plate armors, nasty spears and poisoned crossbows!" Wei Ying exclaims at an image projected from his Eye spell.

"Mn. They're trying to block all exits from the province. I made sure there were no survivors in the previous battles with the animals, but I cannot confirm if someone, or something, had alerted them of our presence," Lan Zhan gazes thoughtfully at the image, and his eyebrows scrunched at the sight of skimpily dressed preteen girls shouting orders in garbled foreign language and pointing rudely at mountaintops.

Far away on a cliff edge, the army of human and non-human figures assemble in a rather orderly manner, like ants crowding around their queens. Wei Ying swipes a forefinger, and the image focuses away from the Tian sisters towards the rest of the burgeoning bunch of growling, groaning monstrous humanoids behind the females. It seems that even as the sisters plot their next moves - probably involving mountain peaks of sorts - fierce corpses and other kinds of undead crawl their way to the cliff to join the army. It's a terrifying sight, indeed.

“Lan Zhan! Look at those fierce corpses forming the rank and file at the back of the troops. I'm starting to wonder if they're the same as the ones that were reported in the periodicals - you know, just like those that attacked Caiyi Town and everywhere else in the northern regions of the Middle Kingdom. They're everywhere, even as down south as the roads leading to the Long River, even in Yunnan! They're like a plague, a horrible pestilence, and spreading everywhere, if the maps from my san ge are to be believed,” Wei Ying curses under his breath, “I don't like how this is turning out, and I'm starting to worry about my ancestral home... we need to get rid of these monsters fast, but we cannot be too obvious! Aah...! Do something, Lan Zhan!” and lightly punches the husband's chest, upset at the worsening situation with their hands tied down.

Lan Zhan nods sagely and utters his trademark “Mn”, with a little more force than usual.

The husband lifts a finger, and suddenly the world turns blinding white. Wei Ying squeaks with instinctive fear, squeezes his eyes shut and covers his ears automatically. A massive lightning lights up the heavens and strikes the cliff with a thunderous boom - the snowy clouds parted from the rippling shockwave and ripped a clear hole in the skies from explosion with the strength of hundreds of thermonuclear bombs - half of a mountain is vaporized within a split second, and crumbles into bottomless ravine beneath, sending any remaining, still-burning, screeching living members of the hundred-plus army to their deaths.

Unsurprisingly, a number of black shadow birds emerged from nearby forests and flew to safety - and Wei Ying instantly recognizes them as 'not theirs'. He cheers when Wei didi catches them on sight from his vigilant radars, and sends a squadron of A.S.S. birds hurtling down the smoking, burning skies, each savagely dive-bombing at every fleeing enemy, tearing and shredding the squawking crow-like creatures with such ferocity until only feathers are left floating for fleeting moments down to the aftermath of a burning, shattered hell on earth.

.

The victory was short-lived, when by Day Seven, the couple realized with great alarm, that all the villages they had passed by so far, have been destroyed, abandoned, and probably - in all likelihood - their residents have been turned into fierce corpses and other otherworldly creatures to serve the advancing Tian armies.

Wei Ying managed to salvage a few unbroken jars of Dashan's wines, and drank them as he surveyed the devastation in the villages. He needed the alcohol to steel his nerves when understanding dawns upon him after inspecting strange magical formations of Corruptive talismans, powerful cursed words written in dried human blood, and bloodied tools used to cut off limbs and gouge internal organs from dying, tortured prisoners.

There are no bodies left, but the signs left behind are clear - the monsters are systematically raiding the villages, first cordoning off homes and farmlands so that nobody could seek outside help (just like how they're doing the same to Qishan province), then rounding up helpless villagers to wide open spaces such as town squares, where they are tortured to death to maximize the suffering, pain, anger, frustration and vengeful feelings in each then-alive individual, before using Corruptive magic to transform them en masse into mindless undead servants and soldiers to serve the new masters.

Wei Ying explained to Lan Zhan by pointing out the talismans and how they paint a grisly picture of the sickening process; Wei Ying is a true master of the dark arts, and using his astute forensic skills and knowledge of the dying and dead, he can narrate a believable story just by looking at the magical tools and gadgets used, and the signs of struggles, bloody hand and footprints, blood puddles and rotting entrails on the ground.

Lan Zhan shakes his head, and disgust is evident on his face. Thunder roars above them and shakes the eerily silent village and its surrounding forests - there is fury boiling in the Heavens, especially in the heart of the disguised Jade Emperor.

“This... this is why the attacks from fierce corpses and other undead forces never slowed down since summer. Like a disease sweeping from the north, outlying villages are converted into factories that mass produce such monsters, and larger cities including the sects are turning a blind eye on them because they have their hands full in trying to quell scholar protests and general unrest within their walls. If nothing is done, at this rate the Tians will lead the dead to overwhelm the living before winter passes!” Wei Ying cries in distress, leaving the husband more and more in unease.

The news and discovery of evidence incriminating the Tians sends waves reverberating throughout ErNet. Someone posts an SOS signal via WeiChat to a now-missing, inactive account belonging to Ernie, pleading for him to return and find ways to counter the plague of the Tians with his virulent particles.

Wei da ge issues a Level 5 Code Red alert to all of the Kingdom's citizens, regardless of species and universe, to take up arms and be prepared for 'the fight of our lives to save Our Motherland'.

Notes for the Chapter:

Okay, that's all I have for this arc. See you in the next!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 83

“Ah... Lan Zhan, I think you’re starting to bald. You’re losing a bit of your hairline on the forehead,” Wei Ying murmurs, while combing the husband’s long lush hair after a nice soak in the hot springs.

Lan Zhan wavers a little in his lotus sitting position, his post-bath meditation is clearly disrupted by such a blasphemous notion. Wei Ying chuckles, and continues to brush the black hair, gently untangling any knots on the husband’s crowning glory after an exhausting day’s travel in cold, humid conditions. He also massages Lan Zhan’s neck and back, before moving to the front, effortlessly pushing aside long locks of hair, to pepper soft tender kisses on the said offending and questionably receding hairline.

Lan Zhan vaguely “Mn”s at Wei Ying’s loving grooming, and mutters something about stress. He wanted to elaborate further, however fingertips assault the sensitive scalp in deliriously relaxing circles, and the middle-aged man shivers with tingles running up and down his spine and delicate nerve-ends until he goosebumps all over.

“Aside from tossing enemies down the hills by raining lightning strikes and guided ballistic missiles, and paving a path through dense pine forests with your bare hands, I don’t really see anything else stressing you out, lao gong,” Wei Ying replies. Satisfied that he’s done a good job in loosely braiding Lan Zhan’s hair coupled with a head massage, Wei Ying taps the husband’s shoulders and the latter unwinds his legs to lie down facing upwards on the bed. Lan Zhan nnnghs as he stretches, pops a few joints, then tucks his hands beneath the fluffy pillow cradling his head.

A few days into their grand journey to the East, made eventful by revelations of the Far, Far West and news from the Imperial capital city of Chang'an to the north, the couple hits the jackpot to stumble upon an abandoned but minimally furnished cabin in the woods at the foot of the hills that lead out of Qishan province. They've had enough hardships camping under heavy snowfall and going for days without proper baths, hence the cabin right next to a bubbling hot spring is a godsend. Their luck is changing, though; there has been incremental improvements to the weather lately due to an unseasonably warm front sweeping across the forsaken plains in the central regions of the Middle Kingdom (Wei Ying sends silent words of gratitude and thanks to the night skies, and a particular star winks back at him - his siblings watch over them from afar and make sure to keep the couple as comfortable as possible.)

Wei Ying scoots towards the footboard of the bed and taps on one of Lan Zhan's shins. The husband automatically lifts both feet up and places them on Wei Ying's thigh. A wonderfully thrilling foot massage is in order, and the older man couldn't resist wiggling his toes in anticipation. He'd spent the better part of the day giving piggyback rides to Wei Ying, because the snow is soft and deep, and the shorter wifey has difficulties trudging through the squishy ice. It didn't matter for the husband though, since Lan Zhan easily blasts through frozen solid ground by playing a magical blue guqin string he'd summoned with his godly magic, and creates a clear path using wide arcs of destruction. Wei Ying could've walked behind the husband for many miles throughout the day, but he becomes a little spoiled, whiny and attention-demanding after seeing the latter's newfound divinely powers in action - and asks Lan Zhan for a ride, because he promises to reciprocate the deed later at night; a silent understanding passes between them that the "ride" that Wei Ying plans to pay back isn't just a simple piggyback - in which the husband immediately agrees to the deal without hesitation.

Wei Ying oils his fingers with a bottle of lotion stowed in his Bag of Holding, before starting with toe-curlingly delightful kneading on the soles of the husband's feet using hard knuckle presses. Lan Zhan hnnnghs audibly when the first of many pleasurable tension-unwinding waves blossom from his pampered feet and flare up across his lower limbs.

The younger man likes to spend time during peaceful nights in deep conversation with the husband; it's a little hard to talk during the day when he's either trying to shout above the din of fierce snowstorms or trying to catch his breath from struggling through cold, thin, nearly unbreathable air. He talks about what happened earlier the day, praises how Lan Zhan managed to keep both of them safe from harm and from marauding predators or Tian soldiers, even gives unsolicited opinions about what he thinks of Lan Zhan's recent experience in the Heavens versus what he remembers from the past timeline, including how the Realms of the Gods should be run, and therefore the after effects on the Mortal Realm (Lan Zhan quietly takes notes, but it's hard to concentrate when his aching foot arches are lovingly squeezed and rolled). Wei Ying is full of admiration of Lan Zhan's unwitting position as the new King of Gods and Men, and worships the husband generously in the hopes that he, a mere humble mortal who has only been resurrected once compared to the husband's vast experience of being revived twice, would receive godly favours and merits for treating Lan Zhan well.

Lan Zhan, on the other hand, doesn't speak much about what goes on in the Realm of the Gods although he is recognized as the Emperor. He lets his clones do what is needed to keep the entire Kingdom running efficiently, and he merely gets telepathic briefings, reports downloaded via ErNet, meeting summaries from the Grand Wangxian Council, or simply conducts spot checks whenever he has some time to spare - all seems to go well, so far. Therefore, all he has to do is to "Mn" vaguely in general, non-committal agreement to Wei Ying's wild but naive fantasies of being married to a great god (which isn't an ethical problem, since Lan Zhan can technically grant everything the younger man wishes, if he chooses to).

“Lan Zhan... I’m giving you a massage on your legs, and yet... there’s a tent in your pants,” Wei Ying accuses the husband, and lightly swats the tenderized and awfully relaxed, slightly swollen feet, before crawling up the shins and performing the same light swat on the offending hard-on trying to poke through the undergarments. Lan Zhan hnnnghs harder, a sheen of sweat on his body. He’s a little feverish, but that’s to be expected.

“ Lao gong , maybe you’re a little stressed from having wild game meat every night. We had grilled wild boar just now, and yesterday, we had wild deer stew. Look at you, you’re sweating already, so let me take off your clothes...” Wei Ying pretends to be a little concerned and starts wiping off the sweat with his cooler hands, but his toothy smile says otherwise. He thanked his lucky stars that he brought along his hunting net gifted by the hunter from Huang Village, and he had been able to catch large wild animals for food every day - the star above their cabin winks again, because those naughty Wei siblings have been secretly colluding with their brethren and planned the couple’s dinner menu in advance; the fully equipped cabin and the hot springs are by no means a lucky find either, and have been intentionally constructed and airlifted to the designated spot where the couple would walk by before sunset (it would be illogical for anyone to find an unoccupied wooden building filled with a modern 21st-century bedroom and kitchen in the middle of the woods in midwinter anyway - fortunately, Lan Zhan doesn’t question such a mind-boggling existence, because... well, just because of Wei Ying-ness, if nothing else).

Lan Zhan’s incredible sexual qi energy levels just became too hot for him to handle. Wei Ying licks his lips and undresses too, and he tells the AI programme manning the cabin to dim the lights and set the room’s temperature to “ambient”.

The couple enjoys a night of sensuous, fulfilling (and ass-filling) lovemaking to help Lan Zhan release the tension of wild boar-originated lust surging in the bloodstream. The helpless yet ecstatic husband is deliciously rubbed, milked and emptied to the last squirt - just as every single night since the trip to the East started as long as they are physically together - and Wei Ying ngghaahs involuntarily every time he is fucked, bred and speared until his vision is full of winking spinning stars, his back arches as he rides out his own climaxes, he cusses and talks so dirty about raging sperm cells and making fat, healthy babies inside voraciously tight male wombs that even Lan Zhan's well-adjusted ears turn six shades of embarrassed steaming reds. Wei Ying squeals each time he's pounded and slammed into, his insides are moulded to fit his husband's impossibly-hard and slightly curved shape to utter Perfection, and he feels scorching hot volleys of thick rich seed erupting deep, deep into his body's deepest secret chambers - the belly-warming sensation drives Wei Ying wilder with unbridled lust, and he responds by spreading his legs even wider apart, goading the older man to thrust deeper and empty out his stockpile of cum, then the younger man grinds his hips faster in all directions, and elicits more tasty growls and hnnghs from lovely, lovely multiple-orgasming Lan Zhan.

(It doesn't sound as depraved and animalistic as it should; since Lan Zhan's cultivation level has reached Infinity and he has unlimited amounts of qi energy surging inside his body - from his loins, really -, aided by his divinely status, he needs to frequently circulate the power and release the surplus - usually in the form of insatiable sexual acts. Wei Ying is more than happy to vacuum everything up especially using his demonic form, and ugly parasitic green condoms aren't really needed to keep the husband in tip-top running condition without going past the latter's breaking point.)

Lan Zhan would never know if he really loses hair from having too much testosterone flowing alongside his godly qi , or from the stress of having wild sex every night with the wife - he catches himself peering at his forehead every morning and cannot really see the difference. Wei Ying would deliberately skip into the mirror's view and laugh joyfully to ridicule the husband's unnecessary worry of receding hairlines or male pattern baldness - which only causes the older man to develop a debilitating complex, and exacerbates his worries and OCD-ness to keep checking his hair's length and thickness, to Wei Ying's naughty delight.

.

“Lan Zhan, Lan Zhan, we'll reach Lotus Pier after crossing the next mountain. I'm a little worried, though... the river that we've been following is bone dry and all I can see is the riverbed. Do you think the lake has disappeared? What should I tell my relatives and former disciple-brothers if they asked? How can I break the news about Ernie and Ni-er to them, or even about my siblings, clones and progeny... even the Great Fires and universal reincarnation? Oh no, I haven't even told Jiang Cheng about our marriage...!” Wei Ying starts scratching his head in frustration, as events from the past year and a half finally surfaced to memory and the younger man is at a total loss of how to explain what has happened in mere sentences of a casual conversation between reunited family and sect members.

The couple had never told the outside world about the fantastic things that happened since the ‘Mounds and beyond. Everything supernatural and unbelievable had been kept properly under wraps and damage-controlled so that nothing ever goes out from their own family circle - the Qishan Lan.

Lan Zhan, now the New Jade Emperor, seven-halo Lord Buddha and genderbent God of Mercy, merely “Hn”s an unclear guttural noise, twirls his hair out of (bad) habit and continues to walk beside the spouse. They had travelled through wet soggy forests and climbed down freezing muddy slopes in the past couple of days due to melting snow, thanks to the man-made slightly warmer weather, so whenever they find a dry spot, they would take the opportunity to rest and dry their clothes and shoes - at least in the lowlands, there aren't any snow storms or fierce winds. Lan Zhan rummages through his bathrobe hidden beneath the outer garments and he fishes out a comb.

“Lan Zhan ah Lan Zhan, stop doing that, you look good enough to meet the people of my old sect and if you keep brushing your hair, I'm afraid it will start falling off and you'll grow dandruff flakes too!” Wei Ying exclaims and guffaws with laughter - and gets the intended effect of forcing the older man to blush with embarrassment, causing him to quickly return the comb back into the pockets. Wei Ying feels a little guilty for spinning white lies that cause distress to the husband, and he inwardly promises himself to stop making fun of the man who's supposed to care for him for life.

“A-Ah... there's a dry rocky outcrop further ahead. Let's stop there and talk about how to approach Lotus Pier, alright? I'm really nervous and I don't know what to say!” Wei Ying distracts Lan Zhan with his logical request - also, because he really hoped that Lan Zhan would enlighten him with all the answers he needs to overcome the final hurdle of walking bravely into a lakeside town that had somewhat exiled him, and to say 'hello' to a foster younger brother who had rightly kicked him out of the Yunmeng Jiang sect.

Lan Zhan takes a deep breath to calm down all unnecessary thoughts and desires (for Perfection, for putting things To Where They Belong, for checking his hair and appearances one more time), and agrees with the spouse for a final break before reaching their first major destination.

“Wei Ying, be prepared for anything. If there is nothing else in mind to talk, or if you do not know what to say, then start with something recent that you have in common with the other side of the conversation,” Lan Zhan sagely advice surprised the younger man, as they reached a patch of ground covered with pebbles and some winter weeds by the dried-up riverbank.

Wei Ying rubs his reddened chilled nose tip a bit as he recalls fond memories of Jiang Cheng while exhaling puffs of cold clouds into the air. “Hmm... something recent in common? I can only think of my plum sauce, because it tastes like Yunmeng and everyone likes it,” the younger man replies wryly.

“Mn. That’s a good idea.”

.

After deftly dispatching a Tian scout cleverly disguised as a passing-by merchant near their resting - correction, picnic - spot, Wei Ying had an idea.

(The merchant made a fatal mistake of pushing a small cart with a few peasant-like assistants, hawking famous lotus seed buns ‘to welcome tired winter travellers by warming their hearts and bellies with Yunmeng’s specialty’. Wei Ying only needed to make a tiny gesture - a hook of a finger or scrunching up his eyebrows - and Lan Zhan literally leapt and flew ahead of the younger man, drew Bichen’s gloriously shining, sharpened edge, and sliced the food vendor cleanly into two. The dead man’s appearance degenerated into a female dressed in blood-splattered garb from the Far, Far West - she looked suspiciously close to Tian Fourth Sister -, before melting into a puddle of toxic black fumes. The buns in the cart turned out to be filled with bean paste laced with Corruption magic - upon breaking open the buns, they emit black smoke similar to Wei Ying's demonic aura -, and the couple could only guess what happened to innocent victims who bought and consumed the poisoned food.)

“Lan Zhan, we can disguise ourselves when we enter Lotus Pier. That way, we can safely make our way through without being detected by patrolling guards or wary villagers, and reach my brother without too much fuss. Of course, we wouldn't be as stupid as the Tians to try and pretend to sell things that aren't normally available during winter - such as lotus -, and lie glaringly in broad daylight - such as saying that Yunmeng is famous for lotus seed buns, because Yunmeng and spiciness cannot be separated... and that's coming from a purebred Yunmeng boy!” Wei Ying grins. He takes another bite of a mid-morning snack of ham sandwiches, orange marmalade cake, apple wedges and avocado smoothies that appeared inside his satchel earlier the day; his siblings have been punctual in restocking their food stores inside the couple's luggage throughout the trip - however, there is limited space so meat carcasses and poultry are conveniently excluded, thus Wei Ying gets to hunt for wild game every day.

Lan Zhan single handedly skewers a fierce corpse with Bichen and sends divinely Purity-class magic blazing through the blade, instantly vaporizing undead flesh in a blinding flash. Another assassin, this time an eight-foot golem made of stones from broken statues, roars and jumps out from some bushes behind; Lan Zhan merely draws a horizontal guqin line with his free hand and vigorously plucks the magical string. A loud twang! , and arching soundwaves pierce through its armour, resonate through growing cracks on its body, and the entire massive twisted pile of rock possessed by ghosts and dark puppetry magic crumbles into sizable chunks that sublimates into black wispy vapours like dry ice.

Wei Ying claps his hands with a half-chewed sandwich hanging from his mouth. The younger man has learnt, over the past couple of weeks, to let the husband do the dirty deeds - just because it's a wife's prerogative to be protected by the husband, and also because the Tians are sometimes above his league (to his utmost consternation). Lan Zhan's skill in cutting down supernatural enemies increased in leaps and bounds, and he knows to kill every individual with a single blow, lest the survivors call for back-up or worse--

-- the third and final assistant of the now-defunct lotus seed bun business splits himself into two - like breaking an egg -, and his skin peels off to reveal a nest of glistening black centipedes each as long as a man's arm. The creepy creatures chitter angrily and crawl out of their fleshy human suit, before launching themselves into the air at Lan Zhan, spewing torrents of toxic black acid to the entire battlefield. Lan Zhan parried and knocked some away with Bichen's scabbard, while Wei Ying yelps with panic and disgust, then quickly climbed up a tree with an armful of his morning snack; some of the acidic spit landed on the picnic straw mat and dissolved everything in sight.

“Ah... my smoothie!” Wei Ying cries with disappointment while sitting on the large branch. Leftover cakes, spilled avocado smoothies, and apples on the ground melt into the thick black smoking gunk that eventually left gaping holes on the rocky floor; the acid is incredibly strong, and no human can survive contact with that fetid stinking liquid - hence, the reason why Wei Ying considers certain members of the Tian army to be above his league, as long as he is a plain mortal being made of acid-prone flesh and bones.

Lan Zhan grunts when he stabs three such wriggly predators with a single thrust of his sword to make a centipede kebab - he missed their heads, causing more acidic and lethal toxic fluids to gush from the creatures' wounds; from each sizable pool of black blood on the ground, smaller invertebrates emerge and start to bite Lan Zhan's shoes - this is why Lan

Zhan really needed to slay them with a single blow, and not allow them to multiply further. Fortunately the husband is a divinely entity, so no bite, acid, toxins or anything Corrupted-related can harm him.

Lan Zhan takes on a martial-arts half-squat, legs-spread ready stance, inhales deeply and then “Hnnghs”s mightily with a powerful squeeze to his abdominal muscle - much like trying to tighten one’s six-pack abs or in Wei Ying’s analogy, ‘to take the biggest and baddest dump’ - and a ring of pure holy Heavenly Pure spiritual qi ripples and radiates from his body; his hair rises from the rising shockwaves, his gaze becomes steel-hard, his hands balled into fists, and all Corrupted existence within a one-kilometer radius is abruptly annihilated with a thunderous boom. The bodies of the creatures, their ripped limbs and internal organs, poisonous saliva and blood are gone without trace.

When the coast is clear and everything has calmed down - winter birdsongs fill the air once again - Wei Ying gingerly climbs down and offers the paltry amount of rescued food to Lan Zhan haphazardly packed in the younger man’s sleeves - the last piece of orange cake, two half-eaten sandwiches and browned apple slices. In return, the husband puts his hand into his bathrobe pocket and with some effort, he pulls out a pre-packaged Wangxian-branded Avocado Drink (With Added Sugar); despite wearing one of the most powerful garments in the known universe - the Heavenly Bathrobe - Lan Zhan hasn’t quite mastered its storage capabilities nor figured out how to find what he needs inside the multiverses that reside within the woolly fabric. (In fact, if Lan Zhan practised harder, he could instruct the bathrobe to manufacture or warp in anything he needs in nanoseconds, however he’s not as savvy as Wei Ying’s siblings to master such a logic-defying technological piece of equipment-cum-garment.)

“It’s not as good as a freshly-made smoothie,” the husband sheepishly adds, feeling guilty for not acting faster to save their picnic brunch.

Wei Ying tip-toes to give Lan Zhan a sweet, shy kiss on the husband's cheek. "Mmm.. it's alright. Thank you for saving me again, lao gong !" and takes the packaged artificially-sweetened beverage. He peels off a plastic straw stuck to the carton box, sticks it in, and takes a hearty sip with a cheerful grin.

The couple decided to take their discussion of what to wear when disguising as visitors to the Lotus Pier, elsewhere - the rocky outcrop had been severely damaged, particularly by the spilled acidic blood that seeped into the deeper layers of the hill face, and threatened to cause landslides at the slightest tremor. Lan Zhan is satisfied with a modest snack that Wei Ying saved for him, while Wei Ying at least gets his fruit drink.

"Ah, Lan Zhan... if I finish this pack of drink, then you wouldn't have any," Wei Ying complains to himself. The husband raises an eyebrow questioningly - he wouldn't mind not having anymore synthetic drinks to overload his glucose levels anyway. "... and that wouldn't be fair, because each of us should get one, and I lost the smoothies in the battle just now..." the younger man whines and looks at the husband with lost-puppy eyes.

"Wei Ying, it is alright. I do not need an avocado smoothie. Or any other fruit drinks," Lan Zhan assures the spouse. It's really nothing to argue about, for the husband who has just defeated a clone of a powerful Tian sister and three soldiers of different species.

Wei Ying suddenly stops in his tracks, sniffs and looks around, then unexpectedly grabbed Lan Zhan's wrist. He pulls the husband to the side of the path and they tumble into some bushes, away from bright daylight and into the shade of pine forests and undergrowth. Lan Zhan's eyes widened like saucers when he realized that Wei Ying had guided his fingers to the latter's bulging loincloth. "W.. Wei Ying?!" the husband gasps, trembling, feeling pulsing flesh beneath that thin layer of undergarment inside Wei Ying's pants.

"Mmm... lao gong , seeing you fight made my blood boil with excitement. Lan Zhan, Lan Zhan, do you want to taste my smoothie? I want to make some for you, at least before we reach Lotus Pier, because I'm not sure if we'll have any chance when we're there..." the voice becomes silky, and sultry, long eyelashes flutter alluringly, and the atmosphere between the two becomes charged with something warm, primal and whets Lan Zhan's appetite for the spouse's flavours. Sweet, pungent, fragrant, musky, meaty, delicate - they're all Wei Ying's, and Lan Zhan too, wants to savour sweat off the skin, listen to Wei Ying's enthralling cries of ecstasy, when his fingers grope around and peel off layers of garment to reveal pale flushed skin, when his lips nibble and suck each nipple like a babe breastfeeding from its mother, when his teeth graze familiar trails leading down, down to Wei Ying's prized unshaved pubic bush, when his fingers gently invade the puckered rosebud between springy ass-cheeks and graze, vibrate, molest that sweet swollen spot inside a lustful Wei Ying, when his mouth finally encloses the sweet rigid twitching flesh and he gives the spouse the blowjob of a lifetime, when Wei Ying sings his song of the husband's name interspersed with moans and growls, of hips trembling uncontrollably as desire soars higher than the skies, of muscles rolling, contracting, relaxing, vibrating, then, of molten lava swelling and burning its path up a tight turgid erect tunnel, bulging, expelling, shooting until Lan Zhan receives his well-deserved smoothie in heated, rapid fifteen-pulses - thick, exceedingly warm, incredibly flavourful - framed by wiggling toes, quaking pelvis, Aaah Aaah Hnnnghs, Faster-Harder-Deeper-Don't-Stops, fingers grasping his hair, clawing on his face, because Wei Ying dies again and again as he empties into the beautiful slender throat, and Lan Zhan lives, lives again and comes back for more of Wei Ying's essence.

Later, after a filling meal of Wei Ying's sexual fluids, Lan Zhan sits up to adjust his hairpiece and tries to straighten his hair. Wei Ying lies on the ground, half-naked and shivering from the cold, happily drained to the last drop and his lower limbs quiver non-stop from excessive post-orgasmic pleasure still coursing through his veins - and mutters that Lan Zhan's hair is messy and needs to be combed, otherwise it'll tangle up into knots, contribute to a receding hairline and heaven forbid, bald spots may form too. The husband groans, because his unhealthy obsession with the hair has been immediately triggered by the naughty spouse.

.

It would be about two weeks in Mortal Realm time, since the couple left their home in the 'Mounds, and finally reached the western gate of Wei Ying's ancestral home. Dressed appropriately as common folk who peddle on the streets from town to town, with Wei Ying as the leading salesman while Lan Zhan trails behind wearing a large farmer's straw hat, pulling a small cart of unsuspecting typical agricultural products that sees demand everywhere - winter root vegetables, sacks of grains and a few household items - they walk past twin aging wooden posts with the words "Lotus Pier" written on them, and are greeted with the eerily familiar sight of empty, dusty streets, abandoned guard posts and closed shops.

It feels like Yi City all over again, except that the couple has seen the devastation caused by the advancing Tian, possibly Imperial, armies that had wiped out every single village they've passed through with no survivors on record. Wei Ying hopes that he'll come across a true, breathing human citizen of Yunmeng soon, because he hasn't met any other living persons since leaving home.

Notes for the Chapter:

I'm just writing to fill my time in between work and getting bored staying locked down at home.

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 84

Ironically, the most distressing scenery is also the most breathtaking, at least for Wei Ying. The husband, however, is unaffected and shows no sign of surprise.

Lotus Pier is a mid-sized city located along the edges of the Great Lakes - a system of lakes and rivers that carry water from the high volcano mountains, deserts and plateaus in the West, through lower central plains of the Middle Kingdom featuring rolling hills, valleys and important waterways such as the grand Long River - where Wei Ying's foster family lived -, and the life-giving water meanders its way through windy widening rivers and river deltas out to the east, where the Great Eastern Coastal regions meet the seas, and close to Lan Zhan's hometown.

Wei Ying stands on the western side of one of the larger lakes, and admires the jaw-dropping view of a huge--

-- empty bowl with a cracked bottom, that's what it is. Am I right, Lan Zhan?" the younger man asks and points at the cracked mud lining what used to be the lake bed. With slightly (man-made) warmer temperatures, the atmosphere resembles that of late autumn or early spring - still chilly, dry, and not a speck of ice or snow anywhere. The whole landscape looks like a desert - orangy, brownish, dusty, and bone dry, while the lake with a depth of ten feet on average has simply disappeared, leaving only small puddles of brownish water at the bottom fed by small brooks made of snowmelt. Occasionally a small sandstorm blows across the desolate crater-like gap that was once a thriving crystal clear lake; if one squints to the distant evaporated shores, he may notice some dead lotus plants and roots too, littered with fish bones and crustacean shells - all animal and plant life within the lake have become dessicated, dried and dead.

“Mn. I watched many documentaries about deserts of the world, such as the Sahara, during our stay in Wuji continent. This scene reminds me of some,” Lan Zhan replies thoughtfully. He grips Bichen tightly and makes sure not to let its scabbard touch the dusty lakeside ground, hence its namesake.

“Eh, you remembered that? What sharp memory you have, and yet you always forget your little promises to me,” Wei Ying pouts and lightly pinches the husband’s forearm without warning (the latter nnnghs because he’s developing a liking for a sadistic yet candid, devoted spouse). Then, Wei Ying points at a collapsed wooden platform hanging precariously from rocky cliff-like edges just a short distance away, and remarks, “That is...was... the main wharf. The last time we walked on it was about three years ago... Ahh, reminiscing about those days, I really missed Si Zhui, Wen Ning, and even Jin Ling! I wish I could ask someone how the boys are doing!”

“Mn. But I do not see anyone in this part of town,” Lan Zhan responds and turns away from the lake and towards the western shanty town of Lotus Pier. Dust devils blow across deserted streets, rocking rickety huts, wooden structures and bamboo buildings. Silence pervades the entire area that used to be bustling with fishermen bringing in their morning catch, traders selling lotus products and seafood, families crowding around cheap markets, and shrieking children running everywhere barefooted. However, after travelling through a number of uninhabited villages, the couple is accustomed to such gut-wrenching sights; Wei Ying no longer sheds tears or mourns for the dead, and Lan Zhan stopped requesting for proper burials or play calming, spirit-appeasing tunes with his incorporeal gugin every time they come across mass slaughter sites. Being numbed to such terrible genocidal circumstances is probably the best coping mechanism they have during times of despair - yet Wei Ying stubbornly holds onto his wish to see Jiang Cheng, despite in all likelihood something terrible would have happened to him by now; Lan Zhan thinks Wei Ying is suffering from delusion, but he accepts the fact that each of them has his own demons to deal with, so he does not dispute further with the spouse on the topic of that Jiang gongzi .

The couple walked around a bit, with Wei Ying pointing out landmarks, shopfronts and alleys he remembered from his childhood days, from nearly two decades ago, and from three years ago; the times when he achieved milestones in his life in the Lotus Pier - the lotus-themed fountain in the town square where people threw coins to pray for good luck, the little stall that used to be manned by an uncle who always gave the Yunmeng trio free lotus seed treats, the roads where teenage Wei Ying used to run and play with wooden sticks and bows with other boys in town, and so many more - except that nearly all of those mentioned picturesque or historical spots lie in ruins, some showing signs of bloodied struggles, fingerprints from victims clutching and clawing at surfaces as they're dragged away, broken furniture, splintered walls, toppled pillars and destroyed rooftops line the sprawling districts as far as the eye can see until the fringes of the city - and worst of all, Corrupted talismans are plastered or hung at nearly every corner, some burnt out, some still active and radiate dark Corruption magic.

Wei Ying sighs, tired and disheartened, and rubs his temples when they agreed to take a break to sit on a roadside bench. Even during the brief respite, Wei Ying is reminded of the painful reality by the sights he sees - broken, bloodied and talisman-wrapped chains are nailed to the bench - undeniable evidence that someone, or something, and many individuals of such, were tied up for some reason, and subjected to terrible body-altering or soul-destroying Corruption spells. "It's not as I thought. I had expected something more... alive, after reading Jiang Cheng's letter. Y'know, lively protests in the streets, guards defending the city from invading Imperial Cultivators, flying swords everywhere, fireballs thrown overhead, scenes from bloody wars like how it was during the Wens' incursion. Not as dead and as lifeless as this," he sighs.

Wei Ying finally admits that what the couple has seen so far in their depressing city tour (more like, a ghost town) is contrary to conventional wisdom - Wei Ying's wisdom, that is. Lotus Pier is no longer the grand and glorious capital of Yunmeng province in present time; no longer the citadel that Wei Ying touted when he insisted that if everything in the world had gone wrong then surely, surely, the Lotus Pier would still stand tall and strong because they had the respectable, Zidian and Sandu-wielding Jiang Sect Leader; no longer the final city to fall because history doesn't foretell events of the future - being the last to fall during the old Wens' incursion doesn't mean it'll still be around this time. In short, Lotus Pier is just another brutal red statistic added to the list of villages, towns and cities that have been attacked, ransacked and emptied out by the enemies.

Lan Zhan stands close to Wei Ying and pulls the spouse close in a loose embrace. His white sleeve covers the younger man's face. The metaphorical blindfold has been lifted, Wei Ying sees only the white of his husband's eternally bright light. Within the comforting cocoon, the younger man puts a hand into his Bag of Holding, and after some tight maneuvering with nimble fingers, fishes out the crumpled, dog-eared letter that he'd received from Jiang Cheng a few weeks ago. The words are still there - naggy and emotionally explosive Jiang gongzi complained about everything in including his home, his brother (which he never called da ge , and always by the full name - how rude, Wei Ying chuckled inwardly at fond memories of the trio's younger days), and about plum sauce (realizing how Jiang Cheng nitpicks on such trivial things, and Wei Ying's chuckle becomes ever more bitter than sweet.)

Lan Zhan feels a slight improvement in Wei Ying's emotions, and withdraws the embrace - he notices Wei Ying has uncried tears in his eyes and the latter doesn't shy away from wiping them in front of the concerned husband. Wei Ying's fingers brushed the rather neat writing, and they linger on the date of when the letter was written. Time-stamped just a little more than a month ago. And yet the evidence of massacre they'd seen from now-erased Dashan village until this part of Lotus Pier are probably older than that - the overgrown farms at the outskirts are clues that there wasn't anyone harvesting the crops during autumn, the signs of age and neglect on the straw huts and empty homes - even the odd dried human entrails, bones cleverly hidden behind pots and furniture, mummified remains of torn-off limbs buried in shallow hastily-dug holes in gardens - whether as part of the Corruption burial or because fleeing residents didn't have time to pay their final respects, Wei Ying couldn't tell even using his awesome forensic investigation skills - however, Wei Ying could tell that Lotus Pier, like the other villages, had been unoccupied around since summer. Half a year ago, a very rough estimate by the younger man.

Wei Ying hands the letter to Lan Zhan. "Do what is needed, lao gong , I don't want it anymore," he says without remorse. Lan Zhan "Mn"s, and takes the letter, then tightens his fingers - he emits a wave of Purity magic, and the words on the letter dissolve into black particles, which then ignited briefly and turn into ash, dissipating into thin air. At this point, it would be pointless to contest the origins of those black particles; they're writings made of Corrupted magic, cursed to narrate believable lies that captivate its target reader, and confuses any person's rational thought and common sense upon reading.

"How did they manage to trick us?" Wei Ying asks, somewhat amazed at how one by one, Jiang Cheng's handwriting peels itself off the parchment and gets annihilated by the wonderful golden luminescence radiating from Lan Zhan's body.

"We're in a different timeline, a different universe. Everything was already destroyed and Corrupted by the time we arrived back home in the UFO. No one really suspected anything, not even our children or your siblings, because news from the outside world, beyond Yiling, is controlled by the Imperial Court. Everything we've read in the periodicals, the rumours we've heard from teahouses - everything - has been manufactured by them to give an impression that Yunmeng and other provinces are struggling with protests, but still alive - when in fact, they've been wiped out."

Wei Ying winces then clicks his tongue. Lan Zhan doesn't mince his words or sugar-coat facts.

"Ah... am I right to say that the Imperial bastards used dark magic to fabricate my younger brother's writing, exploited common tropes of sibling rivalry, and a came up with a cheap anecdote involving our company's plum sauce, just to deliver a letter to our home, and... evict us from the 'Mounds?'" Wei Ying wondered and adjusted his body so that he lies on Lan Zhan's lap on the bench, while the husband sits up straight, and patiently accommodates to every whim and whine of the spouse.

"Initially, yes. Fortunately Ni-er's barrier holds up tremendously well. A few days after we've travelled out of the 'Mounds, scores of intruders arrived at the estate but they were vaporized instantly by her Purity magic, just as what I can do with the fierce corpses and the undead." A broad hand soothes the younger man by brushing the pink cheeks and wiping off any sweat from the midday off-season winter sun.

Wei Ying plucks a long yellowed blade of grass that grew close to the bench - the road side hadn't been maintained for months , so there are plenty of plants to pick on, even during winter - and starts to fiddle with it, making gentle folds and twists to form a bent, disfigured woven grasshopper. "... and?" Wei Ying stares upwards, expecting more.

Lan Zhan is slightly taken aback and is at a loss of words. He doesn't know what else to say; despite knowing everything since he became the new Jade Emperor, he still gets caught by the spouse's erratic ways, sometimes.

“Oi, say something, Lan Zhan,” impatient Wei Ying plucks another grass, this time one that has tufts of seeds at the end like a blade of wheat, and lifts it to tickle the older man's chin.

“Mmm... our home is safe, our businesses and everything in Yiling is running as usual under our Kingdom's protection... your siblings have decimated and colonized whole nations in the Far, Far West, started to replenish the population in the villages we've passed with our kinsmen, and our children have bulldozed their way north and reached the capital city to face the Grandmaster of the Imperial Cultivators, and soon the Emperor,” Lan Zhan reports, rather uncertainly - because he's not sure if he'd met Wei Ying's request.

A light slap of grass-end on the lips. Lan Zhan nnnhs at the feathery light, tickling kiss.

“I didn't need a history lesson. Tell me something more relevant and useful, such as what's happening here, right now, and what we need to do,” the spouse orders, “I could've easily snatched your Book of Judgement from your bathrobe and read what has happened, but that's not what I want to do. You're the King of Gods and Men, for goodness sake, so behave like one,” the young pseudo-dominatrix man admonishes his older lover.

Another whip-like touch to a cheek, leaving a faint rising welt. The husband gasps again in a very non-masculine way.

“... I’m holding a barrier to keep us out of sight and repel the undead creatures occupying the city. I didn’t want you to see them, because I was afraid you’d recognize their faces... and you were telling me these wonderful stories from your childhood days, the places you’ve been to, and the people you know.. I... I--”

Wei Ying’s other free hand easily slides underneath the husband’s layers of robes, grasps the soft, limp member trapped in loincloth, and gives it a few savage, hard pumps. Payback time, the unspoken words form between them, a punishment by the upset spouse towards the lying husband. How dare you, Wei Ying grumbled.

“-- unnh.. T-they’ve been following us shortly after the encounter w-w..ith the false merchant and his three assistants. Th-... hnnnh.... They’re outside the b-barrier, unable to sense us, waiting for a.. A..ahhnn... a chance... to get through...” Lan Zhan starts to moan on the bench, face ripening to six deep shades of sweat-tinged pink and reds, while being stroked with a heart-stopping speeds to frightening heights of orgasmic climaxes. Wei Ying sits up beside the husband, and his hand tightens, giving the free-flowing pre-cum dripping erection the most heavenly friction a man can ask for - and he adds polishing at the end of each upstroke, plus exquisite jiggling of heavy ballsacks with ghosting fingertips right after each downstroke - and Lan Zhan trembles, his limbs lose control and strength, he starts to jerk and twist his body with pleasure coursing through every nerve-end, burning its way deep inside his groin.

“... and?”

“... aaaahh... and... and, your siblings and children are aware about t-t-this, and they’ve taken... hnngh... preventive measures to block further transgressions from the Imperial armies... hnnghk... so that we c-can c-c-concentrate on our miss... mission... oh, Wei Ying, I’m going to...!” Lan Zhan’s rising growls and shouts of ecstasy doesn’t deter the young man to beat the truth out of the lying husband. Wei Ying starts slapping the twitching cock still encased inside the stretched, wet loincloth like a metronome in time with a raging pace of a six-star handjob.

“Ahh, Ahh, Uunh... we- we should make haste a-and find any s-s-survivors here in the Pier, perhaps... Hnngh, Unngh, Hahhn... at the main hall of your ancestral... hhhnk, guughkk, aaah!.. home... Wei Ying, I cannot...!”

Lan Zhan shouts in warning once more, before he explodes, orgasms beautifully inside his pants, his face frozen and etched with expressions of agony, absolute pleasure, snarling like a beast, dying like a man who had sowed all his seeds and is squeezed to the last drop. Wei Ying licks his lips unconsciously as he watches the exposed red loincloth ripple and surge like a volcanic eruption trapped in a balloon of sorts, turning darker with slickness and sliminess with each passing ejaculation. At the eighth penile contraction, Wei Ying easily slides a palm underneath the cloth and continues to give very enjoyable heart-felt pumps until twitch number twenty-five - which shocks the still-climaxing man until he nearly falls off his seat - and withdraws only after the thirtieth twitch, and cat-licks the cummy aftermath from his fingers. Warm, gooey, thick and rich with qi. Tastes just like the husband, he thought. Out of compassion, Wei Ying puts his other free and clean hand into the loincloth, targets the dying hard-on and continues to rub and stroke it languidly, to Lan Zhan’s hidden delight masqueraded as pure bodily surrender - he yields, he is apologetic, he is defeated.

“Wei Ying! I.... aaah! I’m sorry!... hnnnghk!... I will not lie again, ever!... hahhhhh!” the older man begs for forgiveness as his hyper-sensitive penis is deliciously assaulted with molten-hot tugs, vibrating drumming of fingertips and his arch nemesis - the awful, terrifying, heart-attack inducing polishing of a still-spurting cockslit.

Lan Zhan finally orgasms, the second time in a row in less than five minutes, still as strong as the first but a little more diluted in texture and thickness for all thirty twitches. Wei Ying leans forward, grazes his teeth against a deep-red earlobe, and kisses a very flushed cheek - the one that had been whipped by a blade of grass earlier - and he gently warns the husband never, never to twist the truth because lying - even for good reasons - is Wei Ying’s expertise and privilege, not for the man given the noble title of Han Guang Jun.

Lan Zhan acquiesces.

.

After three climaxes for a total of ninety main twitches (and another ten because Wei Ying understands the husband’s need to achieve perfect numbers, therefore he adds cum-ejecting polishes in-between each climax, strong enough to force seed out the shuddering, unwilling cock - hence a spectacular hundred spurts in a span of less than ten minutes), Lan Zhan’s underpants are downright soggy, but his balls are pleasantly light - he had no right to complain, because Wei Ying went through a similar ordeal not too long ago, during a summer night in Yiling’s night markets.

Wei Ying pushes the cart with agricultural produce to Lan Zhan's side, then takes off his thicker outer robes, Bag of Holding, satchel, travelling gear, and drops them unceremoniously onto the wet patch on the husband's thighs.

"Hold my stuff, and let me show you how to properly handle the Dark Arts," Wei Ying says, thumbs his nose and flicks the bangs off his face. Lan Zhan swore he felt a little arrow shot into his wildly-thumping heart, and his inner child squeals and waves mini-pom poms and concert light sticks at the heroic display.

Wei Ying whips out his golden flute from the belt. Lan Zhan snaps his fingers and as expected, the dome-shaped barrier around them cracks, crashes and collapses like brittle glass.

Hundreds of fierce corpses and other undead horrors stand outside the perimeter, growling, drooling and bleeding black liquid from their pale, splotched skin and dirty ragged clothes. Wei Ying recognized some of them - a few he used to play with during his younger days, the uncles and aunties that gave him free snacks, and even the broken famed lotus statue had been transformed into a twenty-foot rock golem of sorts.

Wei Ying spins his flute - the world stirs and wavers for a few dizzying seconds because that's the Pillar of World Balance in his hands - earthquakes ripples forth, black smoky masses engulf the vicinity, and the skies grow ominously dark - and he places the sacred instrument to his lips.

.

Lan Zhan counts his blessings that he's wearing clothes from 2000 B.C. at embarrassing times like this. He could pull down his pants, untie then remove the heavy soiled sagging loincloth, replace with a new pair of white briefs (which is so much easier to wear) and pull back up his pants - and still retain his dignity because his long outer robes covers his whole body. He performed this quick garment-changing act in the town square under the midday sun (because the undead do not feel squeamish), while Wei Ying played a creepy version of classic Yunmeng folk tunes to brainwash and wrest control of the undead from their masters.

Nearly all individuals are former residents of the city and nearby settlements, so they recognized the songs, swayed and danced along. Those that didn't react - foreigners - roared with mindless anger in a show of blatant disregard of Yunmeng's time-honored culture, are immediately swarmed and ripped into shreds by their own kin of sorts. In-between the carnage of rotten flesh, invertebrate-filled bodies and non-living materials being mauled, bitten, chewed and clawed by gnarled fangs and sharpened nails, the young man spotted rusty-brown Jin armour - and silently whispered a prayer for the deceased, despised sect people.

"That's... discriminatory," Lan Zhan states as a matter-of-fact. Wei Ying snorts and plays the final notes, before ending with shrill, bone-chilling finale, and all fierce corpses, zombies, vampires, ghouls, and other undead kin shuffled about to find the right position, and stand in attention to their new master - reminisce of how various sect gongzi s obediently lined up in Nightless City during the abominable kidnapping-cum-studying episode spearheaded by Wen Chao.

"I'm the boss now, and I get to have the last say. So, I'm a bad boy, do you have a problem with that?" the younger man turns around and taps the flute to the bottom of Lan Zhan's chin, arrogant and challenging.

“Nnnh.”

Playing the flute has done wonders to Wei Ying's youthful porcelain-white complexion, length of hair, and level of badass-ery - including blood-red eyes, eye liners and eye shadows paired with luscious scarlet lips - and that seductive mole just below them - and that tongue-licking bewitching slender neck and an equally thin waist to match the lean, tall frame. He transformed to his former Yiling Patriarch image, clothed in blacks and crimsons, exudes malignant feelings, vengeful auras and jaw-droppingly lustful sexiness; Lan Zhan's supposedly sleeping wood between the legs hardened considerably at the sight of his powered-up spouse.

Wei Ying didn't miss the latest trouble to befall upon the weak-willed husband. The golden flute slides down the husband's Adam's apple, chest, abdomen and finally taps on the terribly misbehaving hard-on.

“... Nnngh.”

With a hundred-strong army of undead creatures under his command, Wei Ying, courtesy name Wei Wuxian is certainly a force to be reckoned with, here in the ruined Lotus Pier (with a docile, domesticated, horny Jade Emperor by his side, of course).

Notes for the Chapter:

The days are long and a little quiet, maybe peaceful, during the lockdown :-)

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 85

Wei Ying adjusts his clothes and equipment; the thick outer robes felt too warm since the temperature had risen throughout the day, so he gave it to the husband for safekeeping. Lan Zhan sighs a little, careful to balance the load on his hands and juggle the many hats he wears - patriarch, husband, lover, sworn protector, hero, white knight in shining armour, mule, porter, mobile storage, plaything (for sex), and et cetera - while trying not to act too subservient to the spouse, lest the power dynamics in their relationship becomes topsy-turvy and irreversibly damaged.

The couple continued their journey just as advised by the then-orgasming husband, towards the Jiang residence, where Wei Ying grew up, where it was burnt down and converted to an outpost during the Wens' incursion, then recaptured and reinstated by Jiang Cheng and his allies of the cultivation world. Wei Ying, notably Yiling Patriarch in his current form, continues to play off-tune Yunmeng classics on his flute, attracting more undead - fierce corpses and animated skeletal remains make up the bulk of his fans - to join the ranks of those trailing behind the powerful couple like the pre-21st century pied piper fable. Wei Ying didn't like how they behaved - ugly growls and incomprehensible snarls, slothful movements, decaying limbs dragging through the ground - because the undead can be dignified and respectable as well (look at the Underworld!); so he made them skip, wobble and dance quite a bit while traversing to the center of the Pier. Lan Zhan merely kept quiet, kept his head low beneath the shadow of a large straw hat, and obediently pushed the cart of goodies, pretty much as how Wen Ning used to do the same with radishes for sale at the markets, nearly two decades earlier.

Having been told the truth that the Lotus Pier is indeed way, way past the perilous stage, too far in the deep that there's really no use for saviors or any heroic acts to save desperate lives, and that a change to post-apocalyptic mindset and lifestyles are in order - a new norm, so to speak - Wei Ying is a happier man than before.

“There is a difference,” the younger man says, “in racing against time to save my brother and the townspeople from being massacred by the Tians and their denizens, or from being captured by Imperial soldiers,” he lifts a finger towards a northwesterly direction to signify roughly where those threats come from, “versus, taking our sweet time to explore a world where everything has been destroyed and turned to dust or demonic undead monsters, and we’re just hopping from town to town, finding and helping survivors make the best of the new reality,” the finger sweeps a wide arc towards the east, which is roughly their final destination.

Wei Ying pats on sacks of grains and vegetables in the creaking cart - the wheels hold well on unpaved roads, the food was donated by Wei didi and airdropped at a moment’s notice; they may have lost a war before it began, but they have all the resources needed to rebuild everything. He pretends to busy himself by sorting out and arranging some farming tools and household items stored among the cargo. “Mn,” Lan Zhan nods, “You’re right, Wei Ying. And I admire your bravery, openness and ability to adapt so quickly to such unimaginable changes in the situation,” he praises the spouse, in which the latter lands another perfect kiss to blushing cheeks as a gesture of appreciation. Wei Ying’s turnaround in accepting their new life is startling indeed, even for normal human beings.

Wei Ying spins the flute with a grin - slowly this time, because he knows if he does it too much, or with too much force, the planet could be catapulted out of orbit from the earth-shattering momentum - then puts the flute back to the lips, and continues to play the pied piper to more fierce corpses joining the jiggling samba line.

.

It's been a while, but the couple receives regular reports from the Wei siblings. With the revelation that they actually live in a nearly dead, post-apocalyptic world (save for their little pocket of untouched paradise in Qishan), the Kingdom of Lan pulls all stops to turn the world into one of theirs.

Ernie and Ni-er scaled back from their mission - they halted their advance at the hellish doorsteps to Chang'an, camped out ala glamping style to take stock of their situation. They have all the time in the world to destroy the capital city, so rather than rushing in, Ernie decides to pay some attention to his scouts - virus particles, really. His tiny body-parts have gone ahead of schedule and reached all corners of the planet, and continued to replicate and infect new hosts at astonishing rates. He analyzed the first packets of data and uploaded them to ErNet - and immediately received thunderous applause, praises, job-well-dones by the Kingdom's citizens - it's almost as good as when Man first reached the lifeless Moon, and it's a momentous milestone: the Kingdom can build a complete data set of the entire Mortal Realm - their Mother and Fatherland. With more data packets on the way, soon there will be enough to make changes to realities, to synthesize anything that is needed to reclaim the fallen lands, and for Ernie to reverse-engineer the world, or its components, at will.

Little Ni-er simply accompanies her brother, and spends her free time either snuggling inside his backpack, or when she's up and about, she would curl and hang from her brother's humanoid arms to nom-nom everything within reach - with her toothless gums. Their amazing journey to the North has provided endless documentary series and entertaining fodder for live streamers, with Ni-er clearing straight paths through ruined cities, forests, mountains, rivers and lakes - because she eats anything her two-feet long body can reach. It goes without saying that as more screenshots and video clips of her adorable side circulate the Net, her popularity soars even higher than the brother's - which is perfectly fine for the only two tentacle-kin siblings in existence.

The Wei siblings at the western end of the continent are doing a fantastic job in pushing back civilizations of the Far, Far West. Like any bloody wars between people of different ethnicities, ideologies or origins, it's a fight for dominance, survival, living space, scarce resources and supremacy. So far, the Kingdom has been able to lay waste to rather primitive fortresses, cities and military camps. They had captured as many commanders and generals as possible - mostly clones of the Tian sisters - but none have yielded any useful information, such as the location of the presumably original Tian da jie or even the presence of the Tian dalaoye and his queen. Scores of the Kingdom's citizens are sent to new colonizable zones to populate and take control of increasing swathes of new frontier lands. Airships are teleported to areas cleared out of monsters - the path taken by the First Fathers from the 'Mounds to Yunmeng, and the path by the tentacle-kin from the borders of Qishan towards Chang'an - to transport more citizens, animals and supplies to re-populate those places as well.

.

"Hmm. This was never here before," Wei Ying ponders and rubs his chin while staring at a fifteen-feet tall stockade wall made of hastily chopped tree trunks enclosing the residence's compound. He knocked, poked and pushed at a couple of giant stakes to examine their construct, and test the quality and strength - a little dilapidated due to age and weather from the last few months or so, but still a formidable defense against corpses trying to climb over or pound their way through -, "It's a bit like those 21st-century zombie movies, don't you think so?" he asks.

Lan Zhan peers a little closer and notices dried bloodstains, charred patches, slash marks and broken arrows stuck on the surface. When Wei Ying rubbed a finger on the torn bark and showed Lan Zhan a blackened finger tip, the latter simply “Mn”s in vague agreement and recoils from the dirty finger - it could’ve been bits of cursed rotted flesh or burnt bone fragments. Wei Ying laughs and shocks the husband when he smears the black substance on Lan Zhan’s nose and walks off with arms behind his back, nonchalantly. The husband yelps (and shows a very rare facial expression of fear and disgust) then quickly wipes his nose with a sleeve; he unwittingly released his grip on the handle of the cart, so the heavy transport creaked and moved in reverse towards its handler - resulting in one of the wheels rolling over Lan Zhan’s toe. He yelps again, louder this time, at the pain stemming from his clumsiness.

“You’re too stiff, Lan Zhan! You’ll grow old and slow very fast if you keep this up! Don’t worry, you’re the King of Gods and Men, so anything evil and corrupted trying to harm you will vaporize instantly upon contact! Whereas, I, the former Patriarch of the dark arts--” the younger man whistles a few eerie notes into the silence, “--can only try my best to control them according to my whims!” The swelling crowd of two-hundred strong undead moves like a sluggish mass and with irregular movements - like having seizures - to follow their new youthful master.

Suddenly, five incendiary arrows rained from the skies and struck the couple’s undead escort. Five corpses roared when their chests burst into flames - the arrow heads have been soaked with explosives and combustible resins. Not a few seconds have passed, and another five more projectiles arch from above. “Ah, save me!” Wei Ying cries, when his sharp-sighted vision told him that one would pierce his skull no matter how fast he tried to run; he tried to shield himself with his bare hands anyway, despite the risk that his limbs were in acute danger. Lan Zhan hmphs and leaps ahead - he body spins gracefully as he unfurls Bichen, like a deadly, blossoming metallic flower in the dazzling afternoon sunlight, the iconic blade cuts down all five burning arrows in a single wide swipe. The moment he lands fluidly on one foot (the leg with the injured toe is lifted slightly - like a ballerina), he launches himself into the air again, up fifteen feet and higher than the stockade, and aims his trusty sword towards the sniper.

“There’s something different about the enemies this time! A man in white has defeated my Power Five-Shots! He leads the biggest army of corpses I’ve ever seen! There’s a hundred! No... two hundred! Thousands! They look really ferocious! Sound the alarms! Rally the soldiers!”

Wei Ying recognizes the voice, holds up a hand, and yells, “Lan Zhan! Stop! I hear Jin Ling!”

.

The panicked young man hisses at his undead army and waves his hands angrily, like shoo-ing away a congregation of belligerent stray cats. Within a couple of seconds, every individual dispersed from the scene - some dove into barrels and large cracked water pots, a few ducked behind broken horse wagons and bushes, the more intelligent ones ran into nearby abandoned buildings for cover, those with viable legs sprinted for the woods, and those with good arms burrowed into the frozen ground and left mounds of dug soil behind (thus, digging their own graves, literally).

By the time the much-missed and very familiar face peeked out from behind the wooden barrier - it’s Jin Ling, probably nearing his twenties by now! Who would’ve thought the blessed orphaned boy would grow into such a fine young man of... err... slightly at the lower-end scale in terms of height, and modestly above-average looks...! (Wei Ying tries his best to put forth his best descriptions of what he sees - it's his nephew, after all!) - Jin Ling became very surprised and panicked as well.

Wei Ying's beaming grin (which goes unnoticed, because Jin Ling set his sights on Lan Zhan - a man in glorious angelic white in a grimy, dusty, brownish desolate place stands out the most) turns into a grimace when gong bells sound in the background. There was a whoosh! sound of rustling robes and of someone powerful flying through the air, and good ol' Jiang Cheng emerges next to the boy (Wei Ying still thinks of his nephew as a teenager, no matter how many years have passed - and oh wow, Jiang Cheng looks like he's aged a little more, and his frown has grown deeper between the brows). There are glimpses of purple garbs from where Wei Ying stood, and he watched as the Jiang sect leader's gaze sweeps over the horizon from the high vantage point, before he slaps the back of Jin Ling's head with a palm. Several heavily-armed archers and swordsmen arrived as well and stood beside the two, huffing and puffing from exertion from climbing up fifteen-foot ladders.

"You have the gall to sound the alarms for... THIS?!" Jiang Cheng slaps the boy's head again, "How can you be so scared when there are only two persons! You've wasted all our energy and time again! Useless!" another slap, "If this ever happens again, I won't let you have guard duty anymore, and you'll be forced to stay inside the residence!"

Poor Jin Ling, he's still frequently abused and scolded by the fierce jiu jiu, Wei Ying thought.

Jiang Cheng stares down at the couple and locks his discerning eyesight on the formerly misunderstood arch-nemesis, and flashes a toothy snarl, "You've returned (好啊, 你回来了)...".

.

Wei Ying was told not to move an inch while the esteemed Jiang sect leader barks orders to soldiers to keep an eye on the perimeter and to open the gates. Wei Ying fidgets a bit but is relaxed; Jiang Cheng's full grin (often mistaken as a snarl, really) marks the return of their brotherly relationship and fond memories of them being together, whether play-fighting or arguing over a bowl of shijie's lotus root pork rib soup, surfaced and made Wei Ying feel warm to the core.

“Wei Wuxian! I thought I’d never see you again!” Jiang Cheng trots over from the gate, followed by Jin Ling and a small number of young soldiers - Wei Ying realizes that most of them are mere teenagers not much older than sixteen or seventeen years of age. The Jiang sect leader looks quite presentable and remarkable in his outstanding, regal commander uniform, and Zidian sparkles in the afternoon sunlight from one of the fingers. His face looks aged with more creases and wrinkles, probably due to stress and fatigue from defending Yunmeng’s last bastion from hordes of undead. Jin Ling is, unexpectedly, wearing a purple robe too with a pair of matching dark pants, the same as the other Yunmeng Jiang disciples, armed with his late father’s oversized sword, bow and arrows strapped to his back, and a chest plate at the front that clearly identifies his clan with a purple lotus flower motif.

“Well, I never really said good-bye,” Wei Ying replies with an equally bright smile. He pats on the cargo in his cart and cheerfully, in his trademark jovial ways, adds, “Sorry I took some time to get here. Here’s a gift from the two of us - harvests from our faraway home,” and tilts his head to gesture at Lan Zhan. Jiang Cheng bows with a fist and palm salute -

and everyone else, including Jin Ling, quickly followed suit in respect of the visitors.

Jin Ling opened and closed his mouth a few times, wanting to point out what he thought he saw accompanying the visitors - a sea of fearsome fierce corpses - he managed to make a few false-starts of calling jiu jiu 's name in stammers, before the latter hushes the boy with another slap to the back of the head.

.

It was late afternoon when the couple arrived at the Jiang residence. Wei Ying notes, and Lan Zhan quietly nods in agreement (because they're telepathically connected by ErNet when they don't visibly converse with each other), that the collection of large mansion-like buildings with abundant lotus-filled pools and gardens in-between, squeezed inside the stockade, look primed for war. Everywhere there are marching soldiers or soldiers practising with martial arts, bows and swords - Yunmeng Jiang disciples - who look a little frail and undernourished, a bit too young, and weary with dark bags under their eyes.

“ Jiu jiu , are you sure this is okay? I-I mean, last week, there were those food merchants...” Jin Ling blurts out of the blue while trying to catch up with Jiang Cheng, who directed some men to unload the cart and prepare a hall for the visitors.

“You still doubt them? Look at the sword that Wei Wuxian is carrying, and look at the ribbon on Lan er gongzi 's forehead!” Jiang Cheng chastises the clueless boy. A disciple called for his attention and presented a parchment containing updated numbers of their paltry inventory of foodstuff and other supplies. Jiang Cheng takes a quick look, grunts out a “go ahead”, and sends the disciple on his way.

“But... Sect Leader, there aren't... any?” Gaping and google-eyed Jin Ling is as dumb as ever - at least that's what Wei Ying thought of the boy's naive response.

“Exactly! They are the real Wei Wuxian and Han Guang Jun! The ones we've met before tried to trick us with illusions and disguises - just like how you almost bit into the lotus seed bun bought from the merchants if I hadn't intervened at the last minute and beat some sense into your head! Think with your brains, not with your stomach, boy! You should count your lucky stars that you didn't turn into a fierce corpse unlike five other disciples that day!” Wei Ying counted at least three light pokes and swats to the boy's back, and flinched inwardly the same number of times. Perhaps influenced by the rather harsh treatment displayed in front of them, Lan Zhan remains as quiet as a mouse, and he looks at the floor as though it is the most captivating part of the residence. The cart has been emptied and he pushes it along while walking behind Wei Ying.

A disciple approaches them and announces that the hall is ready. The awkward-looking teenager, dressed in full gear, directs them to the venue and Jiang Cheng leads the entourage. As they strode towards their destination in hurried steps - Jiang Cheng seems always in a rush -, the couple takes the chance to admire the changed scenery; herb gardens turned to open-air medical camps, lesser homes for servants function as armour and weapon workshops and basic military dormitories, storehouses transformed into precious food pantries, and soldiers continue to hone their fighting skills in the courtyards. As they pass by people, they are greeted with utmost respect for the Sect Leader, and bewildered, curious stares - people living inside the stockade probably never, or hardly seen their Sect Leader bring outside guests into the walled-up fortress.

Jin Ling began to show impatience because he never got a straight answer - balled up fists and a face that grows redder with each passing minute; Wei Ying decided to end the torment and he innocently chips into the conversation with a mocking tone, “Hmm? Just now... what you’ve said... Ai-yaaa , I don’t have a sword, Jiang Cheng. Sui Bian is with you, isn’t it? And Lan Zhan hasn’t worn his forehead ribbon for a few years now... because of me. You still remember the reason why, don’t you?” and his voice trails off deliberately.

Jiang Cheng rolls his eyes - his reaction to homosexual couples hasn’t changed during the last few years - and he asks flatly, “Yeah? So what’s new with the both of you?” Wei Ying’s heart does a little happy jig, because Jiang Cheng successfully read between the lines - probably a skill attributed with age and wisdom.

“Us? Well...” Wei Ying puts both arms behind his head, the most carefree and jubilant person among the group, “I’ll spare you the details for now, little xiongli . But just so you know, both Lan Zhan and I are more than just cultivation partners, and we’ve formed our little clan, powerful enough to have killed off that food merchant you mentioned and his three assistants, in the name of Qishan Lan.”

Jiang Cheng rolls his eyes again in the reverse direction, which speaks of either “Oh No, Not Again” or “Why Am I Not Surprised” (because he was around when Lan Zhan made that heart-felt declaration and kissed Wei Ying in the lips in the middle of the now-historic Grand Cultivation Council sitting, about two years ago).

They arrived at a small building. Wei Ying has his arms hooked around Jiang Cheng's neck like long-lost best buddies. Lan Zhan continues to push the cart silently behind the two - Wei Ying told their hosts that they couldn't find a horse, so the trolley-like transport is effectively their luggage. Jin Ling is still clueless as ever.

.

“The other buildings have been used up for storage and as sick bays, so this is the only one we can turn into your lodging for the time being. There's not a lot of stuff around because of the war, so don't complain about the lack of amenities and hospitality! I've tried my best given the lack of resources right now, everything's sparsely furnished but should be enough; there's a hall here, a living space there with a brazier in the center for heat, and a bedroom over there. There are no fresh water pools after the lake dried up from an unexpected winter drought that started two weeks before - how on earth that happened, nobody knows. There's a common water reservoir outside in the courtyard and we've been collecting some snowmelt thanks to the strangely warm weather we're experiencing... so, if you need a bath, you'll have to get freezing water from there, and you'll have to make do without heating...”

Wei Ying breathes out a little sigh - his younger brother hasn't changed much, still arrogant, egoistical, finicky, fickle and fierce at the same time, a true Young Master. The state of the room, or the infrastructure in general, is quite pitiful.

“There's so much I want to ask and discuss, and I'm still very surprised to see you! Let's sit down and... Jin Ling, don't stand there! How can you not serve tea to our guests! Where are the plates and snacks?!” Jiang Cheng veers a hundred and eighty degrees from the pleasant conversation with the couple, to slamming on a wooden table angrily.

“B-but we’ve run out of dumplings and dried lotus roots long ago, there’s only one unopened bag of oolong tea leaves left in your room, and there’s only bread in the pantry, and...” again, Jin Ling stammers and tries to explain their impoverished state, before receiving another glare from the fearsome jiu jiu .

“You’re throwing our ‘face’ right in front of our guests! What did I teach you in the past about welcoming family members and close clansmen to our home?!” Jiang Cheng doesn’t give a breather to the boy.

“But.. earlier today you said that we need to ration our stocks carefully, otherwise we’ll starve by the end of the month!” Jin Ling doesn’t let up either, always defending himself and his so-called righteous way of thinking. Such a dedicated boy, Wei Ying thought.

Wei Ying waves a hand between the angry uncle and his ‘hopeless’ nephew, begging wordlessly for a ceasefire. He tells Jin Ling that ‘maybe you didn’t see it, but there are some meats magically hidden at the bottom of the cart, such as chicken, pork and fish, along with herbal tea leaves, snacks and other goodies from our farmland - can you please be a good dear, and bring those to your pantry, then return with something for us? I’m sure your jiu jiu will at least enjoy Yiling’s roasted pork jerky and toasted mixed nuts we’ve brought with us’.

Wei Ying was spot on - everyone in the Yunmeng Jiang stronghold is famished at this point, a few months into isolation from the outside world and with no fresh supplies coming in. Jin Ling stiffens at the word ‘meat’ and rushes out eagerly after the Sect Leader nods in permission. Simultaneously, one of Wei Ying’s hands snake behind Lan Zhan, and he pinches the older man’s waist - there’s a bit of extra cuddly love handles there, since his new Heaven-made body was made with a little more oil. The husband nnnghs softly, and politely takes leave to give the Jin gongzi a helping hand; he’s been telepathically ordered by the spouse to oversee Jin Ling’s momentous gift-unwrapping event at the cart in front of the building; as the Jade Emperor, Lan Zhan should be able to conjure delicious food and infinite supplies to pop out from the humble cart according to the boy’s wants and wishes. (Hence, there is no need for a wishing well for the hungry men and children in the residence, since there is a wishing cart.)

Jiang Cheng looks on questioningly with plenty of hints of suspicions, but Wei Ying simply waves them off with a laugh. “I know I’m awesome, because I’m the Yiling Patriarch after all. I’m not kidding when I say that I’ve brought a whole lot more. Lan Zhan will take care of the... logistics. You’re all going to be just fine,” he adds, and Jiang Cheng crumbles - ever so slightly, like the little boy he used to be when he wanted to sleep with his older brother during stormy nights, but the pride of a Young Master gets in the way, and the older brother simply--

Wei Ying spreads his arms, and since the brothers are finally alone in the room, Jiang Cheng doesn’t hesitate to run across the hall and give the other a great, shameless, brotherly bear-hug. “I’m so glad you’re back!” Jiang Cheng calls out with a hoarse sob in his voice.

Somewhere far away, dark clouds begin to build up when the winter sun starts to set. It doesn’t rain tropical thunderstorms in mid-winter, especially around the frigid Great Lakes, but Lan Zhan makes a divine exception. An army of thunder deities armed with their sacred battle drums and holy mallets, rain gods ready to pour their massive ever-flowing pots, led by a Lan Wang Ji-cloned Dragon King Of The Seas, assemble at the gates between earth and Heaven to ensure a successful operation to bring life-giving water back to the parched frozen earth.

.

It's raining cats and dogs as evening approaches, and everyone - the remaining population of Lotus Pier, numbering less than a hundred - hunkers down in scattered, packed halls to have a feast not seen in the last six months or so. Some disciples - emaciated teenagers, really - were so hungry for anything that isn't bread-based, that they dove into the food even before the Sect Leader announced the meal time. Meats cooked in all manners - roasts, stews, grilled, stir-frys - are served with nutritious fruits, vegetables and bountiful portions of steamed white rice - and everyone gets their fill.

Lan Zhan mans the kitchen, and single-handedly cooks for the residents - survivors of the Imperial invasion -, while Wei Ying goes around passing pots of tea, jars of wine (for the adults) and packs of food and snack products from their businesses in Yiling City. Jiang Cheng wept real men's tears when he tasted lotus root pork rib soup made by Wei Ying's husband, and he acknowledged that the Qishan Lan has succeeded in inheriting the legendary recipe of the family's favourite.

Jin Ling, still confused at the whirlwind turn of events, becomes even more clueless when he spends an inordinate amount of time investigating, trying to figure out how to command the ordinary wooden cart to pop out more wonderful food (shouting 'A-Ling de baba' didn't work for him, strangely, unlike Lan Zhan - at least the Jin gongzi is kept busy and eventually forgets about events earlier that day, such as the sight of two hundred undead creatures hiding in the midst of civilization, and the pricklings of animosity between him and Wei Wuxian which should have been laid to rest long ago). Lan Zhan picks up another task in his telepathic to-do list from the spouse, and spends a bit of time watching over Jin Ling whenever he's waiting for the next batch of dumplings cooked in the giant steamer, or another big whole pig roast crackling and beautifully barbequed on the spit; he dutifully answers questions from the energetic and crabby Jin gongzi , which are typical of youths thirsting for adventures and knowledge about the outside world after spending months cooped up at home - such as how the food merchant was defeated, who are Qishan Lans, how powerful is the new sect, yada yada et cetera ad naseum. Lan Zhan takes the interrogation in his stride like a pro; he merely answers with short sentences composed of two to four words each, and doesn't comment unnecessarily.

There is much merriment among the deliriously grateful disciples, and Wei Ying gets the chance to pull Jiang Cheng aside for some private talk; they really needed to catch up, and interestingly the Sect Leader is a very busy man who seemingly barks orders at every other minute if he's left alone (he tries to look useful and acts like a commanding - more like domineering - leader of sorts).

Wei Ying, the smarter of the two, starts off by listening to his younger brother's side of the story, and gauges the latter's reactions towards recent hallmark events. For Jiang Cheng, life quickly returned to mundane and normal after The Kiss at the Grand Cultivation Council meeting. Some cultivators teased the man for having a gay sibling and the then-boyfriend's reputation was riddled with rumours and scandals, others turned up their noses at the Jiang sect for other reasons - including the sect's relatively low ranking in the hierarchical ladder of sect influence, wealth and size -, but these soon quickly passed with time.

Yunmeng was spared of the first wave of fierce corpse attacks that gripped the northern and eastern regions, however, the scholar protests took its toll nevertheless. The lackadaisical attitudes of Grand Cultivation Council masters and sages caused an uproar especially among the young. They travelled abroad to other provinces to join the protests, leaving their parents and older generations behind in Yunmeng's rural towns and cities, including Lotus Pier. The Jiang Sect Leader had his hands full trying to listen to his people's concerns and balance the pressures coming from the Jin Sect.

The Chief Cultivator, a Jin member, rallied the major sects and forcibly recruited cultivators seemingly in retaliation, in what is seen as a politically-charged move against the Imperial forces - their biggest critique and threat at that time, who aided the protesters' cause.

"Lots of things happened, and I'm sure you've read the periodicals," Jiang Cheng explains and Wei Ying listens without saying a word, "I was so busy with endless meetings with the other sect leaders and trying to pump out soldiers and resources for the Council's cause, that I didn't realize the seasons have passed. It's their fault for wasting everyone's time, because those meetings at the Carp Tower never bore fruit, and soldiers are simply re-deployed on the whims of useless town mayors or war generals without any overarching strategy in place! They keep demanding for more, squeezing dry smaller sects like ours, until I had to stand up and tell them - No, I cannot give you anymore gold, grains, soldiers or cultivators, because I don't even have enough here in the Pier, the heart of my land! Those councillors are really hopeless bastards!"

Wei Ying pours a cup of Laozu Smiles and serves it to the sect leader in a timely manner. Slaking one's months-old thirst for good wine is a good way to lighten the heavy, stifling mood.

“You know what? The Jins dared to look down on me, by saying that if I was so poor, they’d donate some troops to the Pier. They sent a few battalions through the Great Lakes, sometime around the end of summer. One of them dropped Jin Ling under my care before leaving for the west. Apparently they were getting desperate to hire cultivators to fend off the rising threats from the protests, and more so, the advancing Imperial armies. Bastards! I only realized that they used our Pier as an outpost of sorts, when they never returned even while I waited for them almost every day! We were treated like a pit stop, can you believe that?!”

Wei Ying nods to placate the fiery young master, and feeds him a bite of freshly steamed dumplings handmade by his husband. Still, that didn’t deter Jiang Cheng from ranting on, in-between angry chewing.

“Never returned, you said?” Wei Ying nudged the other.

“Yeah! Actually... after that time, we never saw any returnees, or any other cultivators from our allies. The periodicals were no longer in print, merchant caravans stopped coming through, even farmers and traders from neighbouring villages stopped visiting our markets. It felt as though we’ve been cut off from the outside world. I tried my best to keep the people safe and calm, because fierce corpse attacks sprang up within the vicinity. I made sure those few Jin patrol guards they’ve left behind here were worked to the bones, and put them on the frontlines to combat the undead menace. They did a nice job, though,” Jiang Cheng snorts, clearly unimpressed by those gold-plated soldiers.

The sect leader grabs a fritter and dips it into some plum sauce, before flicking the tasty morsel into his mouth.

“Ah.. this is the best! Tastes like sis’s when she made ‘em during our childhood days. We ran out of spices, condiments and basically our food supply dried up in the first few weeks of autumn. Suddenly these fierce corpses, zombies, vampires, ghosts and all sorts of crazy undead creatures started appearing everywhere. We tried to fight them, but we lost hundreds with each passing day. I’m devastated when the population crashed down from twenty-thousand strong to what we have left. I don’t even want to know what happened to the outlying settlements and villages - I’ve sent scouts to find out and buy back some farm produce, but none of them returned! It’s a nightmare, a terrible plague or something, a disaster! I don’t know anymore...!”

Jiang Cheng hiccups - the alcohol is starting to take effect, and the slight pinkish flush on the cheeks shows. Wei Ying gently pats the brother’s back.

“Everyday, I tell you... it started with kidnappings, murders and weird people from the Imperial forces coming in. We couldn’t stop them, they just waltzed in, took over, bringing with them these filthy walking dead to overrun our homes and streets. They’re cunning, using magic tricks and all that to deceive us. They’ve spies everywhere, assassins disguised as commoners, and soon we were watching how they transformed living people into fierce corpses, right in front of our eyes, those bold evil assholes! I thought only your brand of dark magic could summon fierce corpses, but theirs are on a whole new level - just the other day, when those idiotic young ‘uns happily ate buns offered by a stranger. True enough, something poisonous inside those buns killed them and they literally turned into fierce corpses in front of their xiongdì s! No, there’s no use of flutes, chanting, or throwing talismans around - just food! They. Use. Plain. Food. To. Kill. Us! Food is the only thing that’s keeping us alive! It’s traumatic, it’s terrible, it’s unacceptable!”

Clearly, the agitated sect leader is beyond help and is in a drunken stupor. He slams tables, kicks chairs, whips around emptied jars like a mad man, and his eyes are unfocused. Wei Ying sighs heavily. They haven't even touched on the topic of how to live in a post-apocalyptic Middle Kingdom, and the Jiang sect leader is already struggling hard with the demons inside his homeland.

Through drunken ramblings, Wei Ying teased out a few more useful bits of history - Lotus Pier essentially turned into another Yi City in a span of a few weeks, before the powerless sect leader could even grapple with the situation. The Tians - disguised as Imperial soldiers, or perhaps they worked hand-in-hand - used dark magic and devious means to mass-transform the city into a haven for the undead, and picked off the remaining survivors with intelligent means - such as tricking people into eating poisoned foods or shooting poisoned darts from afar.

Wei Ying knew how a single piece of Yin Metal could corrupt many; however, to be able to create or find enough of dark magic sources, then turn them into fillings for buns, liquids to coat weapons, and whatnots - is a mass production process of unimaginable scales even for the Yiling Patriarch. He concludes that the enemy has the ability to obtain and exploit dark magic with Corruptive powers - something that the Imperial forces are suspected of, since there had been rumours of experimentation with Yin Metal, fierce corpses and even resurrection rituals using dark arts among Imperial officials. Taking into account the current state of information, it seems the Imperial Court could be the mastermind of Corruptive technology, and the Tians, or rather, mercenaries from the Far, Far West, are hired - invited, perhaps - to execute the Emperor's plan for domination. With such powerful inhuman individuals at their disposal, the Imperial Court is indeed the biggest end-level boss for the Kingdom of Lan.

(At this point, ErNet scrambles into another Code Red alert. Efforts are intensified to break the supply chain of Tian warriors and magic-users from the Far, Far West to Chang'an. Ernie's virulent particles evolve into greater numbers, higher infection rates and possess innate capabilities to grasp the true picture of Middle Kingdom's dire situation. Ni-er is on standby to nom-nom everything up, including the Imperial Palace and the surrounding lands within a radius of one-thousand kilometers, upon her parents' request.)

One good thing came out of the disaster unfolding in the Lotus Pier - Jiang Cheng leveled-up the use of Zidian at times of crisis. When he realizes that he only has a handful of young, immature disciples left at the residence (because the older ones have been sent out and were never heard from again), along with a panicked Jin Ling, the sect leader brilliantly decides to whip out the angry purple serpent to create, rather than to destroy. Zidian lashed at tracts of forested hillsides, then, with its ginormous snake-like head at the tip, it tears out trees as wide as Guanyin Temple pillars fifteen feet in height, and hammers them into the ground around the Jiang residence to form the barricade. Wei Ying sends a silent word of thanks to the great powers inherited from his late stepmother, for saving the remnants of the Jiang sect.

.

When not cornered into a defensive ball of hedgehog spikes, Jin Ling is actually a remarkably good kid, Lan Zhan realizes. He's naturally curious, but like his uncle, the pride of being a Young Master gets in the way of asking questions in a nicer way. Luckily for the boy, Lan Zhan is an infinitely patient person (actually, the King of Gods and Men - but the Jin gongzi doesn't need to know that), and he addresses each question with terse finesse.

Jin Ling doesn't usually mix with the other disciples although unconsciously, he tries his best to blend in with the crowd by wearing the same as the rest. "Actually, during one of the encounters with the fierce corpses, I led six disciples in the attack and our performance was as good as any night hunt's - we were killing off at least one corpse every hour or two. They were smart and strong, but were no match to my arrows and my brains! When they hid like cowards, I ordered the disciples to chase them out and herd them to an open space, where I could easily cut them down with my big sword. You know what? One of those monsters dared to squirt black poison at me, the moment I plunged the blade into its chest! My sect's golden robes melted on the spot, damn it! Anyway, it was already slightly frayed on the edges, so I could've thrown it away any time, so I might as well do that earlier," Jin Ling boasted at his own achievements and actions. Lan Zhan merely "Mn"s at the childish display of lethal bravado - if Jin Ling had received a dose of that poison on bare skin, he could've turned into a corpse by then.

The boy fidgets with the wooden cart outside one of the dining halls within the larger main building. The rains have let up into a long-term drizzle into the night; the air is chilly but not too cold. He calls for a stick of tanghulu - a summer treat he'd miss for a long while - and miraculously, one pokes out in sight. Lan Zhan hands a napkin to the boy because he knows the latter can be a messy eater when it comes to anything that's sweet, sugary and sticky.

"Han Guang Jun, you're so humble and kind, unlike my fearsome uncle! Is this one of your Qishan Lan sect rules on conduct? Tell me about your sect! Do you also have strange rituals around lotus plants? What do you eat or cannot eat? How do you all live in Yiling? How is Yiling, is it a big city like Lotus Pier?" the little young master demands - in a nice way - after his first tentative bite into the syrupy treat.

Lan Zhan smiles faintly, pleased. He starts to explain a little bit about the Qishan Lan - a branch of Gusu Lan with a fair bit of Yunmeng Jiang's roots in its culture, who started off as simple, ordinary farmers in newly-opened plots of land in the Burial Mounds district, and now, owners of parcels of land and businesses in Yiling. Their numbers are a few, Lan Zhan adds thoughtfully, although their influence is probably wider because of further branches within the family. He goes on to describe Yiling - a bustling thriving city bathed in a sea of gold because of the 'Gold is in Vogue' campaign spearheaded by the Jin general, supported by the mayor. Jin Ling interrupts to say that he would like to visit Yiling some day, partly because he misses seeing whites and gold, especially of peony flower emblems decorated on flags and fabrics.

Eventually the conversation turned towards the relationship between the couple.

"Are... you really married? As in, has there been a marriage registration, wedding ceremonies, huge banquets and all that?"

"Mn. We have our marriage registered with Yiling's city council. It was a simple affair."

"Have... you done things that... er... you know, couples usually do? I d-d-don't mean the silly romantic, kissy or dating stuff!"

"Jin Ling, if you mean the things that couples do every day, then yes, as a normal couple, we do them every day."

“Every day? What do you do every day?”

“Let’s see... we sleep, eat and live together. We dual-cultivate--”

Jin Ling yelps in surprise when two broad hands cover his ears from behind. Wei Ying emerges from the shadows and hisses at the husband. “Lan Zhan! He’s too young for that! You lech!”

The husband clams up immediately.

“Wei Wuxian! Er... I mean, da jiu (大舅)! Wh-what are you doing?” Jin Ling scrambles from the floor and brushes off the hands that denied him a crucial piece of information about life and love. He takes a final bite from his tanghulu stick and throws it to the ground in exaggerated anger - which Lan Zhan quietly picks up. “Don’t scare me like that! Otherwise I’ll break out into rashes and tell the Sect Leader!” the boy adds with arms on his hips.

Wei Ying laughs out once, and places a hand on the boy’s shoulder to calm him down. “You’re a smart boy! I was just about to ask you and yet you’ve already said it!” Wei Ying says, and Lan Zhan politely takes leave to check on a vat of steaming herbal tea in the kitchen. “Jiang Cheng is knocked out from drinking too much, and he’s grown some red patches on his face and forearms. I think it’s a mild allergic reaction to the strong wine, but I wanted to ask you about it to be sure,” Wei Ying gestures towards the building where he and Jiang Cheng spent quality brotherly time.

Jin Ling becomes a little excited, “Jiu jiu ... is drunk? REALLY?! I mean... yeah, recently many of us started having running noses, coughs and skin itchiness. The symptoms are a bit like hay fever in summer, except that the outbreak happened about two weeks ago in mid-winter. I had some too, but it’s alright now and Sect Leader told me to monitor on my own and avoid doing things that could trigger ‘em.”

(At this point, Wei Ying sends a telepathic message into ErNet requesting the virulent son to tone down his particles. He hopes Ernie reads the message in WeiChat.)

Wei Ying nods, “You’re really on top of things, Jin gongzi . Good for you. I’ll ask Lan Zhan to make some special teas to alleviate these allergic symptoms for everyone. Now run along, I know from looking in your eyes that you want to see drunk Jiang Cheng making invisible snow angels on the floor. Go now, have fun!” and he waves the boy off although the latter already sprinted ahead. Jin Ling’s going to have a ball of time with his first-ever sight of an inebriated Sect Leader with a stupid look on his face.

The spouse trots off and accompanies the husband in boiling a batch of tea. They added a few expensive though freely-available top-notch ingredients that strengthen one’s qi and meridians, thanks to Lan Zhan’s magical cart. As they worked side by side, Wei Ying tip-toed a bit to kiss the husband on a cheek to show his gratitude for helping out the people of Lotus Pier. The soft drumming pitter-patter of rain in the background frames the otherwise tranquil scenery of a couple visiting their rural hometown; boisterous cheers and laughter echo the hallways and gardens, the air is crisp and fresh after a cleansing rainfall, and from a distance, the city’s grand lake begins to fill up abundantly and swell with the rise of water levels.

Wei Ying wonders if Lan Zhan's toe is alright, and thinks of checking it by himself later when they have a bath. The thought of a bath is enticing - a disciple had brought a wooden bathtub into their room, and interesting, sexy ideas started to form. They haven't had sex in the water for a long while since starting their journey away from home, so what better way than to make it as unforgettable as possible? Arousing images of the spouse moaning endlessly while being giving the jerking, spasming husband a thrilling ride inside a mini-pool of heated splashing water, of naked bodies sliding against one another, pleasuring and receiving pleasure of the flesh, stirring soap and spilled seed into the bathwater--

“Ah, Lan Zhan, you're a bad boy! You're spilling too much sugar into the tea!” and the spouse reaches behind to pinch the husband's buttocks. The latter nnnghs, and curses himself for tuning into their private chat in ErNet while preparing healing beverages for his in-laws.

Notes for the Chapter:

Ahhh... my country's lockdown is extended. Maybe it's a sign to take things easy and indulge in fantasies :-)

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 86

“It’s quiet.”

Wei Ying places another few pieces of coal into the brazier in the middle of their lodging, and walks with a light skip towards the husband. It’s rare for Lan Zhan to initiate a conversation, especially after such a busy day of travelling, fighting the undead, getting abundant unwanted attention, curious stares and whispers from younger men (which usually drives the husband’s inner introvert up the wall) in the Jiang residence, then having to cook and feed an army of a hundred hungry soldiers, and not to forget, he had to baby-sit a demanding and nosy Jin gongzi for most of the evening.

“Of course, it’s nearly nine o’ clock at night, and everyone should get enough sleep. I know how Jiang Cheng runs things around here. He’s a slave-driver for most of the time. Working under him can wither even the most youthful and energetic - I know that from first-hand experience! Thanks to me, the boys can get a good night’s rest to replenish their spirits!” Wei Ying points a thumb at himself proudly when he emerges into the bathroom. Lan Zhan sits inside a bathtub in the center, with various unpacked toiletries on the floor and some towels hang from wooden stands. A window is partly opened, allowing moonlight to peek through and cast a silvery sheen into the room in addition to dim amber light from candle stands located in the corners. The air is damp and it is still drizzling outside, however thankfully, the temperature isn’t freezing cold. There are no crickets in winter, though creepy owl hoots keep the surrounding bamboo and pine forests alive in the far distance.

“Sleeping powder in the herbal tea. You’ve drugged them,” Lan Zhan states matter-of-factly, without a hint of accusation in his tone. He wiggles his toes in the water - Wei Ying had cast a pink plastic bubble over his injured toe, coated it with healing salves and tied it with a green rubber band. It felt strange that the toe feels comfortably dry while the rest of his body is wet, just like the residence's compounds after the downpour.

Wei Ying easily strips off his robes by pulling off drawstrings and untying button knots, and he grins evilly when he notices Lan Zhan staring back at him with a deepening flush on his cheeks and earlobes, before he looks away, ashamed.

“Yes, yes, guilty as charged, I’m the master of vices and all things dark and ugly, after all. So I lie, cheat, drug people and what’s next? Seducing married men too? Is that even a crime?” Wei Ying saunters barefoot towards the husband in the tub, and sways his hips in every step. “Everything I do, there is a benefit for us. I sponsored the banquet tonight so that those thin bony children build more meat and muscles and grow up well. I made them sleep early so that they can focus better in fighting and live for another day. Jiang Cheng’s the only exception though; he’s out cold with Laozu Smiles so that tomorrow he’ll have a hangover... which means Jin Ling will spend the day annoying his uncle and not you - you’ve suffered enough from his interrogation today, I know that much. And since everyone’s knocked out, I thought it’ll be fun to try it in a different setting. What do you think? Having sex right under our relatives’ noses. It’s thrilling, isn’t it? Everything looks, smells and feels different!” Wei Ying brazenly jerks his hips right into Lan Zhan’s line of sight, a semi-hard boner flapping in front of the husband, while he twirls his soiled loincloth with a finger until it flings away to the far side of the room.

Embarrassed Lan Zhan tries to look in another direction, clearly becoming aroused underneath the soapy murky water, as he lowers his head and his breathing grows heavy.

“Are you hard enough yet? I stretched and lubed myself on the bed earlier while you soaked in the tub,” Wei Ying asks wantonly - another shocking question. Lan Zhan choked on his saliva and muttered a vague “nnngh”.

“Tch’. Your wife is genuinely caring, sincere and honest with you, and yet you still act nonsensical like this,” Wei Ying pouts, and without hesitation and warning, climbs into the tub. Water ripples and rises, like the lake outside of the Lotus Pier. He boldly straddles the husband and shamelessly reaches down to adjust himself upon Lan Zhan’s crotch. “Wei Ying...!” the husband croaks when fingers grasp and stroke his half-hard penis, before trying to cram it into a sweet, sweet rosebud.

“Ahh... Lan Zhan, you used to harden impressively when I’m naked. Then to paw at me like a lustful animal, go crazy and encourage me to talk about conceiving babies. Are you getting old and soft? Does familiarity breed contempt? Do you... not love me anymore like you used to?” the younger man challenges and mockingly shows a forlorn expression. Something about the last sentence ticked off a bomb inside Lan Zhan, and he suddenly grabs Wei Ying’s waist and pulls him down with his might. The water tipped over and splashed onto the floor; Wei Ying shouts with surprise and a little pain, when over six inches of heated hard flesh forcibly parts the rosebud and sheathes itself to the hilt.

“Wei Ying... no... I-I love you! Want you! It’s only you that my heart desires! No one else!”

Wei Ying squeals at the symbolic verbal declaration of loyalty and love - and more so, when the husband leans forward until their bodies meld and their lips locked instinctively. They made sweet, sweet love inside the tub, which Wei Ying had earlier reinforced with titanium bars (he didn’t want to end up like ‘the last time’), and rides Lan Zhan until the latter dies and revives through very, very pleasurable strokes and spurts of thirty-twitches. Wei Ying reached for towels and over the husband’s shoulders, he gave nice back washes - the scrubbing sensation fired up some feel-good nerves in Lan Zhan, and culminated in very excited ejaculations - twenty-five twitches this time - inside his well-trained undulating tunnel of love that clenches that doesn’t let go - and the husband hnnghs another ten twitches until nothing dribbles out of his cock. Wei Ying laughs and mocks the husband by falsely mimicking the sound effects of cannons gone appallingly wild between the latter’s legs, and whispers hotly into the ears, “Lan Zhan, Lan Zhan do it some more. Shoot every last drop you have! Pew! Pew! Pew!” (in which Lan Zhan turns into twelve shades of humiliating reds, mortified by the fact that yes, his penis actually pew-pews out semen.)

Wei Ying continues to circle and grind his hips, causing more water to spill over, when he soaps and shampoos himself in front of the moaning, suffocating husband - another orgasm or two crests, a few more slivers of white float inside the increasingly frothy water - Wei Ying then tenderly assaults Lan Zhan’s chests and plays with the nipples by massaging them with kneading motions, imagining a man’s breasts being milked and suckled until they puff out - and Lan Zhan erupts again, and again with plenty of vibrating growls and quivering hips which generate sonic waves that threaten to break the tub fastened with metal plates.

Wei Ying toot-toots at the husband’s futile struggles, and caresses the fully flushed face with wet fingers, then slides them into the other’s mouth; Lan Zhan sucks and licks the digits desperately, silently begging the wife, enough, enough, he has nothing left to give - yet another wave of contractions well up from within the pelvis, rumbling through tight, shrunken yet trembling emptied balls nevertheless, and shoot straight up the impossibly hard, engorged length, again and again; the husband climaxes diluted droplets, then shouts “Aaah”s, “Uunh”s and “Mmmh”s repeatedly for nearly thirty times, grimaces in pleasurable agony, roars when the oversensitive flesh continues to receive mind-blowing pressure and friction, chokes and tries to catch his breath while drowning with sparks in his vision and sometimes from bathwater splashing into his nostrils, then barks out giggles and laughter because he loses control of his nerves, cries out a few tears because he's going mad from the pleasure melting, pulverizing, destroying, resurrecting, blossoming in the loins, before repeating the fantastic cycles of wonderful facial expressions of when a man orgasms too many times in rapid succession.

Wei Ying left the tub when he's done rinsing off the suds, and towels himself dry as he saunters off to bed - fresh, energized and not quite ready to fall asleep yet. Lan Zhan had to drain the tub and wipe the splattered bathroom, and frankly speaking, he felt emptied in more ways than one and wished to have a good lie in bed. He staggers to the bedroom, still moist with rivulets running down his skin and his hair is a wet sloppy mess - because Wei Ying stole his towel too - and when he opens the door, he is greeted with the sight of the wife spread-eagled, with raised hips, well-stretched and nectary cum-slicked rosebud aimed at his direction, and the crude wife masturbated and pulled on his dick furiously, groaning Lan Zhan's saccharine-sweet name again and again, begging to be fucked, wanting to feel good with a big fat dick shooting lots of seed inside, and wanting to make babies in his brother's home and near his family's ancestral altar. Sad to say, the husband is easily provoked with such unforgivable, morally twisted words, and Lan Zhan dives straight for the bait, gladly offering himself as sacrifice to Wei Ying's unholy temple.

Missionary sex is one of Lan Zhan's favourites, because he can slam and plunder with as much force and speed as he wants into the mewling spouse, and when Wei Ying sensuously wiggles his hips, flutters his eyelids, and sweetly asks for more pillows underneath his aching hips, for a particular angle of penetration, for 'do what you want with me, you horny animal! Fill my furry springy bunny pussy with your hot bunny seed!', for 'Ah! I'm helpless! You're attacking my hymen, and you're taking my virginity! You monster! Thief! Rapist!' (which is illogical in every sense, but triggers Lan Zhan's hidden dirty personality into another fucking frenzy), for cumming faster because the wife is impatient 'to seed our fertile garden of love, plant many healthy babies deep inside so that there will be twins and triplets popping out soon'; the husband loses control of rational thought, and indulges in the maddening requests, continuing his valiant effort to conquer and defeat the horny demonic sex-kitten (actually, it feels like Lan Zhan is the one getting sexually assaulted, because he's forced to have countless intercourse against his will - but the flesh is weak and willing, really).

They switched numerous sex positions throughout the hours into the night, with Wei Ying barebacking, extracting at least three orgasms from the helpless partner in each round, and rewards the fatigued but hard-working husband with his entire body and soul - even flavours, when it comes to oral sex and sixty-nines. Wei Ying lost count of how many times he swallowed his own semen when he climaxes, and Lan Zhan does not hesitate to swipe some from the smeared face for a taste. As a habit of theirs - specifically, Wei Ying's - they have sex all over the lodge. There aren't many interesting fixtures and furniture to hang on to, but that doesn't stop Wei Ying from getting earth-shattering thrusts against the wall, slung over chairs, spread on the tables, while hugging vertical pillars, pressed flat against cabinets while his neck gets bitten as he is bred in an omegaverse-que way, while carried and deliriously drilled by the husband as the latter stumbles across the rooms, and so on.

Lan Zhan pounds endlessly with that loving, timeless rhythm and hammers Wei Ying into the bed and pillows - he sucks Wei Ying dry and gets sucked and stroked off in return, tenfold - until the husband is finally sated in the wee hours of dawn, and collapses with heavy snores and drool running down his lips.

It would be close to two in the morning before Lan Zhan fell into blissful slumber and rest his pleasantly depleted body. Out of (bad) habit, still-awake Wei Ying wanted to climb on top and ride the husband till sunrise, but a rustling sound stopped him from doing so. Wei Ying sat on the edge of the bed, and watched mesmerized as a silvery-purple snake peeked from the window, then slithered along the walls, the sides of furniture, the floor, then up, up the bedframe's leg, the footboard, and finally inches towards between the husband's spread-eagled limbs. Wei Ying whispers some extremely evil-sounding hisses and rasps - language of the Serpentine kin, which is related to the alien, ear-grating sounds of Corruptive magic's mythical words -, and exchanged a few lines of conversations with the mysterious enchanted serpent more that six feet in length but as thin as a grown man's forearms. It's scales sparkle in the moonlight, and its entire body glows with nearly the same colour with a tinge of violets and maroons, and its eyes could be mistaken as amethysts.

Wei Ying nods with an unintelligible growl-like sound of Serpentine-ish, and the snake raises itself high above Lan Zhan's naked crotch, then strikes at the limp member that resembles a mini-phallic version of itself. It bit through the soft meaty flesh with its pair of fangs, then swallowed the whole organ, and started twisting, pumping its body like a cocksleeve gone wild while making heaving and surging motions of swallowing the ensnared penis. Dark viscous liquid is injected into the flipping bitten penis, and the snake coils itself around Lan Zhan's inner thighs, sensitive hip joints and the pelvic area.

The husband nnnghs, furrows his brows, grasps the bedsheets with clawed fingers and his whole body sweats in a sexy nightmare gone, horribly, horribly wrong.

.

Lan Zhan wakes up with an orgasm. He's had plenty of practice before, and his body is accustomed to recognize and stay relaxed even as delicious tremors run up and down his spine, shakes his imprisoned pelvis, rippling beautiful muscular waves outward from his abdomen, and finally, when he ejaculates - very, very weakly, but the jolting release of searing hot liquid pressure is still pleasurable nevertheless - he simply "Hnngh"s five times in tandem with the first five arching shots, followed by a string of soft prolonged "Mmmh" moans for the next twenty-five twitches. He inhales a deep breath at the end of the ordeal, like wrapping up a revitalizing cultivation stance - fresh wintry breezy morning air fills his lungs -, before feeling a kiss from the spouse, and he winces when he tastes himself - a little sweet, but heavy in sleep-warmed body musk.

He opens an eye. Wei Ying smiles brightly, his black hair glows with faint sunlight streaming from behind and he looks like a nefarious, evil angel - because his eyes sparkle with mischief, his cheeks are flushed, and there are traces of white streaks and curly pubic hair on his lips and tongue - when he stares a little downward, there are plenty of hickeys, fingernail scratches, fingerprint bruises and all manners of physical evidence of last night's passion - mostly caused by the husband, of course. Another kiss on the cheeks, leaving behind cum-stained marks, and Lan Zhan nnnghs in protest. He closes his eyes; it is too early, he silently tells off the wife.

"Good morning, sleepy head. You need to make breakfast for the boys, otherwise they'll go hungry and cry non-stop for food," Wei Ying whispers heatedly into an ear. Lan Zhan shivers at the intimacy, but refuses to budge. "Ah... five more minutes then. I'll wake you up in five minutes' time," Wei Ying relents when he pokes and prods the husband's chest, only to get a snore in return.

The wife scoots underneath the blanket, pushes Lan Zhan's legs apart, and proceeds to give the man another five-minute's worth of heavenly blowjobs, with the help of absolutely invigorating Invisible Hands, Lips and Tongues playing inside the husband's genitals.

.

“He’s so graceful, even while chopping vegetables! His clothes are pristine white with neither a speck of dust or a splatter of soup. He’s an angel!”

“Is... is that really Han Guang Jun? The famous Chief Cultivator from years ago? I've heard so many stories, but I don't know which is true or false!”

“Look at his posture, his style, when he stirs the big pot of congee! And he is such a kind-hearted man to help the needy! This is truly the Han Guang Jun I read about in the Cultivation Times! ”

“My, my, how he flips the jianbing s and cooks the meat fillings so perfectly well! He must be a legend both in the kitchen and in the battlefield!”

“There’s an aura around him when he opens the dumplings’ steamer. It’s so ethereal! He cannot be approached nor touched. He’s a Fighting Buddha of kitchens!”

Wei Ying slaps the back of one of the disciples' head. "Eat your breakfast quietly and stop ogling at my... er... the highly-talented and venerable Han Guang Jun!" he scolds. Bowls of mouth-watering soup noodles, fried vermicelli, pancakes, spicy congee with chicken and pork, steamed glutinous rice, fried doughsticks, spring rolls, dumplings of a dozen types of fillings, soybean milk, fresh fruit juices, salads, and so much more line the tables in the dining halls. As the kitchen is not too far away, disciples watch with astonishment and adulation at how the sumptuous banquet is prepared with flaming woks, spinning spatulas, pots flung across the room, dough pieces launched into the air, and scary flying projectiles made of meat or vegetable fillings.

Lan Zhan is incredibly calm and composed (there is zero lust left inside him, after all), although he is surrounded by a group of about ten pimple-faced, awkward, teenage chef wannabes - handpicked by Wei Ying 'after he watched them devour last night's dinner with such glut and desperation, surely they will fight for their lives to have more' - and he exudes mystical and sage-like vibes, therefore easily commanding the attention of his students of sorts. He tells them that preparing the most delicious food using scarce resources is a war fought not with the enemy - but against one's self. When one is able to conquer the learning curve, and surmount greed and other vices harbored in men's hearts, the food made with crystal-pure love "shall nourish the soul, strengthen the qi, embolden people to fight for their loved ones, and lead your sect to victory." The awestruck students "ooooo" synchronously, and studies how a proper breakfast is made, Qishan Lan-style.

(He also fills the sect's pantry with mountains of tasty Wangxian ready-to-eat meal packages and freeze-dried vacuum-packed ingredients manufactured using 31st-century technologies, and teaches the boys how to heat up, prepare and consume these nutritious emergency rations. The magical cart continues to pump out the packages throughout the day straight from an anonymous donor's warehouse - the generous Wei didi from another universe.)

Wei Ying ropes Jin Ling - still a little bleary-eyed at seven in the morning - to serve the food to nearly a hundred boys in the halls. He demonstrated to Jin Ling about delegation - something that Jiang Cheng never embodied, therefore never taught - by selecting a number of juniors to assist Jin Ling.

“But... they always argue with me! They think I’m an outsider dictating them on what to do, and they never want to listen unless I kick their asses!” the boy whines loudly.

“No, Jin Ling, you’re wearing the same clothes as them, so you’re definitely not an outsider. That feeling is born from your fears and insecurity. You’re one of the oldest in this residence, so they’ll listen to you. Now repeat what I said to these boys,” Wei Ying nudges Jin Ling, as he waves and beckons at three juniors to “come, come”.

Jin Ling braves himself and puffs out his chest. He raises a tray with six bowls of freshly steamed sweet tofu puddings, and says in his typical domineering voice, “G... Give these to the smaller k-kids!” The three juniors shrink back at the order, eyes menacing and full of suspicion.

Wei Ying facepalms and lightly smacks Jin Ling’s head.

“Er... I mean, I... I-I need to bring th-these puddings to our h-hungry xiongdi s, but there are too m-many. You’re strong enough, and... and there’s three of you! Er... can... can you help me to serve the food to the... younger ones?” Jin Ling tries again, this time according to script. He feels uncomfortable, vulnerable, but strangely - a warm feeling of bonding with the people he's lived together with for nearly half a year.

The three juniors stared at the gongzi , then among themselves in amazement. One nods, and the rest follows. They gingerly take the tray from Jin Ling's hands, and a couple more trays from the table, then murmur a curt "Yes", before making their way to the dining halls.

Jin Ling watches with bewilderment at what just happened.

"See? It always works if you ask in a nicer way, and connect your request to a greater purpose," Wei Ying beams his awesome million-dollar smile; it's an advice he'd penned down in his A.S.S. book a long time ago.

.

Wei Ying spends a bit of time with Jin Ling to nurse Jiang Cheng from his hangover (which was expected). The grumpy middle-aged man tumbled out of bed, groaning with throbbing headaches and nausea in his tummy, and Jin Ling is secretly thrilled to be able to take care of his uncle - for once - rather than be babied all the time.

"Jin Ling, you're our nephew, and you have the huge, huge responsibility to take care of the sect leader, because no one else is more qualified and closer to him... than you," Wei Ying adds - which sends explosions of invisible peacock tail-feathers springing out from the boy's back -, and Jin Ling takes the instructions with utmost pride. Watching Jin Ling feed a spoonful of liquidy food to Jiang Cheng brings nostalgia into Wei Ying's mind - he used to do that to the Jiang gongzi during their childhood days, though he's sure the middle aged man would rather die with his dignity intact than to be fed by the elder Wei brother; so he lets the youngest take care of the grumpy jiu jiu .

They talked a bit over a simple breakfast of plain chicken congee, salads, fruits and freshly baked breads - which taste a hundred times better than the rock-hard, stale ones the residents had to bear with during the past weeks due to diminishing food supplies. Wei Ying gave a little more background about how he lived the last couple of years in the 'Mounds - with plenty of white lies and pared-down descriptions of those colourful events that have happened.

“Really, my life has been boring and mundane compared to yours. It seems the fierce corpses never reached Qishan and there have been enough Jin guards around to ward off any enemies from the Imperial Court. Both Lan Zhan and I worked as farmers, sold street snacks and some magical trinkets to earn enough and put food on our tables. Lan Zhan's a great man, and somehow he attracted enough attention with his grace, reputation and lifestyle, and started a sect for the two of us. Let's see... there's a young adolescent, a couple of teenagers and a man in his thirties... then there's a small girl and a boy who's going through puberty. They have their own families, so we'd consider them as under our humble little sect. We own a few parcels of land to house our disciples and run some sundry businesses to keep us funded.”

It sounded believable, at least that's what Wei Ying hoped. He wouldn't know how to explain about forbidden magics, universes, realms, reincarnations, time-travel and the Heavens to his brother and nephew.

“Wei Wuxian, it’s disconcerting to hear that you’ve settled down comfortably so well in such a short span of time to become a commoner. Jin Ling, don’t be like him, you hear me? You’ve got a brighter future filled with heroic adventures and rewarding experiences ahead of you! Don’t let go of your greatness when you’re at your peak - soar towards greater heights!” the Jiang sect leader harrumphs at his own lecture.

“Jiang Cheng, when you marry and settle down with your significant other, everything - including perspectives and life goals - changes. Jin Ling, if you suddenly feel a change in pace of life, or if you find someone who sends your heart aflutter and makes you go crazy with romantic feelings, let me know. I, Wei Wuxian, your da jiu , can be your counsellor!” Wei Ying boasts, vying for the boy’s support.

“He’s too young for that! And he’s not the kind of person like you and Lan Zhan!” the sect leader snaps back. Jiang Cheng starts a petty argument about the brazen inappropriate display of hickeys on Wei Ying’s neck and forearms - the shocked older brother pulls his robes tighter to himself and accuses the other for peeking and perverting his good image. Jin Ling rolls his eyes - like the uncle - and groans in exasperation at the hopeless situation; he’s heard enough from his peers about the strange tales surrounding the couple, and about how the two infamous men were rumoured to fall in love and - eww! - kiss one another and eloped far, far away.

Somehow the conversation veers into plum sauce, in which the sect leader declares that he’s only bought a crate from a passing merchant of the ‘absolutely ordinary and overpriced sauce that isn’t different from anything else in Yunmeng’, but he notices the logo of ‘black and white rabbits against a bamboo backdrop’ which led him to ‘have a brilliant hunch of who it belonged to’ - at that point, Wei Ying opens his mouth to spell out the name of his company, and Jiang Cheng raises his hands to block, citing that ‘it’s against my sect’s law to even mention that cursed word, because of all the trouble it brought to us after the Grand Cultivation Council fiasco’. Wei Ying turns red at the sudden turnaround, since Jiang Cheng was kind-of ‘okay’ with him and Lan Zhan the day before, and then “Jiang Cheng, you’re a cruel man, you know that?” - and the other cuts in with “Wei Wuxian, I can be cruel to prevent Jin Ling from listening to the crazy stories and ideas you have inside your head.”

Jin Ling wails “Jiu jiu !” to stop the entire trainwreck because he feels left out of a family conversation about him.

Jiang Cheng quietens down - still huffing -, and so does Wei Ying - he takes a couple of minutes to stare down at the younger brother and catch his breath. Then, Jiang Cheng decides to switch the topic to the outside world. The sect had been cooped up in the residence for months without news from other villages, towns, or cities, let alone provinces, so Jiang Cheng wondered aloud what had happened beyond the borders of Yunmeng. Wei Ying sidesteps the question a little, saying that the ‘handful’ of ‘very small’ villages he passed on his way from the ‘Mounds, were ‘predominantly empty’, probably because ‘the people were in a rush to hide from the Imperial forces, judging from the way they’ve boarded up their doors and windows and left everything pretty much intact’. The mood had soured a little by then, so Wei Ying didn’t say much more.

Before they left the sect leader to rest for the morning, Jin Ling is tasked to replenish the water tanks and Wei Ying thought this is a wonderful opportunity to solidify the fledgling leader’s skills, without interference from the grouch. He watches with an uncle’s pride when the boy approaches a few disciples, fidgets and stammers a bit, and a group of at least twenty follow his lead - they had to carry back and store as much water as possible before the lake drains out; the pools around the residence gardens will not last long anyway. Wei Ying sends a thumbs-up sign on the latter's way, and Jin Ling struts through the barracks and armoury buildings to pick up some gear for his squad - there may be danger outside, after all - before leaving the scene.

(Wei Ying puts two fingers into his mouth and sends ultrasonic whistles - not audible to human hearing - to command his army of two-hundred strong undead to stay hidden and watch over the boys filling up buckets of water. In essence, these ex-Lotus Pier citizens are requested to protect their own people who are still alive, and the fierce corpses silently growl with determination to carry out their noble mission to perfection.)

Lan Zhan, on the other hand, gives the remaining boys a useful lesson or two on sword fighting. He teaches them some basic Gusu Lan moves that can be easily incorporated into their sword play. The boys are always amazed at the revered Han Guang Jun, and follow the lessons attentively. Wei Ying draws up a schedule for the boys to follow for the rest of the week, elects a few seniors to take over key functions, in the absence of their tyrannical sect leader. Although there are some teething problems, the disciples find their own ways to keep the residence running at a minimal level.

With a squad of chef wannabes preparing lunch, by late morning the couple decided to go out to get some fresh air - and partly because Wei Ying preferred to avoid facing Jiang Cheng for a while. Their short walk included bringing another group of twenty youngsters to take turns with or bolster Jin Ling's efforts.

.

“I have a love-hate relationship with Jiang Cheng,” Wei Ying announces impassively. The husband merely “Mn”s in acknowledgement; he’d been in touch with Wei Ying via telepathy during the small argument in Jiang Cheng’s room earlier that morning.

Forty boys form a line, handing over buckets of fresh lakewater from one to another. Their breaths mingle with the morning fog that shrouds the Pier, as they work as fast as they can. The lake is barely covered with water; the heavy rains from the evening before managed to leave large pools in shallow dips on the lakebed, but they drain out at an alarming rate as long as snowmelt does not replenish the levels at a faster rate. The skies are clear at the moment, although clouds are beginning to build in the far northern horizon, across vast barren hilly ranges, valleys and diminished waterways.

“But more importantly, I want to know how much time he, and the remaining sect members have left,” Wei Ying turns to face the husband, “There are enough packed meals to last them until the end of the season, but more worryingly - our Kingdom’s scouts report that the next wave of Imperial cultivators, soldiers and undead will reach this area by the end of the week. About five thousand of them, forming a pincer attack from the northeast and northwest, at least by estimation from grainy satellite images.”

Lan Zhan looks up, and tears a sticky rice dumpling into two - there is egg yolk, pork belly, dried oyster, dried shrimp, mung beans, chestnuts, and mushrooms inside - and hands one portion to the spouse. “How is the weather?” the husband asks seemingly out of nowhere.

Wei Ying munches on the richly-flavoured savoury treat. He zones out, unblinking, at mid-chew for a couple of seconds - a sign that he’s receiving important telepathic communications from somewhere far, far away. “Eh? Um... hold on... my siblings just relayed this - a natural cold front has formed from the north, and will sweep southwards through the Great Lakes after this warm pocket dissipates... around the same time too! Wow, Lan Zhan, did your Heavenly senses foretell this? What does the cold weather have to do with the Jiang sect’s survival?” Wei Ying stares at the husband, fixated and waiting for enlightenment.

Lan Zhan swallows, hard, because the sticky rice is a little dry.

“Mn. It’s just a guess. Corruptive magic goes hand in hand with low temperatures, as evidenced by darkness and dead bodies. Like ice in the deep freeze, even if you destroy some, they simply rise up and return in greater numbers. Is that what your siblings are facing in the Far, Far West?” Lan Zhan postulates, and licks rice grains and pork grease off his fingers; in their world of two, the relaxed husband doesn’t mind showing off his crude side.

“Um...” a brief pause, “My da ge ’s just updated the bulletin boards. Holy...! You’re absolutely right! They’ve blasted away and taken over some nations, but somehow they’ve not been able to make further inroads since then! It seems one of the harshest sub-zero winters ever recorded is blowing through that part of the continent. While the war machines are breaking down and our men are overwhelmed more often by snowstorms and deep chill, the enemies are reported to be increasingly indestructible and appear in near infinite numbers, like black tsunami waves of insects crashing down from alpine mountains! There are even Buddha’s Palms and Million Lotus Spines raining down on our citizens even as we speak!” Wei Ying slurps up a slice of fragrant pork belly excitedly and worriedly, then in his recklessness splashes half-melted oil droplets everywhere.

“Mn. What do the data packets from Ernie tell us about the northern sects closest to Chang’an, such as Qinghe Nie and Lanling Jin?” another question posed. A napkin goes up to wipe the younger man's lips and fingers automatically, thanks to the concerned husband.

Wei Ying blinks from a momentary glazed look, and is impressed by such direct, on-point questions that strike the bullseye. “Erm.. um.. Our scientists tell me that there’s just miles and miles of destroyed farmlands, towns and cities buried in the snow! Not a single human being in sight so far, while fierce corpses and other denizens of the dead roam aimlessly among the ruins! Lan Zhan, does that mean those sects have been defeated? What does this mean for us?” Wei Ying’s wide-eyed and fist-shaking expression with a mouth full of food tells the other that he is stunned by such distressing revelations - especially by the man who hardly interferes with the Wei’s crusade.

“Mn,” Lan Zhan takes a few seconds to stroke his growing beard - he hasn’t shaved since they started the journey, “It seems the Imperial forces, with the Tians in their service, are making their move when nature and time are on their side. They destroy everything, kill people indiscriminately, and leave no prisoners. They already know about us and our capabilities. If they send five thousand true Imperial soldiers, fully armed with Imperial gear, are able to use divinely magics inherited from the Heavens, and employ superior military tactics, it’s likely that your defense of two hundred undead peasants will not work here,” he explains calmly, while using the same fingers he’d licked to pick out half of salted egg yolk from his dumpling, and offers it to the spouse.

Wei Ying laps up the yummy powdery morsel off the husband’s finger while holding onto his own half of the dumpling. He pouts and gives the most endearing ‘Please Sir, May I Have Some More’ face - although he’s not really asking for more salted egg yolks -, “Lan Zhan, are you saying that they will win? And the Jiang sect will be wiped out for good? What should we do?" he asks rapidly, and his face turns into a frown.

Lan Zhan looks up to the bright sky, chews on a perfectly steamed sweet chestnut thoughtfully and sighs - which Wei Ying interprets as a decision that weighs heavily on his shoulder, which would be far-reaching and immensely impactful given his status as the Jade Emperor.

"Lan Zhan?" Curious. A little impatient. Increasingly desperate. Awaiting the final answer.

The husband plucks and slides a mushroom from his half of the dumpling into Wei Ying's slightly agape mouth. The younger man protests, but munches and swallows it down nevertheless - it's too tasty to be ignored.

"We cannot stop the enemy, because fate is on their side this time.

Wei Ying, do you think our farms and shops could employ a hundred more rather underaged workers?

Will you let Jiang Cheng become the manager for one of our stores in the Market Streets?

Would you like Jin Ling to reunite with the last survivors of the Jin sect, and let him live a fulfilling life graced with golden and white peonies, with us in the peaceful, safe streets of Yiling?”

Wei Ying opens and shuts his mouth a few times at the ridiculous suggestions - and then he realizes what Lan Zhan, the Grand Patriarch of the family, has just spoken.

The remaining living Jiang Sect members and sole surviving ruling family member from Lanling, Jin Ling, are offered a lifeline to take shelter and survive, then thrive in Qishan, under the wings of the great Kingdom. It's probably the best promise Wei Ying has known in recent times: to have all his remaining sect and family members - including the Jin nephew - transferred to a new sanctuary and to start anew, safe and sound.

.

Jin Ling watched how the loving couple sat at a distance, watching over the water-supply operations while intimately sharing a rice dumpling - he gagged and eww'd when they fed foodstuff into each other's mouth, and he rolled his eyes whenever their gazes locked at one another. He'd never seen the Han Guang Jun talk so much before, and he appeared calm while the da jiu is as lively as ever, cycling through all sorts emotional expressions over the span of fifteen minutes - and finally, when Wei Wuxian crumbled into teary, ugly sobs, hugged the other man, and kept shouting hoarse "Yes, I do"s- Jin Ling simply shook his head and threw his hands up in the air in a 'Whatever, I Give Up' manner, and goes back to barking nice orders to forty other boys working hard under midday sun to bring water to their xiongdi s.

Notes for the Chapter:

More twists and turns! Wheeee!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 87

It's a strange, rather erotic and depraved dream born of sticky rice dumplings, too much pork lard, and indigestion, really.

Lan Zhan found himself as an eight year old boy once again, and for some unknown reasons, his little feet skipped hurriedly across rocks, white zen gardens and gravel paths from building to building in the Cloud Recesses. He was running late after being detained after class for having a crumpled piece of 'secret message' in his balled fist - he'd snatched one particular ball of paper in mid-air while it was passed around a circle of mischievous students during calligraphy class. Ironically, the elderly bearded laoshi (teacher) caught his wrist at the most inopportune moment, and forced his little fingers open to reveal the booby-trapped prize.

Someone called out on Lan Zhan just in time, and when the ball of crumpled paper was unfolded, scores of fighting crickets jumped out and caused the laoshi to scream like a woman. Adding to the insult, the parchment contained juvenile lewd jokes and toilet humour about the said Calligraphy laoshi written in the ugliest, squiggly handwriting ever. Most rational, educated men would know that the entire farce had been a set up, but the laoshi would have none of it.

"Lan Wang Ji! You disappoint me as my star student! Stand at the corner of the classroom after the lesson for an hour, and reflect on your mistakes!" the laoshi yelled, livid and fuming.

And so, little Lan Zhan who wouldn't argue back or stand up to defend himself, had to run through some dimly lit shortcuts, usually small alleys between wooden homes, to reach the Jingshi as soon as he could. The sun was high in the sky, everyone had gone and stayed in their houses to have lunch and avoid the afternoon heat.

One of the nearby buildings served as temporary homestays for visitors. They were usually merchants, nomadic farmers or invited guests of the Gusu Lans. The eight year old boy didn't particularly like the neighbour that lived in a block opposite of Jingshi. It housed a sleazy, unshaven and unkempt-looking man in his twenties, who was always seen sitting at the doorstep with a leg raised, drinking a sweet-smelling water that left the boy breathless and heady every time he passed by the leaf-ridden porch (never mind that Gusu Lan's over-4000 rules forbid the consumption of liquor in their premises; this is just a dream after all).

Little Lan Zhan tip-toed and tried to cross the ungated porch as quietly as possible, but alas, luck was not on his side. A crunch of clothed shoes on pebbled grounds, and a slightly hairy hand emerged from the shadowed open doorway to grasp his forearm, and hauled him in like a recoiling snake that had caught a tasty prey.

The eight year old child yelped but was quickly silenced by a thick meaty palm across his mouth. He was thrown to a corner of a dark room where he cowered in fear. The man was topless, his bared shoulders and torso looked menacing with only a pair of pants on him, smelled heavily of the sweet liquid, and loomed dangerously above.

“Lan Wang Ji-ah-Lan Wang Ji, you're a naughty boy. I've told you before, if you want to use the shortcut through my home, you must pay a fee. Where is the piece of gold, and the ones you promised from the days before?” he bellowed.

The smell was very strong, and little Lan Zhan began to feel a little dizzy. “I- I don’t have the money, Sir. Please let me go this time? I was punished by my laoshi so I’m late for lunch, and I’m very hungry,” he explained as best as he could, hoping that the man with glowing red eyes would release him and let him be on his way home.

The man shook his head and smiled hungrily; he licked his lips - it was very disturbing especially in the dingy room with no windows, a closed locked door, and sparsely furnished with a plain bed and a small dressing table.

“I’m very hungry too, my boy. Since you do not have any gold pieces with you, you’ll have to pay with something else, like a live chicken or two,” the man crouched and started to touch little Lan Zhan inappropriately, by peeling off the boy’s robes, shoes and the drawstrings to his pants.

“But Uncle Wei, I do not have any live chickens in my home, since they’re reared in the common coop near the courtyard,” the boy weakly protested. He knew what was coming, but he tried to reason with the dirty uncle and hoped to escape the increasingly hopeless situation.

“No, no, A-Ji,” the man toot-toots (oh how Lan Zhan hated that nickname!) while shaking a forefinger, and that finger dove underneath the waistband and Lan Zhan squeaked in panic. “You always have a chicken with you... here, your cute xiao ji ji (little chick),” the man guffawed so loud that the room seemed to shake a little. Lan Zhan struggled to pull out the invading hairy forearm from his pants, but it was useless - thick sweaty fingers groped at his loincloth and pawed at a tube-like phallus along with twin ballsacks underneath it.

“Let me play with your xiao ji ji and its two quail eggs for an afternoon, and I will make sure you will be fed well. I have rice dumplings and pork roast in the kitchen and we can have a feast together, you and me!” the man suggested. Lan Zhan squirmed, clearly uncomfortable, as he was slowly dragged step by step towards the filthy-looking stained bed that had no bedspread but only a few ragged unwashed pillows. His clothes and school bag had been pulled off and left in a messy heap on the floor, and his white loincloth hung limply from a tall lamp on the wall - Uncle Wei is good with bow and arrows, and is talented with flying projectiles as well.

“B- But I have to do my homework in the afternoon! I cannot stay! Please let me go!” Lan Zhan begged desperately and started to cry. The man reacted by gleefully swatting the boy’s vulnerable buttocks until they became twin globes of reddened tomatoes. “Are you deaf? I said, stay here and be a good boy! I will even help you with your homework! What more do you want?!” the man shouted and teary-eyed Lan Zhan hiccuped loudly from misery. The child curled himself into a ball on the floor by the bed.

“Don’t be shy, let this uncle see your crotch. Uncle will be very gentle today, just like yesterday and the day before. Surely you know how good it feels, A-Ji?” the man reached down and picked up the boy, bridal style, before depositing him onto the dank bed - there are dried patches of Uncle’s “happy milk” from previous occasions; Uncle Wei didn’t wash his bed, and the boy retched inwardly at the thought and residual stench.

Lan Zhan felt numb and his mind had instinctively shut down at that point - it’s an automatic psychological defense that his body puts up - because it’s so useless, he can never escape from this nightmare -, so his thin body refused to move, even while the older man spread-eagled him and arranged his limbs for the perfect “playtime”, a buffet spread for the man who salivated at the sight of virginal youthful boy-skin. He didn't even flinch when he felt a wet slimy tongue slither all over his face and into his mouth in an alcohol-infused, suffocating kiss, while strong, bruising calloused fingers roamed lustfully all over his young, smooth body. Not a single inch of skin was spared from the unpleasant touch.

The eight year old knew what the man did was wrong, because molesting an innocent adolescent is a terrible crime according to Gusu Lan rule number 57 - but when the man asked if there was a rule that forbids disobeying elders, Lan Zhan could only nod - Yes Sir, he said, it is Rule Number 3. Uncle Wei said that logically, the higher the rank of the rule, the more important it is - and little Lan Zhan had to agree reluctantly, because it was logical after all. Hence, the little boy willingly subjected himself to constant harassment and unwanted touches by the dirty uncle, because he was bound by Rule Number 3.

Little Lan Zhan hadn't started building muscles at the tender age of eight, and still had some baby fat on his abdomen, so he really disliked it when the uncle made noisy slurpy squishy sounds when he nibbled, licked, and bit the jiggly bits (he felt like he was being devoured by a predator), or when fingers raked his twin sensitive pink nubs on the chest until they flared up and swelled a little, or when his toes were ticklishly sucked one by one and his feet and soles were worshipped - which left the boy feeling more confused than scared -, or when the uncle took disgusting breathes through his oily nose buried into his thin hairless armpits or the crack between his silky lean buttocks, or when the uncle finally had enough of foreplay, started to rub his leaking snake-like six-inch sweaty penis excitedly against the boy's smooth thighs and legs, growling out very dirty words which the boy couldn't understand yet, while letting rough fingers and greedy lips do their terrible, but gentle, loving deeds unto the boy's exposed genitals.

“Come, come, A-Ji, let Uncle see you tingle again today, just like the days before. The more you do it, the better it feels,” the drunken man moaned as he started to suck the cute tiny boy-penis eagerly like a popsicle, letting tongue swirl roughly - almost painfully - around the unprepared exposed peeled-back pink tip, sending electricity running through the boy’s nerve-ends because Lan Zhan couldn’t understand what was going on with his underaged body. The tongue licked the pee slit again and again, while Lan Zhan gasped like a fish out of the water on the bed - because he couldn’t breathe -, and continued to jab and knead the mind-blowing ultra-sensitive spot beneath the adolescent’s penis glans.

Then, without warning, the man swallowed the entire short length and milked the boy as much the hungry mouth’s sweet, sloppy sucking motions would allow. Fingers caressed, fondled and vibrated deep into unripe testicles in a valiant effort to stir unborn sperm cells awake. Little Lan Zhan was forced to experience an adult’s pleasure before his time, and felt new sensations rippling through warming, gradually engorged and tightening immature glands, blood vessels, penile muscles and rising boy-balls. He was inexperienced, didn’t know what to do or how to react - so he thrashed futilely on the bed, tried to kick away the unruly pervert assailant, at the same time his body sang and arched at unfamiliar pleasure coursing through his wildly twitching penis - because he had been trained far too often by Uncle Wei to respond to the man’s loathsome touch - and he screamed, moaned, groaned uncharacteristically for a boy who hadn’t gone through his first wet orgasm.

The eight-year old boy finally “tingles” with shuddering hips and trembling limbs with a glazed look on his tear-streaked face coloured redder than hot peppers. He grunted uncontrollably, yet rhythmically, jerked his hips high and straight into Uncle Wei’s waiting mouth and throat, and the latter gladly swallowed and milked the quivering organ to the last twitch. It was, as usual, a seedless experience but the boy managed to ooze out, probably ejaculate in a very raw way, a sweet-tasting nectary droplet or two that smelled a little of pee, which Uncle Wei happily drank up as thirstily as a jar of Emperor Smiles.

Uncle Wei continued to sexually assault the naked boy with his brand of gentle loving for the rest of the afternoon. He never really caused pain to little Lan Zhan in a visceral sense, other than a few light bruises and scratches when things get a little too heated - such as when the uncle climbed on top of the boy and trapped the latter beneath his body, and he grind and rubbed his hard, wanting cock excitedly over the boy's tired penis in a classic act of mutual masturbation - their crotch became sticky with drying crusty cum from the uncle's ejected "happy milk"; and the (un)invited guest of the Gusu Lan sect named Wei Wuxian would whisper hotly into the boy's red earlobes, "Wang Ji-ah-Wang Ji, please hurry up and grow faster, so that Uncle can play with you lots and lots, everyday."

Little eight-year old Lan Zhan tingled throughout the afternoon, with tears, distraught and pleasure clearly evident on his flushed sweaty face, and distantly, he wondered if it was the right thing to do.

.

Lunch was filling, and his homework was completed - despite constantly having feather-light touches and tugs playing the stiff 'flute' alternating with sharp taut strokes that left the boy more agitated than satisfied -, little Lan Zhan managed to complete his assignments with Uncle Wei giving answers to all the questions in the workbook. That's cheating, Lan Zhan cried out in frustrated tears, not because of sadness or fear, but because the man refused to stop molesting the slightly inflamed and generously abused angry-red pre-pubescent penis, or from annoyingly sticking fingers into the boy's virginal butthole.

No, it's not cheating, the naked man explained calmly while stretching the equally naked boy's ass like preparing a fruit snack - Uncle Wei did say that he would like to have a tasty eight-year old pre-teen's ass for dessert, after all. "It's only cheating if one copies from others, but not if others willingly gives you the answers, just like the awesome Wei Wuxian", the man beamed his infamous million-dollar smile - a habitual liar, really. The boy remained unconvinced, and uncomfortable from those fingers wiggling inside his butt. That place is dirty, he had said, but the older man simply dared the boy and lifted up the perky buttocks to give it a lavish lick with a devilish grin. The rimjob creeped out the adolescent even more.

(Lan Zhan had to write a page of calligraphy too, and faced nearly insurmountable problems to complete the assignment. He was forced to go down on all fours in front of a low writing desk, and the uncle happily slid beneath him between the legs, enjoying the boy's dangling, irritated and swollen genitals like sucking delicate juicy grapes off the vine, one by one. Uncle Wei gently scolded the boy that 'if he could do handstands and calligraphy at the same time, surely he is talented enough to write and get his tingles simultaneously too'. The eight-year old boy did not back down from the challenge, so he trained his hands to work separately, overcoming the chaos and whirlwind of bodily pleasures that wrecked his tiny pre-teen body. Uncle Wei enjoyed feeling premature orgasms running along the boy's adorable penis while rolling the quivering organ with his wet tongue, fluffing his face into the boy's crotch until his nose rubs the delicate line between those two plump quail eggs and sniffs deeply - ah, fresh young boy's perfume! - and he could never, never neglect the said boy-eggs too, so he thoroughly enjoys pulling each delicate immature grape-like testicle from the tight ballsacks, suck them like hard candies with such vigorous vibrations until the boy experiences the very first budding signs of testicular orgasms; as well as getting a free show of how an underaged body responded, blossomed and ripened into sexy shades of tantalizing reds with plenty of hip-thrusts, involuntary tremors and tasty high-pitched moans on the side.)

During the afternoon, the child's abuse and trauma continued unabated, when the man unveiled a strange black box known as a 'television' in the closed room. Together, they watched - to the boy's bewilderment - moving pictures, or rather, movies depicting men and children engaged in forbidden reproductive acts and uncensored sexual intercourse. Of course, little Lan Zhan couldn't understand what he was watching, but the terrifying and strangely titillating visuals, sounds, acts, gestures, how gyrating bodies moved and moulded into one, or many ganging up on one with violent thrusts, people grunting on top another, spooning side by side, with dreamy and overjoyed flushed faces, sometimes pained and discomfort, of little boys dick-fencing and putting their xiao ji ji s into one another, of little boys trembling sensuously between grown men's legs because they experienced heaven that the eight-year old couldn't fathom, of a little boy on the floor, surrounded by horny, lusty nude masked grown-ups, and they queue to force themselves upon the squealing victim, laughing mockingly as they take their pleasures from the helpless pre-pubescent precocious body, one by one, leaving a gooey white bubbly mess between thighs, legs and buttocks, inside gaping jaws and upon delicate hands... and all other manners of number of individuals, sex positions and speed - awakened something inside the boy.

"This, A-Ji, is hardcore child pornography. But you wouldn't know how to pronounce that, would you? If you like it so much, come to Uncle's home every day, and we'll play with your xiao ji ji and watch more of these shows, okay?" the voice was evil, tempting and dripped with poisoned aphrodisiacs because it made the boy's skin crawl, and yet he really, really wanted to know more .

The eight-year old squirmed and tried to close his legs because his xiao ji ji stuck out again, to his frustration - however, the man closed a fist around the cute pinkie-sized flesh, leaned closer, breathed heavily into the boy's ears and throat, taking his sweet time to inhale the boy's long lush hair, nibble at earlobes and graze lips over the boy's; his other hand busied itself around little Lan Zhan's attractive rump, incessantly pinching, groping the springy ass cheeks, then, shoved fingers between them until with up to three lubricated fingers inside, knuckle-deep. Lan Zhan found difficulty to breath again, when the fingers wiggled, scissored and massaged a particular spot that sent tendrils of white-hot sparkles to his nerves, causing goosebumps to prickle all over the adolescent's nubile body.

"Uncle...you- you're a... a... rapist..." Lan Zhan moaned incoherently, voice pleading in an almost too irresistible way.

"You learnt that from the television, didn't you? You naughty boy," the man seethed and sucked possessively on the boy's nape and naked shoulders until angry red bruises appeared. "It's not rape if it's consensual, my sweet, sweet A-Ji," he added. Uncle Wei took out the hand that pleased the bum, shook his coated fingers to flick away residual lubricant gel and body-warmed boy-juices, then gently guided the boy's free hands to his own wanting, lusting six-inch cock.

"Con... sen... ?" the boy couldn't think straight, let alone pronounce such a difficult word. The fist on the boy-penis started pistoning, gradually shifting to faster speeds, making shlicky tasty sounds.

"Mmm-hmm. It's not rape if it feels good, A-Ji. It's not rape if you want it," the man growled; the thought of adorable A-Ji willingly using his little hands to pleasure the man sent desire coursing in the veins; he quickly grows rock-hard, ready for a stellar performance in bed, or anywhere, as long as he can spend hours inside the tight little hot cavern. The delirious eight-year old boy was promptly pushed to the floor and pillows appeared beneath his hips; the boy yelped when his legs are roughly pulled apart and his hips were bent at an awkward angle, so that the lubricated rosebud glistened teasingly at Uncle Wei.

“Wang Ji-ah-Wang Ji, do you feel good? The way uncle is touching you now,” a few more strokes, of rough hands handling the fragile delicate body and sweet tender swollen genitals, and the boy moaned very loudly. “Do you want more? Uncle can give you more. Just say ‘please rape my boy-pussy’ while holding up your butt like that, uncle will give you many more nice tingles,” the man offered with a drippy, venom-coated voice.

“Ahhh... feel... good!.... want... more!... Uncle Wei, please, please r-rape my b-b-boy puss... pussy!”

The thoroughly confused and scared boy mumbled several more sweet dirty phrases taught by the man while getting deflowered for the first time. The giddy uncle stroked himself to an explosive climax within a matter of minutes. The first five thick shots went straight into the eight-year old’s tight puckered hole - the man had instructed him to spread and pull his buttocks wide open so that he could watch each ejaculation enter and fill the sweet hot virginal tunnel.

Then, Uncle Wei growled in a menacing, almost crazed manner, and mounted little Lan Zhan. The boy panicked, cried, nearly fainted from the crushing weight and the fresh searing hot pain tearing through in his ass, while breathing in the dirty uncle’s sweaty odours - because he was flattened and drilled into the floor - the huge hairy penis mercilessly slid in and out of the moist canal, stretching, pounding, agonizingly - the boy nearly threw up because his insides were stuffed and pushed out, and he nearly lost his earned lunch - Uncle Wei groaned like an animal above him, grinding, thrusting, slamming at a very fast pace, murmuring terrible words of “If you were a girl, you would be knocked up by now. Get pregnant, you bitch! Carry my babies inside you, you pussy-boy! Brat! Whore! AHHH!” and many other strange words and sounds that little Lan Zhan didn’t know - and when Uncle Wei’s hips trembled, then pushed the boy into the floor with all his might and shouted - roared - an alarmed Lan Zhan cried and grimaced in great pain and immense shock because something hot, liquidy, molten, shot out like cannons and bulged his insides, swelling, filling, he felt bloated, contaminated, dirtied, violated, torn, something precious was stolen, taken.

His xiao ji ji tingled sometime during the uncle’s second peak, and squirted pee because he lost control of his bladder - but it didn’t feel so good any more.

.

Lan Zhan wakes up with a start, and curses in his dialect language. When he sits up, a hand on his forehead to block out the midday sun, he hears footsteps crunching on damp soil.

“Lan Zhan! You’re up! I went to collect some herbal plants since you looked so peaceful resting on the slope,” then Lan Zhan’s eyes become as wide as saucers when he stares, horrified, at a bunch of prickly cut stems and needle-like leaves appear from behind his shoulders, then hover above his crotch - he has a massive hard-on! - and shakes the leaves suggestively over the tent in his pants.

The older man immediately swats the offending bunch of herbs and pushes the mischievous imp away.

“I had a ten-minute nap and dreamt about hunting jungle fowls during summer time. It must be because of the salted egg yolk that I missed chasing and catching fat chickens in my arms!” the younger man laughs out loud, “What on earth caused you to suffer like that for almost an hour?” and his laughs descends into ugly cackles and belly-deep guffaws, “Tell me, Lan Zhan, what did you dream about? You never want to tell me about your dreams anyway!”

Lan Zhan nnnghs indignantly, rises to his feet, and his face sours when he realizes the tent in his pants left visible stains as well. A double blow to his tarnished reputation, right in front of the spouse who was gleefully entertained at his expense.

“Nightmares caused by the dumplings, maybe. Going down to the lakebed to get it washed off,” the older man says curtly, cutting off the conversation with his strained expression, and walks off with an awkwardly stiff off-balanced gait, because of that stubborn erection. Wei Ying crumbles into a fit of giggles when he notices the cum-stains, and happily swats Lan Zhan’s rear with the bunch of herbs.

“Ha ha ha! Got it, got it. I’ll drop off these herbs to Jin Ling and follow you down the lake. There are a few pools of fresh water behind those mud-caked cliffs, you can do your laundry there away from prying eyes!” Wei Ying calls out and cheerfully waves the husband off, again with the herbs.

Higher up the lakeside slope, Jin Ling has become better at nicely ordering forty teenage disciples to do his bidding of carrying water efficiently from the drained lake. He spies how his da jiu spans Han Guang Jun's front and back with grasses, laughing non-stop, and thought that the two were distastefully childish despite their ages and life achievements. He shrugs and bites into a dumpling, before ordering the first twenty workers to take a lunch break - da jiu had brought a basket full of dumplings earlier, and there are enough to feed the entire troop.

.

The cracked surface on the lakebed is impressive, when viewed on ground level and in real life rather than on a cheap holo-phone screen, Lan Zhan thought. The sun is getting hotter, and the soil has started to turn dusty and dry, interspersed with patches of soft wet mud where shrinking pools start to disappear. The temperature swings are wild, at least for the next few days before the cold front and the accompanying Imperial forces hit the Pier with guns blazing, figuratively speaking.

There is so much to think and mull over, but Lan Zhan focuses on the immediate task at hand - to wash the cummy stains on his pants. He would rather die than to ask for a bucket of water from Jin Ling's troops while sporting a third leg between his first two - and he's fortunate to find a hidden inlet between cliffs along the lakeside. There, he could strip his pants, squat near a freshwater pool without any fear of being spotted because of the high walls that shelter them from sight and outside elements.

Wei Ying too, took the opportunity to rub away plant material from the legs of his pants; during the herb hunt, he'd carelessly walked through bushes that oozed sticky sap when twigs were broken, and marshland grass that left cottony seeds that stuck to the aforementioned sap.

Soon, both men lingered in the private little alley-like structure, waiting for their pants to dry. Unsurprisingly, being pantless meant Wei Ying was free to seduce and touch the husband. From shy pokes to gentle tickles to naked thighs and glutes, then naughty fingers snaked from between the legs to grasp and cup heavy balls, after that the giggly spouse walked back and forth around the helpless and frustrated husband, playfully grab, release, grab again, stroke hard ten times until the latter almost one-twos, then release again.

Just when Lan Zhan had enough and managed to pin the delinquent spouse against a wall, his mouth busies in leaving bruising kiss-marks on the pale neck when the long hair is pushed aside, breaths heavy and panting, hands roam around the expanse of Wei Ying's back and tweaked nipples at the front, while the other moans and pleads for more, more. The older man's hard, swollen cock is engorged with lust-filled blood, heavy and very, very leaky because he had an unfulfilling wet dream and now, a sex-kitten in the midst, and he nearly fainted from the bursting pressure in his loins and twitches one-two times impatiently, spilling a very thick, rich dollop right at the squirming spouse's rosebud entrance with a release that comes with fireworks in his vision and the volcanic rise of sweet, sweet tension, trembling legs, ready to unload the first of many, many eruptions--

Suddenly, a rustling sound. A large shadow darted from the side and then above, followed by the sounds of fleeting footsteps.

"Lan Zhan! Someone stole our pants!" the younger man wails in panic.

Notes for the Chapter:

One anonymous, narrow-minded, selfish, arrogant, pompous and cowardly commenter ranted about the rape, pedo and zoophilia kinks in this fic. Oh wow, a rare flame indeed.

Challenge accepted. Here's two out of three kinks. I'll work on the third one in the coming days.

Like I said before, don't take things too seriously.

If you get triggered for some reason, it's not my fault. You read, you weep :-)

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

p.s. Added a little more yummy details!

Chapter 88

It is a comical sight, to see two healthy and sound-minded men, streaking across the plains that used to be the bottom of a famous lake. Springy asses bounce in broad daylight; never mind the frontal fleshy bits sway and dangle in all directions as well.

Both Wei Ying and Lan Zhan sprinted after a shadowy figure that had snatched their precious pants. Without the crucial garments, they couldn't return to Lotus Pier, not when innocent pimple-faced virgin teenage boys and the prickly Jin Ling are still around. The scars in their lives would be horrendous, indeed, if they lay their eyes on the dangly bits of the fearsome Yiling Patriarch and the highly esteemed - and shamelessly well-endowed - Han Guang Jun; the latter sports the largest, most daunting looking swollen red throbbing meatstick between his legs, because he had a terribly wet dream first, then edged to an explosive climax that never came.

The two pursued the thief and ended up in a hidden tunnel which used to be underwater. Wei Ying remarked that he never knew there was an entrance beneath the lake, because nobody thought of diving deep into the water when natural bounties such as lotus and fish could be easily harvested from the surface.

“Lan Zhan! Look, the walls are damp with drying lake weeds, algae growth and other slippery slimy stuff!” Wei Ying pointed out the obvious. “And over there around the bend, I think I see a strange bluish light!”. The path was straightforward - there were no branches or junctions - however, the floor was slick, and there was barely any light, so they made their way slowly across the mysterious cave, by following the sounds of footsteps that echoed off circular walls.

“Wei Ying... ahhhhh!” the older man hissed and groaned breathily. He bit his lips to avoid making too much sound, lest they alerted the pant(y)-thief to their presence. Wei Ying grabbed his cock and gave it a few good strokes that felt really, really good - after five rough yanks, the desperately horny middle-aged man was ready to unload the boiling lava dancing inside his loins.

“What is it, Lan Zhan? Wh-- Oh my goodness, I thought it was a bit too thin to be your wrist! I’m so sorry, it’s just too dark in here!” came the alarmed reply shrouded in inky blackness, followed by the utmost disappointing loss of fingers on his trigger-happy penis. Lan Zhan didn’t mind the spouse’s unintended mistake - because they’re all flawed men, after all -, however the latter continued to make very inappropriate moves - a pinch to the nipple, a poke into the bouncy exposed buttocks, and more unforgiving touches to his steel-hard boner pointing to the ceiling - that the husband wondered if Wei Ying was truly apologetic as he sounded.

Soon, they approached the end of the tunnel and everything began to take on a sheen of blue. The tunnel seemed to open up to a cavernous enclosure, reminiscent of the cave that the couple had been below the waterfalls in the Cloud Recesses, nearly two decades ago. With better lighting, Wei Ying rushed ahead while the husband was rewarded by a seductive view of the spouse's springy ass-cheeks that he knew too well in heart and memory - the texture, the firmness, and the welcoming sweet, sweet heated softness in between - and his angry-red penis nodded a one-two in an ode to joy, and spat out a long drop of thick milky white (again). “Unnh, Unnh, Aaah,” the older man gasped uncontrollably as a string of pre-orgasmic tremors rocked his pelvis and spine; he simply couldn’t contain his excitement despite not being physically touched.

The stimulating sounds were loud enough to be heard within the entire tunnel. To Lan Zhan's horror, suddenly something huge, tinted with bluish-white, snatched Wei Ying with lightning-quick speed from the mouth of the opening into the wider cave within. His yells - "Lan Zhan! Save meeee! Aiiieee!" - made the older man's blood run cold despite the warmth radiating in his hips.

.

"Wei Ying! What should I do?!" Lan Zhan shouted desperately. When he emerged into the enclosure, a massive white rabbit as big as a horse lay on the ground bedded with straw, with its legs splayed - and Wei Ying was caught beneath its forepaws. Its fuzzy coat glowed white with a tinge of blue like bright summer skies, its majestic ears were as long as a man's arm - when they flicked, Lan Zhan's heart melted a little -, its body was appealingly fat, cuddle-worthy soft and round, and an adorable tuft sprouted from its rump.

The spouse, half buried under incredibly soft puffy fur, screamed for Lan Zhan not to come close, otherwise the rabbit may snap his body into two with deadly-looking sharp incisors, if not crush the man with its tremendous weight. The monstrously cute creature turned his head, gave Lan Zhan an evil pink-tinged, bauble-like stare, snorted and grinded its teeth.

The front paws stomped impatiently, angrily at Wei Ying's belly, and he grimaced.

“Lan Zhan! I have to tell you something, but you may not like it! It’ll help to make the creature release me, so please listen to this explanation, for my sake!” the younger man shouted, as though pleading for his life.

“Mn...!”

Lan Zhan blinked his eyes, when a buzz droned in his ears and he realized that he was hearing voices in his head; Wei Ying reached out to him using ErNet.

“Last night, a large snake visited our bedroom while you were asleep. It’s a Thousand-Year Snake deity, a local god overseeing the lake, related to Zidian’s serpentine ancestor. The deity begged for a bite of Immortal essence, because it was starving after the lake was drained and the fishes had disappeared.

So, I took the decision to let it sip a little from you, because I couldn’t bear to see the Jiangs’ spiritual guardian die under such circumstances. I’m so sorry Lan Zhan, although it didn’t hurt you, but I didn’t realize it would come to this!

I was such a fool, to dare myself and barter with a deity, rather than giving freely what it wanted! I told the snake that I wanted something in exchange for your essence, because I’m your rightful wife, therefore I deserve fair compensation. I’m so ashamed, lao gong , I really am!

The deity offered a longer life in this mortal realm, but I said no, because you are a king of gods, and therefore you live eternally beyond reincarnations. Then it offered strength, and again I denied, because you are the greatest of men, so you are beyond any mere physical attributes. Then I suggested my deepest desires - that the bond of our love is everlasting - and the snake agreed.

Now that I think of it, the snake did mention that your desire for me is already as perpetual as everyday, therefore, it will do something to 'fix' the imbalance. I... I think it blessed you with the gift of emitting pheromones! The deity must have thought to inject sweet scented aromatics into your body so that I would always be captivated by you - which I already am! - but it seems it works indiscriminately on local gods and deities too!

This... this - ooof! - overweight local god of fertility, a Thousand-Year Rabbit, is attracted to your scent and perceived me as a love-rival!"

What should I do? Tell me, I will do whatever it takes to save you from harm! , Lan Zhan telepathically reached out to his struggling spouse. The exposition was lengthy, but needed - he didn't even want to think about what was 'injected' into him and how, because all that mattered was to get Wei Ying away from the horrendous bunny of death.

"You have to mate with the giant rabbit until it is satisfied!"

.

It has been a long time coming, Lan Zhan tells himself. From a very young age, he had a strange, twisted obsession for those silent, cute things, although he never really understood why and when the fetish started. He used his experience in handling pet rabbits during this dramatic life-and-death situation; he crept up slowly, hands relaxed so that the rabbit wasn't provoked. He easily reached its rear and gently patted the rotund bum. The rabbit responded as expected, by raising its hips, splaying its hind legs further and wiggled its tail invitingly.

What happened next was nearly instinctual. He didn't know how men mounted rabbits, much less a gigantic one, but somehow he knew how to caress its back lovingly, rubbed deep into its heavenly velvety fur and into certain bundles of nerves and muscles, then lifted up the cuddlesome tail and for some unknown reason, he just aimed and shoved it in at the right time, right angle, and into the right hole. He was somehow mesmerized by the glowing fur, and all he could think was to grasp more, more, to twirl, fluff, spread and squeeze all glorious silky warm fur - never mind about hygiene or the ickiness of inter-species insemination - his erection just slid in without any resistance, encased in sweet heat, it is as tight as he imagined but the passageway was much longer and undulated with a tempo that squeezes in time with the creatures quick breathing, and sent his loins into instant overdrive.

Having been played and held out for too long, the first thrust detonated his pent-up cock - literally. He exploded upon impact, and the inner walls of the warm, warm flesh milked and massaged his wildly twitching penis. Five, ten, fifteen, twenty, the convulsions just kept on coming, rolling through his urethra and cockslit, feverishly erupting copious amounts of overheated seed to pool inside the rabbit's womb-like tunnel of love.

Lan Zhan grappled and clawed mindlessly at the rabbit's rounded back, hnngh-ing and moaning deliriously throughout his ordeal as he was squeezed dry by the heat and the vice grip of muscular walls - and was rewarded with an appreciative squeal from the lover-cum-animal.

“Lan Zhan! Don’t stop! You must mate it like how a buck ruts its chosen doe! Keep thrusting at the fastest speed possible, and keep going on for as many rounds as you can!” Wei Ying wailed from the other side of the animal. The rabbit must have felt some pangs of pleasure from the act, as it started to wheeze and pant heavily and drooled over Wei Ying’s face.

Lan Zhan “Mn...!” with renewed determination, and mustered his godly abilities to turn his spent cock before its thirtieth twitch, into a red-hot pistoning steel rod committing suicide into the depths of the beast. He fucked so hard, so fast and so deep, until his body turned tomato-red and his legs trembled and nearly collapsed because they could not hold their weight any more after being electrocuted by unending nerve-destroying pleasure rippling, blasting out from his pelvis, polishing his dying penis raw against the rabbit’s womb full of folds and mind-blowing hnngh-inducing contractions, everything has gone numb, his vision spun, his throat was hoarse with roars and screams that he no longer heard, his fingers crazily pawed and scratched at any surface possible, his breathing nearly stopped, his babymaker spewed all manners of liquids and bodily fluids, and yet he forced himself to continue the unholy act of breeding the creature that he always loved.

The Thousand-Year Rabbit squealed.

.

Lan Zhan knew he'd reached a sort of pre-nirvana. A trance, when the body has stopped functioning, but the mind is awake. A dream-like state, before one's soul departs, or returns - it didn't matter.

It was strange that he'd return to this nightmare. He could have gone to other realms, explored unimaginable possibilities, watched himself do things that he couldn't before - but no, fate was perhaps cruel at the outset, and he found himself as the eight-year old once again.

Little Lan Zhan was 'kidnapped' again by the dirty uncle and forced to stay in the latter's home, whom he started to affectionately call shushu (叔叔), because the uncle insisted that he is a young virile man, and doesn't age like a normal person, apparently. They played every day, many times over the passing seasons, as long as the shushu stayed in the Cloud Recesses as an (un)invited guest for some unknown reasons. Over time, habit becomes a comforting friend, and the eight-year old boy stopped resisting and complaining about the sex offender living next door.

He'd drop by after morning class, and upon entering the smelly dank building, he remembered to shut down his natural defenses - he'd stopped running away, acted meek and subservient, and talked using words that the shushu ordered him to - and started smiling a little more. He was inculcated with twisted, perverse ideas and thoughts about relationships between a grown-up adult and a child, due to the time spent daily with the man.

"Uncle Wei, was that my older brother?" Lan Zhan asked, naked, sitting cross-legged on the floor.

“Yes, he dropped by with a basket of fruits. I told him you were busy with homework, and he was on his way to chop some firewood, so he left,” the shushu casually replied at the entrance to his den, and threw a ripe peach across the apartment-like home at the boy, and muttered ‘Catch!’. Nimble tiny fingers caught the fruit - when he grows up, he would be better at catching pipa s from behind too.

Guilt weighed in the boy’s heart, because his brother worked hard to keep their home warm, while he spent his afternoons keeping the uncle’s hairy penis warm and wet, either in his mouth, in his butt, or in other parts of his body. He always finished his homework after having a quick but good lunch with the rather rich uncle (whose scruffy looks and rag-like clothes contradicted his state of wealth). By two in the afternoon, he would be forced to serve the man’s lusts until close to dinner time.

Little Lan Zhan had gotten used to the smell, taste and the pain that the frightening fleshy weapon inflicted between his springy thin ass-cheeks - but the shushu had indoctrinated into him that if he didn’t think too much of the discomfort, he’d actually feel good - and he did. He tingles frequently nowadays, and his body was trained to respond well to the uncle’s touch.

When asked about touches, the shushu had taught the boy that the latter’s laoshi ’s sex-ed was correct. “See, A-Ji, there is a good touch, and a bad touch. Bad touch is painful all the time. A good touch, on the other hand, feels good. Sometimes it doesn’t in the beginning, but it’ll feel better over time. It’s just like studying for quizzes - you wouldn’t like it when you open your textbook the night before, but when you ace your test, it feels good, doesn’t it?” Uncle Wei explained his twisted logic and cuddled the boy in an embrace, or rather, entrap the victim into an inescapable prison. “So this,” a finger fiddles and plays with the boy’s exposed penis until it turned red, turgid and had its foreskin forcibly, uncomfortably peeled back, “is a good touch. Do you understand?” the uncle raised his voice and licked his lips. The boy's pale hips jerked every time the calloused thumb rubbed raw over a reddened tiny pee-hole, and he could only "Mn" in response.

Uncle Wei stripped off his pants as he entered the bedroom - of course he had to wear something when meeting an outsider like the teenage Xi Chen da ge , after all; little A-Ji, on the other hand, is an 'insider', an intimate lover, a kept toy - little Lan Zhan was told that being an 'insider' of the building meant that Uncle Wei has full access to the boy's unclothed body, including the insides. He never quoted the Gusu Lan rule that explained this strange rule, despite the repeated questions from the boy that were met with hard slaps to the cheeks, so Lan Zhan decided to avoid further abuse and left his questions unanswered.

Now that both man and boy were naked, within the locked house, with curtains drawn and no one around to disturb them, the shushu grinned hungrily and suddenly, conjured a gold nugget in his hands using prohibited magic. He crouched and intentionally showed the sparkling object to the boy, before plopping it into the latter's schoolbag.

"You never paid your fees in the past, but this kind uncle will pay for your troubles. Since I've deposited a gold nugget today, I've bought your body so you better make me feel good, brat," the man grunted and started stroking his stiffening cock right in front of the eight-year old. Little Lan Zhan, fondly known as A-Ji by the horny twenty-something man, simply "Mn"s obediently, and lies on the floor, hips raised and spread-eagled.

The eight-year old munched delicately on the offered peach - juicy and ripe, freshly plucked from the tree behind his house - while shushu knelt between the boy's legs, leaned forward and started rubbing his hard, excited twitching cock all over the boy's torso, abdomen, limbs - getting a quick handjob from sticky sweet fingers in the process - before the man became drunken with perverse desires, and humped the boy's fragile, smaller genitals. For little Lan Zhan, there's something strangely erotic, maybe "good" whenever shushu 's hairy erection pressed, kneaded and grinded against his crotch - whether from his quivering twin quail eggs or his hardening pinkie-length cock - and when he started to murmur soft sexy moans, when sweet "uunh"s and "aaah"s tumbled from his throat and out through lips, when his wee-wee stood up proudly in the air; Uncle Wei then returned to his spot and simply swooped down like a predator devouring its prey, and sucked and swallowed the boy's equally excited, swollen genitals with impressive ferocity.

Uncle Wei, the pre-teen learned, is a connoisseur of mild boy-penis flavours, and could tell the time, the state, the textures and richness of seedless fluids, and predict many things about his A-Ji. "Your xiao ji ji is ripening well," he sometimes commented, "in two years' time, you will become an adult and I will be the first to taste your coming-of-age moment," he said, and somehow, for unknown reasons, Lan Zhan felt secretly thrilled, and scared, of those words.

Back to the present, little Lan Zhan choked on the fruit a bit, because it is difficult to eat and tingle into a man's mouth at the same time. Later, the boy would take a bite of the fruit, and after a couple of chews, he would give the shushu a mesmerizing, and very tantalizing squishy blowjob. The uncle would shout obscenities and his shuddering body would lose control; the boy got his share of peach-flavoured Uncle's Happy Milk.

.

“This,” Uncle Wei announced proudly, “is a fleshlight. I could only find the girl’s version. I hope you don’t mind.” A tube-like device from unknown origin, which little Lan Zhan had never seen before nor could imagine how it worked.

A squirt of unheated lube later, the weird puffy lips ‘ate’ his boy-penis, and the eight-year old boy screamed. The mischievous shushu had every single malevolent intention to destroy the boy’s cock from the way he pistoned the object mercilessly and with too much vigour, squeezed it so that the helpless wee-wee was encased in strange taut elastic material that felt like real skin - except that it was cold -, chaffed the delicate foreskin because the boy had tingled many times earlier and was sensitive, and effectively short-circuited little Lan Zhan’s immature sexual meridians.

That was the first time, however. In the following days, the boy had gotten used to the sex toy and could survive the flesh-eating tube’s assault. It became a ‘good touch’, because after the initial harrowing and uncomfortable experience, eventually, over several sessions, it started to ‘feel good’. So in some days, the man and boy would play with each other’s privates (with the adolescent getting bulk of the sexual abuse), and then escalate things to include toys and other abusive stuff; drugs and aphrodisiacs weren’t too far away by then.

“A-Ji, you’re doing well. Move your hips higher, and push it in faster, deeper. Yes, yes, keep doing it,” the terrible shushu encouraged and cheered the boy on. Little Lan Zhan quickly learnt the pleasures of mounting on something and make his stiffy ‘feel good’ by pushing his hips back and forth repeatedly. It wouldn’t be too far of a stretch to say that A-Ji gradually enjoyed fucking a fleshlight strapped to a pillow on the bed, and later, graduated to a real sex doll. For another unknown reason, the eccentric shushu always brought female versions; he said that it feels better to do it inside a girl’s, because eight-year olds’ penises were made for fucking vaginas and he should practice making babies in them. As usual, Lan Zhan was too young to understand what was said; it didn't help that the dirty uncle always stuck fingers into the boy's butt and kept making strange raking and hooking gestures inside, which sent random sparks to his nerve-ends in tandem with the deepest energetic thrusts into the artificial pussy. It's an exercise to strengthen a special spot inside, the man gave his vague excuse, and touted to be good for one's health - so little Lan Zhan let that slide.

The heavenly experience bolstered Lan Zhan's confidence, and state of happiness whenever he stayed over in Uncle Wei's home. Sometimes he'd spend a night, citing homework-related reasons - because truthfully, Uncle Wei is a smart and shrewd businessman, and his maths and worldly knowledge is top-notch - so the boy earned better grades, and the shushu spent many more hours inside the little boy. Little Lan Zhan began to enjoy getting warm gooey creampie inside his ass, especially when the now-familiar voice of Uncle Wei became rhythmic grunts, hot breaths to the ears, uncontrolled shaking of a grown man's hips slammed tightly to his butt, unloading spurt after spurt of an adult's sperm-rich ejaculations into a little boy's tiny stretched hole.

“Ohh... Ohh... A-Ji, you're so soft, young and tight. Let uncle make more babies inside you. Uncle wants to plant many twins and triplets in your underaged boy-pussy. It feels so good, you make uncle's penis very happy every day. Squeeze your sweet baby ass a bit more, yes... ahhh... so hot, so fucking good, you're the best bitch to breed... get pregnant again... hnngh... uncle is cumming... OOOOH! OOOOH! Feel my sperm raping yours! AAAAH!” is the standard exchange during those heated lovemaking session (Lan Zhan didn't know what 'love' meant at that time, but he's fine with that).

The games with sex toys were a prelude of better things to come, to the boy's delight. Whenever the shushu felt loving and gentle, intimacy between the two lovers blossomed. Uncle Wei would act out some scenes from the porn movies they'd watched before, and let the eight-year old do some hardcore fucking into the man's asshole - sometimes affectionately called ass-pussy. They would exchange as many dirty words as the wet sloppy kisses, and little Lan Zhan was enamoured and thrilled at insane ideas of falling in (puppy) love with the man, having a romantic relationship, and live their happily ever after with bodies intertwined forever and ever.

"Ahhh... shushu , shushu , it feels so good inside you! I'm... I'm...!" the boy's shouts keen into a string of frantic wails when he tingles again and again inside the man with plenty of quaking hips and shuddering breaths; the pleasurable waves and penile twitches become stronger with each passing day. Lan Zhan had learnt a lot about puberty through textbooks, and verbally wished to be able to shoot his own "happy milk" soon. Uncle Wei granted his wish, sort of, when he made the boy drink a big jug of water prior to each session. When the bladder is full, the eight-year old was instructed to ramp up the drilling action into the man's rosebud, and expectedly, but deliriously pleasurable for the boy, little Lan Zhan squirted twenty times, pretending his pee to be volleys of sperm that hadn't been born yet. He was left breathless, boneless and nearly fainted from the exceedingly wonderful sensations radiating from his loins, and Uncle Wei too, shared the boy's joys of sexual exploration and exploitation, that the couple decided to continue playing sexy naughty games until sunset, exciting the boy's appetite for more sex, more tingles, more explosions of really good feelings.

Thus, at the tender age of eight, the prepubescent Lan Zhan had experienced sexual intercourse with men and (plastic-rubber) women, tingled a lot, and enjoyed immature orgasms as much as a fully-grown adult.

Lan Zhan thought that it felt really, really good to stay by Uncle Wei's side, forever.

.

One day, Uncle Wei caught some rabbits that were running around a pen near the Cloud Recesses' courtyard. It didn't take much for the child, whose morals, limits and rejection towards sex had been totally eroded by then, to think of fun ways to play with the furry animals. He had a penchant for rabbits, and didn't think twice to let them lick his fruit or vegetable juice-coated penis and rising balls. That cute act didn't satisfy the horny boy, so the eight-year old brazenly asked the man, “ Shushu , can we play babymaking with the bunnies? I would like to see more baby bunnies hopping around the courtyard. Pretty please?” with lovely puppy eyes. The uncle couldn't resist the sweet request.

“A-Ji, rabbits' vaginas are the best,” the awfully pervert uncle announced, “and your small birdie fits well into them, although a bit tightly.” Uncle Wei, now a known magician, cast some strange spells to hypnotize the rabbits and loosened their private bits at the rump. One by one, drunken rabbit does had their hind legs spread apart, and the man carefully lowered the animal's opening to the excited (but still quiet, reserved) adolescent's crotch. The man had played with the pre-teen's penis enough and it was fully erect, with its purplish-pink glans fully exposed.

Little Lan Zhan tingled many times inside the rabbits as promised by the man, and he peed when the latter pressed a hand into his tummy and massaged the full bladder. The warm gently erupting liquid helped to lubricate the passage, and made penetration so much easier and more pleasurable. The hot tightness was excellent and the friction was goosebumps-worthy, at least from the boy's perspective. Unrepentant and unfazed, ten rabbit does were properly inseminated that afternoon, their uteruses bruised, battered and torn by the terrible acts performed by the naive and perverted eight-year old (and masterminded by the uncle).

By dinnertime, the boy waved good-bye at his now-favourite neighbour and walked back to his house. Hot cum trickled down from his (ab)used rosebud and down his thighs. He carried home a pack of pork roast gifted by Uncle Wei - it was actually a grilled rabbit, but since nobody in the Cloud Recesses ate the animals and therefore didn't know what it looked like, so the mystery of missing rabbits was never solved - but the rabbits reproduced quickly anyway.

.

Lan Zhan woke up with a start - again. And a loud gasp for air after holding his breath for what felt like an eternity, while he was unconscious.

He found himself pantless - still - and lay on a bed of straw where the giant rabbit nested--

“Wei... Wei Ying?”

A familiar face appeared above. An angel bathed in bluish white light in the cavernous chamber. Lan Zhan figured they found an enchanted rabbit's burrow hidden beneath the lake, and the rabbit--

“Shhhhh. You were knocked out when the Thousand-Year Rabbit deity kicked you with its powerful legs, after it felt very satisfied with your actions. You’ve done well, lao gong ,” Wei Ying whispered gently, and pressed a cooling pad - made of bunched-up cloth soaked in underground water, probably - over a now-visible lump on the back of his head. Lan Zhan groaned at the throbbing pain. Wei Ying gave a quick peck at the man’s cheeks to sooth the husband’s pain.

“Ah, you flew straight into a wall and fell unconscious. That bad rabbit, after it took its pleasure from you, it screeched rudely at me and crawled out of the tunnel. It didn’t even bid us a proper good-bye, and never came back!” the younger man pouted while gesturing at the said opening to the chamber. “Luckily, I found our pants below the straw bed, so everything is still alright. You better rest a bit more before moving around,” he added, while arranging the strands of dried grass material to make a more comfortable cot for the husband.

Lan Zhan sighed and told himself that the spouse is right. It had been a strange turn of events, muddled by stranger dreams. Speaking of which--

His eyes flew open when he felt a very familiar weight on his naked crotch, straddling his hips.

“ Lao gong , you grew another big boner while you were out cold. Did you have sexy dreams again? The rabbit told me, in-between those nasty jealous screeches, that it gifted you the power of fertility in return for your services.

You would easily become horny, have tremendous sexual endurance, and be able to withstand having multiple orgasms on end,” the spouse says with an impish grin.

“Can we give it a try? Pretty Please?” Wei Ying asked seductively, and started grinding his hips sensuously before forcibly fucked himself on the helpless husband’s incredibly hard, and terribly excited cock from yet another wet dream.

Notes for the Chapter:

Revenge porn fic with a vengeance. Here's the third kink, and I tried to combine the trio... somehow, I hope it works.

That felt good. Now I'm looking for more inspiration to get this trainwreck moving along.

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 89

Like any loving couple of the present day, Wei Ying and Lan Zhan talked in length about their experiences, feelings and thoughts of the disturbing ordeal, air their grievances to one another, while enjoying a nice post-sex cuddle in each other's arms on a nest of straw recent vacated by an animal owner. Wei Ying hypothesized and solved his own trivial questions, such as why would a giant rabbit hide in a burrow beneath the lake? Answer - because in the beginning there was only a plain tunnel that led to a dead-end, as evidenced by the damp mossy walls; the Thousand-Year Rabbit found the ideal living space when the lake drained out, and broke in to make a chamber for itself, as shown by the dry ground and straw bedding material in the innermost cave. The flustered husband, still recovering from a terrifying episode of being aroused by troubling dreams, then forced to perform penetrative sex with a beast, and fortunately cleansed his penile palate by finally, finally having blessed normal intercourse with his spouse - he simply "Mn"s tiredly with an hand over his eyes to symbolically shield himself from the crazy world outside.

"Lan Zhan, you've been blessed with the enchanted All-Species Pheromones by the Thousand-Year Snake, and the Legendary Sex Drive of the Thousand-Year Rabbit. So... a gold nugget for your thoughts?" the sated younger man clings to Lan Zhan's chest in a tight embrace, as his ass-cheek continues to wantonly hump the latter's crotch. Their nether regions are a mess of crusted semen and other filth - natural bodily fluids secreted and spurted in the heat of the moment, really. Lan Zhan took his time to consider the chronological sequence of events that had transpired during the day, and Wei Ying became a little irritated when the chamber fell silent too long for comfort. The spouse mewls the husband's name again, pouty and petulantly, before letting out a wet cummy fart to emphasize his point - because Lan Zhan stretched and loosened Wei Ying too often and too much, and in all fairness, should indulge in the latter's reasonable request.

“... Mn. Three things, in my mind.

One. This morning, while mingling with the students, I realized they were strangely attracted to me, and used every opportunity to have skin contact. Showing them how to swing a sword, crouching between their legs to adjust their ready-stance, guiding their hands to hold a spatula to the wok... their requests were repetitive, illogical, I couldn't put my finger on it at that time. It was stressful. Now that I know those teenagers were trying to get their hands on me. I feel... violated, manipulated, victimized.

Two. After having those cursed dreams, I am worried that I will not be able to have regular sex anymore. The more I close my eyes and drift into that nightmare, the faster I am losing myself a little more each time. Aroused by images of adults and children, of rabbits and toys. Am I becoming a monster? Are those dreams a premonition of things to come?

Three. After we walk out of this cave, what should I do? How do I behave? Any living creatures within the radius of effect of the pheromone, human and non-humans, are sexually attracted to me. I worry that I may hurt others unintentionally. As for the sexual urges, I think my new enhanced body can withstand the pressures and strains of our everyday. But I cannot predict the outcome if multiple partners are involved.

Those are my thoughts, Wei Ying.”

Wei Ying blinked at the overtly serious husband for a full minute, before sputtering out a string of choked laughter. The husband looked incredulous, the spouse full of mirth.

“Ha ha ha! Lan Zhan-ah-Lan Zhan! You’re so funny that my stomach hurts from hearing what you’ve said! You’re such a worrywart, you will surely become constipated from the stress!” Wei Ying giggled, then accidentally let off another chain of dribbly aerosolized cum-coated farts - the husband’s passionate lovemaking had somewhat ruined the spouse’s hole, and couldn’t deflate properly for the time being. Regardless of the damage done, Wei Ying still cared for the husband, pat the older man’s head and nuzzled against the latter’s brows, like pacifying a crying child.

“Luckily your awesome wife is here to solve your problems. Lan Zhan, listen to me:

One. Don’t feel guilty for being molested by school boys half your age, because from now on, this will be a daily occurrence... maybe! Your feelings are exclusively between you and me. As long as you are mine - body, mind and soul -, I will never accuse you of cheating. So stop agonizing about having your chastity stolen, because I, Wei Wuxian, already claimed it long ago!

Two. There’s nothing wrong with having dirty wet dreams starring your spouse and your favourite pet. Our love is written in the stars, and spans across space and time, both real and unreal! In fact, I’m happy that you will think of me while you are asleep!

Three. Do you not see the implications of your newfound powers? You’re even more popular than before, and better than a stallion in bed! If others come close to you, let me know and I’ll beat them up! I’m your wife after all, and I have absolute rights to your body, so I will work hard to defend your honour! You only have to make sure to stay by my side, just as I have promised to do the same for you, for this lifetime and beyond.”

Each answer was preceded with a sweet kiss to the forehead. Wei Ying always saw things half-glass full rather than half-glass empty, and Lan Zhan felt so much better after having that heart to heart talk. He could tell, even without saying anything, that they both shared a common view - in a world of where blacks and whites are as murky as grays or muddled into other colours, where outdated traditions, presumptions and half-baked truths run rampant, Wei Ying is his pillar of light in a world of darkness. Lan Zhan knew, that even if he pillaged towns, murdered hundreds and burned babies alive, if he raped young men, grew pedophilic tendencies and enjoyed forcing himself into little children, if he developed a taste of disgusting habits such as engaging in pleasurable acts with animals or other species - which in theory, looking into his life in the past year or so, he did achieve all of these milestones - Wei Ying would still stand by his side and tell him, It's all right, It's all right, because Wei Ying has a plausible explanation for everything that has gone terribly wrong - makes things right again.

The couple cuddled a bit more into the afternoon, enjoying post orgasmic sensations running through their hyper-sensitive loins, listening to each other's heartbeats and breathing the same pocket of air - until they heard thunder rumbling in the distance. The forecasted afternoon rains will arrive soon, and they didn't plan to be trapped in rising waters inside the cavernous chamber. So they picked up their rescued pants and trotted out of the underground tunnel.

.

Lan Zhan had been so preoccupied with a turn to a new page in his book of life. He brimmed with renewed confidence of his new abilities and a fresh perspective of the world painted with Wei Ying's colours. He was so obsessed with turning the gears and machines in his mind to 'think positive', that when a couple of enemy scouts ran into them on the lakebed, he didn't hesitate to draw out Bichen and cut them down into two without first inquiring "Who are you". Bichen's strength is as sturdy as its owner's, and when Lan Zhan's spirit shines like the afternoon sun of an unseasonably warm mid-winter, even a dastardly powerful Tian member's fate is sealed when the blade is swung.

"Ah... Lan Zhan, do you see their faces and bodies?" Wei Ying asked, as he crouched in front of the bloody remains that leaked dark, poisoned blood and slowly disintegrated into black powder. "There's one of me with a cheap imitation of Suibian, one of you with a plain white forehead ribbon without the cloud patterns, and both wear such low quality and mismatched costumes. Look at this, I would never wear a black robe with rose patterns, and I do not have a jade charm sculpted like a peony flower hanging from the belt. The hair knot is tied too high like yours, his face doesn't look as handsome as me, and even the mole is on the wrong side of the face!" Wei Ying held up the slaughtered humanoid's upper torso by the collar for the husband to see, and fumed incessantly at the misrepresentations of his sacred identity.

"Mn," was the only reply, as he watched the spouse huff and puff at the disappearing and disappointing duds, while rinsing his blade in a shallow pool of lakewater. His policy - Bichen must remain perfect, flawless, and shiny at all times.

"What does this mean? Are the Tians' competence in the art of war and deception a fallacy after all? What were these two doing at the lake? Is this a mere distraction, were they looking for something, a treasure perhaps, in the lakebed, or would this be an early sign of the impending doom?” Wei Ying mused, throwing doubts and wild theories at himself.

“Whatever it is, it doesn’t bode well for those in the Pier. We can handle the enemy, but the juniors cannot. We must move them out of danger, fast,” Lan Zhan calmly stated - stern, calm, with an air of finality. Wei Ying remarked that for once, he wouldn’t argue with the husband’s points.

The skies became darker, and the first few drops of rain fell. It was going to be another long wet evening.

.

Jiang Cheng was seen pacing around the main hall when the dripping, soaked couple returned to the predominantly empty residence grounds. The beet-red Jiang gongzi , dressed in his purple vest uniform was livid, demanding - but not really seeking for an answer - where the hell Wei Ying and Lan Zhan went, when all disciples had returned and taken shelter in their dorms; afternoon classes were cancelled, routine housework was done (thanks to Wei Ying’s schedule), and everyone simply hunkered down to wait for dinner time. He was fiery enough, Wei Ying thought, which meant he had fully recovered and was up and about barking orders everywhere as usual. Lan Zhan telepathically “Mn”s in agreement.

“Actually, we--” Wei Ying started, and immediately faced Jiang Cheng’s raised hand in an ‘I don’t want to know’ manner. The hand, framed with the sparkles of the mighty silvery Zidian, told of many unspoken accusations - You went out to flirt while I wasn’t looking, didn’t you? Did you enjoy your quickie behind the bush, when the juniors weren't around? What if something terrible happened and there was no one to save you? Who would answer to our parents up there if I found your dead body by the lake? Do you know how worried sick I was when the rain turned into a storm? Why don't you think about the people you leave behind, you heartless bastard?! You're beyond redemption and you're a shameful example of a son of the prestigious Jiang family!

Wei Ying didn't need to hear those stinging words - he just knew, and could visualize how the man processed his thoughts and spewed out his verbal assault like a goldfish's gaping mouth moving in fast-forward. So Wei Ying yielded, nodded his head repeatedly in pretended admission of guilt, and murmured, "You're right. We did something bad. Sorry, sorry. We ran off to the lakebed and played in the pools because I wanted to spend some time away from the juniors. Jin Ling did a great job, didn't he? I'm really impressed, he's really efficient in ordering the disciples to do what normally takes a whole day. He has been raised well." (the last bit was an exaggeration, a white-lie, really).

The Zidian-armed hand was lowered. Score!, Wei Ying's inner child made little victorious fist-pumps. "Now you've seen how talented Jin Ling is! He's not yet there, but he's made great strides in the last few months here in the residence," Jiang Cheng declared, chin tilted up and hands on his hips. The gongzi's mood seemed to improve a little, so he haughtily sat on his wooden throne and crossed one leg over the other.

Lan Zhan followed his spouse's example and nodded as well, "Mn"s a couple times to emphasize Wei Ying's praise to Jin Ling, and to give recognition to Jiang Cheng's words (and any false assumptions of the boy's capabilities). The couple could've sworn that Jiang Cheng's nose grew a few more inches longer, but as long as that meant they could get off scot-free, it was perfectly fine.

Just then, Jin Ling entered the hall with his beloved companion Fairy the husky dog, loudly complaining that he couldn't take the family pet for a walk due to the rains that flooded the gardens two days in a row. Wei Ying screamed like a girl in a heartbeat and hid behind the husband, Lan Zhan brilliantly gave a faintly but conspicuously pleading look of "Jiang gongzi , please give some face and let us leave in peace", and the dense Jin Ling who didn't understand non-verbal language, simply blurted defensively, "Oi, Fairy is the gentlest and cutest creature on four legs, so don't act like he's carrying a disease or something!".

Jiang Cheng, who isn't as dense as his nephew, shushed the boy and and scolded him to use his brains - the boy could play with the dog indoors and let it exercise; there's plenty of space for the four-legged ball of fluff to run around, especially since the hall could pack a hundred people or more during congregations. The Jiang sect leader gave another look to Lan Zhan - one that was a cross of disdain and raised eyebrows - that wordlessly said, "You're free to go, but you can stay if you want, I'm so done ranting at you, get the hell out of my face, but I think it could be good for us to sit down together and talk over a cup of pu'er tea - so, what do you say?"

Jin Ling couldn't understand the exchange of looks of daggers between the Jiang gongzi and Han Guang Jun, so he took the initiative to call for a truce. He squatted next to the dog and scratched its back to keep it calm to refrain from barking, then held up the leash towards the couple. "Da jiu , I know you don't like dogs, but really, Fairy doesn't bite anyone unless I say so. You can safely play with Fairy and see what I mean," he said, and shook the leash again in invitation.

Wei Ying looked at Lan Zhan, trembling with fear but yet something else sparkled in his eyes - terror, ashamed, undecided, amazement, curiosity, and more. Lan Zhan “Mn”s in tacit understanding of his spouse’s unspoken answer that came across as a torrent of emotions rather than clear bulleted points. He faced the Jin gongzi and said, “Thank you for your offer. For now,” he raised his dripping sleeves for the boy to see (and further shielded Wei Ying from the panting dog), “we’ll return to our room to dry off and change our clothes, and will stop by later.” That exit strategy made sense, and didn’t cause any further antagonism with the Jiang gongzi and his ward.

As the couple stood at the exit door, Jiang Cheng shouted out with a restrained unidentifiable emotion, that Suibian is in the ancestral altar room. The sect leader received many doggy licks from a happy Fairy, and went on to accompany, and be entertained, by watching his favourite nephew train the dog to sit and play fetch with a ball, inside the grand main hall of the Jiang residence.

.

After peeling off the rain-drenched garments and changing to a fresh set of robes, Wei Ying wondered aloud if Lan Zhan felt any different in the throne room just moments ago. Lan Zhan stared quizzically to silently ask, “What do you mean?”

“Well, I clearly didn’t see my younger brother and nephew fall head over heels from you. Heavens forbid if that ever happened,” he mused to himself.

Lan Zhan shrugged and collected his spouse’s soaked clothes and hung them on wooden stands in their room. “Mmm... maybe it’s because of the rain? Or the fact that I was soaked wet? I was cold, and I think I wasn't emitting as much sweat and pheromones during that time." he postulated, not really expecting an answer any time soon. He had a lifetime to figure out how to control his pheromones anyway.

"Ha ha, in that case, I will make sure to pour an ice bucket on you, if you so happen to be pursued by hot-blooded horny strangers," Wei Ying laughed at his own silly suggestion, and the other simply "Hn"s. "Also," the younger man added, a finger thumbing his nose tip, "when we marched down with twenty disciples this morning to Jin Ling, I remembered you were walking at least ten paces away to keep a lookout on the surroundings. None of them displayed any strange behaviors, so perhaps that's your ruler to measure a safe distance from anyone."

Lan Zhan thought for a moment about what that hypothesis meant. To be at least ten paces away from anyone when he is dry, except from lovely Wei Ying. It sounded like a self-imposed quarantine with his spouse. A perfect excuse to live in isolation from the crazy outside world... it didn't sound too bad, actually.

.

Wei Ying informed Lan Zhan that he wanted the two of them to pray at the ancestral altar - something that dwelled in the younger man's mind after it was mentioned by the Jiang sect leader. Following that, he announced that he should spend the afternoon with his side of the family. "It's nothing to worry about," the younger man said reassuringly when he noticed the husband's raised eyebrows, "it's just something your spouse needs to do when he's back in his hometown."

Lan Zhan “Mn”s without needing to elaborate his thoughts. The couple continued their discussion telepathically, and Wei Ying downloads maps of the vast expanse of the residence’s grounds for the husband to do his own tour on foot; the deserted surroundings would be an ideal opportunity for Lan Zhan to enjoy standing in serene garden pavilions, enjoy walks on bridges over man-made lakes and paths through sheltered bamboo groves with a traditional umbrella in hand, calm down any disturbance in his soul, maybe practice his magical guqin without getting hounded by passionate Jiang disciples (because everyone stayed in their dorms), exercise and cultivate in short winter daylight, while listening to the pitter patter of raindrops upon pine trees and dew-covered lawns, or simply immerse himself in the slow passage of time on rainy days, watch how clear garden pools fill up and nourish budding grass, vines and barren bushes that had begun to sprout buds and tender shoots in the unseasonably warm mid-winter.

Wei Ying also added a menu for dinner, because he thought Lan Zhan might want to start preparations in the kitchen early in case he became bored; the lull in the afternoon would be devastatingly dull, at least from the spouse’s perspective.

.

“Father, Mother, Shijie , Xian Xian has grown up another three years since the last time I prayed here.

So much has happened and I don’t really know what to say. I missed you all so much and the happier days from the past. Xian Xian will continue to work hard, and live a fulfilling life.

Father, Mother, Shijie , I'm a married man now. Please bless my, our, happiness from the heavens above. Xian Xian doesn't ask for much, as long as the two of us can be together, living happily ever after."

"Father-in-law, Mother-in-law, Sister-in-law, Wang Ji pays his respects to you today.

I am blessed to be wedded to Wei Ying. I will always love and cherish him for the rest of my days, and for as long as both of us walk together in this world.

Thank you for raising and caring Wei Ying. Wang Ji dutifully takes this responsibility from here on. Please rest in peace."

Their prayers said, both lit up and offered incense sticks and solemnly bowed three times according to sacred Jiang family rituals. The altar was a huge, impressive inverted conical structure, candlelit along its many circular platforms sculptured according to lotus flower themes, decorated with historical artifacts and cultural relics of the Jiangs. Silence pervades the room except for a constant dripping sound from a gentle fountain in the altar that feeds to a pool of lotus plants around it.

Wei Ying wept soundlessly in the room and into Lan Zhan's arms. He took time to dust the stone tablets that bore his deceased family members' names. His fingers lingered the longest on Jiang Yan Li's, being the closest sibling and the only true sister he had during his early life. Lan Zhan didn't really know how to soothe the sadness in Wei Ying's heart, so he stayed quiet, hoping that his warm enduring presence would be comforting, at least.

Suibian lay across a pedestal in a corner of the altar. Jiang Cheng left a written note on it - and surprisingly, the note looked a little yellowed, and aged. It simply said 'Return to the original owner'. Wei Ying teared up again when he touched the narrow wooden scabbard, drew it out halfway to read the sword's name etched into the metal that probably hadn't seen the light of day for years, and promptly sheathed it back. Jiang Cheng bore a heavy burden from the day he learnt about the truth about his golden core, and in all likelihood, refused to go near the blade that symbolized his foolishness, arrogance and inherent weakness - the destined flaw of being human, really - that he swore to return it to Wei Wuxian because he couldn't bear to even look at it, let alone wield it - but never really found the right time, right place or the right reason to do so.

.

Perhaps he had changed over time, moulded and shaped, even strengthened, by his worldly experiences - Wei Ying thought it would be worthwhile to attempt befriending the Jiang family's house pet - even if it's just to hold the tip of the leash from across the enormous hall. It would do wonders to his confidence and help him overcome his fears for canines; he stands to gain from practice, and he could surely benefit from a rosier relationship with the nephew that started to call him by the affectionate name of ' da jiu ' too.

He really wanted to bury the hatchet between him, Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling; although the latter two already knew the truth about the terrible events that befell him, and that he wasn't responsible for the death of the shijie and Jin Zixuan, however there had always been lingering bad-blood feelings. When he and Lan Zhan left for the mountains after the incident in the Guanyin Temple three years ago, there hadn't been any closure in their uneasy relationship, marred by years of grudge, misunderstanding and vengeful feelings (and Wei Ying was even stabbed by Jiang Cheng in his past life, and by Jin Ling in the present).

It's just a dog, he mentally tells himself. 'Woof' is the worst the animal would do. He's not afraid of a 'woof' sound anymore at the ripe old age of twenty-two, and his confidence and relationship with his family is on the line. It's a win-win situation, so why not?

Wei Ying didn't discount the fact that Fairy could still bite - well, it has teeth after all - and bared its fangs and growled with Suibian's scabbard locked between its jaws. "You're terrible!" Wei Ying cried in alarm with shivering hands, "You told me I could graduate from the leash and touch it with a shorter object such as a stick! Ahhh! The dog is eating Suibian and drooling all over it! Jin Ling, do something about this monster!"

Fairy woofed again and tugged earnestly at the biggest fetch toy it ever had in his mouth. Its tail wagged excitedly like a crazy whipping Zidian, which further served to terrorize the panicked Wei gongzi. Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling laughed so hard, that their voices could be heard for quite some distance away.

(Perhaps it's a theme set to be repeated throughout Wei Ying's life - Chenqing flute was nom-nom'd by A-Yuan during his previous life, and now, Suibian is covered with a dog's saliva.)

.

It must be a prank from the heavens, Lan Zhan thought with trepidation - but then realized belatedly that he is the King of Gods and Men, so why would he play a horrible joke on himself?

Dinner had been prepared - he easily avoided getting molested by those ten pimple-faced teenage chef wannabes this time, simply by writing down the recipes and cooking instructions, and left the boys to their own devices; when trouble brews, he quickly intervened remotely with the aid of Eye spells and Invisible Hands to fix the dishes before catastrophe occurred -, the food had been served, and everyone took their seats to start on extravagant appetizers such as Han Guang Jun's classic lotus root pork rib soup, spicy-sweet spare ribs, pan-fried jiaozi dumplings, vegetarian spring rolls, glutinous rice lotus wraps and fresh off-season garden salads - the main course is ten times as large in number and included a variety of foods from different cuisines -, even the guards stationed at the stockade walls were called to join the sumptuous banquet because no undead had been sighted for the past couple of days and all disciples believed they can have their meals in peace.

Similar to the day before, the hundred-strong disciples dug in without waiting for their sect leader, because they were famished and tempted by such heart-warming home-cooked food. Han Guang Jun reluctantly presided over the dinner ritual - from a safe distance, ten paces away - since he was the eldest in the dining halls and out of compassion (and the pitiful sounds of stomach rumbles in the room), he "Mn"s to allow them to start their meal.

Lan Zhan wasn't really hungry, and it was only five in the late afternoon although the sun had already set. He opined that Jiang Cheng should sit with his men (boys, really), and where in the world is Wei Ying and their nephew?, he worried. His calls to Wei Ying via ErNet went unanswered. Then his thoughts raced to what Wei Ying said earlier - that he planned to spend time in the main hall and play with Fairy - but what if Wei Ying became too scared? What if something happened, like Fairy turning wild and biting like a rabid beast? Would it be possible that an argument broke out - Wei Ying hadn't been on good terms with the other two in recent years - maybe Jin Ling got hurt by accident, or Jiang Cheng lost his marbles and tied up Wei Ying with Zidian? The negative thoughts spiralled out of control.

Needless anxiety cracked Lan Zhan's tough shell. He quickly excused himself, intent on getting to the main hall and find Wei Ying as soon as possible. A disciple called out to him just before he left the dining area, and asked if they can serve the main courses, desserts, drinks, the vat of herbal tea, the stack of liquor in the pantry, and in what sequence, and in which manner. Lan Zhan was in a hurry and didn't want to write another list for the disciple (in fact, the juniors had come to rely too much on the Han Guang Jun's excellent instructions, whether written or verbal) - so he simply "Mn"s and went on his way, leaving the young inexperienced boy confused as to what that sound meant.

Lan Zhan picked up his pace and used his ErNet access to view the maps that Wei Ying had downloaded earlier. There had to be a shortcut, his mind irrationally told him and rang more blaring alarms - because the walk would just take about fifteen minutes through windy wooden walkways and platforms built atop garden lakes, but in his panic-infused mind, it felt like an hour - and fortunately (or not), he spotted a straight gray dotted line in the map that linked where he was - close to the outdoor toilets - to the main hall on the other side of some multi-building complexes.

Lan Zhan found the hidden, unused path safely tucked between two high buildings, but a wall had been hastily-built to block any visitors - a commonplace in high-security areas to prevent spies from accessing important parts of the Jiang headquarters or disciples from loitering in unguarded places. Due to the weather elements, weakening of the wall's structure and the passage of time, a sizable hole had formed at waist-level which Lan Zhan thought he could squeeze through and be on his way to find the spouse. He slipped out of his thick robes and climbed across, carefully wedging himself through the increasingly tight opening. He wiggled his arms through one by one to clear the armpits, started sweating due to the claustrophobic atmosphere - and then he was stuck. He couldn't push his ribcage through, and to his horror, he couldn't pull back out either due to his flailing hands.

The great, undefeated Han Guang Jun was caught inside a hole in the wall.

.

“... (hic!)... ah, shixiong , I haven't even started on the fried chicken wings and the hotpot, but my bladder is full... (hic!)... I think I drank too much of that strange herbal tea, then the wine, then the tea again, everything is too delicious and refreshing!... (hic!)”

“... It is, isn't it?... (hic!)... oh, look, there's another from our group coming here... Hey! Do you wanna pee too? (hic!)... Make sure you wash your hands when you're done... (hic!)... ah, what is this? Whose buttocks are these? (hic!)... Ah... I... I smell something very sweet... it's (hic!) coming from those buttocks... those pants... Ah... I'm feeling dizzy... (hic!)... and hot..."

"Oii... you drunkards! You gonna pee too? (hic!) What- What are you doing? You're touching... buttocks? On the wall? Hey, why are you (hic!) stripping that man's pants... ah... that ass looks so tempting... (hic!)... hey, lemme have a go... what's wrong with me, I feel so hot, and... (urrrgh)... horny?... what... ah... I wanna lick that (hic!)..."

.

The man's initial struggles died down when he realized that there was no use in trying to break the brick-like prison. He stoically refused to destroy the wall - causing damage to other people's properties was against a number of Gusu Lan rules ingrained in him. One thing led to another, soon, drunken disciples kept going back and forth to the common loo because of the tea's diuretic effects, and the rush to finish dinner before someone else devoured all the delicious food on the table. In-between their trips, each boy discovered the joys of being entranced by arousing pheromones in the air, then stripped an unknown man's ass that popped out of the wall next to the loo, and happily deflowered themselves with it.

Every boy grunted, shuddered, moaned, shouted and screamed with joy as they blasted into that sweet tight hole again and again, until he was pushed away, and replaced by another excited disciple who immediately jammed his cockmeat and fucked furiously as dictated by primal instincts. Soon, impatience grew among the boys, and they took turns in twos, threes, and as many as possible to gangbang that cummy frothy hole and ejaculate even more. Some became desperate and used their stiff, red leaky penises to paw every available orifice or surfaces, begging for friction - the belly button became well used, rubbing on the bare muscular back, between the thighs, and along the legs - for a quick relief; the more masochistic ones started to pleasure - no, maul - the man's frontal dangly bits, suck on the toes, massage the smooth, slightly-tanned muscular flesh with fingers and tongues, and every action imaginable to short-circuit and rush the trapped man to a soaring volcanic climax.

The number of horny teenagers swelled quickly when inebriated whispers and gossips spread to the rest of the dinner crowd, and soon, they shuffled and formed a queue to go to the loo, empty their bladders, then staggered to the springy tight muscular ass next door, and started to fuck the helpless man's butt like the best cocksleeve they've ever had - which was true, because they were all virgins until that night, and never experienced the unforgettable beauty of erupting into a sweet tight ass while being in the company of comrades of a common mass orgy.

Lan Zhan kept telling himself, "It's a good touch, it's a good touch" and repeated that phrase like a mantra. It was an illogical thing to do - to try and project the sensations and deep-seated feelings from his erotic dreams to the real world, so that everything is perceived as like a good, wholesome real-life experience. The mind is strong, but the flesh is weak - someone stretched his butthole and three pencil-like thin penises shoved themselves in, rutted so perfectly well, rubbed his best spots in the meaty tunnel, poked and pulverized his swollen prostate, until he dry-orgasmed too many times - yet, he refused to ejaculate. He'd held his cum for three centuries before, not too long ago during the time he was crowned the Jade Emperor, so he could surely stop himself again despite being blindly raped by a hundred amorous pre-teens and teenagers.

When someone's mouth enveloped his wildly twitching cock, and many intoxicated adolescents use their fingers to touch his crotch sensuously, lips to swallow, suck and vibrate each of his bloated, brimming testicles with alternating different speeds, tongues to lap and massage his extremely sensitive perineum and put further mind-blowing arching pressurized waves into his dying overstretched prostate gland, while his asshole is crammed with tasty young dicks vying for the deepest depth of penetration - Lan Zhan fumbled and wavered dangerously close to an explosive climax.

At one point, it was a terrifying experience to feel many wet wanton tongue-tips forcibly part open his cockslit and rub the delicate urethra. Like calves suckling on a cow's teat, the opening was rubbed incessantly until it became engorged and inflamed, and leaked out plenty of lubricating pre-cum. Someone finally had the gall to insert - horrors of horrors - a straw-like reed into his urethra and started sucking on it like milking the said teat. Lan Zhan could probably hold his ejaculations using his hard-trained penile muscles and pelvic floor, however when the semen is forcibly vacuumed out by voracious pheromone-crazed teenagers, there was nothing he could do but to lose it all.

Notes for the Chapter:

It looks like things are starting to ease around here. The sun's out, the air is fresh, it's a good day to post another chapter!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 90

Oh no, Lan Zhan thought, when he found himself as the eight-year old again. Did he black out, did he fall asleep, or did he die and return to the Heavenly Palace upon detonation of his loins, he wondered.

.

It had been too easy to kidnap the pre-pubescent boy. Uncle Wei showed up one night after Lan Zhan had dinner with his brother, and the man said that he was going to the market and wouldn't mind some company. To sweeten the deal, the uncle hinted about a fun fair, wonderful crowds, plenty to see and do, and promises of a stick of tanghulu to the one who accepted his 'evening date'.

Xi Chen da ge smiled immediately and nudged at Lan Zhan. "Wang Ji, you should go. You're always shy and quiet around people, and you should mix around with others more often. I would be happy if you could visit a lively night market, especially with an adult like our neighbour to accompany you. It will be fun. It will be alright." Xi Chen da ge placed a warm, reassuring hand on Lan Zhan's shoulder.

But the eight-year old boy would have none of it; he shook his head in refusal, his face soured and he whimpered. The gege thought his little brother was acting a little spoilt and a little clingy; so he steeled himself, and gave Lan Zhan a rare displeased frown which scared the little boy. The teenage elder brother simply pulled the didi from his seat at the dinner table, and pushed the tiny delicate body straight into Uncle Wei's waiting arms.

Uncle Wei grinned devilishly and thanked Xi Chen - the latter wondered briefly why there was gratitude. The man grabbed the pre-teen boy's hand properly - Lan Zhan was teary eyed by then, but he held back his sniffles because he thought his gege was angry at his demeanour -, and the man happily walked off with his prized delicacy, merrily waving a good-bye to the Lan's residence.

Right after they left the gates of the Cloud Recesses, Uncle Wei easily dragged the boy into a bush - there were no guards stationed nearby until nine o' clock, and it was only seven. The eight-year old boy suffered his first of many sexual assaults that evening under the shadow of trees, with his pants taken away and his tiny dick inside the man's hungry, sweaty mouth.

.

“Shushu , where are we going? The night market is that way...” little Lan Zhan whined when they took a detour off the main trail. Uncle Wei clutched his tiny wrists too tightly, and it started to hurt. The forests were quiet save for the sounds of crickets, the night sky was cloudy, and everything was dark. Unable to see where they were going, or the direction of the uneven windy trail they walked on, the eight-year old nearly tripped on stones and fell to his knees a couple of times. Prickly undergrowth scratched his thin summer wear of a plain tunic and no pants - but the uncle was determined to take him far into the deep night.

“Wei shushu , please, my knees hurt, and I'm scared,” little Lan Zhan whined even louder. Uncle Wei sighed loudly and replied, “A-Ji, I need to sell you quickly to make some money, but alright, we'll take a short break here. Come, sit on the grass bed and let me take a look at your knees," and rudely pushed the little boy to the ground with his legs splayed.

The eight-year old squeaked from the impact on his buttocks, and obediently spread his legs, just as he was told. He didn't understand what it meant to be 'sold', nor how much the money that would be worth, because he was too young and naive in this dark, twisted world. The boy was tricked again, where instead of having his hurting knees tended, the uncle simply took the opportunity to dive into the boy's crotch again and again, like a predator bird swooping in to steal baby chicks from a nest.

Little Lan Zhan suffered more painful tingles when his wee-wee's foreskin was forcibly retracted, and the sensitive, fragile glans was attacked with cruel tongue-jabs and powerful suction from greasy lips. As if that wasn't enough, Uncle Wei shook the boy's tender balls violently to test their weight, and thought they were ripe enough for a taste. The terrible molester sucked on each testicle for at least ten minutes each, inflicting tremendous pressures and friction upon the unguarded child's sacs, until they turned from a healthy tan to darker shades of browns and purples.

The adolescent started to cry when Uncle Wei used forbidden magics to Etherealize his face, so that he could stick a tongue into each ballooning, bloated testicular-egg and stir its contents like whisking baby batter made from unborn sperm and other immature sexual fluids, until they turn into a congealing soupy blend of opaque whitish boy-juice. The boy shrieked in horrible discomfort when Uncle Wei leaned down further and enveloped his ghostly mouth on one of the eggs, and sucked up all the fluids until nothing was left - just like breaking a hole on an eggshell and drinking the raw eggy liquid including the yolk, leaving behind an empty shell. The other testicle was similarly drained, and soon, the shivering eight-year old was left with two empty husks dangling loosely below his inflamed penis.

The forests were quiet, especially off the main trail, and nobody heard the little boy's cries for help. Having satisfied himself with a delightful snack, Uncle Wei licked his lips, hauled Lan Zhan to his trembling feet and warned, "A-Ji, if you complain of pain in your knees again, you know what will happen. Do you understand?"

Little Lan Zhan nodded, wiped his tears and hiccuped uncontrollably.

.

"Okay, let's take another breather here," the kidnapper growled, yanked the terrified boy to the side and crouched in front of the latter. Lan Zhan squeaked when he felt calloused hands grope around his small but perky bouncy ass, fiddled with his bruised balls and gave his pre-teen penis a good few tugs.

A miniature-sized hollow sounding rod made specially for little boys slid out from the reddened cockslit - it had been inserted into the boy's member earlier with protests from the helpless victim -, and little Lan Zhan cried squeamishly at the strange itchy sensation crawling out of his wee-wee in pulsating penile waves - but he was too young to understand the nature of that feeling ravaging his privates. " Shushu , no, no please don't suck on it... nnngh... uuuh... it feels weird, and it stings... ahnnn... I want to tingle but... uhn, uhn, uhn, ahn, ahn... don't... don't blow bubbles into it... hhghk, gghgk, hnngh, hnngh..." the boy's words descended into incomprehensible groany sounds.

Uncle Wei sucked his living merchandise dry (again), then spit into the wider end of the straw-like tube, and blew bubbles of his saliva into the eight-year old's penis. He needed to warm up Lan Zhan and oil him up, otherwise he wouldn't fetch a good price as negotiated with the buyers. He massaged the strained, twitching finger-sized organ from tip to base to push as much of the murky fluid into the boy's immature reproductive organs. Elsewhere, thick meaty fingers jabbed and stretched the boy's abused rosebud with the speed of a pistoning machine, until the puckered muscles became numbed and loosened.

"Wang Ji, what did I tell you? Stop complaining about your miserable fate. It's your fault for playing in front of your house wearing your shorts, when my friends dropped by for a visit last week. You're wholly responsible for fanning their lusts. I'm just helping myself to earn an honest buck, and all I care is that you must be delivered in prime condition. Now shut your trap and spread your legs!" the uncle suddenly turned fierce and slapped the boy's buttocks.

Little Lan Zhan's face flushed into tomato-reds. He shivered without his pants on and stood as still as a terrified mouse. He hiccuped and wiped hot tears from his eyes, as the terrible uncle used Invisible Hands to caress, knead and molest his insides, until his twin shrivelled quail eggs started to balloon and swell again. With plenty of time to spare in the deserted forest where no one can hear the boy cry, the uncle succeeded, with surgical precision, to repeatedly push his foamy saliva through into the boy's quivering, ruined testicles. The fragile eggs turned from browns and purples, into the colour of deeply bruised fruits - it's not pretty, but it's still juicy, ripe and certainly edible for pedophiles waiting to taste the little boy's young flesh soon.

The anguished pre-pubescent child was meticulously prepared to be feasted by sexual predators, and Uncle Wei made sure to attack his genitals and rape him with fingers, lips and some sex toys he'd carried in his pockets.

.

Little Lan Zhan arrived at a boisterous, chaotic and probably illegal settlement in a small clearing in the forests without his clothes on. There was a small circle of huts around a bonfire, with many adult men mingling around, shouting obscenities, having a merry time, and getting drunk on expensive wine; Lan Zhan knew the scent of the sweet liquid too well, because he always ended up smelling like one after spending hours trapped beneath a grunting and shuddering Uncle Wei, when the latter decided to make his baby boy-pussy a warm, welcoming moist home for the shushu 's stinky penis for an entire afternoon during the weekdays.

“My good friend, the generous gongzi ! There you are! You are here at our agreed meeting place and time! Did you bring the goods tonight?”

“Aye, a fresh tender morsel ripe for the picking, and he is not even nine!”
Lan Zhan was lifted up with strong hairy arms hooked around his armpits, and he struggled frantically by thrashing his legs in the air. His naked bottom felt chilly from the breeze in the night.

“Blessed Guan Yin, he's a beauty! D'ya see his rump, everyone? It looks wet and well-played. Look at his front too! It's all nicely swollen up like a summer peach for harvest. Gongzi , you've done good prepping him for our supper!”

“Of course, and I expect fair compensation for my troubles too. Look at this too,” Lan Zhan’s penis was roughly pulled up into plain view of about twenty hungry-looking adult spectators surrounding him, “His tip’s all puffed up, pink and juicy. He’s been trained and he’s peeled, so he’s very sensitive and tingles easily. Shucked like an ear of fresh sweet corn, that he is! This is of the best quality, I promise!”

Lan Zhan started to sob quietly, this time in fear and extreme discomfort of being stared at - some were well-built and hairy, some were bald and fat. Some sported dangerous-looking tattoos, scars, moustaches or beards. Everyone eyed at him ravenously, licked their lips, wiped their noses full of snot, scratched their crotches and started rubbing rising erections beneath their pants, and were drunk - the tell tale sign of flush on their faces was obvious, and the flickering light from the fire only made the atmosphere creepy, terrifying. The child felt like a lamb sent to a slaughterhouse.

“Brilliant, gongzi ! Over there is your payment - three treasure chests full of gold and magical trinkets from the best assassins, murderers, pirates, and thieves of the Middle Kingdom! Let’s start our feast, men!”

“Ah... one more thing, don’t touch his face. I promised to bring him back in a few hours’ time. You can do whatever you want, but don’t leave any clues on his hands and legs, ya know?” Uncle Wei added matter-of-factly.

Lan Zhan wailed when one of the accomplices of the terrifying black market sale, an obese man with warts on his face, scars and wrinkles on his limbs, and a very bad breath, snatched his wriggling body from Uncle Wei and pressed him to the grassy ground. Immediately, Binding spells and Invisible Hands were cast to hold his wrists down, raise his adolescent hips to the perfect angle of penetration, and keep his legs from kicking at the approaching pig-like rapist.

“Don’t you worry, mate. We know how to breed a sweet delicate maiden like this, and we’ve got the drugs to keep him down if needed. Okay, the rest of you, line up and eat your fill!” the leader called out from behind, and started herding his men towards the boy.

The first rapist didn’t need to wait for orders to start dining, and with a single lust-filled hip thrust he easily broke through the brittle immature rosebud with his fat cock. Layers of sweaty belly fat rolled upon the boy’s abdomen as the rabid swine jiggled his oversized ass to drill his excited spurty cock into the sweet, sweet clenching tunnel. “Oh sweet mother of Buddha, he is so tight! Your pussy feels amazing, you’re sucking me in! Don’t cry, don’t cry, little one, you’re making this uncle feel soooo good, so you’re doing it right, boy,” he roared with drool flying off his rotten teeth, his hairy hands gripped the boy’s waist aggressively to maneuver the ragdoll-like figure like the best succulent cocksleeve heated to perfect body temperature. It didn’t take long for the first assailant to reach orgasm inside little Lan Zhan - torrents of smelly milky-yellow thick soup injected many times into the eight-year old’s hole, then overflowed and gushed out from the boy’s ass by the time the man reached his fifteenth ejaculation.

Behind the grunting grossly obese rapist, a line of more pantless men started to form, each thirsting for a taste of the young maiden-boy until they too, started to stroke their eager cocks in anticipation for their turns.

.

The eight-year old would've shrieked until his voice became hoarse, struggled until the binding magical spells break, and cried until his eyes became red and puffy - but the men knew better than to use standard abusive, deterrent actions such as punching, pinching and slapping (which was a no-no anyway). Uncle Wei watched, while enjoying the show with a few jars of Emperor Smiles pilfered from the Caiyi's taverns, as one of the men decided that it was time for little Lan Zhan to be a good boy, after he was bitten on the tongue when he tried to kiss the boy (which was also another no-no).

From a sleeve pocket, out popped a small brown vial in the hands of the man, who sported a huge scar on his face, and who was trying his best to breed a cum-flooded boy-pussy. The boy never ceased to struggle from the first to the tenth person waiting to rape his ass, until this one. Lan Zhan's bottom was drenched in semen, to the point where each thrust resulting in a bulge poking out from below his belly button - there was just too much seed in the boy's rectum and colon to the point of bursting - and when the excited turgid boner withdrew completely, a gush squirted out followed by wet gassy farts. The vial's cap was flipped off, and placed under the crying eight-year old's runny nose.

"Pray tell, good friend, what is that? Does it harm my precious boy?" Uncle Wei leaned forward and asked, pretending to be nonchalant, but still concerned nevertheless. He still needed to return Lan Zhan to his house in good condition after all. He sat on a bench with a leg raised, and picked on his nose unknowingly.

"No, no, this is the best stuff. It makes little children docile and obedient, and their bodies malleable to spoken instructions. Here, let me demonstrate, and you can have a few free vials as part of your payment if this boy tastes as good as you say," the man boasted.

By then, the boy had already been drugged by the vapours from the vial, and he lay boneless on the ground with a glazed look in his eyes. The binding spells were taken off, and he was instructed to raise his crotch, wiggle them seductively, and tighten up the moment the man slammed his hips. “Oh sweet mother of Jade Emperor, this feels fucking fantastic, and he wraps me with such loving force! I love raping you, boy! Smile for me, sweetheart, and let me hear you sing!” the man bellowed.

Lan Zhan started to hum an old Gusu folk tune, interspersed with grunts and tasty moans when his insides were battered and bruised - without protest nor struggles - to the rapist's utmost joy. When the man climaxed, he jammed in until the hilt and watched, mesmerized, as the bulge below the belly button pulsed with each powerful ejaculation. After fifteen jerks, he kept his happy erection in and rubbed the bulge to self-polish his supremely satisfied penis. It didn't matter if he exploded a few more times with residual seed and smelly pee - the ones queueing up behind started taking notes so that they too, can experience the heaven between a boy's spread-eagled legs.

Little Lan Zhan giggled drunkenly and allowed the next ten or so men to easily plunder his fertile inundated tunnel, and take their pleasures from his willing flesh. Some would return for seconds - there's plenty to go around, after all.

.

The pre-pubescent child was a buffet spread of sorts, and a playground for eager men.

While heavily panting adults plunged and pillaged the boy's ass with glee, others crowded around to rub and hump their eager dicks roughly on the child's body.

One man peeled and stretched the boy's foreskin until the delicate membrane became distended, expanded like a blossoming bowl with the bulbous glans in the middle. He masturbated and excitedly ejaculated into the stretched foreskin, then promptly pulled it back over the slime-covered cockhead, so that the child's penis will be marinated in a grown-up's pungent juices, and mature sperm cells could swim in to fertilize the boy.

His smooth youthful skin and flawless complexion were addictive to wrinkly smelly old men, and soon, little Lan Zhan was covered with streaks of still-warm semen on his hands, armpits, between his toes, and thighs; his belly button became a swirling pool of rich, frothy milky white. For the victim lying on the floor, his vision was filled with fat and turgid, smelly hairy dicks everywhere, happily spurting and raining seed on him until he was completely coated and stank of male bodily fluids.

On one occasion, a group of five men who couldn't wait any longer, attacked the adolescent simultaneously - one for each nipple, one for each testicle, and the chief partakes in the delicate flavours of a freshly-abused pinkie-length penis. The underlings voraciously sucked and twisted the pink nubs on the thin ribbed chest until they became swollen, wrestled and mauled each quail egg like playing a game of tug-of-war, until the eggs broke, literally. With so much going on, and a pistoning rod pumping feverishly in the ass, the moment the chief started tickling the underside of the trembling stiff cock with his tongue, mind-broken Lan Zhan giggled uncontrollably and started peeing on himself.

A fountain of mild yellow, foamy with Uncle Wei's saliva and other bodily fluids, entertained the laughing men. Satisfied that the boy was emptied, someone rinsed him by pouring a couple buckets of water, then they took him to a dry bed of grass, and continued their terrible sexual assault. With the risk of getting sprayed with pee out of the way, more men gathered to enjoy savouring the taste and textures of the eight-year old penis in their mouths. They relentlessly took turns, deep-throated the helpless crippled organ, sucked until their cheeks hollowed, greedily lapped and stroke the quaking length until it throbbed raw, pulled at the foreskin to attack the hidden prize beneath, and the adorable tiny penis glans turned from its former cute pink into bruises of angry-reds and purples.

Hours passed, and every men had their fill of several rounds of boy-juices and emptied their balls into the bought sex slave. Some continued their drinking into the night, others played dirty games with the numbed, drugged eight-year old - like having a dessert after the main course -; there was no mercy from those rapists. They tied vibrators and 21st-century magic wand massagers loaned by Uncle Wei (he had a Bag of Holding containing everything imaginable) to the boy's trembling dick - even the drugs couldn't stop him from screaming in agony as he tingled every other minute until pure seedless nectar oozed out - which the men happily licked off, before pressing more oscillating devices to the swollen tip and the tortured balls. Little Lan Zhan's broken body bowed and bent constantly, seized when electric scorched his nerve-ends, suffocated because he couldn't breathe, and his limbs convulsed from more pain than pleasure coursing through his veins until his eyes rolled to the back and his mind gratefully blanked out.

By the time the moon was high and it was almost time to call it a night, every man had recharged from the aphrodisiac wines, and gathered enough lust in their loins for one more round. A straw was crudely stuck into the boy's thoroughly abused urethra. Each man took his turn to insert the other open end of the straw into their own cockslit, and rubbed one out with vigorous passion. “To celebrate a wonderful supper, and here, a parting gift from these friends of Uncle Wei to you, sweetie” the leader of the pack said gleefully, as he orgasmed and ejaculated his seed straight into the eight-year old’s disfigured wee-wee, thus sending a volley of invading and foreign fluids into the defenceless boy. The leader tenderly brushed the cheeks of the unconscious youngster with such gentleness, one might be mistaken that he had fallen in love with the beauty that had been marred by men’s filth.

Uncle Wei used similar techniques from earlier to massage the men’s hot sperm through the engorged, ruined penis, the inflamed immature prostate gland, tubes and vesicles and all the way to the badly swollen, hardened testicles. The adolescent would be forced to carry the men’s dirty seed inside his ballsacks before puberty; the fate of his own unborn sperm cells remains unknown.

“Thank you again, gongzi , for the wonderful meal today. You have new repeat customers, and we’ll be seeing you again next week!”

.

Uncle Wei returned close to midnight, with sweet, thoroughly broken little Lan Zhan sleeping peacefully in his arms. There were dark circles under his eyes, and no signs of bruises or scratches on his limbs - as promised. Uncle Wei knocked on the door, and waited a while, before a sleepy, yawning Xi Chen da ge appeared in his pyjamas.

“ Shushu ... good evening... did my brother have fun?” he asked, rather groggy, as he rubbed his eyes.

“Ah yes, we did, we did. I could tell you more, but oh dear, look at the time! I’m so sorry to have disturbed you during your well-deserved slumber. Say... if it’s alright, will you allow me to let Lan Zhan stay over at my house? I will bathe him, put him to bed, so that he will be clean and fresh tomorrow morning. You don’t have to trouble yourself with these mundane tasks, it’s really my obligation to take care of your brother after such a wonderful time we had together!” the habitual liar convinced the elder of the Lan brothers. He even shoved a goodie bag into Xi Chen’s arms, full of milk sweets, dragon’s beard candy and a couple of sticks of tanghulu.

Xi Chen really couldn’t think straight at this hour of the night but he trusted his neighbour; so he merely nodded, yawned again, turned around with the goodie bag in his hands, and shuffled towards the bedroom.

Uncle Wei smiled brightly and thanked the teenager - again, Xi Chen couldn’t understand why there was so much gratitude from his neighbour, but it didn’t matter anymore, he was going to bed. The uncle thoughtfully closed the door - tsk tsk, such carelessness, he thought of the teenager who was usually meticulous as his eight-year old brother -, and left for his house just at the opposite block of the Lan brothers.

(It’s a great neighbourhood, Uncle Wei thought, that everyone in the Cloud Recesses do not lock their doors. During school holidays, he was able to sneak in and bed little A-Ji gagged with a piece of cloth, while the brother was out working in the farms until midday. He succeeded every time in raping the eight-year old at least four times in the morning before the brother returned, spilling his seeds with great joy during the heated lovemaking between an adult and a panicked child, on the child's own clean, sweet-scented bed. Then, he would release the gag and stuff the cloth into the boy's buttocks to keep the warm rich semen swimming inside. He'd warned the eight-year old that if news of their 'secret meeting' leaked, then A-Ji would have broken many Gusu Lan rules (he didn't specify which) and that was a big no-no - before tip-toeing back to his own dingy house. A-Ji believed the empty threat, and Xi Chen da ge never found out about the many times his little brother was abused and raped by their favourite neighbour.)

Uncle Wei carried out his promise of cleaning up Lan Zhan - the bathwater became murky and milky from excess semen gushing out of the boy's ass. He inspected the pre-teen's body and cast tiny Healing spells to erase any signs of the gangbang orgy - although sadly, his genitals were in a state of terrible ruin, having been bruised and swollen nearly three times of its original size after the traumatic abuse, and the amount of dirty men's sperm swirling inside the boy's unripe but utterly destroyed testicles. When everything was done, and Lan Zhan looked as fresh as a newborn - at least on the outside -, he gently patted him dry with a towel and laid him on his reeking stained bed. The boy's tunic and pants had been washed and needed to be hung to dry overnight, but Uncle Wei didn't have a set of pyjamas for eight-year olds.

It didn't matter, he told himself and yawned. At one in the morning, Uncle Wei climbed to bed as well, spread the unconscious naked boy's legs apart, and inserted his half-hard penis into the boy's loosened rosebud. He used little Lan Zhan as a masturbating toy, humped vigorously and finally got his chance to enjoy a few orgasms inside the warm, used hole. Out of compassion, he stroked the comatosed boy's crooked, bloated purple-red penis and allowed him to tingle a bit - little Lan Zhan ejaculated with full twenty-twitches of creamy yellowish gunks that were injected by more than twenty smelly old men earlier, and his pelvis fell slack from the release of the excruciating pressure, finally.

Wonderfully pleasurable sensations eventually relaxed the man who made a profitable sale that night. Uncle Wei soon fell asleep, spooning the unconscious boy with his cock resting inside the latter, dreaming of soaking the cleaned fertile boy-womb with his own semen for the rest of the night.

.

“Lan Zhan! Lan Zhan!”

A hand lightly slapped his cheeks.

Lan Zhan nnngh’d in protest of the rough treatment on his face. He rolled to his side.

“You’re having a dirty dream again! That’s three times in a span of less than twenty four hours! What is wrong with you!” Chuckles. Laughter. A comforting, familiar presence and voice. More slaps on the cheeks.

The venerable Han Guang Jun finally opened his eyes, groaned and suddenly, leapt up - knocking Wei Ying’s head in the process. Both fell on their bottoms to the floor, like clumsy oafs, and rubbed their throbbing foreheads.

“ Ai-yo ... Lan Zhan, I know your qi is terribly deviated right now, but to see your physical balance being in the same state, is truly unbecoming of the Han Guang Jun!” Wei Ying groaned from a growing bump on his head.

He grabbed Lan Zhan’s wrist and slowly helped him up to his feet. “I detected the deviation in your qi when I woke up from an afternoon nap, then I realized I had tens of missed calls from you in ErNet, and I panicked because I thought something was wrong! I scanned the skies with my eyes, but I didn’t see people fighting on rooftops, and I looked at ground level, but did not see any soldiers or enemies running around with blood in their hands. It’s a good thing I cast a space-time bubble spell on this world immediately, otherwise by next second, Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling will be walking round that corner to find... this carnage!” one black-sleeved hand made an arching sweep around the spot where Lan Zhan collapsed earlier.

Lan Zhan rubbed his eyes, blinked and looked around. He was at first disorientated, then confused, and finally in total shock. His buttocks felt drafty, and he knew - remembered - he had been stripped and pawed by horny young males after all, and how.

The wall where he was caught had been broken into two - Wei Ying’s martial-arts punches were visibly imprinted on sections of rubbles - hence, he must have been freed and landed hard on his rump after he blacked out. The entire compound around the toilets, adjacent buildings and sheltered walkways were littered with drunken disciples snoring on the ground in all manners of obnoxious sleeping positions, including a few hanging off handrails or lying face-down on the wooden floor with their asses raised. Everyone had their pants pulled down or were simply pantless - traces of dried cum on their deflated dicks and for some, around their mouths and hands. The sight made Lan Zhan squirm in absolute discomfort, when tendrils of memories of being trapped in the wall and raped by countless teenagers surfaced.

“Never mind them, lao gong , look at yourself! Come, let’s get you washed up and you can tell me what happened while time has been stopped in this space-time bubble!” Wei Ying hurriedly pushed Lan Zhan towards the outdoor toilets. The latter gazed at his aroused nether regions, then belatedly, finally felt the full array of sensations of crusty, chilled, cummy, cheese-smelly, and icky stuff coating his buttocks and his insides.

Lan Zhan retched - thankfully he hadn’t had dinner yet -, while Wei Ying laughed like a madman. The spouse went on to fetch an empty bucket to fill up from nearby full water tanks - thank goodness Jin Ling had done a good job that morning, and the husband can take a full shower and hose down his tunnel of love too.

The rain had lightened to a mild drizzle, and left the residence complex drenched. Fortunately the air wasn’t too cold, otherwise everyone including the intoxicated disciples would be freezing their butts off by then.

.

Alone in a time-stopped world, the two worked to rinse off dried cum, saliva and other bodily fluids from Lan Zhan’s lower regions in the outdoor toilets. Being alone with the spouse and away from any other human being’s attention, brought comfort to the older man. Naked Lan Zhan, who was initially a bit distressed at his state of uncleanliness, felt grateful to be washed, bathed and cared for by the spouse. He stood as quiet an ashamed mouse, and let Wei Ying reach down with eager hands, play with his erect penis, then give some titillating hand-strokes that left the husband breathless, moaning the spouse's name, humping on empty air. Wei Ying succeeded in rubbing out a pent-up orgasm of just twenty-twitches from those dirty dreams; the rather diluted spoonful of seed arched weakly and splattered on the floor, joined the hordes of others that were washed off from Lan Zhan's body, and everything flowed out to the drains that led into the sewers.

“Okay, your front's all good. Turn around, bend forward, and point your anus at me, we need to take a look in there,” the younger man instructed, rather clinically. The husband hesitated a bit, but obeyed regardless.

Lan Zhan has had his virginity taken before by Wei Ying in the past - or at least a Wei-kin such as the Wei da ge ; which in theory, is derived from the same person of the same DNA, from the same mould, really - so getting stuff into his butthole wasn't a novelty for the middle-aged Gusu Lan man. However, being on the receiving end of a massive gangbang orgy involving non-Wei Yings was an entirely different league on its own, so he must've succumbed to the mind-blowing pleasure (or torture). He counted his lucky stars that he wasn't raped by dirty old men, and in fact, he felt rather invigorated to have serviced tasty young virile teenagers (although he wished they looked as cute or handsome as his lovely Wei Ying, and not the ordinary, indistinguishable, pimple-faced kind).

In the secluded sanctuary, he could relax himself, nnngh and squeeze his tummy muscles to his heart's content to open up his butthole. Wei Ying dutifully scraped out gooey residues from the husband's raised butt with his fingers - to Lan Zhan's objection, but he was easily scolded to shut up and behave, because surely Lan Zhan didn't have eyes inside the buttocks to see where cum had pooled or have been left to dry inside the rectum - then Wei Ying soaped the tunnel-y insides, and finally sprayed water to clean everything out with Water spells by drawing clean freshwater from the buckets.

It didn't take long for the squeamish feelings of churning water inside the ass to turn into something bigger, and more alarming. A very audible rumble or two in the tummy later, Wei Ying asked if Lan Zhan had taken a dump that day. The husband blushed, looked down to the puddles on the floor (that carried washed-off scraped-out semen), and shook his head.

“ Lao gong , you're not a child anymore, so I don't have to tell you whether you're allowed to defecate or not. It's a natural process, so let it go,” Wei Ying gently berated the husband and swatted the latter's springy buttocks. Another nnngh, and the husband's complexion turned into a deeper shade of embarrassed red. The younger man pushed the husband to squat at the edge of the drain, and he did the same, hoping that mimicking the husband would bring some level of familiarity, calm and comfort.

“Semen has a laxative effect; I learnt that from you , so it's not good to hold it in. For goodness sake, I'm your partner of nearly three years and forever, we've done everything unimaginably disgusting and gross together, so you can rest your mind and poop, and I wouldn't even bat an eyelid,” Wei Ying laughed loudly. Fortunately they're outdoors, so there was no residual stink when the first string of gassy farts ripped out from the ashamed middle-aged man; no one, not even the Han Guang Jun could stop the waves rippling through his trembling, contracting belly.

Wei Ying felt a rumble in his stomach too - probably the after-effects of mirroring the husband's actions. A better role model than the other, Wei Ying nonchalantly stripped off his clothes, returned to his squatting position next to the beet-red husband, and easily let go with plenty of unsavoury but natural sounds of nature.

A quick wash with buckets of water and some soap, both relieved (and cleaned) men emerged from the toilets and tried to figure out what to do with the dinner that had gone terribly wrong and its hundred-strong guests frozen in time.

.

Wei Ying thought they should clean-up the place first, then have dinner, then think about the next steps, before letting time resume. It sounded like a great idea, except that cheerful Wei Ying ended up wasting time having fun and mischief in the time-stopped world. While Lan Zhan diligently located and put the pants back on each time-stopped drunken disciple, Wei Ying hopped around the gardens to catch frozen liquid raindrops in the air with his tongue, or picked off butterflies and insects from plants and placed them in inappropriate places. He giggled non-stop, when not less than ten butterflies were carefully slid into Jin Ling's time-frozen gaping mouth, twenty grasshoppers and crickets were hidden beneath Jiang Cheng's collar, sleeves and even in his underwear (he noted the Jiang sect leader looked comically ugly with eyes half-closed and a half-grimace etched on the face), and for the sake of revenge, he meticulously collected more than thirty fire-red ants and sprinkled them onto Fairy's fur (from a remote distance, because Wei Ying is still scared of the canine creature).

Lan Zhan labored hard to carry ten disciples with his well-muscled bare hands at each time, stacked up on top of each other like sacks of grains, and moved them back to the dining halls. He arranged each disciple, one by one, to take their seats properly and with the correct sitting positions, in line with proper Qishan Lan etiquette, made sure their chopsticks and spoons were at the correct places, wiped the tables clean of leftovers and scraps, and refilled the dishes from the kitchen on his own. In short, Lan Zhan prepared and served the banquet this time, without the aid from the disciples.

Wei Ying got bored of watching Lan Zhan doing mundane housework - although he was the one that suggested the clean-up first - and went off to explore the delights of a halted world (he went to raid many dormitories, unearthing secrets such as secret diary books, hidden money pouches and of course, pornographic graphic novels under the beds) and amused himself with the residence's time-frozen inhabitants (the local winter wildlife fell victim to his wild pranks, unfortunately). Then he went outside and played his flute - a corrupted version of their love song - which when paired with a powerful artifact such as the Pillar of World Balance as the instrument of deployment, could selectively break the effects of a time-stop - so he played music to wake up his two-hundred strong undead, and made them assemble and perform calisthenics for his entertainment at a time-frozen dusk; it was just seven o' clock in the evening after all.

“Wei Ying! Dinner!” the husband called out from the dining halls; Lan Zhan set up a special small table with a selection of their favourite dishes, two bowls of rice, accompanied with chopsticks, spoons, napkins and a teapot of classic pu'er - and a jar of wine for the spouse.

“... Coming!” Wei Ying shouted out in reply from the top of the stockade wall, and played the last few notes, signalling the undead to go into hiding until the next calling from their great master of the Dark Arts.

.

“Lan Zhan-ah-Lan Zhan, you morally-depraved old man! Your mind is full of gutter trash and you harbour pervert thoughts for little children, you horny closeted rapist pedophile! I've read from the philosophical books of the Library Pavillion that dreams are often a reflection of deep-seated fears, desires, hopes and aspirations - but this, the stuff you dream about is unbelievably bad in taste, and it only gets worse! Ha ha ha!” Wei Ying’s laughter echoed off the walls as he rolled on the floor of the dining hall, clearly not quite interested in finishing his meal in silence as dictated by Qishan Lan rules, because Wei Ying always made an exception for himself.

Lan Zhan adjusted his cross-legged sitting position, took a sip of the lotus root soup and a bite of pork and black bean stew; all the dishes on the table were still steaming hot in the time-stopped world. “Do not cause disturbances when others are having a meal, Wei Ying. It is bad for your digestion,” he simply stated, and quietly munched of succulent meats from the bones. He reached for boiled cabbages and carrots from another plate with his chopsticks, and carefully placed them next to some fried chicken on his bowl. There was plenty of food such as spicy-sweet spare ribs, egg omelettes, grilled meat patties, steamed fish drizzled with sweetened soy sauce, stir-fry leafy and root vegetables, sweet desserts and fruits, but it seemed Lan Zhan was the only one seriously eating his fill. He thought his recipes were perfect, cooked by the teenage chef wannabes, and the taste was spot-on; he credited his excellent written instructions for the delicious food.

“I know, I know. I just can’t help it! I downloaded the livestream captured by the orbital spycams, taken from all three hundred and sixty degree angles, and watched it via ErNet while you were busy setting up the tables. You’re the biggest celebrity rockstar tonight, lao gong , with a zillion likes from our Kingdom. You’ve broken every other known record in view count! Ha ha ha!” the younger man rolled on the floor in the reverse direction. He cleverly snatched a greasy fried chicken wing from Lan Zhan’s bowl with his hands while in mid-roll.

The husband nnngh'd indignantly; it's not an achievement to be proud of, to have infinite numbers of followers watch how his ass was wrecked, and his cock and balls was savaged, by a hundred horny teenagers while he was stuck in the hole in the wall. He picked a piece of salted bittergourd with his chopsticks from a small plate he specifically prepared for himself, and with the precision of a master-level cultivator (and God), easily popped it into Wei Ying's open mouth at the right moment.

The laughter died immediately. Wei Ying's half-chewed tasty fried chicken wing became terribly salty and bitter, and he choked.

Notes for the Chapter:

Trying to inject a bit of domesticity and humour amid the dirty porn.

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 91

Now that his gangrape and dirty dreams - at least three episodes in the series so far - have been uploaded into ErNet and enjoyed by the Kingdom's predominantly adult viewers - everyone is a clone or progeny of the First Fathers, so technically, they're of legal age - Lan Zhan is saddled with a new dilemma: how to salvage his ruined reputation in the eyes of his citizens.

"A-Ji ah A-Ji," Wei Ying starts, and immediately draws murderous looks from the husband, "it is of irrelevance," he pokes a single chopstick rudely into a meatball, and sticks it into his mouth like a lolly, "if any of our citizens are affected by what happened to you. As long as you're our Grand Patriarch, or First Father Lan, nobody will dare to defy or say bad things about you. Plus, everyone else has their own skeletons in their closets, and I'm sure yours is the least of our worries," he ends his unsolicited advice with a noisy munch. Wei Ying could read Lan Zhan's mind if he wanted to, and he decided the older man's constipated looks during dinner warranted such intrusive actions.

Wei Ying casually steals a piece of dim sum from Lan Zhan's plate - an annoying habit he'd picked up from the days of living together in a tiny cave-home not too long ago, when they frequently shared a platter of food under the same roof -, "To tell the truth, I've seen worse things done by our citizens, so it's like a pot calling the kettle black if anyone has such malicious intent to disgrace you from your shiny pedestal. Which will never happen, and we'll make sure of that," and pops a potsticker into his busy mouth.

Lan Zhan considers Wei Ying's wise words - a timely advice from a loving spouse, really -, relaxes his shoulders, and leans back in his seat. "Wei Ying, even if I do not consider others, I cannot ignore my own anxieties. What should I do if those dreams return?" he asks and stares at his cup of cooling pu'er. A tea stem floats on the surface.

"You're the Jade Emperor, the God of Mercy, and the Lord Buddha, the best three-in-one the world has ever known. You can change the universe with a snap of your fingers, surely you can change your dreams too, can't you? Go figure out something yourself, Your Highness," Wei Ying laughs, and snatches the last piece of fried wonton, dips it in plum sauce, and walks away from the dining hall.

Lan Zhan is left alone to stare at his empty plate and mull over what Wei Ying said. He still needs to clean the table and wash the dishes later.

.

"I've decided, Lan Zhan," Wei Ying says, as he performs some post-meal stretches to aid his digestion, in the courtyard outside of the dining halls. Some stars sparkle in the dusky skies tinged with a multitude of fiery colours from deep reds to violet blues, with retreating clouds still raining a light drizzle on the residential compounds - although every raindrop floats, unmoving, in a time-stopped world, casting tiny glittering lights to the vicinity like diamonds on ground level.

"Mn? What did you decide?" the husband asks calmly, having wiped his hands with a washcloth, and he approaches the spouse with a plate of fruits. Wei Ying did say he preferred to have something sweet and healthy as dessert after dinner.

“To end the Lotus Pier as it is. Let it bow out gracefully and exit the world stage,” the spouse says vaguely, and right on time, open his mouth widely with an ‘aaaaaaah’ in mid-stretch.

Lan Zhan dutifully uses a toothpick to skewer a seedless grape and pops it into Wei Ying’s waiting mouth. He waits for the spouse to elaborate further.

“The boys are well-fed, happily drunk, and have experienced what it’s like to have sex. They’re no longer virgins, they’re fully-fledged adults now. They’ve gained basic living skills such as cooking their own meals, armed themselves with daily schedules, and they can fight a little better with swords than before, thanks to you. They’re ready to fly out of the nest, graduate from my brother’s useless leadership, and set out on their own from this dying world,” he explains, and picks a slice of peach off the fruit platter.

“Your brother... did a good job keeping them alive so far,” Lan Zhan chips in, with a little uncertainty in his steady voice.

“You don’t need to butter up to your brother-in-law, lao gong . I know bad leadership when I see one,” Wei Ying’s tone becomes a little agitated, “If we hadn’t intervened, these boys would be doomed to die from malnourishment from having nothing but stale bread and water every day. They were incompetent and unskilled enough to be picked off easily by the Imperial forces like M&M’s on a plate; during my foster father’s heydays, we had twenty thousand people living and working in the Pier, and more than two thousand cultivators stationed in the Jiang residence - look at what we are left today,” and he shrugs at the magnitude of loss for one of Yunmeng’s biggest cities.

Lan Zhan strokes his beard and takes an apple wedge for himself. “If the enemy is wiped out, they could always return here and start over. Grow up, settle down, work the lands, earn a good living, just like us,” he says thoughtfully before taking a polite bite.

“I don’t think it’ll work. After what they did to you, and experienced the pleasures of a man’s flesh, they can’t... err... thrive and propagate naturally. Plus, I don’t think there are any females around - do you see any?” Wei Ying gives a crooked smile - there’s something to laugh at, and to be sad about, in his words.

Lan Zhan finishes his fruit snack and goes for a kiwi slice. He knows that the spouse wouldn’t simply claim something so ridiculous if it wasn’t backed with evidence; he takes it that there are - or will be - no more females in the Middle Kingdom when the Imperial forces have succeeded in destroying every last human settlement and turned the living into the dead. There may be pockets of life - the last bastions of living Men - however in this day and age, typically only fighter males will be left until the end of days.

“Mn. I understand. Shall we transport them to our Kingdom now? What will happen to them in their new life?” Lan Zhan asks, trying to gauge the spouse’s final decisions for the remnants of the Jiang people.

Wei Ying takes the toothpick, downs two strawberries with it before using it to pick fruit skin and vegetable bits from his teeth. He makes a couple of smacking sounds to cleanse his palate.

“I’m gonna assign two undead individuals from my army to each disciple. One will carry his luggage from the dorms, the other will bring enough meal packages from the magical cart in the pantry, and water from the tanks, to give the xiongdi a good start in his new world. The fierce corpses will be his servants and companions, just like how Wen Ning used to stick to me in my past life. We’ll deduct a small amount of gold from Wangxian’s infinite coffers for their spending money, and you’ll sign off those payment checks. You’ll grant them war refugee status, so they’ll receive special protection from our government’s administration. How does that sound, Lan laoban ?” the spouse leans forward and grins sweetly, uncharacteristically, at the husband, currying for favours, obviously.

The husband makes a quick telepathic call to the Heavens to check with his secretaries and officials. Heaven’s administrators are among the best in the multiverses, due to their great intelligence and efficiency, as no-nonsense civil servants led by first-generation clones of the great Lan Wang Ji.

“Mn. Bring your army in and get everyone in place. The mass instant teleportation spell will be activated soon,” the husband gently takes the toothpick from Wei Ying’s grasp and puts it on the emptied fruit platter. Dessert is done.

“Eh? A spell? Aww... I was hoping for a grand exit... you know, like... Boom! Fweeeeew! A big UFO mothership appears in the night skies, and hovers above this city. Then, it lights up with fancy reds and greens, countless circular golden pillars of light shine from it, and beams up people and objects from the ground!” Wei Ying dramatically acts out the scene with wild sweeps of his hands, and wiggly leg movements. Even his animated face makes funny ‘ooh’s and ‘aah’s expressions, to no audience in particular.

Lan Zhan snorts with his back facing the spouse, “You’ve been watching too many 21st-century sci-fi movies lately,” and walks off to wash the dessert plate in the kitchen sink.

.

There is an unfortunate exception to their mass evacuation plan, however. Jin Ling was, by all accounts, considered as a non-qualified refugee applicant for admission into the Kingdom of Lan. Lawyers and administrators in the Heavens have debated and checked on this multiple times, but to no avail; Jin Ling is a member of the Jin family, despite having ties to the Kingdom through his material side. If he were to enter the Kingdom’s territories, he would be considered as an illegal immigrant, and would have to undergo a full test; it is not yet known what the tests entail, whether they are medical check-ups, aptitude examinations or some other forms of evaluations, however the Heavenly officials were adamant that Jin Ling will fail miserably at this stage.

Therefore, the couple agreed that Jiang Cheng and the nephew will have to be left behind, and remain in the Mortal Realm for a while longer. Wei Ying insisted that Jin Ling still needed the Jiang sect leader as his legal guardian, because the poor boy is an orphan and has no one else to turn to. “Plus,” Wei Ying states, “Jin Ling is nearly twenty years old, but the legal age is twenty one.” The husband concedes in that respect.

Before the grand-scale spell activates, they take a few pictures of the hundred-strong disciples, each politely sitting in front of his last supper in the dining hall, appearing to be asleep, serene and calm as though in prayer; the dusky skies in the background makes for a perfect sunset - or sunrise - panoramic shot of the deserted Jiang residence. Wei Ying carefully stores these precious moments into their family's cloud drive, to document his journey on foot with Lan Zhan to the East, and aptly titled "Walking with you towards sunrise".

The spell took less time than expected to work its magic. Every peacefully-sleeping teenager in his seat, his final meal in Lotus Pier on the table - prepared exclusively by the great Han Guang Jun -, escorted by his two assigned undead servants carrying luggage and rations, glowed like bright sunshine in the night and with a final fwip!, they disappeared into thin air.

Wei Ying wept a little at the grave loss of the disciples - the little babes that couldn't possibly survive in this harsh, cruel world - and partly, the lively merry undead crew that had entertained his life with Yunmeng-style singing, dancing and calisthenics. Lan Zhan held his spouse's arm and kept him close in a warm, but sad embrace. "We should go soon, before the Imperial forces arrive and decimate this place altogether," the husband said.

.

It started with a girlie scream of terror choked with coughs. Then a manly shout of disgust and dancing footsteps on the floor. And a long, prolonged whine of a dog who was bitten by red ants.

“Three... two... one... go!” Wei Ying whispered excitedly for no particular reason, and the couple leapt out from the outdoor toilet.

“They’re gone! Everyone’s gone! The food’s gone! The disciples are gone! The warehouse is emptied! Even the dorms are ransacked! Oh woe, oh heavens, everything is gone! Vanished into thin air!” Wei Ying acted with exaggerated drama and suspense, a hand on his forehead, jelly legs wiggling uselessly on the ground, and a fake panicked look on his face.

Lan Zhan awkwardly hops out from behind - out of sync from Wei Ying’s grand entrance - a bucket over his head and his muddied clothes are soaked (again). “Oh. In the toilet. Everything went dark. Someone kicked my legs. I slipped and fell. Oh, it hurts. Hurts very much,” he groans impassively while swinging his arms stiffly, almost like acting out of a script (which he is, really).

(Wei Ying hisses telepathically and points out that Lan Zhan missed a line - he forgot to say why he was in the toilet - he was supposed to be taking a dump - but the husband ignored the spouse.)

The husband feels terribly uncomfortable, and stagefright caused queasiness inside his belly. Water had been poured over him and his matted hair stuck to the insides of the bucket, he couldn’t breathe right inside that strangling container, his clothes stuck to his skin and it felt suffocatingly humid (not to mention, Wei Ying had painstakingly drew mudprints on his pristine white robes to give a realistic impression - and the wearer felt dirtied), Bichen was knocked on a wall when he made a startling turn and fell clumsily from his belt, his hands accidentally hit Wei Ying's back - everything that could go wrong on stage, went wrong.

Wei Ying rolls his eyes and silently gives the husband a F- grade for his act. He picks up the spotlight and starts moving all four limbs to point towards the residence's gates at the stockade walls. "Look! Look! Just when I arrived in anticipation for a grand dinner made by our beloved disciples, I saw shadows! Shadows I tell you! S. H. A. D. O. W. S. ! They went that way! Out of the gates! The enemy must've broken in and stolen everything, everyone! The gates were left open! Look at the opened gates! G. A. T. E. S.!" and he shrieks and jumps and yells and points excitedly at the gates, so that both sputtering and cursing Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling are caught up in the heat of the frenzy, and scrambles to the said gates to chase after unseen shadows in the night. Wei Ying follows them and continues to spew crazy tales spinned from his wild imaginations.

Following the hastily drawn script, Lan Zhan heaves a sigh of relief after acting out his sole part. He removes the bucket, wipes down his clothes with a washcloth - his face soured in disdain at the amount of mud Wei Ying used to draw on his robes just for a lackadaisical fifteen-second performance -, and fixes his appearance. Wei Ying's voice is heard above the din at the gates of the stockade wall, but the husband doesn't pay any attention. He resumes his duty to prepare a table for the remaining occupants, including a tasty hotpot served with a platter of thinly sliced fatty meats, and a slew of dishes fresh out of the wok (the masterchef cooks at lightning speed, after all): braised pork trotters, garlic and ginger steamed chicken with chilli dips, stir-fry mixed vegetables, peppers and mushrooms, rice, and cut fruits for dessert, and a teapot of chrysanthemum tea - he thought the Jiang sect leader would appreciate something cooling after such an alarming ordeal and a spicy meal.

Poor Fairy, who was intelligent enough not to be taken in for a ride by Wei Ying's antics, rolled around on the wet garden grass and scratched everywhere his paws could reach. It whined and whined so pitifully, that Lan Zhan decided to tend to the creature's misery after the plates are put out and the dishes are served on the table. He gives Fairy a bowl of tasty unsalted steamed chicken and rice, and a selection of raw meats intended for the hotpot. While the dog eats gratefully, Lan Zhan crouches by its side, and combs through its fur to pick out the red ants and scratch the irritating bites and itches on its rump. He tells Fairy to forgive Wei Ying for the troubles caused; Fairy woofed, uses its hind leg to scratch his ear - Lan Zhan followed up by scratching the same spot with his fingers - and the dog licks the man's face with a tongue full of chewed doggie food.

.

Lan Zhan puts two and two together. His theory is confirmed - as long as he is wet, or keeps his body cooled, he wouldn't emit as much pheromones due to the cursed spell by the Thousand-Year Snake. Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling ran across without batting an eyelid at him, but Fairy stayed close after he'd wiped down his drenched clothes. The dog scratched itself, ate its dinner and rubbed its greasy snout on Lan Zhan's body, and continued to whine excitedly simultaneously - which is really too much stimulation for an animal that acted purely on instincts.

To relieve its misery, Lan Zhan used his qi to calm himself down and suppress any thoughts or actions that could cause spikes in body temperature. As expected, Fairy promptly sniffed the air curiously at the loss of an inexplicable delicious smell, then relaxed to concentrate on its meal. Lan Zhan ruminated on the new discovery as he watched the fat husky wolf down a whole chicken thigh; he was already used to slow-burn his qi energy during the good ol' days for similar purposes, when Wei Ying drove his lusts and desires to skyrocketing levels and he didn't have the time, or opportunity, to push the sex-kitten spouse down to the ground and fuck like rabbits. Since he is the King of Gods and Men, and has unlimited qi circulating in his body (actually, his loins), thus theoretically, he could maintain a peaceful, calm, Buddha-like visage all day and not attract hordes of horny men whenever he goes for a walk.

Soon, the noisy trio returns, and Lan Zhan stands up and brushes off bits of doggie food and drying caked mud from his clothes. He quickly excuses himself with the reason that he needed to take a quick bath in his guest room, and Fairy is being fed in the gardens, so they should all take their seats at the dining hall and continue their discussions there.

Jiang Cheng comments that the Lan er gongzi is remarkably calm and unaffected by the crisis devastating the Jiang people (and adds some unkind remarks about the Han Guang Jun's unimpressive, rigid, wooden personality). Jin Ling sees how fast the husky dog wags its tail and the wonderful bowl of food on the ground, reaches out to the retreating Lan master and calls, awkwardly, for the man to take care in the bathroom and not to slip or fall again.

Wei Ying's breath hitches a little, and his heart warms up a bit; Jin Ling is starting to show some empathy and concern for others, after all.

.

The story so far - Wei Ying spent an afternoon catching up with his younger brother and nephew while it was raining outside, although most of the time they played with Fairy to burn off extra calories (it was getting chubby, really), and Wei Ying was always at the short end of the stick; he was chased by the husky around the main hall and around the throne, hid behind the huge pillars from the dog - but still managed to maintain some semblance of a decent conversation with the two owners -, and by late afternoon, frustration finally drove Wei Ying to brave himself to stand in front of a heavily panting Fairy with Suibian standing between the man and the beast. It was a laudable achievement, from having to run at the sight or sound of a dog, to maintaining a respectful distance of a sword's length (it's 'social distancing' in some ways).

Wei Ying convinced the other two - over a dinner of Lan Zhan's famed dishes - that somehow, the enemy tricked a disciple to open the gates to let them in. The more senior and well-armed guards were having dinner with the rest of the troops, so probably a young, inexperienced boy was lured using poisoned candies, sweet dumplings or something similar to unlock the heavily barred doors.

"How can you be so sure, da jiu?" an irate Jin Ling asked, being the most skeptical of them all.

"Huh? You nearly ate lotus seed buns full of black poison offered by a merchant in disguise, just the other day. Why do you think otherwise?" the twentysomething-year old man snapped back, and the Jin gongzi promptly shut up with a mouthful of tender, juicy, flavourful pork chunks that seemed to melt away from the bones.

Then, Wei Ying went on to say that with the gates opened, a flood of undead enemies came rushing in. They snatched everything on sight and within an arm's reach - people, food, even cutlery - and ransacked the barracks and warehouses for key supplies, before leaving without a trace.

“How could there be so many enemies that our disciples were overwhelmed, and yet we did not hear anything while in the main hall? Why would they steal such particular items? It doesn’t make sense!” Jiang Cheng grumbled, while slurping down a mouth-watering succulent chicken drumstick with a drizzle of chilli soy sauce.

It was easy to lead them on while their minds (and stomachs) are focused on such good food, Wei Ying thought. He didn’t need to think far, “Look around, there are many wet footprints of the boys and of the undead - the bony ones,” he pointed on the floor, “and there are signs of struggle, like things being dragged around,” and he directed his fingers elsewhere (which were actually marks left by undead servants moving heavy baggage and even a few pieces of furniture for their new disciple-cum-masters).

Wei Ying continued to elaborate with his beguiling and persuasive expressions, “With so many enemies that barged in, surely the entire operation took less than a few minutes, and it must have been masterminded by a brilliant Dark Arts practitioner! This person must’ve known in advance of who and what to take, with astute strategizing and deadly efficiency! Who would’ve thought to use the tranquil sounds of falling rain to make everyone complacent! I was shouting all the time in the main hall,” Wei Ying gave an evil eye at Fairy, who ignored him and continued to work on its tasty doggie bowl, “So really, none of you would’ve heard anything if scores of men were dragged away by horrible fierce corpses, because let me tell you again, my brother - do not ever estimate the undead, they can be as dangerous as the living! I know this from first hand experience!” he cried out with such conviction and passion, and of confidence reflected as an equally amazing Dark Arts user. The other two did not reply immediately, because they were busy stuffing their faces with Lan Zhan’s awesome cooking.

The Wei gongzi sends a telepathic word of thanks to the husband, for cooking such wonderful dishes that silences any arguments or unnecessary drama from the remaining Jiang residence members - Wei Ying gets free supper too, and has a small bowl of rice to go with the appetizing meal; following the slightly altered time zones, it's time for a midnight snack for Wei Ying. Lan Zhan simply advised the spouse not to eat too much - because sleeping after eating a heavy meal is a sure way to gain weight -, and that he doesn't deserve as much credit, because he knows that Wei Ying is using mind-reading and mind-control abilities to steer the conversation on the dinner-supper table. ("You're worse than your da ge , by manipulating your family's emotions at times like this," the husband gently accuses the spouse, and Wei Ying sticks his tongue out in retaliation.)

"Ah, lao gong , you know me too well," comes the sheepish psychic reply. Wei Ying starts pouring Laozu Smiles into Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling's cups, which is the best way to get them off the couple's back and let them collect their thoughts during their drunken slumber.

"Mn. Finish your meal quietly, bring those two to their rooms, then come back soon. I will prepare a hot bath for you," the husband says, before tuning out of ErNet. He hangs his handwashed clothes to dry, and puts the spouse's folded pyjamas and a fresh bathtowel on the bathroom countertop, with a toothbrush that comes with a perfectly-squeezed dollop of toothpaste on it.

.

Lan Zhan wished Wei Ying wouldn't take the convoluted way out of the Jiangs' dire situation, and instead just be honest with them. But who was he to argue, when Wei Ying is the greatest problem-solver and the think-tank of their couple-team of two?

Lan Zhan just had about enough of getting abused by the corrupted personification of the spouse in his dreams. As a helpless eight-year old that couldn't fight against adults, he was thrown into a nightmarish world worse than before, and full of pedophilic men.

In the morning, the disciplinary teacher walked into the classroom while he was attending a calligraphy lesson, and was dragged out without reason - but his buttocks were caned in front of the other students - and sent to the detention room. As soon as he was pushed into a strange, enclosed space, doors closed behind him with a terrifying 'click' of locks. The men from the black market sale emerged from the shadows with twisted glee on their faces, and soon, the eight-year old adolescent was stripped and repeatedly raped on the cold hard concrete floor in a room without windows. The excited men took turns to lie atop the child, crush the struggling victim with their massive body weight, hump into the sweet tight hole until the anus became distended, puffy and very red, then orgasmed with great joy for more than fifteen twitches each into the boy. Little Lan Zhan's belly bulged as time passed, with dirty old men's cum pooling into his insides, until he looked like a pregnant pre-teen child. His screams went unheard as he was sexually assaulted by grunting, moaning men who looked like hardcore convicts, and his child genitals were attacked non-stop until midday.

In the afternoon, he limped his way back home with an inflamed penis with his foreskin permanently peeled back, bruised emptied balls, plenty of fingerprints and scratch marks all over his delicate pre-teen body, and his loincloth was soaked with dripping adult men's semen. He found his home to be unoccupied, and a note on the table from Xi Chen da ge that said the latter had to rush to the markets in Caiyi Town to sell off harvests from the morning. "Lunch is on the kitchen counter", it wrote. Little Lan Zhan dropped his schoolbag and rushed to the kitchen - only to see the terrifying next-door neighbour standing by the stove, preparing delicious side dishes to go with the plain rice dumplings - his usual lunch as a poor, orphaned boy - on the countertop.

“Hello, my lovely A-Ji. Did you meet my friends at school? They’ve found some jobs as temporary teachers, and they’ll stay over for a few weeks. I’ve specifically bribed your headmaster with gold nuggets to make sure you’ll be sent to them everyday. I hope you don’t mind,” he said with an evil grin, and just in time, a roast chicken, a plate of stir-fry vegetables, a pot of soup and a platter of fruit were served on the dining table.

Little Lan Zhan’s stomach rumbled at the nutritious and mouth-watering food. The eight-year old boy had to endure many painful tingles as he enjoyed his lunch, with Uncle Wei crouching between his legs, sucking his wildly twitching and throbbing penis, played with his shrivelled testicles until they orgasmed on their own, and his fingers lovingly stretched and scraped dirty men’s cum out from the reddened swollen anus. Without any homework given due to the detention, the boy spent the afternoon with Uncle Wei thrusting deep inside him, in his own sparsely-furnished bedroom decorated by straw toys, rabbit-themed bedsheets and soft pillows that smelled of plain but pleasant sandalwood. Lan Zhan’s bed creaked dangerously for many hours, while Uncle Wei huffed and puffed tiredly, but extremely overjoyed, at the daily chance to breed and shoot thick creamy seed into the boy’s buttocks from his exceedingly excited hard, hairy adult penis.

“Oh, A-Ji, my lovely sweet A-Ji, you make uncle feel so happy today and everyday,” the dirty uncle moaned again. He dipped his turgid, red and exceedingly overjoyed cock into the boy’s anus again and again. “Let’s do this all the time, and I will find a way to make you mine, forever. Oh, A-Ji, uncle is cumming again, squeeze your ass tighter, yes, yes, you’re the best whore, you're my bitch, ahh... uunh.... hnngh... YES YES YES I'm raping an eight-year old baby OH FUCK SWEET GUANYIN I'm making babies in your baby womb UUNH HHNG AAHN Take it, Take all my sperm and get pregnant uuuUUUUUUuuuuUUUUhnnnn," and the uncle's sexual noises continued throughout the afternoon, as his hips shook uncontrollably, his ejaculations became erratic, and he lost count of how many twitches as penile muscles squeeze and convulse inside the gripping, juicy, moist folds of the boy's rectum. Truly, the depraved uncle loves tasting the boy's lost innocence, and enjoys orgasming into the eight-year old's incredibly comforting and warm body all day.

Xi Chen da ge returned just before sunset - right when Uncle Wei just finished spurting his eighth happy milky load into the flooded, well-fertilized boy-pussy -, but by then, the damage had been done. Uncle Wei, still putting on his pants when he heard the main door unlock, quickly climbed out through the child's bedroom window and escaped unscathed, and soon, he was back in his house enjoying post-sex delights such as a smoke and a jar of wine. Little Lan Zhan shivered and curled into a ball on his bed with the soiled bedsheet wrapped over him, but the gege thought the boy was being grouchy for being left alone for the afternoon. He went over to apologize for the sudden trip to sell harvested crops at a good price, and prepared dinner for two.

.

"Uncle Wei, I'm sorry to bother you at a time like this, but my brother is acting up again, and he doesn't want to come out of the bedroom for dinner. Do you know what happened, and can you help?" the teenager Lan brother asked, while standing at the doorway to the neighbour's house. The demonic shushu smiled as wide as possible, "Of course, Xi Chen. It's one of those things that little boys with quiet, introverted dispositions go through. Err... one of those emotional phases... thingy. I have a degree in child psychology, so I know. He needs to spend some time alone, preferably with adult supervision and one that he knows very well, like a close friend,” said the habitual liar, and pointed at himself - and realized that he was without a shirt. “Ah,” he laughed sheepishly at himself, “Forgive me for my rudeness. Let me put on a shirt and I’ll come right away.”

Xi Chen was told ‘not to worry’ and to enjoy his dinner and go to bed early for another long day tomorrow, because surely he had more farms to toil and more vegetables to sell. The teenager wholeheartedly agreed.

Not ten minutes have passed, when Uncle Wei dropped by to pick up the errant Lan er gongzi from his bedroom. He rubbed his greasy hands and licked his lips, and slyly asked, “Let him spend a night with me. I have more than enough food in my kitchen since I’m a bachelor, and I have a spare bed.

Oh, better yet, I know the school’s headmaster well, and there is a quiz for the kids tomorrow. So, let me take your didi to school straight from my house, and he’ll have an early start in class.

Oh Oh, even better yet, I know a laoban in Caiyi Town who is asking for good-quality vegetables like yours, for a very, very good price. His store opens only in the afternoon, and is a little far, so you might only return after sunset.

Oh Oh Oh, I have a great suggestion, if you happen to return late, do not worry. I can help to take care of your didi for the whole day and night, meals and board included for free, really. He’ll be safe and sound in my house, I promise. You can trust me, your best neighbour and everyone's preferred baby-sitter!

So, what do you think?"

With such a wonderful neighbour offering to take the load off Xi Chen's shoulders, the teenager agreed immediately.

Uncle Wei strutted into little Lan Zhan's bedroom with a brown vial hidden in his sleeve pockets. There were some noises, akin to struggles and gagged screams, but Xi Chen wouldn't know, because like all residents of the Cloud Recesses, he doesn't recognize the sounds of a child being kidnapped by a sex predator.

In less than ten minutes, Uncle Wei walked out, triumphantly, with the bundled-up little Lan Zhan in his arms, swaddled by the soiled bedsheet, and a glazed but happy, relaxed look on the child's tear-streaked face. "See? I can handle him. Leave it to me! Good night, and thank you so much, wonderful Xi Chen!" the man merrily called out as he left the house and waved good-bye. Xi Chen briefly wondered - again - why he was thanked.

Little Lan Zhan would be imprisoned in Uncle Wei's home for the night, with the man's penis happily captured, drilling inside the boy's hot tight hole until dawn. The man enjoys playing with the child's purple-red penis and fragile swollen testicles for hours on end until he gets showered by squirts of pee and that sweet, sweet pure nectar made of immature seedless sexual fluids that only little eight-year old boys could ejaculate.

The eight-year old boy never appeared in school the next morning, and there was no quiz after all. The headmaster was paid off to falsify an attendance record for the boy, and it only cost one gold nugget for Uncle Wei's fraudulent requests. The man's friends visited his house with bags of wonderful sex toys in their arms. Away from any prying eyes, with curtains drawn and all doors and windows closed, no one in the village knew about the boy's agonizing sobs and screams as he was sexually abused throughout the day inside Uncle Wei's dungeon.

Uncle Wei appeared briefly on his doorsteps at midday to wave good-bye to Xi Chen, as the latter rushed off to Caiyi Town with another basket of vegetables on his back; the man was generous after all, and had sent Fairy Messenger calls to an accomplice to prepare gold nuggets to buy the produce from the teenager, in the fringes of that town. With Xi Chen out of sight, the man returned to his dark, sweat-smelly house to join a mass orgy with twenty men, plenty of food and wine, and a drugged boy on a terribly stained bed.

Long after the sun had set, Xi Chen returned, tired but satisfied with a sale that could feed his family of two for a few weeks. Uncle Wei stubbed out his smoke and waved at the teenager. He signalled that the didi had gone to bed early, and shouldn't be disturbed. He also gave a thumbs-up - yes, yes, everything is fine, so leave your little brother to me, and you go and get some good rest for your hard work, he said, convincingly. The teenager gladly staggered back to his house, sleepy, and closed the doors. Uncle Wei too, closed his doors, took a swig of excellent wine, and scratched his crotch. He had emptied himself many times into the eight-year old boy in the course of twenty-four hours, and his friends had already gone home because they were already pleasantly drained too. Still, that didn't faze him - in fact, the situation only fanned his loins and his lust once again - he had a whole night with the prized delicacy to himself!.

Uncle Wei returns to the teary-eyed and hiccuping boy on the bed soaked with male sexual fluids, and gives him an apologetic, but sweet kiss on cum-stained lips. Then, he proceeds to play and ravage the adolescent's battered, bruised and ruined xiao ji ji with renewed vigour, deep into the night.

.

Lan Zhan blinked his eyes, wide awake, in bed. Lovely Wei Ying had taken a strange sprawling sleeping position that covered most of the bed and partly on top of the husband, with one hand tucked comfortably into the latter's underpants. The bedroom was very quiet - the last crickets had been scared off by Wei Ying's pranks, and there were no disciples or any other living beings nearby, save for the remaining four in the Residence. One could hear a pin drop at any time. Ironically, it felt nice to the husband; he always fantasized of living in total seclusion, and this was (almost) it.

He groaned and rearranged the sloppy spouse back to his side of the bed, wiped drool off the surfaces, and placed a smooch on Wei Ying's cheek before returning to sleep. He told himself, again, that he should take control of his dreams, no matter how erotic and enjoyable they are, if left alone to evolve into sexy nightmares.

.

Lan Zhan heaved a sigh of relief, when he found himself to be - well, just himself. A middle-aged Gusu Lan master, who owns a house in the Cloud Recesses, living partly in seclusion because hardly anyone dared to go near the cold-looking, stoic, serious, no-nonsense and unapproachable, but actually, much revered and celebrated, Han Guang Jun.

For some reason, he found himself walking along a curb in Caiyi Town with a bamboo umbrella during a rainy day. The streets were empty as everyone took shelter from the bad weather. His footsteps left ripping puddles and everything around him - the shops, the parks, the teahouses, the alleys - was closed and drenched to the bone, literally.

He watched from a distance, at a little child sitting near a dumpster at the end of a deserted cul-de-sac. His face was smeared with dirt, his hair unruly, messy and probably full of fleas, his clothes were simply stitched-up gray rags and were too big for his thin, frail body, he wore no shoes and his little soles were muddy and blistered. It was cold and dark, and the boy shivered even as he tried to play with his soaked hand-made straw toys on the flooded floor - a straw man, woman and a child. There was a faraway smile on his face, although the skin on his limbs was pale, bruised and a little blotched; probably he had suffered much trying to survive in the streets and carried some disease.

Nevertheless, Lan Zhan told himself, he is now in charge of his own destiny, and he does not fear anything that is dirtied or filthy. He walked up to the boy until his umbrella shielded the rain from the latter. The little child looked up - wonder in his clear dark brown eyes, yet alarming black circles under them - and smiled innocently.

“ Shushu ... ?”

“Mn,” he said, and offered a steaming sweet dumpling he carried in his sleeve pocket.

Lan Zhan held the boy’s hand as they walked out to the main street. Little Wei Ying quietly ate the offered dumpling, the first proper meal he had in days. Lightning struck, thunder roared, and more rain fell, however the two were safely protected by Lan Zhan’s big bamboo umbrella along the path that led towards their new home, the Cloud Recesses.

Notes for the Chapter:

At this point, I've kinda run out of ideas for the story. So, let's see how things will develop on their own, as we watch Wangxian unfold!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

p.s. Added a few more icky details!

Chapter 92

Lan Zhan learnt that raising an eight-year old boy that had been left neglected in the streets for too long required keen intellect, infinite patience, and a very deep kind of love that went beyond a normal relationship between an adult man and a (bratty) child.

Little Wei Ying acted and resembled more like a feral animal than anything else, the moment he was brought into the Lan master's mansion, and the doors were locked shut. The child became aggressive, defensive, and leapt away from the man, fingers curled into claws and ready strike at a moment's notice, eyes as wide as saucers with pupils dilated. Lan Zhan was caught off-guard by the unexpected reaction, and made a misstep when he politely asked the eight-year old to be a good boy and sit down - the boy simply refused to listen, ran everywhere, climbed the curtains, broke glassware and century-old vases, and left muddy footprints on the furniture, then wetted his ragcloth-pants to pee into potted plants and vegetables, and squealed loudly like a ball of energy gone wild inside the house and around the interior gardens. Shocked by such uncultured behaviour, the Gusu Lan master quickly cast a Binding spell to tie the boy up and gagged him down.

While such uncouth acts would scare many bachelor men to immediately dump such uncontrollable children to foster homes or orphanages, Lan Zhan was unfazed. For a short while, little Wei Ying became a caterpillar with an overgrown head of messy hair, wrapped by blue Binding spell threads, and he wiggled side to side constantly to try to break out and escape.

A haircut and a meticulous shampooing session later (thankfully, with fleas and lice quickly removed from the scruffy boy, with a side dish of a hypnotizing head massage), followed by a bath (medicated soaps dipped into warm water from the hot springs, served with plenty of back scratches), Lan Zhan patiently towelled the wild boy even while his hand was bitten and his toes were stepped on.

“Kidnapper! Rapist! Molester! Monster! Let me go!” little Wei Ying cried as he was gently manhandled by the presumed perpetrator once the Binding spell was removed. Lan Zhan made sure the eight-year old’s delicate genitals were properly fluffed with the woolly material and the crack of his ass was patted dry. He received plenty of light punches and kicks - no more than mere insect bites for the Gusu Lan master, really - from the fiery and fiesty child, which delighted him.

“Wei Ying, you are smart, resilient, and you know how to defend yourself,” the Lan master acknowledged, and dabbed healing ointments and soothing balms on the bruises and scratches all over the boy’s body, when the boy tired out towards the end of his struggle. The boy was thin and malnourished, and the master could easily hold his waist with just one hand.

“You are something that I am not, compared to the nightmares that haunt me during the nights,” Lan Zhan added thoughtfully, but his words fell on deaf ears - the child was busy making angry teeth-marks on his forearms at every opportunity, particularly when he carried the latter over his shoulder towards the kitchen.

Fortunately, the naked child stopped biting and struggling when his eyes laid upon a marvellous sight he’d never seen before in his young eight years of life - a wonderful sumptuous, delicious buffet of freshly baked breads, grilled meats, hot spicy stews and roasts, mountains of steaming dumplings of dozens of types of fillings, bowls of rice and noodles, colourful seasonal fruits and garden salads, sweet desserts and traditional candies that every children in the Middle Kingdom loved - all spread out and arranged in perfect sequence and order on a huge round teakwood dining table.

“I tried my best to cook with whatever ingredient I have in the pantry, but I lack the lotus root to make your favourite pork rib soup. I hope you don’t mind,” Lan Zhan explained to no one in particular, when the starving child dove straight ahead for the table on all fours and started wolfing down the food; he used his fingers to grab and gobble up as much as his little mouth could stuff, rather than with cutlery and tableware. The man stroked little Wei Ying’s cleaned and fragrant-smelling hair and felt wet strands tangle and knot in some places, so he took a seat behind the child and combed the boy’s hair, while humming some of Gusu’s classical children’s songs - while scrawny little Wei Ying scoffed down a whole chicken thigh in a single go.

.

Little Wei Ying turned out to be quite affectionate once the feral demon in him was sated - hunger, sleep and the need to love and be loved. For three days and three nights after the boy arrived at the Lan master’s mansion, lovely Wei Ying was well-fed with three buffets a day, thanks to Lan Zhan’s amazing cooking and a limitless supply of food, snacks and ingredients in the pantry. The child was forcefully cuddled to naps and made to sleep five times a day (Lan Zhan has strong arms, and could keep the screaming and kicking boy pressed against his torso without breaking a sweat, until the latter fell asleep from listening to a steady, comforting heartbeat and enveloped with the scent of sandalwood); Wei Ying was allowed to bite, scratch, then gradually suckle the man’s ample muscular chest, until the master’s nipples puffed up, to the curiosity and delight of the eight-year old who had forgotten the joys of being breastfed by a loving parent. He was slowly introduced to ways of living with the new ‘owner’, and soon, the eight-year old’s skin-and-bones complexion started to glow and grow into the first signs of chubbiness, the ribs have disappeared under new layers of baby fat, and he was energetic, healthy and full of laughter and joy.

The affluent Gusu Lan master lived alone in an enormous mansion - an enlarged Jingshi, really - surrounded by lush forests, tranquil gardens and lakes, and vast farmlands with plenty of chickens, rabbits and livestock roaming everywhere. Hardly anyone visited, as neighbours kept a respectable distance from the master - so the master could do whatever he wanted to the child, away from prying eyes and gossipy housewives.

The boy was allowed to live his normal, uncultured life just as how he lived, abandoned, in the streets in the past; the man would pick out each problem he saw in the boy, make up a rule, and use that rule to teach the child. Lan Zhan wasn't a man who would slap boys' buttocks, wield frightening canes and feather dusters, or turn to physical abuse to satisfy any sadistic streaks and discipline the eight-year old; rather, he is a cultured man, and resorted to using carrots instead of painful sticks.

One, since the boy refused to wear proper Gusu Lan robes - they were too white, looked like mourning clothes, the silk was itchy to the skin in summertime -, and he preferred to crawl, jump and run rather than to walk upright like a proper Lan disciple, and wasn't toilet trained - thus, Lan Zhan declared that little Wei Ying did not need to wear pants or loincloths within the estate of the mansion; a plain comfortable, cooling cotton shirt was good enough.

Two, Wei Ying could not understand why chopsticks, spoons or forks were needed on the dining table, so Lan Zhan decided to do away with proper dining etiquette just for this boy - and eating with fingers was just fine.

Three, the eight-year old, like any children of his age, was a bundle of endless energy, restlessness and liveliness. He was allowed to run everywhere within the mansion, roll on the wooden floor, skip on table surfaces, jump from chair to chair, explore the surrounding courtyards, chase after chickens, rabbits, crickets and play in the farms, as long as he does not approach the main gates and be seen by nosy neighbours.

Four, it was immediately clear that the child had no formal education, and the schools of the Cloud Recesses wouldn't be suitable for such a late-bloomer. Thus, Lan Zhan decided to take the role of his personal tutor, to teach him to read, write and speak the proper language of the Middle Kingdom, basic science and arts, as well as introduce him to the wonders of the world since the Lan master is a walking encyclopedia himself, especially in the subject of over-4000 family rules.

Five, from early on, Lan Zhan indoctrinated the boy about the merits of Good Touches, and the perils of Bad Touches:

A Bad Touch, the man said, is one that hurts all the time - such as being bitten on the arms when he walked too close to the boy. The punishment for a Bad Touch would be tenfold to the doer - an eye for an eye, a bite for a bite - and Lan Zhan smiled full of teeth for the first time in his life. Little Wei Ying was instantly traumatized by what he saw, shivered in fear, then descended into wails of "I'm sorry, I'm sorry, Xian Xian will not do it again! Please don't eat me!", and promised not to hurt the master with bites. The man "Mn"s, set his face back to the usual stoic, expressionless look, and cuddled the boy, showering plenty of apologetic sweet kisses on the child's reddened tear-streaked cheeks.

A Good Touch, the man explained, is one that feels good all the time, or at least as a consequence. “A-Xian,” the man called using the boy’s new nickname, and that pricked the latter’s curiosity, “this is a Good Touch, and we can do it all the time,” while letting his calloused meaty hands roam all over the boy’s naked body, fresh from a bath scented with flower petals. He tickled sensitive spots at the armpits, around the cute inverted nipples, dipped into the shallow belly button, and soon, five fingers grasped and massaged the pre-teen’s delicate genitals. Little Wei Ying gurgled and giggled, feeling a little confused at what seemed wrong, but felt really good - especially when twin quail eggs tightened up from tendrils of ‘good feelings’, and the first strings of pulsating sparks run up and down his pinkie-length wee-wee.

“Does it feel nice? To touch you all the time, to make you feel good. In return, make Uncle feel better too,” Lan Zhan whispered hotly into the boy’s ears with plenty of tongue-licks in-between, and a shiver - a good shiver - ran down little Wei Ying’s spine. A thumb and forefinger made a tight little ‘O’ around the child’s half-hard penis and moved up and down the length repeatedly with vigorous strokes. The foreskin became taut, stretched from the blossoming flesh, and revealed the first peek of the prized pinkish treasure within.

“.... Enn! I like this touch, Uncle Lan,” Wei Ying replied cheerfully, unconsciously jerking his hips in tandem with the man’s hands on the swelling genitals. Lan Zhan smiled, this time, faintly and gentle.

The stage is set for Lan Zhan’s pedophilic paradise on the Earth of his dreams.

Lan Zhan sat up on the bed, and rubbed his temples. He was back in the guest room in the Jiang residence, and it was five in the morning. It was silent - there were no roosters that crowed, no crickets that chirped - only the sounds of Wei Ying's hitched breaths were heard.

The spouse grumbled in his sleep and rolled a bit, taking the blanket with him. Both were naked but Lan Zhan appeared fully in the nude with the blanket and pillows stolen from him.

"... nnngh, lao gong , why are your dreams so long-winded? Too much prologue, too many unnecessary details, it just takes too long... what's with me being a feral child and how come there are five special rules? Now, I have to wait until your next dream to find out. Just when we were getting to the good parts," the younger man complained with a rather raspy voice from a parched throat, and opened his eyes. The sleep-hazed look paired well with an nnngh-inducing yawn and stretch of a lazy cat.

Lan Zhan snorted; he understood what was implied - that his creepy erotic dreams were broadcasted to the entire Kingdom, and probably most citizens followed the series fervently like watching modern 21st-century soap opera dramas, except that the shows were pornographic in nature.

"I liked your first series better - it hit all the right spots, had perfect direction, contained less dialogue, it was easy to understand, and went straight into pa-pa-pa action," Wei Ying mumbled into a pillow, let out a muted but long string of wet farts into the blanket, and started to unwind the said stuffy thick fabric from his body, until it hung and covered the man's nether regions. Lan Zhan naturally stood up from the bed and walked a few steps away, intent to escape from any unappetizing odours. While he stood at a corner, he poured a cup of water for the spouse and handed it to him, with his back facing the latter.

After the needed drink, the spouse reached for his satchel on the floor next to the bed, and rummaged for a small jar. “The moment you put planning and intelligence into your dreams, they become boring. I know I said that you could control your dreams, but please,” he looked up at the husband that was unnerved at how private dreams were being critiqued and dissected, “don’t think too much. You need to let go, sometimes,” and the spouse winked.

Wei Ying released the blanket, and Lan Zhan was pleasantly surprised to see the spouse lounging on the bed, sexy, naked and he bent his hips towards the husband. Naughty Wei Ying used one hand to reach down and spread his asshole invitingly, while the other shook a jar of homemade lubricant paste - one of their travel essentials.

“ Lao gong , come inside here and let go. Don’t hold yourself up with logical thought, alright? Your boner looks like it’ll burst soon. Let’s go for one round, darling?” the ass wiggled sensuously in a come-hither motion, two - then three -, fingers spread and released the puckered rosebud entrance like a fish gulping for air. Lan Zhan swallowed and took the jar. He uncorked it a little too fast, and his loins were set on fire with that gesture. The dream left him pent-up indeed.

“Mn. Two rounds. Still early, at five in the morning,” Lan Zhan licked his lips as the suggestive words tumbled out from his mouth.

Wei Ying laughed, and let out a short fart. The husband told himself that they should stay away from spicy hotpots for a while.

.

It was tough to drag Jiang Wanyin and Jin Rulan out of bed with a hangover, and even tougher to get them to overcome their grief, sorrow and all sorts of depressive emotions and behaviours as Wei Ying nudged them to start packing for a long trip ahead.

“Come on, both of you, take what you need for travel, but please leave behind the furniture, library books, old diaries, family altars, stone tablets, and all those heavy stuff. Lan Zhan’s going to be one pulling the cart, and it wouldn’t be fair to him if you’re going to bring the whole house with you!” the young man admonished the remaining residents of the Jiang residence, and stared dismally at the pile of junk in the hand-pulled transport.

Jiang Cheng had a meltdown and blamed himself for the loss of the entire Jiang family line and its people, when he was greeted by silence in the halls, and memories and conversations from the night before hit him straight in the head (and heart). Jin Ling hugged Fairy and cried miserably too, because he kind-of missed the sounds of disciples running around with loud chit-chat - friends he’d made in the last few months, now forever gone into the quiet, tranquil foggy morning. At least, Wei Ying thought, the two men had finally accepted the reality of their world, and with great reluctance, agreed to leave - at least take a look at the outside world since the day they were holed up in the Jiang Residence.

Jin Ling asked if there was a chance to head towards Yiling, as he had heard wonderful stories about the Qishan Lan, the lively city and the possibility to reunite with his gold-clothed brethren. (At this point, Wei Ying gave The Eye to Lan Zhan for advertising their homeland's attractions, and the husband looked away, guilty.) Without revealing too much, particularly about his declined immigration and war refugee status for the Kingdom, Wei Ying simply told him that the roads, forests and mountains between Qishan and Yunmeng are already full of the undead lurking in every corner, devastated settlements, and the air tainted with poisoned Dark magic; only with Wei Ying's knowledge of the Dark Arts can there be a chance to survive breathing in those areas, which is what the couple did on their way here. Wei Ying prattled and boasted a few fraudulent tales of how he figured out the ways to overcome the enemy with the help of Lan Zhan's firepower.

“Perhaps once you’ve seen what happened to the villages, watch how they actually fight with poisoned claws, powerful weapons and high-level Dark magic, then you will grasp the magnitude of destruction wrought by these terrible Imperial soldiers, for nearly half a year. Their forces are bolstered by fierce corpses and other denizens of the Underworld, and they’re nothing like the ones you’ve been picking off in the Lotus Pier. Your hide-and-seek games with them in the Pier are really nothing compared to facing their hundred-strong, fully equipped and armed, manhunt for every single last survivor in those towns and villages that we’ve passed, and I can tell you with conviction - nothing lived,” Wei Ying waved Suibian in an arch, then pointed to prod the boy's chest to illustrate his point. His stories and statistics are a little suspect, nevertheless, they impressed (and scared) the Jin gongzi rather effectively.

“But da jiu , didn't you say that the villages, like Da Shan, between Yiling and here were intact but merely abandoned? Like... farms were still around, houses boarded up, and the like?” Jin Ling cried, confused as heck. He had brought some riches from Lanling, including treasure chests, jeweled accessories, a full set of gilded plate armor and royal golden weaponry, and had trouble squeezing them between his uncles' more mundane everyday things into the cart.

"I lied," the man from Yiling dead-panned, "What use would it be, if on the first day I had told you that the villages were emptied but there were bloody pools, Corruption ritual circles and signs of people being massacred and turned into the walking dead? Would it help if I had told you that all men living in human settlements in every province have been murdered, and corrupted to join the enemy force? You would still stay inside the crumbling stockade, the disciples would have starved eventually, and no one would be left alive!"

"Wei Wuxian! How can you do this to us?! I thought when you and Han Guang Jun arrived, we would finally have a fighting chance to drive out the undead that festered in the Pier, then rebuild our lives... but instead, things became worse and we lost every last disciple, and now we have to abandon our fort? Why can't we just band together and draw our swords? Show them the power of the Twin Heroes of Yunmeng!" Jiang Cheng approached with his hands full of stuff from the Residence, including the long wooden board that hung at the main hall's entrance engraved with the family's name. He was in a sour mood at admitting defeat and running away with the proverbial tail between the legs - the only time he seriously took such a defensive maneuver was nearly two decades ago, when he had to watch how fires burnt the former Residence down while he and then-teenager Wei Wuxian escaped from the clutches of the Wens.

Wei Ying sighed, when the younger brother sat on the ground with his inherited treasures, and refused to budge. As the elder brother, he picked up the slack and busied with packing boxes of scrolls, documents, books and other trivial stuff - but important for the Jiang sect leader, because those stuff represented precious final records of the Jiang family culture and history; theoretically, Jiang Wanyin is the sole survivor of the Jiang family line, after all.

Wei Ying shook his head, “No, it doesn’t work that way. Like you said, everyone who had passed by or were sent out from the Pier, never returned. The enemy is much stronger than you think, and their Dark magic is a hundredfold better than what I wield. Rather than stay here with little or no chance of survival, I would prefer that we travel, stay alive, and stay a step ahead of the enemy.”

“Besides, there’s hardly any food and water left in the warehouse after yesterday’s raid. The stockade walls will not withstand attacks from possessed Dark golems taller than fifteen feet in height - and I have seen at least one walking around the Pier before we met you. The magical cart is coming with us, and along with it, all your everyday conveniences too. Lan Zhan will continue to cook and feed us during the journey to his hometown. Even if you stayed, we may not be coming back this way, or at all. Do you still want to be left behind and stick around here?” Wei Ying gave the stubborn Jiang gongzi a final look.

A moment of hesitation, then a patch of grass was torn from the ground, and a pebble was thrown away in a tantrum. Jiang Cheng groaned in exasperation with an expression that meaningfully said “I can’t believe I’m going to do this, I don’t even know if I should trust your words”, rolled his eyes, and stood up to join the party of four about to leave the protective walls of the Jiang Residence.

.

A cold breeze blew. Wei Ying pointed to the north, where a large, unassuming stack of grey clouds brewed and grew in size with each passing hour.

“That’s a snowstorm coming through in less than a day’s time, and I know as a Dark Arts practitioner, that when the cold arrives, the dead come marching. Do you see those black columns of smoke behind the mountains? Forests are being burnt to make way for a large army from that direction. What do you think, Lan Zhan?” Wei Ying guessed and asked.

“Mn. An invasion is coming. We should go,” Lan Zhan agreed, and started pulling on the creaking wooden transport like a human horse. Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling clutched their swords and followed tightly from behind in a single file, careful that there may be foes waiting to ambush them on their way out of the Pier. They adjusted and pulled their robes closer, while keeping a close eye on their belongings in the cart, and the quiet surroundings of pine forests, winter shrubs, and gentle rolling hills. The temperature dipped and their breaths started to frost a little.

As expected, a few undead did turn up to ‘send them off’, but they were very low-level corpses, skeletons and zombie-like creatures. Wei Ying pulled Lan Zhan back and instructed him to stay out of the limelight (meaning, he should just use just an infinitesimal portion of his godly powers - but the husband simply shrugged because he wasn’t sure how, so he just hid behind the cart), and pulled out his golden flute. As he played a off-tune rendition of a 21st-century pop song (which grated on everyone’s nerves and caused the Jiang sect leader to yell the man to shut up, and the sourgrape jiu jiu takes charge), which caused a number of black wispy projectiles to whizz about harmlessly (but the visual effects are damn good, and gave an impression of a life-and-death battle), Jin Ling went to the forefront with blazing arrows, and Jiang Cheng started slicing rotten bodies into halves ala Zidian-style.

The enemies they met in the Lotus Pier were easily defeated by the party of four (mainly because the strongest had been annihilated by Lan Zhan while he pretended to hide behind the cart, under the pretense that Bichen was too bulky and slow compared to the others' weapons, and the cart needed to be guarded - he actually teleported himself to various locations around the Pier, slaughtered everything on sight, then returned before the battle was done; he is the quintessential 21st-century fictional Clark Kent and Superman of the team, after all). The victories seem paltry compared to the wars with the Wens, but Jiang Cheng - and certainly Jin Ling - felt very confident in their abilities to fight off the invaders and lead them to safety. Fairy was the smartest of the lot - it ran off at the sight of the undead (because they smelled and tasted bad), and returned when the coast was clear.

"My, my, Jin Ling grew another peacock feather on his backside after taking down ten," Wei Ying offered, as he tucked his flute back to his belt, and adjusted his Bag of Holding and satchel. He gestured at the two purple-clothed men marching in front of them on the main road towards the Eastern gates of the Pier.

"I've wiped out nearly fifty thousand Imperial soldiers and undead, including three hundred Tian squad leaders. Your brother seems happy with his fifteen on the leaderboard," the husband replied, while flicking undead flesh from his sleeves and his shoes. Bichen had already been sheathed back into its scabbard, as pristine and sharp as the day it was forged from a master's blacksmith shop.

Wei Ying leaned to the side and gave a sweet peck at Lan Zhan's cheeks, away from view from the others, "I scored zero today, but I'll take half of your number of kills, lao gong . I deserve that much, as your wife."

“Mn.”

Notes for the Chapter:

Time to ramp up the world-building for a bigger playground for Wangxian!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 93

They hiked across low-lying brown plains filled with barren soil, dried shrubs and prickly remnants of dead bushes, and kept alongside the rivers leading out from the Great Lakes. Based on some scrawled maps and basic cartographic skills, Wei Ying conjectured that if they travelled eastward along descending altitudes, valleys and (dried) river gorges, they should hopefully reach coastal Gusu in another two week's time on foot. Thunder boomed from the gathering snowclouds, as if in reaction to the bombshell suggestion.

“But... da jiu , isn't there a way to get there faster? I cannot imagine walking for two weeks! I've always ridden on horseback and carriages for long-haul travel, and now my feet are already aching!” the petulant rich son of the Jin family whined, as he trudged step by step, bogged down by the weight of his equipment. He carried a few bags of personal treasures with him, particularly money, precious metals, weapons and projectile ammunition such as arrows, that the last Jin patrol left him with - he couldn't pack them into the brimming cart, and was wary that if anything happened to the creaky, dangerously tilted transport, it would be as good as losing all the eggs placed inside the proverbial basket.

Wei Ying ts'k'd, “The approaching cold front is unsuitable for travelling on flying swords, and your qi cultivation level isn't high enough to use your late father's keepsake for that purpose anyway,” he pointed a drab-looking, Fairy-chewed, wooden Suibian at regal ivory broadsword Suihua, in which Jin Ling instinctively clutched at his sword closer to his body and looked every bit offended, “The rivers have run dry so we cannot just steal a fisherman's boat and sail downstream,” Suibian pointed at dried, muddy riverbeds adjacent to their trail, “And I do not see any horses or cows around. In fact, I've not seen any large animals since both Lan Zhan and I left Yiling. The enemy is smart, they know to take not only men, but also their beasts of burden, so that any escapees cannot run far, and are easy to track down like prey of ravenous hunting dogs,” Wei Ying seethed, leaving the late-teenage boy shivering in fear at the looming threat.

Jin Ling hurried to the front to catch up with Fairy, who on its own took an initiative to run ahead of its ‘pack’. The boy’s vision is better than the rest of the (aging) squad, so he served as a sniper and scout with the husky’s help. The Jiang sect leader, having boosted his confidence from slaughtering at least fifteen enemy soldiers so far, strut behind as the self-proclaimed troop leader; he declared that he knew the roads and hiking trails in Yunmeng like the back of his hand, and he had made many trips to Gusu and other cities to the north and east, so he should lead the way.

The venerable Han Guang Jun remained silent while plodding with the pull-cart of sorts, and Wei Ying walked beside his husband, a hand on his back, and the other generously groping the partner’s smooth clothed ass. Lan Zhan made some tasty sounds while being molested and had fingers sliding between his thighs to cup his jiggling balls; Jiang Cheng thought the two lovebirds were whispering at each other with low voices and rolled his eyes sarcastically again and again; Jin Ling happily shouted from afar that he’d collected a handful of nuts after the jiu jiu taught him which trees shed such precious food source during Yunmeng’s wintertime - and was promptly scolded by the same jiu jiu for being too noisy and “Shut up! You’ll attract the enemy’s attention!”. (Actually, Fairy sniffed and dug out most of the nuts with its paws. Jin Ling took credit for himself.)

They heard a crow caw in the distance and looked back at the path they’d travelled - the Lotus Pier had become a collection of tiny vacant buildings on the desolate horizon, and was gradually swallowed up by swirling winter fog. The lake adjacent to it looked like a dusty brown bowl - the water had drained and without rainfall, the central plains of the Middle Kingdom was doomed to transform into a freezing, arid desert. Progress was painfully slow at this rate, because Lan Zhan was secretly instructed to use ‘infinitesimal’ strength and speed. Wei Ying pretended to help sometimes, by taking one of the handles and then obnoxiously groaned exaggeratedly like a dying man. Every time the cart hit a bump, or tipped over a bit after hitting a pebble, something would fall off - usually a book, a scroll, or someone’s heirloom charm - and they would have to halt, pick-up, rearrange, then resume. It was a terribly arduous process, indeed.

“Jiang Cheng, can we throw away some of these things? We’re moving at a tortoise’s pace at this rate, and they keep falling off!” Wei Ying complained as he held up a Jiang sect uniform that was too big for him, and a purple, lacy satin dress that was inappropriate for anyone in the squad. Jiang Cheng looked back and quickly snatched them away, then bundled them into a messy roll in his arms, “Wei Wuxian! How dare you! This was the last thing our late father wore, you can still see the slash marks because I’ve kept it in its original state after washing. And this one, was mom’s favourite dress. Sis never got to wear it...”

Wei Ying had to digest the words for a full minute, before nodding his head in silent acquiescence and understanding. He gently took back the clothes and squeezed them back into the packed cart. “Figure something out, lao gong, because our lunch is underneath all that junk,” he muttered under his breath before leaving a rather uncertain-looking Lan Zhan behind, with one arm giving the sour-faced Jiang Cheng a brotherly hug. “Let me tell you about the time when we fought against an army of evil squirrels in the ‘Mounds, where a basket of harvested fruits was lost to the war, and we ended up with gold in our pockets,” the elder sibling started a made-up fairy tale of sorts, to the surprise and wide-eyed shock of the younger one, in a “I did not expect that - Where the hell is this coming from” manner. (Success - the Jiang sect leader was easily distracted!)

Lan Zhan dutifully pulled the cart at the back of the quartet, and thought about creative ways to make their journey easier, while getting his name sullied by terrible pranks and jokes from the spouse.

The first snowflakes began to fall.

.

Lunch on the first day of the Jiangs' exodus was simple and swanky - deluxe barbequed chicken rice for Wei Ying, extra-large braised duck rice for Jiang Cheng, superior roasted pork chow mein for Jin Ling, and not surprisingly, elegantly styled vegetarian rice with egg omelette wrap and spring rolls for the workhorse of the squad. Fairy sat further away (for Wei Ying's sake), got a bone and a pile of tasty dog biscuits - Jin Ling panicked when he thought the husky bit on a pile of goat poop, but the Wei gongzi assured him that it was one of Wangxian Co. Ltd.'s premium product line for pet food, and contains all essential vitamins, minerals and proteins for a dog that wants healthy glowing fur. (Which is part of an advertising jingle, really.)

"Wangxian?" the boy asked, curious.

Fortunately, Jiang Cheng was too hungry (after such a long walk), too tired (after being asked to chop firewood with Sandu and carry them to their temporary campsite in a grove nestled deep in pine forests), and too focused on the steaming hot food to eavesdrop on the conversation.

“These too,” Wei Ying raised his pre-warmed bento box of chicken rice made with durable hard plastic packaging and aluminium foil, and comes with suitable cutlery, “are products from our company. I told you before in the last couple of days, our company makes all kinds of food and household products, and our selling point is convenience and quality!” he said with a confident, beaming smile - a must-do based on his A.S.S. book. He showed the Jin gongzi how the ready-to-eat meal package worked, which involved pressing a red circle to activate pre-printed Heat-related spells, which in turn induces Water-related spells to release steam, to make wholesome meals out of freeze-dried ingredients produced from Wangxian’s 31st-century food processors. He went on to talk about other products, including herbal candies, magical sewing kits and dustless brooms, and all sorts of everyday ideas turned into wonderful products for ‘home comfort and convenience in modern times’. Jin Ling’s eyes became glazed (because he was never really involved in business and had been raised in palaces full of politics and sword fighting), and he listened attentively while chowing down the stir-fried noodles.

Lan Zhan offered a platter of shrink-wrapped tropical fruits he'd pulled out from the bottom of the cart (after unearthing everyone’s luggage, to the travellers’ consternation - but it had to be done), and Jiang Cheng happily picked out the juiciest slices of ripened mangoes, pineapples, bananas and papayas - he had somehow been conditioned to unquestioningly accept, grab and eat whatever that is served by the Lan er gongzi after a few days of dining on the latter’s cooking (like a dog’s Pavlovian response, really).

“Jiang Sect Leader,” Lan Zhan said after swallowing a cube of sugary diced honeydew, while he held up open palms towards the campfire - it was getting a bit chilly with light snowfall -, “can you enlist Zidian’s service to whip up and bring a few sizable logs here? I have made a mental plan of building a few more wagons to the cart, so that we can store our belongings properly and travel faster,” then he gestured at the cheerful spouse who talked excitedly to the nephew, “Wei Ying is good at construction and woodwork, and I'm sure Jin Ling will be pleased to learn carpentry from his relatives."

With a belly full of food and his mood had vastly improved, Jiang Cheng made sure to give the men a good show of the purple-silver serpent's might, even during peacetime.

Perhaps it was the filling and tasty lunch; perhaps it was the camaraderie that formed after Wei Ying enlivened the dark, sombre mood with tales of his life in the 'Mounds, or when he nudged at Jiang Cheng and goaded him to reveal some heroic feats during his heydays as the sect leader (which secretly delighted the latter, of course); perhaps Jin Ling became energetic and took interest in his first woodcrafting work under adult supervision; or perhaps it was the way Wei Ying kept teasing and complaining to Lan Zhan about his drawing and how the wood pieces weren't up to measurement or that the joints didn't match (which drew some chuckles from the other two, seeing how Han Guang Jun was once again dragged down from his pedestal of perfection) - the quartet had a relatively good time building the needed extensions to their transport and distribute the contents equally.

"Lan Zhan!" a gentle slap on the forearm, "Look at your ugly drawing on the sand. You wrote here, insert two pegs to hold the joint together. However, based on my experience, you should put three! The wood from the forests here isn't as strong as the ones we had in the 'Mounds, so your calculations are wrong!" whine, whine and more whine.

Lan Zhan simply “Mn” with his head lowered, sighed, and relented, “Three pegs, then.”

Wei Ying pinched the forearm, “But there’s no space to squeeze three pegs! What in the world are you thinking?”

“Then, two pegs.”

“... Lan Zhan!” a shout that went well with a cute pout from the younger man.

Rather than feeling frustrated, Jin Ling laughed at the couple’s antics. He had heard stories of how the two of Qishan Lan struggled with their first few months in the Burial Mounds, building things including furniture from scratch, and they bickered like a married old couple - who worked miraculously well if everything fell into place.

No matter, Jin Ling needed to ask the Lan er gongzi about the wheel he held in his hands, according to the (disputed) drawings on the sand. His jiu jiu had made a clean cross-section slice of a tree for a wagon’s wheel. Using a knife he brought with the luggage - an expensive, high-quality ornamental weapon from one of Lanling’s famous forges -, he carved out the hub, spokes and rim, but he wasn’t sure if he did it right.

“Han Guang... err... jiu ... err... da jiu fu (大舅父)? Please have a look at this. It’s the first time I sculpted something from wood,” Jin Ling approached and sort-of stood between the arguing couple (in a very one-sided way).

Wei Ying switched from being naggy to becoming bewildered, then excited, then grinning from ear to ear, and hurriedly tugged at Lan Zhan's sleeve repeatedly, dropping the offending half-made wooden joint, "Lan Zhan! Lan Zhan! He's addressing you properly like a family member! Look! How fine is his handiwork! It's according to your drawing plans, and it'll fit perfectly well to the axle!" (what a hypocrite, Jiang Cheng rolled his eyes, that Wei Ying would argue with Lan Zhan over a tiny peg, but praise the boy for a large wheel.)

Lan Zhan examined the results, and nodded, "Mn. It is good. Well done, Jin Ling. You can continue," and smiled faintly at the satisfied boy. The smile was also from realizing that Jin Ling accepted the relationship between the same-sex couple, regardless of what he'd been taught in Lanling school. Jin Ling gave a 'woot!' sound, showed fist-pumps, looked accomplished (with another feather sprouting from his rump) and strutted back to his corner to work on another wheel. He scratched a nice spot below Fairy's jaw to share his happiness, and that pleased the simple-minded, contented and panting dog.

Jiang Cheng cleared his throat, clearly not wanting to lose out from the action. He held up a platform made of several planks nailed together, which would form the base of a wagon, "Lan Wang... err... ge fu (哥夫)! I... I've completed the first base! It's... It's not as though I wanted to show-off, so if you want to say anything about this piece, just say it!" The blush on the Jiang gongzi's cheeks and earlobes was evident, and one of his hands snaked to the hem of his robe and fiddled the edges nervously. Wei Ying flinched, then cried a tear, and tugged on Lan Zhan's sleeve again, more desperately this time.

The white rose among the purple thorns realized that he is the eldest among the four, and has just been given such an honourable recognition from the prickly Jiang sect leader. He took the crafted wood and praised it in a few short meaningful words (because what else could one say in praise for a plain rectangular piece of joined planks?) - Wei Ying's spiritual self wept with tears of joy at that point, and he hugged his younger brother for an inexplicable reason.

Lan Zhan continued to quietly, sagely, oversee and guide everyone to make a couple of wheeled wagons during the afternoon. Snow began to turn the landscape into wintry white, so he fetched their thick outer robes and made sure the tight family of four stayed warm. Wei Ying spent an inordinate amount of time telling Jiang Cheng about Wangxian's products (a perennial salesman, he is) and how their company could make people's lives easier, and Jiang Cheng didn't mind listening to his older brother (in a younger man's body) chatter non-stop about the formerly horrific word with homosexual connotations, that he'd come to accept freely in his heart. After all, both he and Jin Ling owed their lives to the couple, so surely there was nothing to fear or to be disgusted with.

Fairy yawned, glad that it wasn't involved in the D.I.Y. project, thankful that it had thick fur to stave off the incoming cold, grateful that it didn't have to overcome the hurdle of complicated family relationships - and blissfully slept on Jin Ling's lap.

.

Two wagons were completed by the time the sun had set. They'd lost a bit of time, but at least the rest of the journey would be more comfortable and speedy, and they weren't in a rush towards a deadline anyway. Jin Ling held a handmade wooden torch and took Fairy to the dried riverbed to check for any signs of intruders or wildlife (sadly, there seemed none - not even a bird, rabbit or a squirrel in sight; everything had gone into hibernation). Jiang Cheng used his expertise to whip up a few more tree trunks and thick branches to make a shelter along a rockface, which protected them from the strengthening icy winds. Wei Ying used his awesome magic to boil water from snow, for their afternoon tea - plus, he made some refinements to their camp to make everything more comfortable, such as plush woolly carpeted flooring, primitive but functioning magically powered heat lamps, built natural insulation to the walls using modified Earth spells, and so on. Lan Zhan prepared some tasty snacks for them; he knew people tend to become hungry and cranky especially in the long, dreaded winter nights.

.

Sleep came easy to the man who spent the better part of the day pulling a tonne of junk. So did his dreams.

In this dream, Lan Zhan always wakes up at five o' clock at dawn, bright and fresh, although the skies outside are still dark. However, he, the master of his household, had already started the day since three in the morning. He had taken the groggy eight-year old boy to the outdoor toilet to pee into a pool, by whispering sweet gentle words of "Wei Ying, Wei Ying, please let it out," while rough, calloused fingers started to play with the increasingly turgid wee-wee dangling out in the open. By the time the first streams of hot, mild yellow liquid arched into the pool, it sputtered and swayed randomly as the child's penis is pleased and grew harder by the minute.

To reward a job well done in emptying the bladder, the man swooped down between little Wei Ying's wobbly legs after the last trickle, and gave the boy nine shallow thrusts into his mouth, followed by another nine deep-throats until the latter groaned, disturbed in his sleep-deprived state. The foreskin had retracted itself nicely by then, revealing the hidden prize of little Wei Ying's adorable shiny moist glans, which the man happily suckled like a teat, and continuously pushed the tip of his tongue between the lips of the exposed pink cockslit, like a snake trying to wiggle its way into and through a tight burrow.

For the next hours in the dead of the night, upon the shared love nest for the two, the man lies on the bed with his head on the boy's crotch; he spent an hour fiddling and caressing one of the boy's testicles, dribbling it like a ball; while the other defenceless egg was swallowed and lovingly assaulted in the man's warm, wet mouth. Inside the oral cavity where nobody could see, it wasn't as gentle as what one would imagine, coming from the highly-esteemed Gusu Lan master. In fact, the captive testicle was slobbered with a long wet tongue, that rolled, kneaded and twisted the frail egg until it quivered and swelled. Deliciously strong suction using vacuum-like strength vibrated the organ, its unborn seed shaken and stirred, drawing in more fluids from the body until it bloated like a balloon. The child's body instinctively pulled the attacked testicle close to the base of the penis, but the man would not release his tasty prey; it was crudely yanked back to the open oral cavity, where the abuse continued unabated, the delicate blood vessels around the juicy grape dilated, the tactile nerve-ends surrounding it rubbed raw and sparked electricity.

The hour was done, and the throbbing, bruised ball was finally released from its prison, having inflated to three times the original size compared to its twin. Such imbalance cannot be tolerated as a rule by the Gusu Lan man, and the imperfection had to be corrected. The other testicle was given the same treatment until both of the boy's testicles were nicely, beautifully enlarged and filled with sweet virginal fluids.

The boy remained fast asleep with furrowed eyebrows and a sheen of sweat on his body.

.

Again, Lan Zhan always wakes up at five o' clock at dawn, his face pillowed by the boy's fragrant drool-slicked genitals. He stretched and yawned, then rustled the sleep-warmed bedsheets before using his nose to sniff around. At last, even with eyes closed, his lips touched one swollen testicle, nearly as big as his own adult balls. He gives a tender kiss to one juicy egg, "Good morning baby Wei Ying," before moving to the other and greeted it too.

He slid the boy's softly twitching penis into his mouth for a light morning snack before getting up. He also did some finger exercises by playing inside Wei Ying's heated tight asshole, stretching it nicely, raking the special bump with vigorous motions. The child nnnghs tiredly, jerked his trembling hips like running away from something disturbing in a dream, and lets out a short bubbly fart.

The taste of an eight-year old's sexually excited tingle, that had been stewed inside swollen balls for at least a couple of hours, is ambrosia to the man's palate, indeed. The flavours are mild, slightly nectary in texture, and wholesome enough for a good drink.

.

Lan Zhan had completed his morning routine by seven in the morning - he had swept the floor, cooked breakfast, done the laundry and hung his clothes to dry, worked on the farms and sent off the harvests to a middleman, and he returned to the mansion just in time to see naked little Wei Ying crawl out of bed with an adorable yawn.

“Good morning, Uncle Lan,” he murmured, while rubbing his eyes. Lan Zhan leaned forward, kissed his forehead, his brows, a quick peck on the lips, and a feather-light smooch on the boy’s inverted nipples, a tongue drawing squiggles over the belly button (which drew tinkling sounds of a child’s giggle), and finally little Wei Ying’s genitals were orally massaged and sucked with such fervour that he exploded, twenty child-like tiny twitches into the man’s mouth.

“Mn,” Lan Zhan gulped and licked his lips. He had his breakfast earlier, but he didn’t mind having a dessert. He started to pull his pants down and unwind his loincloth, rather impatiently, in front of the child.

Following another strange rule, the pre-pubescent boy dutifully performed a greeting ritual to his owner. He reached out for the unleashed adult penis, framed with many hairy curls, and gave it a few welcome licks and clumsy strokes with his small hands - which fanned the flames in the man’s loins and caused the latter’s massive erection to rise up to the skies. Then, he kowtowed to Uncle Lan and remained on the bed with his head facing the mattress and his ass raised.

Uncle Lan eagerly climbed up the bed, which creaked dangerously just as any other occasions, and he mounted the boy effortlessly. They would dual-cultivate for some time before Wei Ying gets his home-cooked breakfast, and the pre-teen child would get many servings of fresh hot semen injected directly into his belly, until his stomach bulged after the refreshingly invigorating session. The sweaty, joyful, agonized, huffing and strained Uncle Lan enjoyed dipping his penis repeatedly into the warm body, orgasming thirty twitches each time inside the child's sweet tight hole, which remained youthful, tight, elastic and welcoming even a month after little Wei Ying's historic deflowering.

.

Lan Zhan loved to sunbathe in the nude - it's a dirty little secret that he swore to keep to himself, however in this dream world, he didn't mind enacting his deepest fantasies - especially with an eight-year old child riding his excited, massive adult cock, with plenty of shlicky sounds, while his body sings dramatic rising operas for the sweet tight pre-pubescent clenched ass. Lan Zhan soared high in the throes of ecstasy, towards an impending climax, for the nth time that morning.

"Uncle Lan, Uncle Lan, look, those are our neighbours, and that man is walking into the brothers' house again!" little Wei Ying squeaked just as Lan Zhan grabbed the thin arms and pulled the boy tight against his hairy pelvis, then thrust his hips as deep as physically possible through the swollen but glistening, tasty boy-rosebud. The pounding force rattled the child's delicate body, and sent pulses of fresh warm adult's semen surging into the latter's rectum. The master hushed the boy while happily ejaculating and fertilizing little Wei Ying, and told him to keep his voice down - because they were voyeurs who loved to spy on their neighbours from afar. From a vantage point on higher grounds of the mansion's estate, hidden behind strategically placed bushes, they could secretly watch what others do.

Little Wei Ying laughed rudely, unrepentant, and loudly commented that Lan Zhan's grimace looked silly, funny and in pain, that his body was shaking like a leaf in a storm, and that his face, throat, and sweaty chest was blooming into a red carpet brighter than hot peppers. He grinded his flooded springy boy-ass in rapid, hard, concentric circles, and that caused Lan Zhan to gasp, then howl like an animal in the midst of inseminating its mate, as his overjoyed adult hairy penis started another thirty-twitches even before the first wave of penile contractions was completed.

One of the brothers - the elder one - was hanging some bedsheets to dry in the morning sun. He heard some of their lively sounds, turned towards them, and waved good morning.

.

Xi Chen da ge lowered his hands, when his favourite neighbour casually walked into the vegetable patch. "My friends stopped by earlier today, and they brought chicken roasts and exotic fruits from Far, Far Away. There's too much, so I'm giving you some," Uncle Wei grinned slyly and raised the goodies to the teenager's view - a couple of roasted whole chickens hooked in one hand, and a big basket covered with a cloth in the other.

The teenager gasped in pleasant surprise and quickly bowed in thanks - but his hands were full of little Lan Zhan's freshly-laundered clothes that needed to be put on the clothespin. "Oh, don't worry, Xi Chen! I will help myself into your house and place them on your kitchen countertop. I'll say hello to your didi too!" the man bellowed and brazenly made his way to the main door. Xi Chen smiled brightly and replied, “Thank you, Uncle Wei!”, and continued to hang garments to dry in the morning sun, piece by piece.

Uncle Wei rounded around a bend to reach the main doors to the brothers’ house. Out of sight of the teenager, he unsurprisingly, but greedily and with slightly trembling fingers, started to unbuckle his belt, kick away his shoes and pull down his pants. By the time he pushed the doors open with excitement shining in his eyes, he peeled away his smelly loincloth and walked in pantless, barefooted, impressively erect, and with a happy skip in his steps, and his hands swung the gifts as payment for a morning’s snack in the form of an eight-year old’s sweet tight flesh.

“A-Ji ah A-Ji! I am here! Come out and play with Uncle!” he shouted into the rather empty house. He dropped the chicken and the basket on the kitchen countertop as promised - he had been into the brothers’ house so many times before, that he knew every nook and cranny of their dwelling - and waltzed straight towards little Lan Zhan’s bedroom.

There were some squeals and shrieks coming out from the boy’s bedroom window, some groans and moans, and of rhythmic grunts and strange wet slapping squishy sounds, of talk about ‘playing and eating xiao ji ji ‘ (which is chicken, anyway), of ‘making and laying eggs’, of ‘tasting delicate plump fruits and sucking them dry’ - it was all the usual, related to the gifts that Uncle Wei brought, and didn’t sound suspicious at all, when Xi Chen hummed and went on to hang the last few pieces of clothes on the laundry line. He thought his little brother was playing with the uncle - again, almost every day, - and like all innocent people of the Cloud Recesses, he didn’t know that little Lan Zhan was being raped, abused and forced to engage in sexual intercourse with the man that was willingly allowed into their humble home.

Later, Xi Chen entered the house to check on Uncle Wei's goodies. "Ah, there's really so much, and I've never handled such an amount of groceries before. What should I do, Uncle Wei?" Xi Chen asked, as he walked into his younger brother's bedroom and caught the sight of the unbelievable - but actually as common as everyday -: of a sweaty, flushed, panting topless Uncle Wei lying atop of an equally naked Lan Zhan; the larger adult straddled the boy on the buttocks, using his weight to pin the helpless boy on the bed, face down, clearly in the middle of a tasty pedophilic fuck; and a blanket over their lower body so that Xi Chen didn't really see what went on between a man's rigid twitching excited penis sawing into a little boy's blossomed and broken rosebud.

"Oh, Uncle Wei, what are you doing to my little brother?" Xi Chen asked, innocently curious, as he glimpsed at clothes that messily pooled on the floor.

Uncle Wei was unfazed and became even bolder at being discovered while carrying out such a terrible act upon the child. At that moment, the thrill skyrocketed, and Uncle Wei let out an audible Hnngh, just as his upper body flushed into deeper shades of passionate reds, his hips quaked uncontrollably, and thirty pulses of powerful penile contractions pumped volleys of hot semen straight into the tight ass-pussy filled with fleshy inviting folds of a maiden's softness. Xi Chen waited patiently for nearly a couple of minutes for a reply - because the teenager is a disciplined and exemplary disciple of the Lan sect.

"This?" he took a deep breath because the experience of inseminating a fresh young eight-year old left him giddy, "Oh, we're just playing a game of wrestling on the bed. Your brother was being a crybaby because he lost one round to me, but we'll keep playing with each other until we have a winner!" the man beamed his most persuasive and confident smile ever. Little Lan Zhan hiccuped and rubbed hot tears from his bloodshot eyes, clearly alarmed and in pain - his private parts throbbed continuously and became swollen every time the uncle assaulted him, after all.

Uncle Wei was smart, and quickly changed the topic, “Xi Chen, you need to debone the roasted chicken and carefully peel out the meat into small pieces, each no larger than a fingertip in size. These will go well with stir-fries, congee and soups. When you’re done, I will tell you about how to handle the fruits,” the useless advice was given, but Xi Chen, who wasn’t as skilled as any housewives, took those words like gospel and “Enn”s.

“Oh, before you leave, please close the door, and thanks,” the man grunted and continued to pump his hips into the well-drilled distended hole between the boy’s buttocks, warmed by many loads of thick happy milk, under the cover of blankets. Xi Chen left the two rutting individuals on their own and returned to the kitchen, and spent the next hour carrying out the tasks as he was told.

Uncle Wei enjoyed bedding the pre-teen for that hour, undisturbed despite the gagged protests and muted screams from behind the bedroom’s closed doors. The greedy, dirty uncle enjoyed making the bed creak, battering and bruising the boy’s fragile, torn, lost innocence, thrusting mindlessly in many different angles into the boy’s stretched anus, fiddling and stroking the pre-teen’s eight-year old penis and coaxed it to many uncomfortable tingles, and erupting many mind-blowing orgasms to fill the sweet tight hole for the entire morning. Little Lan Zhan’s little penis had its foreskin forcibly pulled back, and the uncle’s greasy, sweaty fingers played with violent rubbing and kneading at the bulging glans and the swollen cockslit lips during that full hour.

Xi Chen appeared at the bedroom's entrance again after the roast chicken was done, just as the little brother's engorged, inflamed xiao ji ji was devoured repeatedly by the sex predator. "Uncle Wei, I've stored the chicken meat into the storage cupboards, thank you for your help! What should I do with the basket of fruits?... oh, what are you doing to my younger brother this time?" the teenager asked, and blinked his eyes again in innocent curiosity.

Uncle Wei was caught again, this time he was wrapped with the (soiled) blanket to protect his (questionable) dignity, crouched between the naked eight-year old's trembling legs. Teary-eyed little Lan Zhan stood as still as a frightened mouse, whimpered softly, with his tiny ruined dick inside the dirty uncle's hungry, sweaty mouth, and rough calloused fingers scraped and raked inside the boy's buttocks to remove as much evidence of the rape as possible.

The man quickly used his free hand to cover the boy's crotch from Xi Chen's sight, and released with a satisfying wet pop from his nectar-stained lips, "Oh, your brother was bitten by some mosquitoes, so I'm checking his whole body for the bites and will apply ointments on them later. One mozzie bit just below his belly button, can you believe it?" he grinned his million-dollar smile and made a large hook with a finger in the other hand - the one that was burrowed into the sweet, sweet drenched love tunnel; little Lan Zhan stiffened and nodded, in utter fear.

Xi Chen nodded. It was common for young children to be naked, such as when they played in the backyards or at the hot springs. Mosquitoes were also a commonplace during summertime.

“And... as for the fruits, you need to check and pick out any damaged or bruised ones and put those aside. If you’re so kind, could you take out the bunch of grapes and serve it? They’re very sweet and I’m sure both of you will like it. However, you need to slowly, carefully, peel the grape skin one by one, because the skin is bitter. It’ll take a bit of time. I hope you don’t mind,” Uncle Wei’s voice dripped with syrupy persuasion and the teenager “Enn”s again, before leaving the two in the steaming, sex-smelly room.

“Oh, before you leave, please close the door, and thanks,” the man grunted, and continued to pull a string of dried cum that had pooled inside the little boy’s rectum, and at the front, he renewed his relentless attack on the adolescent’s swollen genitals with youthful vigour. The pre-teen chewed his lower lip and struggled to contain his moans, but the uncle was very good with his lips and tongue, that he couldn’t stop his hips from shaking, his legs from turning into jelly, his bruised balls from quivering, and his reddened, abused penis from twitching, convulsing, and spurting twenty fluttering drops of pee mixed with virginal boy-juice straight into the uncle’s waiting mouth.

Little Lan Zhan would be raped for another hour and forced to tingle until nothing dribbled out, before he was rewarded with sweet peeled grapes for his torment. They had a sumptuous lunch of congee and soup noodles with freshly harvested garden vegetables and hand-peeled minced roast chicken in the Lan brothers’ home, and Uncle Wei dug in happily into Xi Chen’s excellent cooking.

While the elder Lan brother washed the dishes, went out to collect the laundry, and sorted out herbs that had been drying in the sun in their courtyard, Uncle Wei was back in Lan Zhan’s bedroom to ravish and maul the boy’s lips, nipples, boy-smooth skin and terribly abused genitals for another hour. He had saved some fruits from dessert as toys for the boy. He rubbed juicy split peaches over the boy’s chest before licking the sticky, nectary droplets off. The eight-year old was left with plenty of kiss and bite marks over his abdomen and around the shiny, puffed-up areolae. A few strawberries and grapes were inserted into the boy's loosened anus, then stuffed with a peeled banana.

Uncle Wei fucked the boy's slippery hole with the banana until it became a chunky mush. He happily lapped up the crushed fruit and then polished the boy's wildly-twitching, exposed and defenceless penis-tip with a few slices of passion fruit and pomegranate. The tiny seeded sacs of fruity pulps acted as perfect masturbatory beads - wet, sticky, provides lots of bumpy friction, and full of flavours - so Uncle Wei rolled each slice vigorously on the raw cockhead until the boy cried out in pain-pleasure and his body seized into a mind-blowing epileptic fit. One by one, the boy-juice coated strawberries and grapes popped out of the boy's anus, having been pushed by undulating fluttering pelvic muscles that have been forcibly trained before puberty. Uncle Wei enjoyed a delightful dessert, and by the time Xi Chen returned, he quickly excused himself because he needed to wash off the sticky juices from his clothes.

"You brother had a little meltdown just now, and threw some fruits from the kitchen countertop at me," the habitual liar accused, "So now I have to return to change my clothes." Xi Chen scolded the younger brother, who could only manage a stammer of "But, but, but...", and pushed the naked pre-teen into a small pool at the back of their house to wash out the juices. "Stay there," the teenager scowled, "and don't come back until you've washed every last bit off your body. This is your punishment for wasting good food that Uncle Wei gifted to us!". The door was locked, so the crying boy could not return to his house.

Later, alone in the pool, and locked-out of his home, little Lan Zhan cried again at the searing pain tearing and throbbing from his privates, when freshened-up Uncle Wei sneaked in and sauntered into the pool to attack the boy's immature sex organs. Xi Chen was tired and ignored the boy; he slept soundly in his bed during the afternoon and hoped the silent treatment would teach the eight-year old a good lesson about throwing tantrums and wasting kindness offered by their favourite neighbour. The poor adolescent spent a few hours with Uncle Wei leisurely drilling and fertilizing his insides, his quail eggs thoroughly toyed, broken and bruised, and his reddened, swollen tiny penis repeatedly tingled against his will until he squirted out pee and other clear bodily fluids that only seedless eight-year olds could ejaculate.

Dirty Uncle Wei would make multiple trips to the Lan brothers' house every day, each time bearing a small gift, a silly excuse - anything to justify a short visit from one friendly neighbor to another.

Notes for the Chapter:

It looks like the next chapter will take some time, and the current lockdown situation isn't exactly a motivating factor for me. Oh well, baby steps...!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 94

“Ah, ah, Lan Zhan, a little to the left... left... I said, left! Yes, stop there... no, I don't mean stop, keep going! Are you listening-- nnngh! Uhh, yessss, harder, harder... oooh, that hits the spot! Circles, please. Lan Zhan, I said circles!”

Jiang Cheng rolled his eyes again at the eyesore for the nth time, huffed out in frustration, but rather than ban outright the two from engaging in mushy icky lovers-only act of back-scratching in plain sight, he focused on the pan hovering on top of the campfire. Jin Ling's fruits of labour - in the form of natural organic mixed winter nuts dug out from snow-buried grounds - heartily smoked and crackled as they were toasted over the fire.

Jin Ling shuffled through the snow - it wasn't as thick as expected, after the first and largest snowfall the day they left Lotus Pier; subsequently the entire sky had remained gray and overcast for most of the time, with brief periods of sunlight and warmth, but otherwise, the weather had been dreary, chilly, with little precipitation and therefore quite dry, and windy when occasional blizzards struck. Despite the unfavourable prospects of their expedition to the East, he watched, and slowly came to accept the flirtatious acts between his da jiu and the da jiu fu. He didn't really know much about falling in love, much less on how lovebirds behaved in front of their relatives other than holding hands and sending secret winks - but at least they'd kept the mood more bearable than the weather. Wei Ying had been brazenly touchy-feely with the husband, showed Jin Ling their marriage certificates issued by Yiling's civil registry office, and regaled everyone with tales of their romance (just the PG-13 and time-appropriate parts, though), and of living a simple domestic life as farmers (the boy learnt about domesticating jungle fowls and wild rabbits too) - while peppering his lectures with well-timed advertisement inserts for Wangxian products and Qishan Lan's over-4000 family rules.

“ Da jiu ,” Jin Ling called out and approached the couple - and sneezed, then watched how the loving spouse of the couple subtly disengaged from the husband to end the sickly-saccharine grooming session. For some reason, Wei Ying complained that Lan Zhan’s nails were too sharp, so he took the latter’s hand, inspected it, and started giving him a manicure of sorts - by nibbling on Lan Zhan’s fingers; then for no particular reason, Wei Ying started to poke the older man’s waist with that said nibbled finger in a bid to tickle the husband to death - alas, to no avail (because how could one person ever tickle himself?). With that, Lan Zhan took back his saliva coated hand with an adorable indignant snort, Wei Ying ‘tee hee hee’s like a juvenile.

Satisfied in getting his hourly dose of husbandly love, Wei Ying then turned his attention to the nephew, “What is it, Jin Ling?”. Lan Zhan shifted away, perhaps a little uncomfortable at being seen in his slightly dishevelled state; he had spent a good hour with Wei Ying clinging to him like a magnet when strong wintry winds tore through the forests, and they had to hunker down in their temporary camp bedded with pine needles; Wei Ying acted like a ball of ferret and curled, cuddled and embraced the husband and whispered sweet nothings while the storm outside raged - next to a grumpy forever-alone Jiang sect leader and the curious youngster (who received plenty of angry hisses of “Shameless boy! Don’t look at other couples! Mind your own business!” from his jiu jiu .)

“My heating pad’s gone out. Do you have another?” Jin Ling asked, with purely good intentions - they were increasingly dependent on the couple’s inventory to survive the winter, so he had been polite and accommodating to their antics and rather gibberish descriptions sometimes. “Sure,” Wei Ying replied, and fished out a Wangxian-branded 21st-century electric-powered premium M-size Starter’s Therapeutic Heating Pads from the Travel Essentials Winter Collection 20XX B.C.. Jin Ling is a bright child, and although he didn’t understand what “century” meant (it was pure gibberish to him, really), or why they came in a particular sequence, apparently the higher the number, the more advanced model or version that item was.

The boy gratefully took the brown paper package and eagerly tore it open - he was starting to feel the chill in his bones, after all -, then exchanged it with the one that was tucked beneath his robe, pressed the red circle (one thing he'd learnt - always press the red circle to activate a Wangxian product), then felt the furry piece of wired cloth radiate heat almost instantly throughout his abdomen - and sighed in relief.

Wei Ying took the used pad, gave it a good shake and commented that the battery had run out. (Again, the word 'battery' is gibberish to the boy). "Jin Ling, you've been wearing these things for hours on end, and you're really burning through the stocks I have inside my bag," he said, as he squeezed the rolled, used pad into his Bag of Holding - unbeknownst to the rest, someone was waiting inside the bag to take all returned items, refurbish, clean and recharge them for the next usage; it's part of Wangxian's Returns and Aftersales Service Policy.

Jin Ling retorted petulantly, "It.. It's not my fault, da jiu ! I'm the smallest of the lot, so I don't have much body fat as compared to the rest of you! B- Besides, you and da jie fu fare well without the pads, so there's no problem to let me have more, right? And your bag is always full of good things, what kind of sorcery is it?" he cleverly turned the conversation into another learning opportunity.

Wei Ying knew well what the late-teen was up to, and knew Jin Ling had keen eyes for whatever the couple brought with them (because they're awesome stuff that are mostly not from this timeline or universe). He also reminded himself he shouldn't hurt the boy's pride anymore than he should; everyone knew first-hand about the late father's personality, and it doesn't take a genius to draw parallels when observing Jin Ling, after all. So, Wei Ying went along with the flow, and held up his Bag of Holding and satchel to the boy to see, "Oh, you mean these? They work like the magical cart that belongs to your da jiu fu . These powerful magical items respond only to their masters' commands, and possess the ability to store a great amount of objects in a special small bubble of space. It's actually high-level magics related to the Dark Arts, because space-corruption is an aspect of Dark magics," he explained a bit - and succeeded to befuddle the boy even further, but nevertheless, seemed to convince the captive audience anyway, "I can teach you some of this magic, someday, once your cultivation level is high enough, and when you're ready to be my disciple," he ended with a tantalizing offer and a coy, wide smile.

Just then, a piping hot pan knocked on Wei Ying's head, and the man yelped "Oww!". Jiang Cheng lowered it and served the toasted mixed nuts ala Yunmeng style to the quartet. "Wei Wuxian! Jin Ling's too young for all this talk about prohibited magics! If there's anything you want to teach the boy, you have to go through me first! I'm his legal guardian after all!" the fiery sect leader announced.

"Ai-yo ... Jiang Cheng! If you want to learn about the secrets behind the magical cart and my bags, you could've asked nicely. You didn't have to knock my head and scold us! Why are you always so indirect when asking for something?" Wei Ying grumbled - then burst out into laughter - when the Jiang sect leader turned red at being teased (and the teasing was spot-on too), and exploded into his brand of sputtering "How dare you" anger.

Lan Zhan sneaked a hand from behind Wei Ying during the squabble, to grab a handful of the aromatic toasted nuts, then quietly passed them to Jin Ling. "Eat them while they're still hot. Go get some more firewood for us," he said, and waved him off. The boy gratefully bowed and exited the increasingly ridiculous conversation. Somewhere along the line, before Lan Zhan started preparing dinner for the squad, the raucous laughter and back-slaps between the twin Yunmeng heroes devolved into juvenile jokes of ‘Jin Ling said we’re all fat, it must be because of our age’, ‘No, you’re fatter than I am, and stop eating all the nuts I made for us!’, and ‘Lan Zhan, Lan Zhan, let me hold you from behind and measure your waist... oh better yet, let me pinch your belly and measure your love handles’, abruptly cut off by a fiery Jiang Cheng-esque ‘Wei Wuxian! You shameless---!’

Fairy whined and gladly followed its owner when Jin Ling left the scene. Lan Zhan gracefully stationed himself at a corner of their campsite, started the heat on the wok on a makeshift stove pulled out from the magical cart, and made some tasty curries from the exotic South.

.

“Lan Zhan! Why won’t it move?!” Wei Ying shouted and shook his fishing rod of sorts - a long plain stick with a piece of string tied to the end - and a leftover chunk of grilled chicken teriyaki tied to the end of that string. He sat inside the first cart and felt protected - in case anything happened, he could always duck and pull a canvas over his head. Behind the first cart were two other wagons connected using primitive wooden couplings, and were nicely filled with belongings from Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling, respectively.

Fairy sat on its haunches and panted, huffing frosty puffs of air to the surroundings. A leather strap tied its chest to the handles of the first cart. It gave a curious sniff at the sauce-covered morsel, sneezed once, and looked away in disinterest.

Wei Ying was scared of the husky, however as long as that fearsome overweight ball of fluff was at least at Suibian's length away, he could tolerate its presence with a little tremble in his limbs. "You... stubborn... useless thing! You're worse than my Little Apple, at least he would follow the scent of food!" he yelled at the canine, and tapped the dog's head with the chicken chunk.

Lan Zhan sighed and sent a wince towards the remaining two. He pushed the train-like ensemble from behind, and once it started moving, Fairy had no trouble pulling everything along - including the excited, childish young rider ("We're moving! We're moving!", the man cried) - it was actually a strong husky beneath the layers of fat. Jin Ling encouraged the dog to keep walking with verbal cues - Fairy is a smart dog, really - and the boy went to scout ahead. Jiang Cheng flanked the transport to give some pushes where needed - it felt like maneuvering a bulky and slow longboat from his days of living at the lakeside, and he was adept at helping to steer a straight line without veering off the trail. The road ahead was relatively linear and led into flatlands mainly consisting of packed dirt and overgrown wintergrass, the Jiang sect leader said - he knew the roads better than any of them -, and the morning weather was quite good - reasonable daylight, some chilly breeze, but no snow and no fog.

"You are the useless one, Wei Wuxian! How shameless can you be, being the eldest of the Jiangs and doing nothing, yet everyone else - even the pet - is working hard!" Jiang Cheng scolded the man in black, and rolled his eyes in another bout of frustration.

"Eh? It's true I'm the eldest of the Jiangs even as an adopted son, but I'm also the lovable, legally-married wife of the patriarch of my sect, the Qishan Lan; I'm the master magician of the Dark Arts with Jin Ling as a potential candidate to be my disciple; and I'm also the sponsor of this great idea of a sled transport so that my darling husband can take a break; plus, Fairy needs to work out because he's been fed too well and didn't have enough exercise during the past few days... isn't that right, Lan Zhan?" Wei Ying countered with every silly excuse in his arsenal. His frozen chicken teriyaki sat comfortably on Fairy's broad head; the dog is very well-trained, and if it isn't hungry, then it does not simply eat unless with his owner's permission - at the moment, it really needed to burn off some calories.

Jiang Cheng became even more agitated and started cursing his brother for twisting the sacred meaning of the words 'husband' and 'wife'; Lan Zhan smiled faintly and his earlobes blushed a tinge of pink.

Wei Ying entertained the quartet with his singing and flute music - a mix of Yunmeng pop tunes and Gusu folk songs, joined occasionally by spine-tingling howls from Fairy because it wanted a piece of the musical action too, to Wei Ying's alarm - and when the man's repertoire ran out, he became bored, and started reciting the Qishan Lan's family rules; in which Jiang Cheng remarked that it sounded exactly the same as Gusu Lan's which he still remembered nearly two decades ago; and together, all three men took turns to read the rules from memory. Jin Ling, ever the curious boy but too shy to ask what the heck is going on, listened and took mental notes, because if it's good enough for the fearsome jiu jiu , the powerful da jiu , and the highly-esteemed da jiu fu , then it must be good for him too.

(At some point in time, even reciting rules became a chore, and Wei Ying added a twist for his own amusement. He would start, "Do not simply run in the hallways," and then added, "Otherwise you'll skid on a banana peel and fall flat on your face" or "Otherwise you'll run into a maiden and end up kissing her on the lips," in which Jiang Cheng devolved into curses at the intentional juvenile prank (such as "Wei Wuxian! How old are you?!"), Lan Zhan smiled into his sleeve - it was rude, but it was Wei Ying-ness at its best -, and Jin Ling raised an eyebrow to silently ask, dumbfoundedly, “What-- wait... is that true?”)

.

Their trip was not a bed of roses, and as rocky as Qiongqi Path, as the weather became colder over the next few days; Jiang Cheng suffered hypothermia when he foolishly tried to copy the Qishan Lans and strolled around without thick robes and heating pads - and developed high fever after that; Jin Ling’s fingers were chaffed, blistered and frostbitten while trying to hunt for elusive small mammals as snack cooked on a spit (and failed to show off his archery skills); and Fairy couldn’t run fast enough and was slashed by small bands of fierce corpses they encountered during the journey - so it had to limp with a poisoned, near-gangrenous hind leg for a while. The travelling quartet had to take turns to pull the carts, and take frequent stops to rest.

Lan Zhan’s value to the team outshone the rest, when he cast Healing spells from his grimoire - however, just as any trustworthy medicines, there are no miracle cures. Wounds take time to heal properly, broken bones had to grow back and re-attach, poison needed to be deactivated, metabolized and excreted. Wei Ying remarked that the further they travelled to the east, the more dangerous and heavily armed the enemy - from low-level skeletons, old, rotting fierce corpses and bodiless vengeful spirits they’d seen closer to the Pier, they faced increasingly well-organized patrols of powerful jiangshi (vampires), unusual fierce corpses comparable to the legendary Ghost General, indestructible yaoguai (evil spiritual beings), Corrupted centuries-old predators, and other creatures typically described in ancient horror mythology, but never seen in broad daylight until now.

At the Jiang sect leader's behest - he took command of the quartet since he believed he had the most experience in battles and with night hunts - the team agreed not to fight every encounter, and avoid drawing swords where possible. The endless waves of monsters were taking their toll; Fairy's sharp sense of smell could warn ahead of time if monsters were coming their way, and that gave Jin Ling a chance to shower blazing and holy water-dipped arrows at the opponents - however he was running low on ammunition, and was ineffective with hand-to-hand combat due to the unwieldy Suihua. The poor boy often bore the brunt of damage and bleeding wounds until his angry jiu jiu comes to the rescue in the form of serpentine Zidian that zapped both the living and the dead. Wei Ying preferred to stay in the background, playing defensive dark music with his flute, sending his own army of black wispy vengeful missiles to do his bidding. Lan Zhan was regarded as the precious angelic saviour, a Superman of sorts, who would swoop in to carry away the injured, bridal-style, detonate powerful guqin soundwaves to blast the adversaries (using 'infinitesimal' qi), and disappear to safety.

There were several villages along the way, just as the Jiang sect leader remembered, however they were all deserted and worse, defiled by the growing presence of the unholy. They watched, hidden behind boulders and bushes, at how groups of Imperial shamans, sorcerers, swordsmen and other fighters, mostly garbed in strange exotic and colourful clothes of the Far Far West, assemble and launch legions of undead.

“ Da jiu ! Look how they are raising the dead from the ground! They line up bodies of long-decomposed, murdered villagers, then weave dark magic from their hands, and tens of new fierce corpses with those terrible black veins on their necks and faces arise! It's... It's as easy and fast as harvesting carrots and potatoes from the ground!”, said the boy who was so excited and intimidated to witness an unbelievable nightmarish summoning phenomenon, he nearly peed in his pants.

“Wei Wuxian! What’s going on? There are fierce corpses with multiple hands and legs, and some freakishly stitched to animal parts! Look at that one - it has the body of a man, but below his belly is that of a giant hairy spider! And what’s with those black holes on the ground, where ghosts, phantoms and human-like things seem to crawl out endlessly! I never knew there was an underground cavern beneath this village!”, said the former sect leader about to go on a rampage with sizzling whips.

“Wei Ying, could this explain the endless waves of monsters afflicting our home and the borders to the Far, Far West? With Imperial troops leading battalions of hundreds of monsters each, that keep regenerating from these villages and from the... black holes... they seem unstoppable. We should reconsider our next steps,” said the man calmly, objectively, that his suggestions seem as true as facts (because he is The God that foreseen everything, after all).

“... Everyone, this looks really dangerous and it’s beyond what we can handle. I suggest a strategic retreat for now!” said the one who was most familiar with the Dark Arts but also the most cowardly at that heated moment, and drew incredulous looks from the first two, and an empathic “Mn” from the third.

Jiang Cheng hesitantly, but eventually agreed to echo the call for a withdrawal. There was no way four men could take down hundreds - now mounting into thousands - of undead led by such strange, powerful mercenaries from unknown lands under the banner of the Emperor of Chang’an.

Undead, monstrous and supernatural forces were created by the hundreds, like a xerox machine of atrocious proportions and capabilities, and they were sent towards the South and Westerly directions. “Which means,” Wei Ying postulated, “We can confirm that the Imperial forces had conquered the North and East, and use these regions of the Middle Kingdom as outposts pump out armies to the remaining provinces.” He turned around to Lan Zhan, panic rising in his voice, “Lao gong ! Our home in Qishan could be next in danger! And I’m terrified to think of what has befallen Gusu!”

Lan Zhan swallowed, hard.

.

The Kingdom of Lan raised its alerts to Code 6 Level Crimson Red, and more than fifty percent of their 51st-century spaceships, planetary bombardment forces and interstellar star-cannons warped into the newly discovered portal on Mortal Realm. Scientists rushed to decode the Corrupted space-time fabric’s signature, and to their horror, they discovered a whole lot more previously undetected portals radiating similar ranges of frequencies, once their radars are properly tuned in, clustered around the continent of the Far, Far West and within the Middle Kingdom.

“An ungodly species with the ability to travel across universes! The Tians are a blasphemy to nature itself!” Wei da ge cried out with raw anger in his rallying speech, during live telecast on national television, to stir the hearts of soldiers and generals leading the Kingdom’s supreme army of million-strong motherships, a call-to-arms to lay waste upon the enemy, to rampage, annihilate and wipe out as many of those terrible aberrant creatures as possible in their home grounds. Planets instantly turned to space dust, galaxies swallowed up by nebulous pulsar bombs, whole universes ripped into shreds - but the numbers of Tians, their military might and sphere of influence kept increasing, like an abominable plague gone horribly wrong.

Wei san ge was at his wits' end when printers churn out towers of reports, the screens become a kaleidoscope of blinking reds and texts prefixed by Danger or Warning, and yelled nonsensically in his gaming chair, when his calculations exceeded known Immortal limits. There were just too many Tians inhabiting their own network of multiverses, of very advanced magical and technological states, and they had planned to invade the Mortal Realm first before consuming more worlds and realities - was his final conclusion. ErNet became abuzz, and swamped with panicked messages from concerned citizens speculating that this explained why they haven't been able to stop, let alone reverse, the tide of monsters flowing from the alpine mountains of the Far, Far West like endless tsunamis in the dead of winter - because there were just too many of them crawling out from numerous own portals that sprouted everywhere like weed. Hordes of citizens accused the Wangxian administrative government for complacency during the peaceful months between summer and winter, when the Kingdom lay low and that gave the chance for the Tians to fester, grow and multiply exponentially, unchecked, into the terrible cross-universal pandemic that the world is seeing today.

Wei er ge wasn't bright, but he knew that the first order of the day was to get the citizens to safety - especially the young, elderly, the vulnerable and the weak. He quickly organized special councils and teams to move them into the deepest layers of space-time fabrics, made sure they have comfortable and incredibly secure homes to live in, enough food, supplies and medical care to tide them through, and politely asked the youngest Wei sibling, Wei didi, to ramp up the Kingdom's production capacities to the maximum resource utilization levels possible.

The eighteen-year old clone of Wei Wuxian was also tasked to helm powerful fighters of the Kingdom bequeathed by their da ge to secure their citizens, assets and properties in Qishan, in the Mortal Realm - the Burial Mounds and its the estates, Huang Village, the strip of land between Yiling and Yunmeng, the businesses, the hundred war refugees and their two hundred undead servants, and the people who live and work there. He personally leads a military campaign to reclaim Lotus Pier, and becomes an overnight celebrity, a poster child of the brewing war. The Lotus Pier was reportedly decimated and overrun by wriggling black undead masses, and became filled with those hideous portals, based on grainy images from spy satellites. Hundreds of Tian members and their endless swarms of monstrous troops emerged every hour, spilling out of the former Jiang Residence and into the surroundings, mostly towards South and Westerly directions - which the Kingdom considered as a grave insult to their sovereign pride. "The Lotus Pier will never be made into a colonial outpost! Our Motherland will never fall! We will tear down the Tians (天) from their throne, even if it means burning down the skies with everything we have!" the young commander was quoted while holding a flamethrower aimed up above, and zillions of citizens of the Kingdom cheered at his words - thus, the name of the 'Skyshot Campaign' was born.

Wei didi , being just a nine-year old child, was incredibly inspired and motivated by everything that went on, and thought it was time to bring out the big boys. He broke all protocols and their family's over-4000 rules (because he could, and because he was underaged, and therefore will not be penalized for any wrongdoing), and pulled out one of his secret stashes from his toybox that not even the other siblings knew - a prototype 91st-century Absolute Reincarnation Tetra-Implosion Bomb that could theoretically reset their enemies' state of existence once and for all.

Ernie and Ni-er hadn't broadcasted anything during the past few days, presumably to allow Ernie's virulent particles to peacefully spread all over the planet - and surprise, surprise, - an updated post from Ni-er's WeiChat account showed a picture taken in a different universe - one that had plenty of bright tall spiralling buildings, sprawling factories, flying space vessels, mecha robots and huge weapons bearing the 'Tian' symbol. Her fluffy wormy form smiled in the foreground - bless those pink toothless gums - and she tried to do a peace sign with her blunt fuzzy tail end. Ernie sat at a corner with an unreadable but probably grouchy expression, staring at the faraway horizon, and looked every bit dramatic and emo as the teenager he is.

A minute later, little Ni-er sent another picture. Both tentacle-kin remained at their places, but the background is blacked-out. Ernie was again looking away from the camera with his holo-phone switched on, and he seemed to be typing a report into it, titled 'Analysis of the potential benefits and consequences of reverse engineering of the phenomenal replicative behaviour and futuristic technologies of the Tian civilization'. Ni-er, at the front, the cutest and most carefree of the two, sports a chubbier furry belly, and licked her lips.

.

Another night, another strange, erotic dream.

Little Wei Ying watched the eight-year old boy - his peer, really - cry and pound on the locked door to his house, but no one opened it. The naked adolescent screamed in desperation, in pain and in panic, as he clawed at the doorknob that refused to budge, shaking it as violently as the dirty uncle shook his attacked penis at the same time.

Uncle Wei happily captured the boy again at the entrance, after the tasty tryst at the pool where he sampled and devoured the deflowered boy-maiden too many times, but flavours of a boy who had yet to reach puberty was just simply too addictive, like ambrosia of innocence that needed to be defiled, that he went for seconds and thirds. The terrible rapist effortlessly took his position between the boy's bent legs, sat against the closed door, and suckled the inflamed genitals; his hands were strong and gripped the boy's cum-drenched buttocks and thighs hard, that the boy was ensnared in the man's inescapable embrace to the crotch. Uncle Wei spanked the boy's bouncy bum many times, eliciting sweet mewls of pain from the victim.

"Uuuuh... Uuuuh... gege , please open the door! Wang Ji is wrong! Uuuuh... Please forgive Wang Ji! Uuuuh... Uuuuhh..." the boy's keening wail were getting a little incessant, a little too loud, while he scratched at the locked door in despair, begging to be let in, as he was forced to tingle yet another time into the dreamy-eyed uncle's mouth; the uncle savoured the wonderful tastes of boy-fluids again and again from a quivering, leaky xiao ji ji . The boy's body was thoroughly confused - on one hand, he was distressed by the helpless situation, on the other, he couldn't stop the sexual urges blossoming from his underaged loins, jerking his thin child-hips repeatedly into Uncle Wei's kissy lips, performing the timeless act of fucking something warm and moist, juicy and tight. Even after releasing the angry-purplish bruised twitching cock, with its foreskin fully retracted and the glans swollen red, the sex predator proceeded to ravage the loosened, shrunken balls and swallowed them again and again with lip-smacking deliciousness.

From the inside of the house, through a dusty window, the boy probably looked like he was crying hot tears, skin flushed from his miserable and utmost embarrassing punishment, and trembling from being stranded outside for too long in the nude - nothing too suspicious, really. Not long after, a large group of strangers walked past - they were the new teachers at the grade school, and had just finished afternoon classes! - and heard the commotion. It seemed they were acquaintances with the dirty uncle, because they sauntered through the Lan brothers' vegetable gardens, stole a few tomatoes, cabbages and chillies, and shook hands with that uncle who was busily swallowing another forcibly-extracted tingle in his penis-stuffed mouth. After an exchange of secretive whispers and nods, then with a merry laugh, they grabbed and kidnapped the shrieking, kicking boy away. Uncle

Wei pocketed a few gold nuggets from the transaction, wiped his sticky mouth, and walked off to the gates of the Cloud Recesses; he planned to make a quick trip to Caiyi and buy a few jars of Emperor Smiles with the profit.

Little Wei Ying watched until the boy was carried and escorted by nearly twenty burly men in total, into the uncle's dingy house opposite the brother's hut. His screams died to a whimper when he felt resigned to his miserable fate at the doorway to Uncle Wei's dungeon. One of the men, a fat and bald one full of warts and smelly odours, shouted "Ho ho ho, my boy, let this uncle play with you until sunset! You've been sold for a good price, and we've rented this place for a while, so be a good boy and let me make sweet love with your fertile pussy - again!" to no one's attention, as the street was relatively quiet and deserted in the hot sunny afternoons.

The door closed, the curtains were drawn and all windows were tightly shut. Finally, everything fell silent.

.

Fingers danced on erogenous zones, and naked eight-year old Wei Ying giggled. The boy closed a curtain in the living room so that he would not need to see how his neighbour fared - it probably wouldn't be a good ending anyway. As he turned around, topless and pantless Uncle Lan mimicked the dirty uncle's movements too, by embracing his crotch from where he sat on the floor. The difference in this situation was that little Wei Ying willingly, and took the initiative to use his fingers and guide his semi-erect pinkie-length penis into the master's waiting mouth. It was akin to feeding carrots to rabbits, by carefully inserting the said phallic vegetable to its target. Just before the penile tip reached the excited, impatient quivering lips, the pre-teen pulled back his foreskin as much as he could to expose the pinkish, moist glans.

Uncle Lan mmmms and gently nibbled on the bulbous spongy cockhead, then along the increasingly hardening length, until the entire organ slid in - fed like a rabbit, indeed.

“Uncle Lan, Uncle Lan, you won’t be harsh or rude at me like our neighbours, will you?”

“Mn. I will always cherish and treat you with tender love, my Wei Ying,” the Uncle murmured between generous sucking. The man made sure to melt the boy’s trembling penis into a puddle of boiling, spurting pleasure, and his fingers worked to caress the tightening balls and sensitive inner thighs.

The pre-pubescent child with unruly, slightly curled hair moaned recklessly - a very adult-like response for someone who hadn’t ejaculated his first sperm. In this wide, spacious mansion inhabited by two, little Wei Ying enjoyed prancing and walking naked around all day. Uncle Lan was receptive, and made sure to give Good Touches to the boy each time he was within reach - which was nearly constant, by the way. The sweet young child was molested, caressed and had his genitals fiddled and played by the master, to his heart’s content - the boy would have a finger inserted into his ass, his penis suckled like a swollen teat, his jingling balls caressed until they became taut and egg-round, his nipples pinched and rubbed until they flared and blossomed like knobbly roses, or have his lips deeply kissed, or all at once. Uncle Lan’s love for the child overflowed as much as the child experienced equally passionate tingles until the latter drowned in intense pleasures of adult flesh that the immature body couldn’t really handle yet.

“Uncle Lan, that felt really, really good. My buttocks feel strangely itchy and hungry... can I have some happy milk, please?” the child asked with a gaze full of sparkly endearing innocence, and used the code-words for ‘horny’ and ‘sperm’.

Lan Zhan shivered when flames of lust licked his cock and balls, fanning their desires with immoral feelings, and he hardened in record time. “Mn,” he calmly replied, and indulged in the child’s request immediately.

.

The Gusu Lan master, a hermit in his own mansion of two, spent a good amount of time grooming little Wei Ying on touches, words, and the art of pleasuring each other’s bodies. He was wise to have struck the iron while it was still hot, having molested the boy within three days of kidnapping (he would prefer the term ‘brought into a loving home’), and deflowered the fragile budding rose not long after that. He taught him the rules of the house, and of the sect’s - with twisted variations included - so that the child’s morals were perfectly moulded to his desires while the eight-year old was still innocent and unfamiliar with the ways of the world.

Uncle Lan would lounge on the cooling floor to read a book during the hot summer days, then when the pre-teen emerged into the room, the man would be hard at work masturbating his hairy, rigid adult penis; the book would have been discarded elsewhere, for later reading. He had taught the boy the joys of touching oneself, of peeling his foreskin for the pervert uncle to see, then touch, and finally taste, and of playing horsie with the naked uncle by straddling and bouncing on his crotch - a game that would devolve into full blown penetrative sex in times to come - and the brainwashed child ended up with rich seed sloshing inside his love tunnel. He would also orgasm at the boy's face, chest and groin, and together they would explore the wonders of playing with sticky, gooey pools of sperm-rich semen - much like teaching a child how to play with dough and slime toys. Little Wei Ying would laugh with pure joy to have his nipples, belly button, his asshole and unsurprisingly, his tiny pearl-sized exposed cockhead covered and filled with the warm, smelly milky liquid; Uncle Lan inserts cum-coated fingers into the boy's mouth too, and teaches the adolescent to accept, and like the taste of sperm.

Sometimes, Uncle Lan took the time to enjoy his hobbies, such as playing the guqin or writing calligraphy. Little Wei Ying was an illiterate child, so he could not appreciate what the man was doing, and usually proceeded to disrupt the latter's routines by striking the guqin chords randomly while shrieking like a monkey, or add drawings of turtles, rabbits, and lately, crude doodles of penises onto the writing paper. Uncle Lan was unperturbed; rather than spanking the naughty boy's buttocks, he would simply put away his tools, clear the floor, then push the boy gently to the ground with pillows on said boy's buttocks, and quietly, without warning, grind his hips into the boy's ass. Full penetration at the first thrust was his way of reprimanding the boy, followed by delicious drilling until the tight hole is shaped into the man's phallus, filling little Wei Ying with rapid-fire loads of thick, rich adult semen, served with with toe-curling pleasurable orgasmic waves in the wildly excited penis, tasty grunts, welcomed by the soft folds of warm, wet boy-flesh inside the pre-pubescent's ass, and watching the child bloom into shades of sweaty reds and passionate pinks as the eight-year old's body jerked erratically, arched his back, shiver his hips, squirt pee all over their joined crotches, screaming the uncle's name again and again in the throes of his tingles - are rewards that Uncle Lan savoured every time his punishments are dished out. They would end their intense round by rubbing sticky penises and balls together, to the delight of the ticklish boy - until the uncle grows hard again from the wild imaginations of an adult cock creampie-ing into a smaller, pale child-penis, and they would have another round of crazy sex all over the mansion.

Later, the two would visit a hot water springs behind the mansion to wash up, where the boy would sit on the uncle's penis underwater, the man would wash the boy's hair and back, and both enjoy an hour-long sexual intercourse between an adult man and a child, hidden away from the world's prying eyes. Neighbours would catch glimpses of the two sometimes, their bodies flushed red presumably from the heated waters, and thought nothing of it, because the scene looked like any ordinary weekend leisure activity of a fatherly figure playing with his adopted son. Of course, they did not realize that once in a while, Uncle Lan becomes the one to jerk his hips erratically, arch his back and howl with great pleasure, bite into the boy's nape as many times as he ejaculated deep into the boy, and shake his loins uncontrollably to shoot as much remaining, diluted seed into the boy. The spring waters become murky with milky white with no less than three full loads from the uncle's depleted balls, but they wash away quickly, leaving no trace of their forbidden lovemaking.

After such an invigorating session, a snack is in order to refill one's energy, stomach, and unsurprisingly, sex drive. Uncle Lan learned a number of fascinating ways to eat with the undisciplined child:

One, little Wei Ying is asked to dine in his own preferred manner - usually, the eight-year old wild boy would squat on the table, then use his hands to eat delicious homecooked food served on the tabletop as well. Uncle Lan is a patient man, and would maneuver the boy so that the latter's spread buttocks faced him when he takes his seat properly on the chair. As the boy dined on spit-roasted chicken and freshly harvested orchard fruits, Uncle Lan would lean forward, and dip his tongue into the boy's rosebud, wiggling, stretching and send tendrils of good-feelings through the adolescent's genitals and up the spine. Once the ass was adequately relished, the man would move to attack the sensitive underdeveloped perineum, jab and massage the delicate skin with his tongue to 'greet' the immature prostate, and then move further to the front to finally feast on thoroughly played swollen boy-penis and its twin shuddering eggs. Uncle Lan enjoys watching how sometimes little Wei Ying squeals, experiences the first signs of a true adult orgasm that the underaged body is unprepared for, and waves of pelvic muscular contraction and relaxation send clear seedless nectary fluid pew-pew'ing at the food on the tabletop. The man would sample some of the prepared snacks dipped in boy-juice made with loving orgasmic pleasure, and thought that the taste was beyond excellent.

Two, little Wei Ying is taught to fuck food served warm on the dining table. The boy would be instructed to pump his thin hips repeatedly and rut into an assortment of delicacies - tender pork roasts, juicy beef steak cuts, oven-roasted chicken (through the fibrous, chunky, sauce-filled and chock-full-of-friction stuffing in the cavity), cakes and their favourite - warm, gooey apple pies. Uncle Lan is always captivated by the sight of an eight-year old adolescent crouching over the plate, bending and bowing his body again and again, forcing his sticky pinkie-length turgid child-penis in and out of the pie's crust and into a heaven made of cooked apples, sugar and starch, trying his best to breed and inject more lip-smacking goodness into the fresh, sugary, thick fruity filling. After that, they would enjoy the pie together, and agree that it's better than store-bought ones.

Three, classic food sex - whether enjoying a shared rice dumpling while engaging in passionate penetrative sex, or spreading a sushi buffet on the boy's body while the latter lay on the table. It is messy, but fun, and the man adds a zest of manly enjoyment by sprinkling, sometimes drizzling, thirty-twitches of arching, hot viscous seed over the squirming living banquet topped with seafood and plenty of fresh olive oil-dipped oysters to give the uncle a head start in sperm-production. Sometimes little Wei Ying complain about itchiness caused the sticky, wet residues left by some shellfish and crustaceans, in which Uncle Lan happily rubs his stubbled chin over the those sensitive, ticklish areas, enjoying the different textures upon the child's offered, willing body - and if he's up to it, the uncle would twist the edges of his budding moustache into a fine spear of hair, then insert it into the boy's spasming, oozing, engorged urethra, and give it a spin - little Wei Ying cries in ecstasy, and his pelvic muscles flutter, spilling fragrant sprays of crystal clear droplets into Uncle Lan's waiting tongue.

.

“Lao gong , lao gong , wake up! You're dreaming again!”

A series of gentle slaps on the face. This was becoming a familiar routine, he thought.

He cracked his eyes open to see lovely Wei Ying with sunlight at the back of his head, like a halo - now back to the twenty-two year old body - looming above.

The voice lowers to a whisper, “You're having cross-over fantasies again in your sleep! But-- shhh! Ah, they're here,” the spouse hissed.

“Stop calling your Lan Wang Ji as ‘lao gong’, it's giving me the creeps!” Jiang Cheng called out from a short distance, “Is everyone alright? I wasn't sure Zidian threw all of you far enough from that blasted twenty-foot metal golem! That lifeless thing was invincible, I've not seen such strength before!” and continued to curse their ill-fortune of bumping into one of those undefeatable Imperial patrols.

They had been making many detours from the footpath to avoid conquered and overrun villages where possible, which cost them more precious time. Sometimes, in larger towns, they waited unnoticed in the bushes for hours for streams of undead to pass by, before sprinting to carefully-selected abandoned buildings to snatch valuable supplies and scavenge more ammunition, before making a quick getaway. They conducted stake-outs during camping as they traversed into more inhospitable, mountainous regions closer to the Great Eastern Coast, with the intention to try and understand how the enemy operated, and more importantly, how to find their weaknesses.

“Tch’, you’re just jealous because I’m married, and you’re not,” Wei Ying turned around and stuck out his tongue, but Jiang Cheng was already busy kicking Jin Ling’s sides. The boy lay in an odd position on the ground, pillowed by a bit of snow and moss-covered rocky outcrops, and finally responded by yelling at the sadistic jiu jiu, and abruptly cried, “Oww, oww, my head hurts! Your stupid whip flung me into the air and I landed on tree branches!”

After a few victories over small patrols made of three to five individuals each, the Jiang sect leader became cocky and thought they could mow down every enemy encounter. However, the deeper they were in adversarial territory, the more powerful the resistance and hostilities - they weren’t facing ragtag bunches of yaoguai and undead creatures anymore, instead, they started to see well-organized squadrons lead by Far, Far Westerners that serve under the Imperial banner.

Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling could pick off the low-ranking monsters in such groups, however, the human leaders - the ones that Wei Ying and Lan Zhan called “Tians”, as sometimes evidenced by tattoos of the Tian symbol on their limbs and faces - proved to be of immense challenge. Wei Ying’s terribly off-tune flute music and vengeful spirit missiles did nothing to them

- rightfully so, because the Tians also used dark, Corrupted magic and were masters over such spells - so the Superman-Han Guang Jun had to always save the day by diving in from mid-air, sweeping them off the feet, and carry them away from the battlefield with grace. Jiang Cheng learned from their angelic saviour, and being the one who tried to 'save his face' and dignity of his so-called leadership, he tried to imitate the great man by using Zidian for the same purpose - he whipped out the purple-silver serpent, wrapped all four of them, and tossed them to the air like a catapult.

Lan Zhan rose and hurried to Jin Ling's side at the mention of pain. He quickly cast Healing spells and checked the boy's pulse and body condition. The twin Yunmeng heroes crowded around the scene, anxious.

"Mn. He is alright. He hit hard on the tree, but there is no concussion, and no broken bones. Only a big bump on the head," Lan Zhan murmured, and massaged the said lump on the boy's crown, to the constant whines and discomfort of the latter.

Jiang Cheng breathed a sigh of relief; he still thought himself as the leader of the quartet, and wholly responsible for their well-being. He brushed off pine needles, twigs and compact snow from the boy's purple robes.

"Jiang Cheng, this place looks quite alright for a short break after that harrowing escape from the golem," Wei Ying suggested and looked around - at least they landed in a glade that seemed peaceful and quiet enough, "Can you start a campfire so that we don't freeze our butts off? I will take Lan Zhan to a brook over there to wash up. It seems he landed on a patch of icy mud when we fell," he added, and sneakily slapped the husband's clothed springy ass with dirt-covered hands.

“Let’s go, before they see your boner in broad daylight! Be careful when you walk, your robes cannot hide it forever!” the spouse hissed into the husband’s ear, and Lan Zhan turned into six shades of blushing red. Lan Zhan quickly excused himself and staggered towards the direction pointed by the spouse, with the latter hooking his hands over his, like a loving old couple going for a walk.

Jin Ling asked about where Fairy was, and where their transport was, filled with their belongings. Jiang Cheng shrugged and his expression soured. Jin Ling started to shed tears and kicked the ground, upset, when he was told that they left the dog and their carts behind.

Meanwhile, while tenderly and gently rubbing one out from the moaning, wheezing and sexually flushed husband, by the brookside - Wei Ying had no trouble snaking his hand into the husband’s pants and yank out the impressive leaking erection from the latter’s soiled loincloth -, the spouse started to discuss and brainstorm for ideas on how to defeat a 31st-century Tian multipurpose and super-intelligent combat robot - which was incorrectly named a ‘golem’ by the Bronze Age-era Jiang sect leader. Lan Zhan remained silent, soaring high, so high into the release of his pent-up orgasm.

Notes for the Chapter:

My draft's empty again. Looks like it's back to the drawing board... I will have to think of what to write next!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 95

“A family that pees together, stays together,” Wei Ying chirped, “although it’ll probably take a while before my brother and nephew will join us.”

The husband stood in silence beside a bubbling clearwater brook, an unreadable expression on his face, his back straight and strong, legs slightly apart in a ready-stance, his robes and layers of garments folded neatly to the back and his pants rolled down to the knees in a perfect twist, to reveal the prized bulge packaged under a white strip of loincloth.

“What are you waiting for, lao gong ? We’ve always done this back in the days in the ‘Mounds, at the pond behind our cave-home. You know, the longer you stand there with your pants down, the colder it’ll become! Then you’ll really, really shrivel up until both of your eggs disappear!” he laughed, and he too, was in the same state of undress.

Lan Zhan’s face became strained, almost agonizing over the decision to ease the tension in his bladder. “There is... ice... floating on the water...” the husband hesitantly murmured. The semi-arid landscape around them was strewn with tufts of brown wintergrass and some patches of snow, and temperatures were below freezing. Fortunately the brook was still flowing despite the sub-zero conditions - a sign that the waterway was fed by other local thermal sources than the drained-out Great Lakes. Unfortunately, however, the water was chilled, and small ice sheets flowed along its surface, gently carried by the brookwater.

Wei Ying sighed an unspoken ‘I knew it’; he had seen this coming. He expertly snaked his hands into the husband’s loincloth (he’d done this before thousands of times, so he knew exactly how to do it in a single swoop), yanked out the helpless limp soft sausage, and started to shake it with a tight grip. The husband cried out the spouse's name in alarm and from sheer embarrassment.

“No, lao gong , you're NOT going to pee out ice, if that's what you're thinking. You're a bad husband, spending your nights watching trashy WeiTube videos of blocks and tubes of ice spewing out from garden hoses during winter - do you really think that'll happen to your wee-wee?” Lan Zhan gulped, and nodded, a little terrified of the graphic images that haunted his thoughts all day - to the point that he refused to run to the shrubs during the daytime with a ballooning bladder, and risked an urinary tract infection if he didn't let go soon.

(Lan Zhan has an obsessive relationship with his nightly entertainment opens when stargazing during snowfall became uninteresting; he would sneakily watch porn video clips in ErNet using his old LanWeb account, and get himself mired in tasteless meme videos, cat videos, videos of people doing stupid things, leaked violent videos, and other garbage-filled content.)

The spouse leaned in and started to pump the husband's captured limp member earnestly. He whispered in a low, evil voice, “A-Ji ah A-Ji, you better pee now, otherwise Uncle Wei will attack your tiny child-penis again and again!”, then blew cold air into the husband's ear, causing the latter to moan and shiver involuntarily - and a hot, steaming stream of dark yellow liquid gushed out in a magnificent arch. Wei Ying continued to lick the sensitive earlobe, bite into the shell of the ear, whispered very dirty, disjointed words of fucking and urinating at the same time, and Lan Zhan's heated rod stiffened, blossomed into a warm shades of excited reds. “Good boy, good boy, shoot everything out, let it go, Uncle Wei will play with you lots and lots until there is nothing left to spray, you perv,” the younger man breathed loudly.

While the husband was busy fertilizing the brook and surrounding wintergrasses with wild arcs of hot pee, the spouse grabbed a free hand and forced it to hold his own softened member - a tit for tat, really - Wei Ying's wasn't as long as Lan Zhan's, so the latter's meaty palm easily, generously covered the younger man's erection with one mighty grip. “Lao gong, you should keep your wife warm too,” the sultry explanation went unheard, because the husband was too busy trying to control his spewing, burst dam, and was in a terrible conflict between protecting the dignity of his fingers versus savouring the much-desired touch of the wife (they haven't had the chance to fully “do it” since they started their journey from the Lotus Pier, with an extra two pairs of eyes watching them closely.)

Unsurprisingly, naughty Wei Ying started to moan sexily and babbled about how Uncle Lan is playing with an eight-year old's immature, inexperienced wee-wee, that Uncle Lan is a child molester and rapist, and that Uncle Lan loves to touch little boys and eat them up during the day and nights - and the poor husband was rewarded by a hand full of spilled wife's pee, and a very, very hard boner sticking out between his legs.

Satisfied that both have emptied their bladders, the dominatrix spouse grabbed the husband's twitching pulsing rod of flesh and led him to the nearby undergrowth, like pulling a livestock animal to its barn. A quickie of frotting and handjob behind the bushes, another series of flying arcs of sperm joined (more like, mixed into a soup) in holy matrimony, and a wash of hands later, the couple then finally returned to the campsite.

“Eh, Jin Ling’s still in the thickets? How long is he going to hide in there?” Wei Ying asked while scratching his head and picked off something from his scalp. He, and the whole quartet, hadn’t had a decent bath in the past few days. The rivers continued to run dry, and the only source of water they found was the brook - on top of that, they’ve lost their carts, so they had no camping equipment, no portable showers and toilets, no reliable water sources, no water heaters, no soaps and shampoos, and no bath towels.

“Wei Wuxian! You know better than I do, that boy’s suffering from food poisoning after eating those bright orange mushrooms plucked from rotten pinewood. I’m heating another bowl of water to make some tea to ease his stomach pains,” the angry jiu jiu huffed. Ever since they lost their cookware, cutlery and no longer had access to unlimited bento box lunches, freeze-dried ingredients, fresh meats, garden vegetables, off-season fruits, grains and noodles, condiments and spices, and other kitchen staples, both uncle and nephew were at a loss of how to survive being out in the woods, with nothing to hunt, and hardly any edibles to forage during the dead of winter. The boy thought those colourful mushrooms looked succulent and tasty, and wanted to impress his elders on his finds - sadly, Jin Ling ultimately failed, and ended up worse than before.

The spouse had broken a small branch, and out of boredom and bad habit, used it to poke the relaxed husband’s back repeatedly. The husband was a little annoyed at first, but then something prickled and he started moving his body a little to the left, left, then right, right, nnngh more to the right, please. He half-squatted (barely), then rose up, and tip-toed a bit. Wei Ying smiled knowingly, and scratched the husband’s back with the spindly end of that branch. When he had covered the bases, he would turn the branch around, and used the broader, heavier end as a massage stick.

Whup, whup, whup , the stick gently tapped on the husband’s muscular shoulders. Lan Zhan tilted his neck and gave it a good roll, eyes closed in (post-sex) enjoyment of the spouse's delicate treatment in front of the brother-in-law (who was fortunately busy making the perfect bowl of tea for the sick boy, and had no time to argue about inappropriate displays of affection in front of family members). Wei Ying watched how Jiang Cheng scooped a handful of dried herbs from his pouch - the sect leader still had some medicinal and military equipment on him despite the total loss of their transport - and added the leaves into the boiling water. The air started to smell a little minty, a twinge of bitterness, and somewhat fragrant.

“Well, the both of us will check the brook's upstream to see if there are any water springs for us to use, and maybe plants or even wildlife if we're lucky enough. You can check downstream if Jin Ling feels a bit better after having your tea,” Wei Ying said, and waved at Jiang Cheng as they walked away from the campsite. They've only had small dumplings, flavourless breads and buns, and occasionally dried or canned food (opened by pressing red circles) in the past few days - the only reasonably-sized and convenience foods that could be pulled out of their magical bags of holding - also, without stoves, kitchen knives and cooking tools, without the ability to pull out whole cuts of juicy tenderloin, spare ribs, fish, pork trotters or whole chickens, they couldn't really prepare any decent homemade buffet for four. Wei Ying lamented that he was desperate for Lan Zhan's home-cooking made with love, and the latter itched to hold a spatula or a wok in his hands.

“Mn. On higher grounds, we have a better chance to find our bearings. Maybe we will be able to find traces of the cart, listen for Fairy's howl, or locate a landmark directing us to Gusu,” said the concerned husband; without the ability to fly on swords due to turbulent blizzard winds, he felt rather caged-up on the ground - they were simply lost in an unfamiliar forested mountain range after that fateful toss by Zidian, although the sight of jagged hills, steep rocky cliffs and snow-covered peaks told them that they were no longer in Yunmeng, and probably closer to the mountainous borders of Gusu or its neighbouring provinces.

.

The hours passed, with no sight of the end of their torturous trip to the East, at least from the perspective of Jin Ling's woeful state - as the boy entered into the second day of the fungi-induced misery. The boy was pale, sometimes feverish, kept asking for his pet, and constantly curled into a ball due to his aching tummy. Jiang Cheng continued to tend to the boy's needs, such as placing his own robe on the boy when the temperature dropped, feeding him with hot teas and warm food, and using a moist rag cloth to wipe sweat off the shivering body.

Wei Ying was spot-on when they found the perfect shelter to hunker down just as a wave of snowstorms arrived. They found a cave further up a hill, where thermal springwater bubbled up from a pool located inside (thus keeping the air comfortably humid, and provided a place for baths and to collect fresh warm drinking water), and flowed downhill to the brook that they followed earlier. The cavernous abode was plain, simple but reasonably livable, came with a cleaned flat sandstone floor, interestingly straw bedding from nowhere, a high ceiling with chimney-like outlets to circulate fresh air, and a strangely precisely built fire-pit in the middle, although it lacked proper heating and therefore cold frequently seeped through its rocky interior walls. There was a movable boulder at its entrance to close it off and prevent snowflakes from creeping in.

"You made this place, didn't you?" the spouse tenderly accused the husband sitting on a rock, while snipping off a lock of hair. Wei Ying was terribly bored - because he couldn't do the things he wanted to do, with an extra two pairs of eyes staring at him in this small enclosed living space - and resorted to demand that he cut the husband's hair; because Lan Zhan's hair had grown since summer; because as a couple, they always cut each other's hair to save up money from a visit to the barber's shop; because they would be taking their first heavenly bath in the mineral pool after days hiking in the outdoors, and he didn't want the husband to use up their precious bottle of shampoo that Wei Ying managed to squeeze out of his Bag of Holding - in this day and age, men had such long lustrous hair, it wouldn't be hard to imagine how much time and effort is spent on haircare, really -; Wei Ying had plenty of nonsensical, but really valid, reasons to groom and spend time with his husband in front of the Jiang and Jin gongzi s.

Lan Zhan lowered his head, and "Mn"s, then, "Wei Ying, do you want more? I could ask my--"

Wei Ying gave an angry snip with the scissors, and one section of the husband's precious fringe that hid his (imagined) receding hairline was rudely trimmed off with an unkind cut. "Shhh!" the spouse hissed, "Not here!"

"Is everything alright?" Jiang Cheng called out from the other side of the cave.

"Uh... Yeah! Everything's okay! I just cut a little too much, that's all," Wei Ying replied in a sing-song way. The spouse could see the Jiang sect leader roll his eyes behind his back, and hear him mutter without saying anything, "What on earth are those two idiots doing? We're in the middle of a crisis!".

Well, we can't be wandering around in the blizzard during a crisis, so we might as well stay put, rest and wait until the snow lets up , Wei Ying told himself. Lan Zhan used his divinely powers to summon the perfect winter cabin - sans the wooden structure - for this purpose, although he would be hard-pressed to admit it, because Wei Ying had scolded the husband many times to “keep things the good ol’ way”. At that point, the husband was thoroughly confused, because when the couple left the ‘Mounds almost a month ago, he had done exactly that (then nearly harmed their tentacle-kin children) and received a tongue-lashing from the naggy spouse - and now, the plucky spouse wanted to do things ‘the good ol’ ways’ - the reason being that “This time it’s different. I’m calling the shots because I don’t want Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling to be traumatized by the knowledge of what really happened to us, or what we can do,” Wei Ying insisted.

Mn , the husband replied telepathically - his universal agreement to whatever the spouse says. Lan Zhan was ordered to keep to ‘infinitesimal’ usage of his abilities and power at all times. Wei Ying proceeded to snip a few more strands, then teased the topless man whether he wanted a bowl cut, buzz cut, comb-over, dreadlocks, mohawk, mullet, or just the good ol’ fashion of a man-bun tied on top of his head. The husband nnnghs and replied, “You know what I want,” and surrenders his choice to the cheerful spouse.

Day turned into night, however the cavern was permanently lit up by Wei Ying’s Fire spells, and cast an eerie amber glow on everything - including Lan Zhan’s latest creative creations using the limited variety of food they have in their inventory. He tried to arrange an assortment of ordinary colourful baozi s and rice dumplings on a stone plate, then made hamburgers and sandwiches using bread and canned food of different colours (and greasiness, and saltiness). A few wedges of apples and peaches here and there, a sprinkle of a kaleidoscope of chopped carrots, peas, corn, tomatoes and lettuce; it wasn’t as extravagant as the usual. To the spouse, it looked like a dim orange-hued pile of appetizers without the main course, a candle-lit dinner without the romance. Jin Ling had to contend with plain hard-boiled egg sandwiches, fruits and bland veggies, and a couple of sweet dumplings, because his stomach couldn’t take the flavouring and preservative-laden processed meats.

Having not a filled stomach meant that Wei Ying was more fidgety after the meal. He played with dried brown leaves that had somehow blown into the cave, and made Leaf-men out of them. Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling watched, mesmerized, at how those dry, brittle pieces of plant material assembled into a primitive form of Paperman, then walked, danced and hopped around on the floor.

Jin Ling laughed when Wei Ying made a puppy-sized Leaf-dog with pebbles as its eyes and a wiggly nose at the tip of its cute snout, that behaved nearly like a real pooch - it panted, licked, and wagged its tail, then meow-ed like a calico cat - to Jiang Cheng's surprise ("Wei Wuxian! That's ridiculous! How shameless can you be, twisting nature for your entertainment!"), and to Jin Ling's amusement (because he remembered that the da jiu fu is afraid of dog barks).

Wei Ying then explained that after years of experimentation with the basic spell, he learnt that the rule of the Paperman magic can actually be applied to anything - such as leaves and pebbles - but this was never taught by their laoshi s, because people generally feared the untried and the untested, and stuck to Council-sanctioned yellow talisman papers. The resulting 'puppet' can be made to behave in the way the spellcaster wishes - such as a man, a dog, a cat, or a hybrid, with or without spying capabilities. Jiang Cheng rolled his eyes in ridicule again, because he couldn't grasp something he didn't learn during his formative years. Jin Ling's stomach cramps gave pause, because he had an A-ha moment, learned something new in life, and briefly forgot about his illness.

.

Wei Ying whistled folk songs and lullabies when he's not using the (earth shattering) golden flute, and Jiang Cheng sang along because he, too, was bored being cooped up in the cave while hurricane-like winds whipped the mountain range they were trapped in. Lan Zhan, who doesn't really sing, preferred to hum, tap gentle drum-beats on cave rocks or play his magical guqin to accompany the music. The warm, safe, toasty atmosphere, with sounds of the bubbling pool and of water softly dripping from the ceiling, helped Jin Ling to relax into a fitful slumber, with heating pads placed on his aching tummy.

Elsewhere, the Dark Arts practitioner's whistles echoed inside the cave not only to entertain men, but also commanded countless Leaf-men in the surrounding mountains to launch themselves from their graves, buried underneath snow, then flutter, spiral and soar high into the skies, buoyed and carried far, far away by the wintry winds into the frigid moonless night.

.

Perhaps it was the group singing, guqin-plucking and drum-beating session that made his heart yearn for something a little more peaceful, a little more quiet, a little more solo, suitable for his introverted self. Or, perhaps, it was the artificially coloured and flavoured meats that led him into yet another strange episode while he slept. He really should cut down on canned foods, he thought, for health reasons despite clarion calls for all Kingdom citizens to support and consume Wangxian branded products at all times.

The Gusu Lan master sighed, rinsed a washcloth in a basin, and wiped his face again. He had dreamt - in the dreams of his dreamworld - that he wrote the the best finely-crafted poem about the passing season he ever had in recent times; of life awakening in spring, when a middle aged man met an orphan boy left alone in the streets, then took him in and provided love, comfort and shelter, and stirred long-buried, immoral feelings within the man and his roused loins; of life blooming in summer with such zest, driven by an indescribable hunger to grow and to enjoy the pleasures of the world, such as sparks of excited feelings from touches on the skin, of lively sounds made of delicate moans and exhilarating cries, of sweat under the bright sun or in the bedroom, when man and boy made sweet love from sunrise to sunset, their bodies joined so many times that two becomes one; of life bearing fruits, producing results ripe for autumnal crops, such as when the boy willingly embraces the man like a familiar lover, while the man fertilizes, sows his seeds wildly into the young, pre-pubescent child that he called as his own property, reaping juicy and tasty harvests daily.

He experienced a brief moment of the damned writer's block when he started on a passage about winter, so he decided to lie on the cooled wooden floor in his study room scented by sandalwood and peach blossoms, and let his mind wander.

He woke up to find little Wei Ying giggle while straddling his belly, and realized that the mischievous imp had stolen his ink brush and drawn squiggly moustaches, inappropriate bushy beards, circles and squares over his face, and painted his eyes and nose so that he looked like a panda - and a small turtle on his forehead to boot.

You naughty boy, he roared with mock anger - and to the eight-year old's thrilled squeals of joy, because innocent little Wei Ying had never been heavily punished so he thought everything was fun and games. The Gusu Lan master then wiped his face with his sleeves - only to belatedly realized that he dirtied his clothes by doing so - then reached for the nearest thing he could find on the study table. Oh, this is strange, he thought, as clothes pegs appeared in his hands rather than a feather duster; he must be too enamoured in doing household chores, or perhaps, in the real world (of sorts), he had missed doing laundry since leaving the Lotus Pier of that world (of sorts) nearly a week ago.

The pre-teen was made to sit in a corner and face the wall, naked except for two clothes pegs, one biting on each pinkish tiny nipple. The boy sniffled from the throbbing pain, and started to rub hot tears from his eyes. No snacks for you, the man insisted, and little Wei Ying whimpered. "Uncle Lan, A-Xian is wrong, please don't be angry, please forgive A-Xian," the boy hiccuped, feeling sad that he would miss Uncle Lan's tasty treats for the afternoon.

Not five minutes had passed, and the uncle's heart wavered from the boy's pitiful, soft sobs - and finally, his resolve crumbled. He re-entered the study room, where A-Xian had been obediently sitting in that same corner, then embraced the boy from behind, and collected him into his strong warm arms once again.

"Next time, don't trouble others, do you understand?" he gently chastised and blew hot air into the boy's ears. Little Wei Ying shuddered and nodded, and for the first time since the punishment was meted out, he gave a snotty, but crooked smile. "Mn. Good boy, you are a good boy after all, A-Xian. Uncle will make butter cupcakes, fruit tarts and chocolate cream cookies in the kitchen, so that we can have afternoon tea together," he murmured and kissed the boy full on the cheeks and forehead, eliciting delightful (still snotty) giggles from the latter.

"But you've drawn some bad things on Uncle's face, so let uncle have his sweet revenge by using a brush on you, then we're equal and Uncle won't be angry anymore," the uncle's calm, persuasive voice offered as a truce to forgive and forget what had transpired that day. Little Wei Ying agreed earnestly, because he really wanted to taste Uncle Lan's homemade baking - so he happily climbed on top of the bed in the study room, lay down comfortably on the adult's pillows, and spread his legs - just as every other time, every day and night.

.

After plucking off the clothes pegs, the man opened his ink brush kit, selected the softest brush made of rabbit's hair, dipped it into a pot of blended honey and floral water, and drew pretty doodles of pet animals, turtles, hairy penises and boy's buttocks on the boy's thin but smooth abdomen and limbs. Little Wei Ying giggled from ticklish feelings on his sensitive, chaffed nubs on the chest, and squirmed every time Uncle Lan used a bigger brush to swipe around his belly button - then dipped and playfully swirl into the crevice each time the adult's hairy excited and rigid penis surged deep through the boy's reddened anus, and stretched the pre-teen's hole too well.

"Uncle Lan, Uncle Lan, it feels so strange! It's so itchy, but I feel so hot inside..." the inexperienced boy cried, laughed then moaned, again and again, unable to sort out the convulses that wrecked his immature body. Uncle Lan sat cross-legged, fucked with great fervour, and relished the hot, clenching tightness between a boy's legs; while little Wei Ying was drilled and hammered endlessly, hanging from the man's thighs and crossed limbs, spread-eagled in front and beneath the man like a living, squirming canvas. The master artist drew on the boy's erogenous zones - on the neck and the collarbones, while sharing passionate kisses with his piece of art; on the hairless armpits under lifted arms, while sucking residual runny sticky honey from the boy's sparse breasts; then he used the hairiest brush to mercilessly attack the boy's exposed genitals, until the latter's cute stiff shaft and rising balls became covered with sweet liquids and rubbed raw from the brush's bristles.

"Ahhn... Ahhn... Uncle Lan, my wee-wee feels scratchy and really itchy now, and everything is so sticky..." the pre-teen moaned.

The boy's hole became soft after much thrusting from the man's hips in various angles, and slippery from the man's abundant sperm-rich one-two twitches. Undaunted by the child's increasingly agitated and unfulfilled state, Uncle Lan inserted the bamboo handles of larger brushes into the boy's anus, further stretching it, prodding and poking sharply at delicate, bloated spots until little Wei Ying accidentally squirted pee on the uncle's chest.

"Hnn... A-Xian, you're naughty today, you cannot even hold back your pee while your ass is being played. Uncle will have to plug the leak," the man whispered huskily, with another compassionate thrust deep into the boy's ass, and a thumb pressed, vibrating hard against the quivering pin-sized cockslit. The eight-year old descended into a tirade of incoherent moans, shaking hips, and another fountain of yellow pee landed on Uncle Lan's face - a full-blown adult's sexual response displayed by the unripe, immature body before its time.

In retaliation of the pungent watery ambush, Uncle Lan selected a special fine brush decorated with ivory and pearl, with the longest length of hair and the softest texture of furred animals, wetted it with his spit with plenty of tongue-licks, then slowly, slowly twist and turn the writing instrument through the swollen, gasping, leaking cockslit until the entire length of hair was swallowed up by the pinkie-length child-penis. Little Wei Ying winced and whined, because it felt really, really strange, and wanted to pee again, tingle and cry at the same time from the terrible itchiness crawling all over the inside of his genitals, slowly swelling up from the irritating invasion.

Satisfied that the impressive brush had been properly inserted, through the adolescent's pre-teen cock with the tickly hairy edges probably touching, piercing the boy's unripe but inflamed prostate, the man sandwiched the brush's expensive cylindrical handle between his sweaty palms - and he rolled the brush, spinning the instrument and its hairs inside the boy's wildly twitching, screaming urethra, tickling, rubbing and wetly swabbing the quivering nut-sized prostate gland with sweet licks from the brush's hairy ends, and everything else inside the boy's pelvic region.

Little Wei Ying screamed, hiccuped, cried at the same time from the sexual abuse, and the fiery fireworks that danced inside his loins. His body bowed and bent uncontrollably, his penis contracted and flexed violently, in a valiant but futile effort to expel, to abort the terrible assault of saliva-coated brush hairs - and he tingled continuously as long as the man continued to spin the tool of sexual torture, rub, and tickle and scratch all the tubes inside the boy's alarmingly damaged wee-wee.

Uncle Lan received plenty of hnngh-inducing kinky massages along his very excited, engorged and lustful penis during the continuous stream of tingles, thanks to the soft, spasming fleshy warm folds inside the boy's rosy love tunnel. After the umpteenth, instinctual one-two spurts of overflowing milky semen into the tight cocksleeve of sorts, Uncle Lan pulled out, then pressed the swollen angry-red glans right against the boy's taut, shivering testicles. He ejaculated straight into the tender quail eggs, thirty thick pulses, bathing them with man-cream, and let the child-testicles marinade and stew in Uncle Lans' fresh hot semen. The Gusu Lan master whispered a prayer that his virile sperm will penetrate the thin membranous ballsack skin, then fill and fertilize the child's eggs while its scrotal contents were forcibly evacuated by little Wei Ying's premature, pre-pubescent testicular orgasms. Uncle Lan would love little Wei Ying to carry his babies, after all.

A quick respite later, the Gusu Lan master switched their positions so that he lay on the bed, breathless little Wei Ying lying on top of his abdomen, with the happy adult penis re-inserted into the shrieking eight-year old's asshole - and the man continued to fuck the convulsing living doll from below, while his hands continued to twirl the hairy brush inside the boy's inflamed, reddened veiny penis until warm pee jet out in impressive arcs over the shared bed mattress.

.

Not far away, little A-Ji fucked Uncle Wei's fisted hand at an unrelenting intense pace.

"A-Ji, stop peeking at our neighbours through the window. You're supposed to concentrate on my hand and feel good, otherwise you'll say that I raped you this afternoon. I already told you, if it feels good, then it's not rape," the dirty uncle drawled disinterestedly with a raised hand full of rhythmic squish sounds; his other hand scratched his own hairy crotch lazily as the man sat on the floor with one leg up - like a laoban - and the week's periodical spread out on the same floor.

Little A-Ji had gotten a bit hard after he squinted, and caught glimpses of the child living next door bounce on a man's raised hips, with an ink brush stuck to his wee-wee. He thought that must have felt good, because Uncle Wei always inserted all kinds of things into his xiao ji ji too, including straws, beads, and lately, lumps of stinky old men's sperm.

Xi Chen da ge had left the brothers' house to buy some rolls of fabric in Caiyi to make new clothes for them, after the dirty uncle tricked the teenager by saying that one of the shops had a great sale that day - which is partly true, because Uncle Wei bribed a fabric store owner to lure the teenager with lots of fake discounts, and instructed to keep him busy with endless confusing offers until sunset. As expected, little A-Ji was deposited into Uncle Wei's gleeful welcoming arms and was asked to take care of the eight-year old boy until the teenager's return.

Uncle Wei spent the afternoon making babies inside the crying, distressed child, played with his xiao ji ji with such amorous passion until nothing but watery pee spilled out from the boy's abused elongated, stretched and bruised penis, and attacked the vulnerable peanut-sized testicles until they become mere empty husks of their former selves, having been forcibly emptied over and over using unnatural and inappropriate manners for an eight-year old. The day was made merrier in Uncle Wei's dingy party dungeon, when twenty alcohol-reeking, warty and mostly bald, fat men stopped by to rent and sodomize the boy's battered body for a few hours, and left plenty of evidence of their virility inside the child's tender puffed-up anus.

The dirty uncle had also spied on his neighbour and took a page out of the Gusu Lan master's sexual prowess and creativity that happened at the spur of heated, aroused moments. He made lovely A-Ji wear a pair of kinky boy-panties, with an ample pouch to cup his sweet plump juicy balls, and a hole at the front for his erect, excited wee-wee to poke through freely and fuck Uncle Wei's hand. The rapist uncle scooped up all his friends' smelly congealing still-warm cum that ran down the boy's buttohole and thighs with a spoon, and packed the wriggling whitish gooey mass into the pantypouch. He also wanted A-Ji's child-testicles to stew and marinade in old men's semen, with a whispered prayer that billions of lively sperms would be absorbed, wiggle through the scrotal sac, and attack the the depleted, shrivelled, wrinkly eggs with such fury that they will take permanent residence and reign inside the child's testicles - and look chubby, healthy, shiny the next morning, hopefully.

“Unh, Unh, Unh... Uncle Wei... hnngh! Unh! Aah! Ooh! Uuh!” the eight-year old cried out as he neared his peak, and the man could feel the first rolling waves of penile contractions rippling up and down the pinkie-sized length. But the uncle was unperturbed, and instead, he quickly let go, lay on the littered floor and spread his legs. Little A-Ji reacted like a mechanical robot - he had been train too well to stick his orgasming wee-wee inside holes, and this was no different -, so he automatically mounted the twenty-two year old man like a real adult, because he had watched too many porn movies through the television in the man's house. His xiao ji ji was extremely excited and ready to burst, so he had no trouble to penetrate the man's tight muscular and hairy rosebud, and give a few desperate thrusts. Little A-Ji enjoyed heaven between a full grown man's legs, and tingled thirty twitches into the loving rapist Uncle Wei.

A boy who hadn't had his first wet orgasm can climax many times in succession without the need of a refractory period, the textbooks said. Uncle Wei was getting a little sleepy, after ejaculating too many times that day, having fun with his merry friends who had left after the party, and earned enough gold nuggets from the said paying friends - customers, really - to stock up on a week's supply of Emperor Smiles. He ordered A-Ji to take out the artificial silicone vagina from under the creaky stained bed and play with it.

Uncle Wei didn't let up the sex abuse; he filled the plasticky pussy with a bottle of stinking semen left by his merry friends, and he even rubbed one out of his own to top up the squishy hole to the brim, and placed it on the bedroom floor.

“Now, now, A-Ji, listen to me. Uncle is going to take a nap because babysitting you is really hard work. You must fuck this pussy like the way I taught you until sundown, you hear me? If you stop even for a minute, even if your hips give way, or your legs tire, or for taking a pee-break, then I promise you that Xi Chen will not return on time. So don’t you dare cheat!” the man huffed with a fake threat, dropped a few fruits and jars of water next to the boy, and promptly went to bed.

Poor A-Ji had to breed the cum-drenched vagina strapped to a pillow like an eight-year old for the whole afternoon. He tingled repeatedly from obediently pumping his hips into the soggy but tight, clenching artificial womb. His misery only increased over time - each time he climaxed, his underdeveloped pelvic muscles convulsed and forcibly squirted a meagre few droplets of seedless boy-juice, but spoonfuls of slimy, warm adult men’s sperm were swallowed in reverse flow into the child’s ruined penis. Billions more living microscopic tadpoles swam en masse into the boy’s genitals to viciously raid the inflated urethra, invade the hardened swollen nut-sized prostate and wriggled further deeper to attack the child’s bladder and the delicate, broken insides of bruised testicles. His genitals simmered and were stuffed in the sweltering soupy lumpy potent milk of twenty men that day, ballooned up to three times the original size by sundown, and he gratefully peed out smelly viscous old men’s semen the whole night.

.

“Yaaaaayyyyy!” twenty-two year old Wei Ying shouted with glee, and landed into the heated cyan coloured pool with a hearty belly flop splash.

He swam around a bit, paddling like a turnip-red doggie (although he would hate to be called that way), enjoying a natural sauna-cum-jacuzzi of mineral-rich geothermal waters ejected from the bottom and sides of the pool. When he thought his skin started to prune, he climbed out, then up a set of limestone steps to reach a higher landing, and leapt away - again - into another bigger turquoise-blue pool - face-down or butt-first, whichever style his heart youthful desired.

“Lan Zhan! Lan Zhan! Look at me! Look at me!” lovely Wei Ying yelled while courageously twirling in mid-air like a gravity-defying ballerina before getting splattered by a rogue geyser, and looked every bit like an excited eight-year old child who's found his own winter wonderland of hot springs and water theme parks.

“Mn. Looking at you,” was the calm response; the husband took aim from a short distance away (and safe from splashing waves), then pressed a holographic button on the spouse’s phone. A resounding click! later, a series of burst shots, touched-up with amazing filters and stickers, of the young man getting pummeled by water jets and looking every bit as a fool, was uploaded into the family’s cloud drive.

Wei Ying had become weary of waiting between meal times - actually, just between breakfast and lunch - that he grabbed Lan Zhan’s wrist and went off on his own to explore the cave. The couple followed the bubbling pool to its water source, through several half-flooded tunnels, and chanced upon a larger network of vast, spacious chambers, yawning chasms, multi-tiered waterfalls, and more gurgling pools, of course. The air was still, every footstep and every gasp for breath echoed deep into the network of caves. The chambers were pockmarked with impressive, gleaming stalactites and stalagmites, walls shimmered with crystalline facets, and rock faces displayed glittering mineral veins peeking out from eroded surfaces. If there were still jewellers around in the Middle Kingdom, they could mine and pick these pretty stones from the rocks, and sell them for a good price.

The young man began to suspect that the design of the dungeon-like landscape had some intrinsic purpose, since the husband made it especially for him, if not the quartet - playing in the pools being one of them (and adding more Instagram-worthy albums into the cloud drive), reminiscent of the better days when he spent his childhood playing amongst lotus plants and chasing fishes underwater. Like a curious child, he hopped from pool to pool, from chamber to chamber, touching and scratching jagged surfaces, pulling and breaking limestone structures that took thousands of years to grow, tapping and pounding on the interior walls as though hoping that something might dislodge, activate a trigger, and open up a treasure room like a scene from the 21st-century adventure of a fictional man named Indiana Jones - with Lan Zhan, the dedicated cameraman and husband-cum-butler extraordinaire, dutifully tailing the spirited spouse all the way, with a holo-phone ready to take awesome pictures at the latter's whimsical request.

Crack!

One of the common thin pillar-like structures broke, when Wei Ying grasped it a little too hard, after climbing up from a swim. He slipped and tumbled to the hard, pebbly ground unceremoniously and found, to his wide-eyed amazement, that his hand held a shiny, sparkly piece of the legendary Twisty Crystal.

It took a full minute for the young man to digest what had happened, and he poked several more pillars, protrusions and lumps that suspiciously looked like the features harboured something beneath the brittle rocky surface - and was delighted to find more Twisty Crystals!

“Oh, lao gong , how thoughtful! You knew that gold and gemstones don’t really carry much value in this day and age of a ruined world without bankers, goldsmiths and jewellers. So you made all of these,” a large arc of sweeping hand, “just for me? A mountain full of not just fun and games, but also Twisty Crystals that hold immense magical powers, and of great value to our Kingdom!”

“Mn.”

Wei Ying started to peel off his drenched loincloth; his clothes were safely tucked into the husband’s hands while he went wild in the waters. Lan Zhan shivered - just subtly, the subconscious mind has nearly lost cognitive control, the last thread of sanity and rational thought about to be crushed by a rising whirlpool of animalistic lust - and meticulously placed the spouse’s folded clothes on a dry spot, followed by his own robes.

“Eh, what about the other two?” Wei Ying asked, rather accusingly, and threw his smelly, no, fragrant, unwashed loincloth at the husband’s face, and let it dangle wetly from his (imagined) receding hairline.

Lan Zhan had to inhale - it was an instinctive reaction from the faithful mate, after all -, and explained, with a slight tremor in his voice because the addictive smell fanned the flames in his loins, “I used the quick-movement spell and swapped their morning tea with something more... sedative. They won’t be up until noon; your brother needs the rest after taking care of your nephew the whole night. And Jin Ling's health should be much better after he sleeps a bit more. He's had sandwiches laced with my special healing potions for breakfast."

With the coast clear, and the husband extremely pent-up and had flattened his qi level curves due to his unending struggle to suppress desires flared from sexy dreams, the couple had their own fun and games chasing each other all over the cavernous chambers and poolsides. Like 21st-century Bollywood stars, cat-and-mouse, or simply rabbits in heat, the indomitable Lan Zhan pursued sexy naked Wei Ying from pillar after pillar, capturing him, engaging in quick grunt-y, moan-y and howl-y sexual intercourse no more than ten thrusts each, before the finicky spouse giggled and hopped away, only to be chased again. The more Wei Ying ran around, sending flirtatious gazes and a wiggly spread ass to the husband's way, the more excited, hungry and delirious the husband became - his heavy, wanting, swollen and pre-cum leaky cock dangled and swung wildly with each running footstep. Top-performing Lan Zhan gladly fucked like an overheated machine gun and inseminated lovely Wei Ying throughout the whole morning, thirty spasming ejaculations for each orgasm, in all manners of sex positions and places in the caves, until the latter was nicely rutted, stretched and had his rump flooded by gooey, warm and loving seed. Lan Zhan was utterly grateful to empty his swollen blue'd balls, while Wei Ying received his fair share of wild kisses, tongue action, groping hands, friction in his loins and climaxes too.

.

"Lan Zhan! Look at this! I can hold a Twisty Crystal between my boobs!" the young man joked, as he squeezed his ribcage with his hands in a futile bid to sandwich a thin piece of shiny rock between non-existent voluptuous breasts. The crystal slid down his belly button and into the pool uselessly. "Aww...!" Wei Ying cried in disappointment.

“Wei Ying, do not play too much. Is this enough?” the husband asked. He emerged close to the pool, and was a spectacular sight to behold. He had collected, at the wife’s instructions, as many crystals as possible by hand; bundles of twisted elongated glimmering stones squeezed between his armpits, bags in both arms, another sagging bag tied to his back, an impressively large phallic one as long as a forearm squeezed between his pecs, and one huge bag hanging on his erect penis like a weight that nearly reached the floor.

Wei Ying’s jaw dropped - the great Han Guang Jun has passed both bubble tea and shampoo challenges in a single sweep. “How... how heavy is that?” the man asked hesitantly and winced at the same time.

“This?” Lan Zhan looked down at where the spouse’s finger pointed, and made his angry-red penis jerk a few times like working out his biceps - the shaft bulged, tendons flexed, “about thirty kilograms, I think. A full travel suitcase, if I remember from our times travelling around the Wuji continent earlier this year. I can do twice, even three times more, if you want.” The athletic penis jolted proudly with its luggage.

The younger man whistled and had a whole new respect for the husband’s cock, and fell in love with the meatstick even more and more.

Just then, Jiang Cheng gingerly made his way, albeit rather drunken and sleepy, towards the sounds of the errant couple who laughed and talked way too loud in the echo-ey chambers of the blessed cave.

Notes for the Chapter:

Things are looking up on the pandemic situation, and loosening of lockdown restrictions. My mood's lifted a little :-)

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 96

“You’re both shameless! Frolicking naked in the pools with dishevelled looks while holding hands!” the angry sourgrape snarled (like an irritated chihuahua, really) while harshly pointing fingers at the mounting evidence of activities the man didn’t really see - the churning, foamy hot spring waters which were actually contaminated with semen leaking out from Wei Ying’s buttocks; the flushed, panting and rather invigorated appearances of the couple sitting inside a pool, after having engaged in plentiful pleasurable activities and sexual intercourses (‘frolic’ doesn’t even come close to describe what a Thousand-Year Rabbit-empowered sex drive does to the husband playing cat-and-mouse with the wife); and while the sourgrape thought they were playing hooky by shyly touching each other’s fingers, in actual fact, they were giving each other handjobs underwater, thankfully the sacrilegious act was blurred by rippling water surface.

Wei Ying admonished his brother for being impolite, “Hey, don’t talk like that! If you want to blame anyone, just blame me! Leave Lan Zhan out of this!” The memory of Jiang Cheng accusing the younger of the Twin Jades of Gusu Lan for something similar weighed on the man’s shoulder, and he stood his ground to defend the right for his choices, decisions and the subsequent consequences.

“I’m not blaming anyone! I’m just pointing out that the two of you are deplorable examples of young masters coming from such distinguished and noble lineages! You should act and behave more appropriately!” the sourgrape seethed, baring his fangs like the chihuahua he was portrayed to be.

Wei Ying rolled his eyes and readied for a snarky comeback about genealogy, sexism and cultural differences - but Lan Zhan raised a hand to stop the conversation before the misunderstanding spiralled out of control. The upset spouse huffed, crossed his arms and sat down heavily into the pool with an unrefined splash; there's never a dull moment between Yunmeng's twin heroes, after all.

The venerable Han Guang Jun, with his wet nakedness sparkling in splendid glory and his long, lush hair neatly bunched to the back dripping with clear rivulets, set his steely, impassive gaze upon the brother-in-law (which rattled the younger man's confidence a little), and said, "Jiang Sect Leader, we understand. We'll leave the bath once we're done." Simple, succinct, to the point, with nary an inflammatory remark.

Unable to come up with a convincing argument of how a harmless bath for men could be regarded as dishonourable, the Jiang sect leader grumbled, dissatisfied at being bested by his ge fu, and turned his attention to something more wholesome - such as the surrounding cavernous chamber filled with bubbling hot spring pools. He pretended to walk around a bit, inspect the walls and jagged surfaces, the stalactites and stalagmites with disdain on his face - he wiped his hands on his clothes every time he touched dusty and gritty spots.

"Why are there holes around the walls and pillars? It looks like someone's been blowing them up with fireworks, spells or playing some kind of childish prank," another line of accusation. It seemed the man was trying to find fault and nitpick on anything he saw or touched.

"No idea. Maybe it's part of the cave formation process? There could've been wild animals that lived here long ago, who knows?" Wei Ying shrugged and blatantly told a white lie to get the man off their backs; the couple had picked the mountain clean of Twisty Crystals when the husband was instructed to maximize his god-tiered quick movement spell. “Jiang Cheng, are you feeling better now after that nice morning nap? You seem to be lively and well, so maybe you should go to the next cave to cultivate and replenish your energies, instead of sticking your nose--,” the thinly-veiled sarcastic remark was cut short by another raised hand by the wise husband.

“Jiang Sect Leader, there’s a mineral-rich waterfall over there and it would do wonders to one’s qi levels to meditate under there. We’ve tried it, it’s good. It would be a shame not to peruse this mountain’s natural bounties while we’re here,” the husband suggested, and the spouse nodded fervently with a big toothy smile.

Minutes later, Jiang Cheng draped his robes and clothes over some raised flat surfaces, and took his shower, a nice rewarding soak, underneath the said waterfall at the far, far corner of the chamber. The water-powered massage splashed loudly on the man’s upper torso and face, sending delightful rewarding sensations on nerve-ends and aching muscles, and yes - rising his qi levels too.

With the sourgrape too busy tending to his own thunderous, self-service acupressure and hydromassage, the couple was finally left alone in their soupy pool; the husband managed to climax a couple of times with loud moans - unnoticed - and release more whitish milk into the swirling waters; Wei Ying let out loud a string of bubble-farts into the pool (and a mighty sigh of relief) he’d held in since the brother arrived, happily gassing up the waters, away from the intrusive and watchful eyes from the suspicious sect leader.

.

“So you see,” Wei Ying held up a small piece of Twisty Crystal fished from a bunch of twenty other similar fragments no bigger than a fingernail cutting on the palm, “While you’re not skilled enough in the Magical arts to write mythical words and create your own talismans, and your qi levels are still too low to cast higher level spells and command inanimate objects larger than Paperman, all is not lost,” he beamed with a million-dollar smile, “With this baobei , I can guarantee you a shortcut to success!”

The tiny bit of crystal gleamed in the light of torches lit by Fire spells in the homely cave.

“But how, da jiu ?” Jin Ling asked and crept forward without needing to huddle up with heating pads, “All I see is just a shiny sliver of rock.” He had recovered significantly after resting during the morning, and was, like everyone else, waiting for a tasty lunch from their in-house masterchef, the Han Guang Jun. He attributed his speedy recovery to having a comfortable place to recuperate (thanks to the da jiu), nutritious food (thanks to the da jiu fu), and lots of herbal tea (credit goes to the jiu jiu , who thought he could launch a side-career as a herbal master, and his nose grew a few more inches higher).

“Ahh, my disciple-to-be, you must think out of the box, see the bigger picture, and expect the unexpected!” the sales pitch began, “It may be small, but it is incredibly powerful! One grain of this mysterious crystal packs the punch of a hundred jars of Qinghe’s finest military-grade fire medicine! (火药; huo yao). This is the stuff that powers magical equipment such as my Compass of Evil, and if thrown, it will explode upon impact into a shower of stars that can flatten homes, farmlands and fortresses! Just imagine what will happen if you apply one, even a few of these baobei s to your arrowheads, and light them up with blazing fires!” a wide sweep of hands to emphasize the width and breadth of the resulting imaginary scale of destruction, “It will lay flat pine forests around us, blow up a face of this mountain’s cliff,” and he leaned down close to the boy’s face, “Or maybe... turn the twenty-feet tall metallic golem into iron rust?” and beamed another million-dollar grin.

Jin Ling’s face lit up - the first time in many days since he was poisoned by bad mushrooms - and excitedly asked if they were returning to the ill-fated forests and search for lovable Fairy and their missing transport. Wei Ying stood up, arms akimbo and murmured, “Well... that would depend on our squad leader, correct?” and gave a cheeky look towards the Jiang sect leader.

Jiang Cheng had rolled his eyes so many times when the Dark Arts practitioner extolled the virtues of the fragment of crystal that, with all due respect, looked like a fake gemstone and didn’t glow with amazing energies as claimed - heck, he couldn’t feel any spike in qi emitting from it - a truly greasy salesman, in the sourgrape’s perspective. “Don’t you dare flatter me to get my permission to leave this shelter and send us to a mission blindly into the dead of winter, Wei Wuxian!” the man harrumphed arrogantly, “It’s a no-brainer that anyone would have a better chance to survive with such kinds of weapons, if what you said about the crystal is true. But you remember how adept and fast that monstrous golem was, when evading, dodging and parrying our attacks. No cultivator nor projectiles could even land a single blow, let alone touch it!”

Jiang Cheng was adamant to stay put inside the cave, where everything was nice and warm, rather than braving the blizzard-y winds outside with potentially no cooked food, no butler service (in the form of the Han Guang Jun), and no unlimited magic to light up toasty fires (in the form of the Wei Wuxian). He stressed that as their sect leader (to no one really, because none of them were formally inducted into the Jiang group), he had the responsibility to make the right decisions and keep everyone safe (in reality, it is probably the other way round, with the couple doing the bulk of the work). He had recurring nightmares of their encounter with the Tian-powered metal golem, and had unsettling premonitions about what might happen if they charged into the shadows in the forests.

Wei Ying rubbed his smooth shaven chin - thank goodness the husband brought a shaver for him, although the middle-aged man himself doesn't use it because he wanted to grow facial hair following true Gusu Lan fashion. "Hmm, you may be right," he acquiesced to Jiang Cheng's admission of the metal golem's strength, then turned around, "Lao gong !" (and drew another roll of eyes from the sourgrape, and a choked noise from the nephew), "A gold nugget for your thoughts, how can we increase the hit rate of Jin Ling's Twisty Crystal-enhanced arrows upon that super-intelligent, incredibly agile, invincible and lightning-quick metallic monster in the woods?"

Lan Zhan paused from using the smooth, decorated rounded end of Bichen's hilt to awkwardly grind some spices and edible oils on a flatstone - a makeshift pestle and mortar -. He pulled and rubbed his spindly beard thoughtfully, and then belatedly realized that he had just spiced his precious budding goatee with chilli paste.

Then, without warning, Lan Zhan dipped a forefinger into the bowl of ground chilli, and rushed towards Jin Ling. His arm stiffened, straight as an arrow with the deadly chilli paste on his fingertip. The boy yelped in surprise and quickly got up from the floor. "H-Han Guang Jun! What are you doing?! Are you out of your mind?! I cannot eat anything spicy, otherwise my stomach will hurt again!" the boy yelled as he ran for his life, for the sake of his delicate belly, around the cave with an murderous-looking Han Guang Jun in hot pursuit; it didn't help that for unknown reasons, lights shone his face from below, casting that dreadful shadow over his intense and killer gaze - many men would have peed in their pants by that blood-curdling sight.

Lan Zhan didn't need to sprint; due to his long legs, he merely stomped steadily close behind, and that scared poor Jin Ling out of his wits - strangely, somewhere in the background, a famous 21st-century piece of two-note music named 'Jaws' played, ominous, increasing in speed and momentum as the man slowly caught up with the fleeing victim. The boy shrieked like a girl, tried to swat away the hand that aimed for his mouth, dodged and hopped over rocks and boulders nimbly like a panicking monkey.

Jiang Cheng's nostrils flared at the unwarranted ambush and nearly leapt to the nephew's rescue, but Wei Ying held a hand to stop him just in time. "No, Jiang Cheng. Watch, and learn from my lao gong," he ordered with a smug voice.

It didn't take long for Lan Zhan to drive Jin Ling into a corner. The boy gasped when the paste-coated finger aimed at the vermilion mark between the brows and he ducked at the last second to avoid getting a larger mark, or worse, a stinging bruise, on his forehead. Lan Zhan followed suit, and dipped his arm so that the belly button was targeted. Another yelp, and the boy turned to his side by instinct, fortunately to miss the strike by a hair's breadth. The two continued a strange martial arts hand-to-hand combat of one striking with a finger, while the other evaded as best as he could.

Finally, Jin Ling took a fair amount of beating and ended up with cheeks full of red chilli streaks and sticky, spicy fingerprints on the exposed skin on his hands.

Having his triumphant finger wiped clean of the paste, Lan Zhan turned around, flicked his sleeves, and calmly returned to the kitchen of sorts to prepare the group's lunch - one hundred percent organic dishes made from soft breads, farm fresh eggs, goat's milk cheese, an assortment of beans, fruits, tubers, salads and other natural ingredients that make up the full spectrum of flavours of classic Middle Kingdom cuisine - salty, spicy, sour, sweet, and bitter - using more herbs and spices, but minus the canned food.

“Hey! What is the meaning of this?! You hit me, then you're leaving without saying anything?!” the boy cried, his eyes slightly red and teary from the humiliating defeat - and the fact that his face was painted with terribly embarrassing red marks. Jiang Cheng, on the other hand, saw and understood what had happened, having been a sect leader and raised many teenagers into amateur cultivators during the last two decades or so. The sect leader pushed Wei Ying's hand away and shouted at the boy in frustration.

“Why don't you ever use your brain, useless boy! Didn't you realize that your da jiu fu had just taught you how to defeat the metallic golem? Do you need another pair of eyes to see the answer?” he grilled the boy.

“Eh...? Really? What?!” Jin Ling gaped and became thoroughly confused.

.

Jiang Cheng stood close to the entrance to check on the outside world. “It looks like the winds are slowly dying down and we should be able to get out safely in the afternoon. So all you better start packing up after you're done with lunch," he said, with the charm of a (mediocre) leader.

Wei Ying and Jin Ling's faces winced; they were still munching on egg-celent sandwiches made with egg-xtravagant, nutritious, pure, chemical-free ingredients, when the sourgrape's announcement soured the atmosphere considerably - the thought of walking in sub-zero temperatures didn't sound too appealing at that moment, when their hands grasped fire-warmed food. Jin Ling, the more obedient one, took the opportunity to pack a few more sandwiches into his backpack because he didn't know when he would get the chance to find such tasty delicacies that was, for once, agreeable to his upset, but recovering stomach.

"Here," the Yiling man said in mid-chew, and tossed a small pouch to the late-teen, "There are enough crystal shavings inside for at least five quivers of arrows. Use them sparingly, and make sure not to drop any, otherwise you might lose a limb or two," he added to emphasize how dangerous and flammable the explosive material was. The boy nodded fervently, nearly lost his grip while jiggling the precious ammunition like a hot potato, before sliding it into his belt. The Jin gongzi still had many questions in his mind about their suicide mission to return to the outside world, defeat the frightening golem, and look for their presumably stolen pet and belongings.

Jin Ling had asked about the crystals' origins, and how they came to the couple's knowledge. Wei Ying revealed that he and Lan Zhan simply found them littering on surfaces of the caves in the other chambers, and had simply mined them. Jiang Cheng interjected, accusing Wei Ying of lying earlier, because he saw those indentations which were explained to be naturally made, and not picked off by hand. Wei Ying waved off the suspicious sourgrape, and redirected everyone's attention to the crystals' uses. Jiang Cheng huffed in annoyance and let it slide - he was in a hurry to save Fairy and rescue their transport, because he would never forgive himself if he lost the entire Jiang family's stash of historical artifacts, relics, inheritance and legacy. The stage was set, and it was unsteady; Jin Ling harboured suspicions about the crystals too - like uncle, like nephew - and when he was tasked to use it, he was understandably unsettled.

The jiu jiu didn't need mind-reading abilities to know what his nephew was thinking. "You shouldn't think too much into the execution! I've already trained you many times during your younger days, you need to feel the moment to strike the heart of the devil! So stop acting wishy washy over it!" he reminded and gestured by rubbing his fingers, but the vague explanation only worried the boy even further, "I will use Zidian to throw you into the monster's path, and when you're close enough, you'll shoot those crystal arrows straight into as many of its weakest, unarmoured parts as possible - the neck joint, elbows, behind the knees and ankles. Your da jiu fu will fly in at the last second with his quick-movement ability to get you out of the blast radius. There's absolutely nothing to worry about!"

Jin Ling balled his fists in anxiety, and dropped a half-eaten sandwich to his plate, "But jiu jiu ! What if you threw me off balance? What if the monster turned at the wrong time and I couldn't find its weak spots? What if the quick-movement isn't quick enough?"

"Jin Ling ah Jin Ling," Wei Ying toot-toot'd and tapped a stick of carrot on the boy's forehead, to the latter's consternation, "Zidian is a mythical weapon, it simply does not miss its target. If it can rip deviant spirits from possessed bodies, what more of a lumbering giant hulk of metal?

Furthermore, I've already taught you the basics of the Paperman spell, which is so simple that any cultivating kid knows how to play with those dolls to pass the time. You just need to adapt the spell into the arrows, just like how I manipulated the leaves last night - and direct the crystal shards straight to your desired targets with the eye inside your heart .

Lastly, the quick-movement is a spell that's ubiquitous among mid-level cultivators, and your da jiu fu is way, way above that. I could do it when I first returned to this world with a weakling Mo Xuanyu's body, so you can be confident that Lan Zhan will not fail," he beamed his million-dollar smile - but Jin Ling wasn't convinced at all.

"What about you, da jiu ? What would you be doing?" the boy stared at his eldest uncle and popped the rest of the salvaged sandwich into his mouth, irked that the one who talked the most wasn't really doing much to aid their ominous-sounding mission.

Wei Ying had to stammer and swallow, being caught off-guard by the line of questioning. "Err... err... I... I will be right behind you... from a distance! I will play the flute to confuse the enemy, and use state-of-the-art magics to keep everyone safe!" and belatedly tilted up his nose and chin to impress upon the boy about his confidence in the success of the plan, which hinged upon the inexperienced Jin gongzi to take down a twenty-foot tall demonic Dark, Corruption-type monster.

Jin Ling shrugged, he wasn't persuaded at all. Nope, not one bit.

Further away, Lan Zhan - the husband who had nothing to do but to listen to his spouse have a war of words with the other chatty members of the family -, crossed his arms, sat on the floor while leaning against a pillar, and promptly fell asleep. He had worked hard, having spent the morning harvesting the crystals, breeding like rabbits with the spouse, and prepared a good lunch for everyone.

.

There was a recurring pattern of sorts. The more negative, disturbing feelings in the mind and heart, the most twisted the dreams become. He thought that perhaps, the uneasiness of going back out to the cruel, harsh wintry world, or the constant noisy brooding between the family members who fussed non-stop about their plans, had kept him on the edge. Stress hormones were bad news, he concluded.

It was five-thirty in the morning, and the sun had yet to rise. However, Uncle Wei was already fully dressed and eager to start his daily routine of an invigorating early workout, and satisfy a lustful hunger that wasn't really related to food. He walked with a lively spring in his steps to the Lan brothers' house, sauntered straight through their thriving vegetable patch, stepped on a few seedlings and popped a stolen ripe tomato into his mouth, before reaching the doorway.

"My dear neighbour, Xi Chen! Are you up and awake? I have brought some yummy dumplings that you can heat up for breakfast and bring along when you go out later today! I'll put them on the kitchen counter as usual!" he called out, started to disrobe, and pulled down his pants.

"Ah...! Wei shushu ! Thank you again! I'm at the back of the house with the laundry! Can you do me a favour and wake up my brother? It's half-past five but he hasn't woken up yet, yet he has to go to school by seven-thirty," a voice shouted from the backyard. Xi Chen was hard at work, scrubbing, rinsing and hanging the siblings' clothes at the crack of dawn.

"Enn!" the man replied with glee, scratched his crotch and jiggled his leaking, hardening, delighted cock; he received full permission to enter the house unrestricted, and to make good use of everything within. The slightly unkempt man, who hardly combed his unruly hair or bathed his body daily, went straight into little A-Ji's bedroom after putting down the said basket. Not even five minutes passed, when the first sobs and whimpers were heard.

"A-Ji ah A-Ji, wakey wakey, the xiao ji ji should crow first thing in the morning and not sleep inside the coop," the man murmured amid the sounds of some high-pitched protests of "No!", "Don't touch me!", and a couple of kicks and punches. Xi Chen heard the muffled sounds, sighed and chuckled - he thought the younger brother acted like a grumpy prickly cactus when he was disturbed in his sleep. Like all people in the Cloud Recesses, the teenager didn't recognize the sounds of an eight-year old boy being forcibly molested on the bed, his nipples twisted by roughened fingers, and his child-penis sucked off by an overzealous, pent up rapist in the midst of their home. Poor A-Ji's penis bloomed and swelled up from the rough handling, with his foreskin peeled back and the sensitive glans attacked repeatedly by greedy lips and rolling tongues, until his loins turned into shades of angry reds.

"Wah, A-Ji, look what Uncle made! The xiao ji ji has blossomed into such bright and shiny colours, and it's all fattened up nicely... what a healthy rooster indeed! Cock-a-doodle-doo!" the grinning uncle admired his morally depraved handiwork - a thin tube of quivering bloated, turgid flesh thinly veined with throbbing blood vessels - while licking and swallowing twin saliva-warmed eggs until they undergo strings of pleasurable testicular orgasms that a child shouldn't experience yet.

Xi Chen returned to the kitchen to inspect the basket, after he was done with laundry, “Uncle Wei! There are so many dumplings! Shall I take heat up six, two for each of us?”

“... Mmmnf!” came the strained reply, which the teenager took as an affirmative. The dirty uncle busily swallowed A-Ji’s second unwilling tingle in row, a mix of fluttering delicate penile muscles, a sputtering cockslit, droplets of seedless sexual fluids and a zest of pee added into it. Uncle Wei was pleased at the boy’s growth - he had been visiting the brothers’ house daily, and the eight-year old adolescent started to show promising progress, such as experiencing nearly a full adult’s orgasmic reflex, based on the way the child’s flushed, sweaty hips trembled before climax, and jerked rhythmically thirty-times while pelvic muscles convulsed wildly within, sending fresh volleys of flavourful crystal-clear, undiluted, pure boy-juices straight into the rapist’s waiting mouth. A-Ji was gagged using his forehead ribbon, which had become a handy tool for the man, such as to tie up the boy’s limbs when he resisted too much.

Later, Xi Chen walked to the bedroom’s doorway, and called out, “Breakfast is ready, two steaming dumplings each on the table!” He walked into a terrifying scene that was becoming all too common in their household: the huffing and panting, sexually flushed, sweaty uncle - without his pants on -, lay atop little crying A-Ji between his raised hips. Uncle Wei mounted and thrust brazenly in the open, deep into the sweet distended rosebud again and again with such ferocity and passion, that the bed threatened to splinter and break from the force of a man brutally raping an innocent pre-teen boy. A meaty palm covered the child’s mouth, to hide the gag and mute the victim’s screams.

“Ah... come to the dining table when you’re done playing wrestling with each other,” the teenager said, not batting an eyelid at all, and casually returned to the kitchen. Like all residents of the Cloud Recesses, Xi Chen never really studied about sex before, and there weren’t any particular Gusu Lan rules of being naked, or semi-naked in homes, so he didn’t really think much about what it really felt to have a cock inserted into a warm, wet hole; it probably looked more like a physical game that foreign men preferred to play. The teenager thought it was amusing, and rather heartwarming, that his quiet, socially-awkward and detached younger brother had finally befriended their neighbour, spent increasing amounts of time with that welcoming man in his early twenties.

“ Da ge ... da ge ... wuuu... wuuu... please save me... ” little A-Ji sobbed and cried hot tears, tried to reach out to grasp at the fleeting image of his big brother, but Xi Chen was gone in a blink of an eye, thus, his chances of being rescued from a groaning dirty old man writhing between his smooth boyish thighs, and the disgusting feeling of wet hairy heavy adult’s balls rhythmically slapping his rosebud with each fruitful penetration. Uncle Wei spanked the boy's springy small buttocks until they turned red, and pinched the fleshiest parts as punishment for trying to get help from outsiders. However, before long, the pleasure ballooning in the dirty rapist's loins bulged in spilling waves, and there was no time delay the inevitable.

“Oh, lovely A-Ji, your virgin pussy’s the best! Ah, ah, ah, this uncle cannot hold back anymore, my hips can’t stop shaking, it feels so good to be sucked by your sweet clenching pussy! Squeeze for me boy, squeeze it some more, you want my sperm so badly, don’t you? You naughty boy! AHH AHH UHH NNNGH I’m raping your baby butt! I’m raping your xiao ji ji ! Get pregnant again, you boy bitch! Carry my child in your womb before your first wet dream! UHH OOH NNGH HAAH HAAH!” the man howled into a pillow from the exceedingly powerful orgasmic waves rippling through his own body, sending forth fifteen excited virile jets of searing hot adult semen blasting deep into the boy’s stretched, swollen tunnel of love.

Little A-Ji's tight rump was thoroughly mated, wrecked and received two more large servings of Uncle Wei's happy milk, before the two finally emerged, full of sweat, and sat down at the dining table. By then, Xi Chen had finished his meal and was outdoors, busily loading a basket of green produce freshly harvested from the vegetable patch. The insatiable demonic uncle exploited the lack of grown-up supervision to attack the child again, by crouching underneath the table, pulled down the child's pyjamas, and bobbed his head deliriously between the boy's silky smooth legs. Uncle Wei happily sucked, pleased and nibbled at the boy's private parts, forcing the eight-year old to endure many painful tingles while the red-faced teary boy tried his best to chew and swallow down two dumplings, in the throes of unwanted ecstasy.

The adolescent had some house work to do before going to school. He was instructed to wash the dishes, sweep the floor and clean the interior of the house. Xi Chen was grateful to the uncle, and the man reciprocated the gratitude in every step of little A-Ji's daily house chores routine - Uncle Wei accompanied the sniffing, hiccuping, nervous crybaby eight-year old, pretended to teach him how to lather the soap, to wield the broom in a correct angle, and how to properly wipe furniture - with the man's hairy hands molesting the sweet youthful unblemished body at every occasion, especially the pink nipples that puffed up beautifully from harsh fingernail scratches and pinches; rough calloused hands crawled underneath the waistband and groped the bouncy buttocks; thick fingers dipped, scissored and jiggled the pool of crusting, congealing semen inside the boy's inflamed anus; fetid breaths and slimy wet tongue slipped into the boy's mouth every time he turned his head; another hand eagerly swooped to the front of the pyjamas, playing the boy's abused, overused xiao ji ji until little A-Ji couldn't scrub the plates properly, couldn't hold the broom straight, couldn't bend down to clean the tea stains from the tabletops; because the pre-pubescent's genitals were stroked and sexually assaulted so vigorously for nearly an hour, until he ended up peeing on the floor - even as he released the tension from the bladder involuntarily, with plenty of sobs and soft pitiful, shameful whimpers, Uncle Wei was relentless in pursuit of the (self-imagined) child's happiness - as the stream of pungent yellow arched out, he squatted down and let his tongue knead and massage the underside of the erect, twitching wee-wee and let fingers caress the child's delicate sensitive taut testicles, causing spurts when the boy's urethra contracted instinctively in futile defence; when A-Ji seemed to have almost emptied his quaking bladder, Uncle Wei enveloped his greasy, hungry lips around the wilting xiao ji ji, and renewed his efforts to polish the wildly pulsating, tortured, peeled exposed cockhead that had turned from healthy pink to dark bruised reds. The flushed, sweaty boy had to bite a ragcloth to stifle his screams, as he exploded into another thirty eruptions of sputtering liquids - the pure, flavoursome nectary ambrosia of a child that was forced to experience an adult's pleasures before his time.

Xi Chen had to leave at seven-thirty to haul his basket to the morning market, and was severely disappointed to see his younger brother with a broom in his hands, his pants in an untidy heap on the floor, and a puddle of pee pooling on where he stood. Uncle Wei easily underplayed the situation, "Don't worry, my dear neighbour, this happens sometimes to quiet, introverted boys who didn't get enough sleep. I'm a certified child psychologist, so I know. I'll help fix this mess, and you can go to the market with your heart at ease, really," he grinned his charming, persuasive, million-dollar smile, despite looking rather dishevelled, heaving hot breaths, and his mouth seemed to be slick with some kind of watery liquids.

"Oh... thank you again, Uncle Wei. We're always troubling you, and I'm so glad you're here to help us. Please, always feel free to come to our home and make it as your own, especially when my brother is around and I'm not. I'm so glad to have a neighbour like you, and we can place our trust in your kindness!" the teenager responded too politely, that Uncle Wei had to bow many times in return out of respect for the honorable words - and the permission to take his pleasure with little A-Ji anytime of the day from henceforth.

The eight-year old sniffled and was forced to bow in thanks to the uncle with his pants down and pee on his legs, at Xi Chen's insistence. The man smiled sweetly, and kissed the boy's forehead, leaving behind a lip mark made of a man's saliva and a boy's pre-ejaculate fluids. Xi Chen looked pleased.

"My friend, you better go now, the customers will not wait. I'll get your brother ready and take him to school. I know the headmaster very well, so you can rest assured that I'll put a good word for your cute brother even if he's late," another million dollar smile beamed, and Xi Chen nearly cried tears of gratitude for the wonderful neighbour.

The teenager left the house soon after. Uncle Wei instructed the boy to return to the bedroom and undress because a change of clothing was needed - and the excited man followed behind closely while masturbating his eager adult hairy giant penis. With just the two of them in the quiet, lonely house, Uncle Wei had all the time in the world to enjoy the eight-year old's body, and engage in endless rounds of animalistic fornication. Poor A-Ji was molested, sexually assaulted and fertilized several more times on his adorable rabbit-themed bedsheets, spent hours wriggling, drilled and hammered under the heavy moaning unwashed man's crushing weight, and was left with bruising hickeys on both ballooning nipples and plenty of lustful fingerprints all over his young, immature body, before he was able to put on a decent robe and a finally, finally, a clean pair of pants - with an exception: his only clean loincloth was drenched with a man's cum, so he was forced to have his genitals stewed and marinated in spoonfuls of Uncle Wei's rich smelly semen for the whole morning.

By the time they reached the school gates, it was already ten in the morning. The gates were closed, and the guard refused to allow entry to late-comers. A gold nugget inside the guard's pocket later, twenty teachers - Uncle Wei's terrible sex offender friends, who had obtained full-time teaching positions in the school after bribing the headmaster - emerged at the gates with friendly waves of 'hello' and loud drunken laughter. It was school recess time, and the liquor-loving hardcore criminals had time to spare in between classes. Together, the group of salivating, excited men dragged the crying, screaming, kicking boy into the woods next to the school's compounds, where a dingy, dank and smelly wooden shed waited for the arrival of little A-Ji.

“Here's a conundrum, dear xiongdì s: how many loads can this set of cute buttocks swallow, before the boy spews the excess through the mouth, nose and god forbid, ears too?” the bald, fat man asked, his speech interspersed with tasty growls. He jiggled his hefty ass, and rolled the masses of fat on his obese belly upon the broken boy's body, so that his wart-covered, veiny, thick twitching penis could copulate with the cum-drenched, cream-filled ruined rosebud with impressive, vibrating speeds.

“That's a trick question, you swine! None, of course! Because there's two of us fucking his throat right now, and everything's gonna gush out from his face when we cum! Ha ha ha!”

“ Shixiong , he ain't listening to us anymore. Look - his eyes has gone white, his drool is all over the place! That pig is breeding the boy for the eighth time in a row!”

A long line of men yelled angrily and cursed the morbidly obese monster for hogging (no pun intended) the drugged, near-unconscious eight-year old on the semen-stained floor.

“Oh my sweet, sweet cutie pie! I love to play with little boys’ feet and here I am using the soles as my cocksleeve. Ooh, ooh, so smooth, sweaty and firm at the same time! How many times must I shoot before he’s covered with grown-ups’ seed?” another man with a crooked nose and a bushy beard cried and heaved for lost breaths, as he climaxed into the soft delicate skin between toes and the bumps, arches and joints of little feet.

“My dear brother-in-arms, that is so hard to guess! I’m trying to fuck his nipple so that he’ll grow breasts, and our dimwitted friend over there is trying to sow seeds through his belly button in the hopes that he’ll father a son through the eight-year old’s womb soon. And look at those queueing up for a feel of the fragrant armpits, the dip in the collarbones and the hot favourite, the fingers! How can we ever measure if we’re not doing this together?” a rather silly-looking cock-eyed man berated, and with a passionate roar, ejaculated thick ropes of milky white deep into the boy’s bruised, bloated, stretched bowl-like nubs.

“Ho ho ho! You’re all dull and slow, you can never best me in the game of brains!” Uncle Wei crowed arrogantly from a corner. He bounced a pouch of gold nuggets in his hand, and sneered; he had asked for two, but his friends only brought one - stingy friends they turned out to be! In retaliation, he warned, he would make the boy’s most precious part inaccessible for this sale.

Nobody dared to touch the boy’s shivering stiff penis and balls that squeezed itself so tightly that the plump eggs seemed to have snuck under the base of the said xiao ji ji - because A-Ji's loins was covered with super spicy chilli paste; Uncle Wei had purposely rubbed the terribly cooking ingredient into the boy's penis - little A-Ji was fortunately too dazed, and too knocked-out to feel the terrible pain that scorched the child's glistening, spicy-red delicate genitalia membrane and burnt and throbbed into the core of the dying organ. He continued to pee off and on in tiny cute watery eruptions, to the amusement of twenty rutting rapists - he'd lost control of his bladder long ago when Uncle Wei dosed the pinprick cockslit with a spoonful of that fiery hot powder.

It didn't matter though. As soon as the Wei gongzi went off to the nearest town to satisfy his craving for high quality liquor, the band of merry men took out some tools from their pockets and fashioned a crude contraption made of a funnel attached to a bendable reed-like straw - it was obvious to where the straw would be inserted. Soon, they celebrated their successful school recess (which went on until mid-day, because these horrible teachers instructed the students to recite and copy the sect's over-4000 rules in class, which takes forever), and shouted, "Cheers!". They clinked their jars of Qinghe rice wines and Laozu Smiles that were hidden inside their sleeves, and together, they rubbed their excited hairy pimply penises, ejaculated, peed and spit into the funnel, and massaged twenty dirty men's foamy smelly bodily fluids into the boy's destroyed, bloated and terribly swollen genitals.

Notes for the Chapter:

Happy Labour's Day! I was a bit lazy coz of the holiday, so this might not be one of the better pieces I've written, and may be kinda disconnected. Thank goodness the lockdown will be lifted soon, so for now I'm just counting down the days...

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

P.s. Added a little more icky details

Chapter 97

“Feeling better now?” Wei Ying asked.

Jin Ling “Enn”s hesitantly, and blew bubbles into the rippling waters. He hadn’t had adults supervising his baths since he turned eight, and it felt really strange, somewhat demeaning, and really uncomfortable to be stared at while he soaped and scrubbed his naked body - and worse, the imaginary leers he received when he had to wash his privates in the surprisingly, but alarmingly clear waters.

A combination of the over-imagination of youth, the missed intimacy with ‘handsome and strong’ jiu jiu (at least in the boy’s perspective) who had raised him since he was a helpless orphaned babe, and the frightening stories he’d heard about the Yiling Patriarch and lately, his homosexual hunger, made him the perfect jittery morsel of flesh in front of two grown-up’s eyes.

Seeing how the boy’s heart trembled and the anguish painted on the face, Jiang Cheng ordered him to soak in the main heated springwater pool to rejuvenate his qi , revive his spirits, and regain his composure. There was really no urgency to rush into the outside world and become heroes for no one, the da jiu added thoughtfully, because the Imperial army wouldn’t have any use for Jiang family’s treasures (a civilization who could command and pilot 31st century robots would treat the books, parchments, scrolls and wooden signage as consumable flammables), the Jin gongzi ’s high-value inheritance (a species that can recklessly wield dark, Corruption magic could create all the wealth, gold and gemstones needed in their twisted alchemists’ labs), and Fairy (an overweight lazy dog is no good for an army that controlled Corrupted animals to slaughter the living).

“There, there, anything that causes anxiety or pulls the heartstrings are just that - they’re from your heart, and not from your brain. At times like this, you need to think with your brain, and channel the right instructions to the heart,” the former Yiling Patriarch sagely advised, although the wise words fell on deaf ears because they were as cryptic as a 21st-century psychology lesson. Wei Ying poked the boy’s glistening, wet chest, accidentally swiped one of the boy’s nipples and then flicked his forehead, to emphasize his advice. Jin Ling felt a little prickling sensation in his loins and he quickly covered his crotch and lowered his head.

Wei Ying blinked and caught on. He whispered to Jiang Cheng that as the spouse, he would go and check on Lan Zhan. He also added in an insinuating manner, “Don’t look, but I think your nephew has nearly recovered and is quite lively right now, especially his ‘son’ down there. I’m leaving this to you, since you’re his legal guardian and all,” before hurrying off to the far end of the chamber. Jiang Cheng opened his mouth, closed, stammered a few incoherent syllables, stared (no, no, don’t look), turned six shades of red, and opened his mouth in silent plea for help. “Make sure we’re ready when he’s done with the bath!” the man shouted, which echoed loudly in the cave, like adding a zest of lemon into the already acidic sour reddening grape.

At the husband’s side, the spouse shook the sleeping husband’s shoulder, “Lan Zhan! Your Thousand-Year Snake pheromones are leaking! Wake up now, otherwise you’re going to wreak havoc on those two!”

(Wei Ying would love to stay in the cave a bit longer, for reasons he already spelled out; however, now that the monster within the husband has reared its ugly head, all bets are off and he would really like to get the attractively smelly man out into the open space, and into the cold, to douse any lustful flames that his body odours may ignite. Wei Ying scolded himself for engaging in such reckless, passionate lovemaking, and letting the husband dry off from the bathwaters in the morning, which probably spiked the output from Lan Zhan's cursed body.)

.

Lan Zhan did wake up - in a continuation of his dreams. On top of a sleep-warmed goose feather mattress and satiny sheets, he was greeted by a strange sight of his forehead band tied into a big fancy ribbon with even bigger bows. The ribbon jiggled as though it was tied to something hard, and bounced in his line of sight.

He nnngh'd and yawned. The ribbon caressed his lips and threatened to stuff the cloth into the man's mouth, if he didn't wake up soon.

The boy giggled - the most beautiful crystalline tinkling sounds of joy and innocence from an eight-year old. A-Xian sat on his six-pack belly and wriggled a bit.

"Uncle Lan, Uncle Lan, good morning! Please greet our family members too, and here is a present to wish you a wonderful day ahead!"

The Gusu Lan master found it amusing, rather than annoying, to indulge in the child's adorable, whimsical imaginative roleplay. He pulled the ribbon open, intent on reclaiming his sacred possession, and unveiled his daily morning reward - an adolescent's cute pinkish penis that had been properly stroked, happily hard, and had the foreskin pushed back to reveal the prized glans that glistened with excited boy-juices.

“Mn. Good morning A-Xian,” the man muttered, and the boy swooped down for a full, passionate kiss on the lips, with plenty of tongue actions, “Good morning, A-Xian’s son,” and the eight-year old gingerly inserted his wee-wee into the man’s waiting salivating mouth, then started to hump earnestly.

“Unnh, Unnh, Aaahn, Haahn, Uncle Lan, your mouth feels so good around A-Xian’s son, please swallow it more, and make A-Xian tingle!” the boy cried with fervour, and relished the sweet sucking sensations and squishy kissy sounds emanating from his loins. Uncle Lan did not disappoint with his proficiency in massaging eight-year old penises with his flexible tongue, and the boy tingled cheerfully with laughter in the air, honey boy-juices dribbling out of a quivering cockslit accompanied by uncontrolled sprays of virginal pee, and the master enjoyed his first liquidy snack in the morning in the comforts of his luxurious bedroom.

“Good morning, baby A-Xians,” he murmured as he tasted each of the boy’s trembling wrinkly, soft yet firm testicles, and rolled them with vibrating hums and violent licks inside his mouth, like a lollipop that melted too fast. The boy complained that one of his balls sometimes hang lower than the other, and the man knew why, because he always attacked the right ballsack more zealously than the left; he would love A-Xian to show his genitals to him every time they bathe together, so that the man will always have an excuse to impersonate a doctor, and be allowed to examine, then play with the boy's defenceless swollen quail eggs for hours on end.

After the prolonged greeting, Uncle Lan scooted a bit and let the boy lie by his side. They would engage with amoral heavy petting sessions and touch each other non-stop, exciting erogenous zones and spoon one another, whispering words of “I love you” while fiddling with each other’s penises, sharing very dirty stories of horny men planting babies inside eight-year olds, before burning desire finally overwhelmed the man, and he pinned down the shrieking spread-eagled boy to fuck him into the mattress like a hungry beast in heat.

Somewhere in the midst of fathering more tiny tots inside lovely A-Xian, the boy wondered aloud, “If I have a son and two babies between my legs, then I must be the mama. Who is the papa?”

At that point, Uncle Lan hnngh’s, and enjoyed yet another thirty-twitches into the sweet child. “Would that be me?” the man asked, breathless, after inseminating the boy one more time.

“Eww, you’re too old to be married to me, you can be my daddy!” A-Xian mischievously stuck out his tongue, and the man gleefully captured it in a passionate, saliva-slicked kiss. “Mn, then this daddy will make sweet love to his baby boy, and make lots and lots of brothers and sisters inside you,” he growled dangerously, renewed his hip pumps with vigour into the tight buttocks, and A-Xian mewled with unbridled joy.

Later, the boy would walk with a slight limp, a pacifier stuck into his rosebud to keep three servings of Uncle Lan’s happy milk sloshing inside until the child’s belly bulged a bit. Like a hen that sits on eggs to make baby chicks, the pre-teen teased, A-Xian would keep the man’s semen warmed throughout the day to make more baby boys in his pregnant belly. Uncle Lan would find it difficult to prepare breakfast for them, as he was constantly torn between trying to flip a pancake and flipping the boy on the floor so that he could mate with lovely precocious A-Xian, and spend hours emptying his adult hairy balls into the sweet, sweet hot tight hole between perky buttocks. A-Xian got his plate of pancakes, and separately, another three squirts of creamy buttery milk inside his buttocks; Uncle Lan was very flushed, exceedingly excited with his nerve-ends short-circuited, and was exquisitely drained to the last droplet; the man shivered continuously and helplessly on the floor, jerked his hips involuntarily when pleasurable waves electrocuted his sweaty pelvis, as the boy continued to ride and squeeze-dry the uncle's shrivelled loins while enjoying his meal. Uncle Lan moaned like a dying animal, spilled again and again until nothing but pure crystal clear seedless liquids squirted out from his defeated-resurrected overheated penis imprisoned inside the devilish pre-pubescent boy's sweet, tempting tunnel of terrifying love.

.

"Ahh, Uncle Lan, look! Those foreigner teachers are at it again! They're raping the children in the playground!" Wei Ying shouted excitedly on the balcony where he had a grand panoramic view of the Cloud Recesses, and no one could see him. The master had strategically placed potted plants all around to prevent curious onlookers to see what went on inside the mansion's upper floors.

"It's terrible, isn't it, Uncle Lan? Day after day, right after the parents dropped their boys at the school, the guard lets them in and locks the gate. The headmaster always seems cheerful when he assembles the schoolchildren first thing in the morning, then sends them into their respective classrooms, five in total.

It's strange, isn't it? That there are four teachers assigned to each class, and all of them are fat, ugly foreigners! Those laoshi s are very suspicious, Uncle Lan! You should do something about them! I've seen it before, at the first studying period of every day, the teachers feed the schoolchildren a teacup of liquid poured from brown vials, and the students end up looking drunk! Are the children being poisoned, Uncle Lan?

Ah, ah, there they go again! One by one, each Lan disciple child is pulled to the playground, but he is not fighting back! Why are there many other foreign men waiting among the swings, see-saws and merry-go-rounds? Does this school allow outsiders too? Oh no, they're undressing the boys! And humping them! I can see their hairy sweaty buttocks and they look scary! Uncle Lan, what is going on...?!"

A-Xian bounced as his body reacted to the feelings of terror and panic surging inside his small body, and he became agitated, and fidgeted more and more. Uncle Lan, on the other hand, received the most incredible massages on his overflowing, burnt-out penis still captured in the boy's clenching buttocks; naughty A-Xian had refused to let go after breakfast, and continued to find all means to keep his favourite Uncle-penis warmly stuffed inside his boy-pussy - he promised to keep the uncle's seed warm to hatch many babies, so he couldn't allow the man to pull out, or to go soft, otherwise everything would gush out. The pitiful Gusu Lan master lay shaking on the balcony floor, covered with sweat and became a puddle of sexy moans, shivering muscles, breathy whimpers, jolting hips, and penile contractions rolling along the length of his purple-red engorged arousal. The boy sported a swelling belly, a fertile sign that he had been impregnated, in some twisted ways.

"Hahh... hnngh... uuuuh... A-Xian... ngaah... harrhh... Don't eavesdrop on others... unknowingly... it's against the rules... uh, uh, uh, uh, HNNGH, aaaaaahh... the teachers may be... guilty of breaking rule number 57... ah, ah, ah, ah, HIIEEEE, ooooh... but the school lives up... to rule number 3... so, logically, it is... HNNGH... allowed...”

A-Xian frowned at the terribly articulated explanation, and the nonsensical reason behind the persistent crime. He squeaked with frustration and at how stubborn his guardian was about holding on to outdated, patriarchial rules; the eight-year old tensed his ass-muscles, then picked up the pace - he went wild with abandon for a full minute and Uncle Lan finally, gratefully passed out from the sizzling, deadly pleasure - his volcano erupted for the last time deep into the child's bowels, spewed leftover lava into the boy's fertile imaginary womb, and he was left incapacitated.

.

Lan Zhan awoke, for the second time in the land of dreams, again - this time with a soft feather-light kiss.

“Oh, oh, are you alright? Young master, can you breathe? I wasn't sure what to do after I pulled you out of the shed, and you look all beaten up. I tried the mouth-to-mouth technique, but I wasn't sure. Can you sit up?”

Little A-Ji opened his eyes, slowly, bleary, his vision was blurred from dried smelly cum that spilled into his nostrils, eyes and god forbid, ears too.

There was a sound of a washcloth rinsed in a basin of water, squeezed, followed by the heavenly sensations of cooling relief and softness on the bumps and bruises on his swollen skin. He nnng'h'd.

“Do you recognize me? I’m your neighbour, but I usually stay at home because my daddy hardly lets me out. I always see you and your gege in your hut, and I’ve seen that dirty uncle that trespasses your vegetable patch, and walks in as though he owns the property! I also sometimes see you in that uncle’s house, and whenever that happens, he invites twenty even filthier men over. I don’t like it at all, so I’ve always watched you!”

A-Ji started to sob, because his slimy, coated buttocks flared with immense pain, and his forcibly-inserted wee-wee was badly inflamed and disfigured; he immediately thought something was broken, torn and probably bleeding inside. His hands were as heavy as lead, after being pinned on the forearms by fat, bald rapists, grazed, scratched and punched many times by those who tower above his tiny figure, forced him to grab their stinky dicks and stroke them to completion. His whole body smelled, and distantly he wondered how long did the brutal gangrape lasted this time.

“Don’t cry, don’t cry... what is your name? I know you hurt a lot, because I could see what the uncle and his friends do to you, from my bedroom. I went to the school gates because I never had a chance to study, and wanted to sneak in. But then I saw those same twenty men again, walking out of the gates! So I followed them all the way to this reeking building!”

The soothing wet washcloth dabbed on his reddened cheeks, cleaned up the smelly men’s dried seed, again and again. It took some time to get everything out of his face and hair. Each time a fat tear threatened to spill, a fresh cleaned washcloth wiped it away tenderly, but he still shuddered and hiccuped uncontrollably.

“A... A-Ji. I am A-Ji,” he sniffled pitifully.

“A-Ji? That’s a nice name! I’m A-Xian!” The praise on his cursed name was surprising, and little A-Ji finally focused his clouded vision at the rescuer. A young boy like him, with bright brown eyes and rather messy uncombed hair, dressed in an old loose shirt with no pants underneath, covered with bits of dirt, grass, leaves and broken twigs, beamed at him with a smile so bright, he almost looked like an angel that had fallen from the skies and through the forest canopy.

“I couldn’t get in until the men left, because the door was locked. But I watched through a crack in the wall, they’ve done terrible things to you!”

Little A-Ji wailed upon hearing that his dark, shameful secret is out. He didn’t greet or respond to the other boy who saved him, cleaned him with the washcloth, and strangely, licked the wounds on his limbs and face as though he might feel better - and he did.

A-Xian cradled the sexually abused boy and tried to soothe him with whispers of “It’s okay, it’s okay. I’m here to protect you from now on, so A-Ji, please don’t cry anymore.” Fingers run through knotted, cum-splattered hair, patted on the naked back full of bruising fingerprints and streaks of male bodily fluids.

“My daddy taught me that Love is the most powerful thing in this world, and he always says that he loves me. I have a daddy, a son, two babies, and I’m the mama of my children. So you must be the final piece of the puzzle,

A-Ji,” A-Xian murmured, although A-Ji wasn’t listening anymore as he cried out his anguish and trauma for the cruel world that he truly hated.

“You’ll be the papa of my children; so you’re the husband and I’m the wife, we have a son and two babies, and we’ll live a happy life together from now on! A-Xian promises never to let you cry with pain and sadness, forever and ever, in this lifetime and beyond!”

Little A-Xian made a three-finger salute to the skies, with a crying A-Ji in his arms.

Somewhere in the far horizon, thunder rumbled ominously in the heat of a sunny, summer afternoon.

.

Lan Zhan woke up the third time, and he was back in the real world.

“ Aiyo , lao gong ! I ran all the way here to wake you up, and then I see you crying in your sleep! What in the world is wrong with you and your weird dreams?” the spouse laughed, mocking the man who was disturbed from his emotionally depressing afternoon nap.

The husband rubbed his eyes and willed the remnants of his muddled, perverse dream to go away like fleeting gossamer on a windy day. He nnngh'd with a satisfied grunt when a hand snaked into his sash and weaved under the drawstrings of his pants.

“Shhh. I know you don't have much after this morning's workout, but we still need to take care of this before the other two finds out,” the spouse whispered in a low voice. A finger lifted the husband's loincloth and pulled out a hardening over six-inches long boner; it was heavy and engorged with blood, so it plopped lazily on the husband's thigh.

The spouse gave a comforting but rather frenzied handjob; he played the husband's twitching penis like a flute, alternating between dancing fingertips on a cockhead with its foreskin retracted, and rough, very pleasurable, full-of-friction strokes. Every five pumps was followed by a quick grab at the hairy, wrinkly twitching balls.

Within a span of less than five minutes, Lan Zhan raised his hips in warning - his leg calves cramped, his pelvis quaked in a sign of impending explosion - Wei Ying quickly fished out a handkerchief from a pocket and plunged it into the man's pants, and smothered the convulsing arousal before it could erupt the first of thirty pulses. The younger man continued to stroke the overjoyed cock with a vice-like grip even as the tension subsided and the pressure overflowed into the piece of soiled cloth - in which Wei Ying pocketed it back as a souvenir, gave a chaste kiss on the husband's sweaty forehead, and whispered, “Good boy, you've let everything out.”

Lan Zhan didn't realize he'd bit his lower lip hard until a mark was left, to remind him that it was always dangerous to ejaculate in the presence of relatives, and he should be grateful for his indomitable discipline in keeping silent of his most shameful moments.

Wei Ying was already strutting back to his brother and nephew, and obnoxiously calling out the two, “We’re almost ready here, is Jin Ling fine now? Has he rubbed it out yet?”

The poor Jin gongzi squeaked and nearly died with a heart attack in the pool. Jiang Cheng started cursing in Yunmeng dialect. Lan Zhan’s eyes became as wide as saucers, and rushed to adjust his pants and dishevelled robes.

.

“What? We’re all young healthy men, fit as a fiddle, and armed with big long swords! What’s there to hide among us, especially since we’re all related family members?” Wei Ying guffawed and puffed out clouds into the frigid air.

Everyone had worn and strapped on as much equipment and gear as they could, and donned their thickest robes. The blizzards have passed, there is little turbulence in the mountains, however the temperatures were eye-wateringly below minus forty degrees celsius, at rough estimation by the husband.

“Wei Ying. Do not ridicule others. Hold on tight,” the husband announced, and was rewarded by a warm embrace from the back. It felt Perfectly fine, even nostalgic, just like the times when he and the spouse flew to Yiling’s night markets, ages ago.

Bichen lifted off first, carrying with it its master and Wei Ying.

Sandu had been in more battles in the past few years, and was a mean, well-oiled flying machine in its own right. Jiang Cheng expertly maneuvered it with a whiny, jittery Jin Ling tugging on his waist. “Don’t let go, because if you do, I won’t save you! Watch and learn so that someday, you can use your father’s sword like this too!” the angry jiu jiu scolded the boy, and showed off his sword-flying skills at the same time. Jin Ling nodded, being a little afraid of heights, especially on cold, dreary winter days.

Notes for the Chapter:

I can't wait for the lockdown to ease, so that I can get my butt off the chair and go out into the sunshine!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 98

“Wei Ying.”

A soft ‘tee hee hee’, the spouse hugged tightly from behind, then nuzzled intimately into the nape. The husband could feel hot breaths on his reddening earlobes, lips nibbling the roots of his hair, nose inhaling his scalp, and lower down, strong, manly fingers groped his muscular pectorals and waist generously. Two trapped nipples were grazed by fingernails beneath the clothes, and when that wasn’t enough to entertain the gleeful attacker, they trailed down, tenderly down, and dipped behind the sash, into his shallow belly button. Ghostly fingertips scratched and drew circles inside the sensitive pocket, then crawled out to “walk” on his abs like crossing a terrain of gently rolling hills, until they reached the upper part of the V-line on his midsection.

“Nnn. Wei Ying.”

Without much warning, the spouse’s hands started peppering sweet tickles to the waist. They naughtily pinched a layer of a burgeoning love-handle resting above the hips, reminding the husband that with the passage of time, not only his age has increased, so has his waistline. The layer, though not much to grab on to, was jiggled obstinately.

“Nnngh. Wei Ying.”

A short giggle, the spouse withdrew those lovely marauding fingertips, and started to give the husband a nice, relaxing shoulder massage. Then, interspersed with some backscratches. The husband mmmms in approval, before hands slid between the armpits and reached to the lower abdomen, where they hook like a sacred marital belt that bonded Lan Wang Ji to Wei Wuxian.

However, the loving torture didn't end there, because Wei Ying broke into a soft string of bubbly laughter and tightened his grip on the husband's lower abdomen - and started to knead in deep, sinister circles. The husband could feel the contents of his belly churn and stir.

“... Wei Ying...” his voice lowered to a warning growl.

Lan Zhan had no choice when Wei Ying refused to distance himself - they were flying on a sword with very little passenger leg space after all. He winced and let out a soft fart, and Wei Ying laughed again when he felt a puff of warmth on his crotch - then gave a sweet peck on the shell of the husband's ear. Lan Zhan nnngh'd, and turned away in embarrassment, his cheeks blushed bright pink.

Fortunately, the saccharine-sweet, sentimental spectacle was partially filtered from the other two flying swordsmen's view, when they flew through low-lying clouds with bursts of strong, deafening winds.

Still, Jiang Cheng understood what he had glimpsed, and rolled his eyes at each affectionate display from his elder brother. “Shameless! You could've just held hands and that would be fine. You didn't need to touch everywhere unnecessarily,” he shouted, when they’ve cleared a bunch of those said clouds.

Wei Ying cackled, “I can’t help it! He’s my lao gong , and he isn’t the most touchy-feely person on earth. Now that I have a rare chance to be on a sword with him, how can I be heartless and not show my enduring love? But you have a point, we could just hold hands...” and he took the husband’s hand, gripped it tightly like a lover would, and stayed that way, “So you better not say anything insulting every time the two of us do this!” and swayed their locked hands - the symbol of their holy matrimony - in front the others.

“Eh... if da jiu calls da jiu fu as ‘ lao gong ’, then shouldn’t da jiu fu call da jiu as ‘ lao po ’ (老婆; wife)? They’re married anyway, right?” naive Jin Ling wondered a little too loudly. He was punished with a smack on his head and shushed up by the red-faced sourgrape.

“Lan Zhan! Lan Zhan! Did you hear what our nephew just said? Come on...!” Wei Ying whispered excitedly.

Lan Zhan remained silent, his eyes cast down towards passing-by clouds.

“... nnn... Lan Zhan!” the spouse pouted adorably; he wanted to be spoiled rotten for a shower of endearments from the husband.

“... Lao ... po ,” the awkward pronunciation was unmistakable, but clear enough. The husband earned another fond kiss, this time on the side of the cheek. Jiang Cheng rolled his eyes for the nth time, while Jin Ling covered his eyes and stifled his own girly giggle.

.

It took just five killer pigeons to ground the multi-sect flying squadron representing the colourful banners of black-whites, purples and a smattering of gold, thus putting the brakes on the much-anticipated restart of their journey, just fifteen minutes into the flight.

Wei Ying realized something was amiss when the Sparkles he threw didn't seem to drive the birds away, while Lan Zhan banked to the side so violently that his beloved passenger nearly tumbled off the blade - the pigeons were black, emitted black wisps and had beaks filled with rows of fangs . They zipped around, and kamikaze'd at the two flying swordsmen and their passengers at unbelievable speeds, slicing skin, tearing clothes, and puncturing holes into unguarded baggage.

“Corrupted creatures in the skies!” the venerable Han Guang Jun shouted in alarm, “We’re not equipped to fight them. Return to ground!”

“Jin Ling! Hold on to Jiang Cheng and the crystals! Get down to safety, quick! ...Ahhhh! Stop pulling my hair knot, you bloody bird! I’ll roast you to death!!!”

“I heard you, da jiu ! I-- Ahhh! My sandwiches! They got my backpack and the food’s falling out! Ow ow ow, they scratched my face and shredded my shoes!”

“Shut up about your sandwiches! Grab on to my waist, NOW! We’re doing an emergency landing this moment! Tch’-- stupid pigeons, they keep pecking my hands... Shhh! Shhh! Shhh! Don’t you dare steal Zidian!”

Two swords wobbled to the nearest hillside, while smoking pigeons continued to divebomb and bite their targets. Jin Ling lost his balance and landed on Sandu’s hilt heavily with his rump; he was forced to straddle the sword and curl up into a ball, while his back and buttocks were viciously lacerated by sharp talons. Wei Ying became upset at the ambush, and whipped out his golden flute - only to have one despicable cursed bird land on it and play a game of tug-of-war with the now-desperate man. “No, no, no, you can’t take it from me! Shoo! Go away!” he yelled angrily at the twisted creature that hissed like a cat, relentless as a raptor in pursuit of prey, and imbued with the strength of many men.

Lan Zhan sensed the hopelessness of the situation, and stood up straight despite being nipped repeatedly on his exposed back of the palms. He gracefully swept an arc in front of him, and his magical guqin emerged in a blinding flash of soft blues. He selected one of seven sacred ivory-white strings, and plucked it hard, a determined look in his eyes, his jaws tightened and his limbs strained from the immense amount of qi released from the clear, low pitch, almost empathic sound of sadness, loneliness, that resonated with the pain and suffering felt by his fellow travellers - and bemoaned the state of their shattered world.

A single note was played; five Corrupted wild pigeons were sliced in an instant with a terrifying whoosh! , leaving behind a whirlwind of falling feathers that soon evaporated into nothingness. The shockwaves continued to radiate in an expanding circle of luminescent blue-white energy rings, tearing through pine forests, penetrating deep into the frozen earth.

A sudden silence befell the mountains.

.

The shaken quartet regrouped as soon as their feet touched solid ground. Lan Zhan led them to a nearby tall undergrowth where they could settle down for a while, and be protected from the elements of the weather. Wei Ying quickly casted Fire spells to light up a campfire to keep everyone warm, and instructed the other two to take off their damaged clothes.

“Pass it to Lan Zhan, he’ll fix them using our company’s magical sewing kit. We should get your wounds treated too, because they may be infected with toxins that can curse the living and turn flesh into undead,” he instructed without skipping a beat. Jiang Cheng understood the gravity of the situation and followed suit, and also checked their gear - fortunately, only the food from the nephew’s backpack was missing, and everything else including their weapons, bags and pouches were relatively intact, some bearing scratches or nasty bite marks.

“ D-D-Da jiu , what the hell were those? I’ve never s-s-seen birds with teeth! They’re so powerful, it’s like fending off a pack of wolves!” Jin Ling cried in shock, and shivered from the temperatures - he was down to his inner garments and a thin pair of underpants. Wei Ying removed his thick outer robes because he didn’t really need it, and used it to cover the boy’s thin shoulders - who sighed in great relief at the lingering warmth, and greedily held the thick fabric close to his quaking body.

“Jin Ling, when you’ve dabbled enough with the Dark Arts like me, you’ll come to understand and accept everything those Imperial goons can throw at us,” he said rather reassuringly.

Lan Zhan busily sewed back Jin Ling’s clothes with such finesse that none of the men actually noticed it - because everything was done gracefully and quickly -, and he also patched up the torn sleeves of the Jiang sect leader within minutes. Simultaneously, he handed small bottles of detoxifying powders and healing salves to Jiang Cheng to take care of their bloodied lacerations.

“This reminds me of the tough times when we fought against the Wens,” the sect leader said, as he applied the medicine to the boy’s cuts, and was immediately rewarded with a squeak and a snarl of stinging pain, “Some times, we were outnumbered, and some times, we didn’t know what new terrible weapons they would bring to the battlefield, and when. I remembered when they sent out those enhanced fierce corpses with hardened skins, we couldn’t win a single battle, lost many good men, and our soldiers’ morale was down in the dumps. You’d see tens of bodies being brought back to grieving families every day, and even more that were still alive and breathing on bloodied stretchers, but would probably die by sundown with great suffering, because their limbs were cut off and they’d die a slow death without any painkillers, simply due to the fact that we’ve run out of everything in the military camps.”

Jin Ling quietened down. Perhaps it was a foreboding sense that things would become worse as foreseen by a battle-weary jiu jiu , or a sense of awe for palpable war tales that his generation would never come to experience - it told the boy that his pain and annoyance was nothing compared to what the older men anticipated. Jiang Cheng continued to dab medicines to Jin Ling's exposed back and soon, with little protest and a rude yank of underpants, the buttocks too; baring his smooth skin in the cold winter air was considered slightly disconcerting and shameful, compared to the horror that may grow out from his rump if left untreated, like a sentient Corrupted black scorpion tail that could infect his ass, take over his brains and gouge his eyes out - at least that was what the da jiu said. Jin Ling dared not refuse and was scared shitless by what he heard, and imagined inside his mind.

Jiang Cheng regaled the boy with some of his "back in the day" stories, with plenty of superlatives, speculations and superfluous details added, even with a sprinkle of personal accounts of how certain events actually transpired, from the sect leader's rose-tinted perspectives of heroism, self-sacrifice and blatant but unimportant little white lies, such as saying that he never shed a single tear, or lost his bravado, during the ordeal of losing everything to the war. The couple silently tended to the family's needs, and tried to figure out how to get airborne without getting pummeled by more killer birds.

.

Jiang Cheng, the self-appointed leader of the squad, envisioned that they must travel by flight, regardless of the circumstances. Going on foot would take too long, and it was too dangerous considering the treacherous geography and fickle weather system. Furthermore, they couldn't get their bearings yet, so getting as high as they could in the skies would increase the chances of spotting any recognizable landmarks, or twenty-foot tall lumbering giants, for that matter.

He surmised that the enemy had gathered intel on them - escapees from the Lotus Pier -, or had very smart creatures patrolling the land. He elaborated in length, "They knew about the ring on my finger and the capabilities in dealing with threats from the Dark side, and tried to take it away. They also realized that Jin Ling was the most inexperienced, who couldn't wield a sword or bow in the skies, so they only targeted the only possible precious commodity that was visible, and smelled good, probably, on his back.

Wei Wuxian, you were clever to tie your robes tightly to your body, just like Han Guang Jun, so none of the birds could snatch your belongings hidden beneath your clothes. The moment you took out your flute, one of the pigeons actually went straight for it - it knew that instrument had to be dispatched as soon as possible.

And if those crystals were as powerful as you say, they were discovered inside the cave without the knowledge of any watchful Imperial eyes from the outside world - otherwise, I would have expected the birds to swarm the poor boy for the pouch that was left dangling so temptingly in the open!" He gave Jin Ling a gentle knock on the head, to reprimand the latter and remind him not to repeat the mistake.

Wei Ying made an impressed "Ooo" with his mouth, and nodded - he didn't really think that far, but he had to agree that almost every point was spot on. Lan Zhan had finished sewing, pulled out the last needle to tie a finishing knot and bit off the excess thread. Everything looked repaired and renewed, and the middle-aged man returned the clothes, shoes, backpacks, pouches and other belongings to their respective owners.

“The next big question,” Jiang Cheng said, “is how do we ensure that we can get back up to the skies safely, keep ourselves secure from the weather and any approaching enemies, and have defensive capabilities to dodge their attacks? I could probably arm myself with an activated Zidian, ge fu with his guqin, and you with your flute - but those lightning-quick attacks are impossible to avoid, by human standards,” he added in frustration.

The group paused for a minute to think through their dilemma, though Jin Ling winced from balancing from one buttock glute to another on the grassy earth - the open cuts on his butt twinged despite having had plenty of numbing substances applied to them.

“I have an idea!” Wei Ying cried out and startled the group, his face full of mirth and mischief.

Jiang Cheng and the nephew stared at the man expectantly.

“Do you know about sword-boarding?”

Jin Ling woot-ed in pleasant surprise, Jiang Cheng rolled his eyes, and Lan Zhan actually smiled.

.

“Binding spells?” Wei Ying shouted, and received a reply of “Check!” in unison. Wei Ying took great pride with the fact that Jin Ling praised the da jiu for inventing such a simple but perennially useful spell, since before he was born. Everyone wiggled their ankles to make sure the thin glowing blue thread fastened their feet to their respective blades.

“Luggage?” Jiang Cheng asked, and received another round of “Check!”. The couple didn’t have any extra baggage with them other than the usual pouch and satchel, so Jin Ling’s backpack was secured to Bichen’s hilt, while Jiang Cheng’s bag was tied to Sandu. They made sure to strengthen the packs with enchanted threads from the Wangxian Superior Sewing Kit, said to be able to withstand even the force of the biggest supernova in the Milky Way or even the Andromeda galaxy (but no one really took notice of this, because that claim was gibberish to mere mortals).

“Weapons?” Lan Zhan calmly announced like a pilot addressing the cabin crew. Blinding blue guqin appeared in front of him with a zwing! - an impressive cockpit of sorts, made of seven elegant, supple magical strings; Wei Ying readied his golden flute to the lips; Jiang Cheng whipped out the purple lightning Zidian with a terrifying bzzzzzt ! sound; Jin Ling was given a handful of mini-talismans made from a torn page of a notebook, so that he could press the fingertip-sized circles and throw powerful spells to defend himself in the skies. Everyone made sure to tie their robes tightly with their belts; all carry-on luggage should be stowed safely during the flight, after all.

“... Let’s go sword-boarding! Yaaayyyyy!” finally, Jin Ling shrieked with glee, like an eight-year old child again.

Han Guang Jun brilliantly spiralled up through the clouds with such grace that the fluffy masses turned into the perfect vanilla soft serve twist, and weaved between diving, biting, stinging Corrupted eagles and vultures in the freezing wintry skies. He didn't need to pluck guqin's strings to drive them off, because he deftly avoided the attacking avians with slight flicks to the sides, or barely noticeable lifts in the pitch of Bichen, before veering off wildly and performed a heart-stopping drop, until his spouse screamed with insane euphoria while hanging upside down from the sturdy sword, and the robe was flipped inside-out from waist down - thank goodness for the Binding spells on the ankles. Wei Ying became breathless, lost a bit of his lunch from nausea, but that didn't stop the younger man from whacking tiny jet-black sparrows armed with barbed wires for claws and bee-stings on their tails, with his flute.

“Wei Ying... lao po ! Are you alright?” the husband yelled as the sword tipped around and returned to its original position, “I tried to avoid crashing into ten swooping falcons from different directions.”

“Yes, yes! Lao gong , do it again! Do it again!” the spouse shrieked with adrenaline-pumped joy and being called that lovely name, “There's another swarm of those bird-insect hybrids coming in at six, nine and three o' clock!”

There wasn't a moment to lose, and the husband indulged in the spouse's request, followed by an echo-ey but fun-filled “Wheeeeeeeee!” punctuated by a burp and croak, when the spouse spewed a glittering mess of more wasted digested lunch into the face of trailing foes. To Wei Ying with a messed-up hair, this was probably one (and only) of the most exhilarating and stomach-wrecking horror-themed roller coaster rides he'd ever had in the blue skies. Interestingly, the Han Guang Jun remained perfectly still and his complexion had never been better, with nary a strand of hair or clothes out of place (because he is still the King of Gods and Men, after all); only his heartbeat raced, which the spouse could feel anyway, as an indication that the middle aged man too, was having his fun living out his dreams as a professional swordboarder.

“This is crazy! If there are this many Corrupted animals going after us in the skies, I cannot imagine what it’d look like on the ground, where wildlife is supposedly even more plentiful!” Jiang Cheng yelled into the bird-screeching din, and punched an ugly, but ferocious vulture with serrated teeth, then received a fist full of bites; while his other hand swung madly until Zidian became an impenetrable gigantic single-blade propeller that sucked enemies out of the skies and pulverized them into dissipating bones, bits of bloodied flesh and feathers.

Jin Ling panicked like a boy swarmed by bees, he kept swatting blindly and recklessly threw pieces of destructive talismans all around, that unnecessary fireballs and glacial spears rocked Sandu’s precarious balance in the air. The boy faced an archer’s worst nightmare - unable to pinpoint a target by sight, and multiples of targets converged too close, way too close for comfort, that neither a blade nor arrowhead could be used, and all he could do was to brace for impact with his battered hands.

“ Jiu jiu! Help! I keep getting eaten up and scratched by the smaller ones... the sparrows, pigeons, starlings, mynahs, and crows!” the Jin gongzi squealed with disgust, still mired in the fear that zombie-making poisons could be transferred from infected claws directly into his bloodstream.

“Hang on, I’ll take us up and away from them!” the heroic jiu jiu roared, and angled Sandu towards the afternoon sun. The sword rose higher and higher, and pitched close to a vertical angle. Jin Ling screamed like a princess then, having left his gut somewhere in the lower stratosphere, and began to lose consciousness.

Jiang Wanyin refuses to be associated with the term ‘swordboarding’, as he regards the activity to be juvenile, niche, hobbyist, a waste of time, and fit for teenagers who have too much energy to spare - however he is skilled enough to perform an aerobatic loop, and returned right behind the flock of small predatory birds. Zidian zapped and shredded them easily with a few swipes; Jin Ling’s body flopped bonelessly and uselessly while remaining standing on Sandu, thanks to the Binding threads that tied him safely to the blade.

Just then, Jin Ling’s unguarded pouch of Twisty Crystal shards loosened a little, and a few fragments flew out. The entire sky turned into flashes of white which ballooned into huge, voluminous plumes of bright yellows, orange and reds, and was swallowed in black smoke in an instant - and everyone’s ear rang from the incredible explosion that accompanied the detonation.

Elsewhere, a faint, but audible dog bark was heard, from somewhere in the forests to the north.

“Fairy!!!” Jin Ling shouted when he was jolted awake by the dearly beloved and missed sounds of his favourite pet.

.

“If the dog can see us, so can the enemy,” Lan Zhan said, his voice was hardly heard in the rush of whistling winds.

“And not a moment too soon! Look! That tall shadow in the fog, near that mountaintop, is tilting... no... it’s that robo-- errr, metallic golem!”

Not far behind, and a little lower, Sandu wobbled.

“ Da jiu! Look down below! The whole forest canopy is coming alive! Even the grass looks strange and everything is shaking, it’s become a blur... the land somehow is rippling, turning black, like deep oceanic waves, a mass of billowing smoke, disintegrating, into... into... a swarm of... Ahhh!... I HATE INSECTS! NO NO NO! AIEEEEEEE!” Jin Ling wailed so loudly that his voice became hoarse, as he grappled his uncle’s waist in utter terror and unspeakable things landed on his body.

“Wei-- hghkk! Wei Wuxian! What manner of horror is this-- pffthhth-- Get off...!!” Jiang Cheng yelled, and received a painful, chittering, prickly slap of disgusting black locusts and bees on his face and nostrils; the skies began to turn dark again just as the smoke from the earlier explosion dispersed, this time the largest insect swarm ever known by the quartet rose to block the sun and choked out daylight - and they were all Corrupted creatures, particularly of the six-legged variety including frightening winged centipedes and scorpions too.

In a matter of seconds, the squad of four was swallowed up by the darkness in mid-air.

Notes for the Chapter:

I can't wait for life to open up after the lockdown, it's been quite an experience to be cooped up at home and having not much freedom to do anything else, or even outside.

Taking a wee break from the child porn, and I hope those people who trolled this fic have either been infected by the virus and died, or have found other people to troll (and I still hope these bullies will die off from the face of the planet, because the world needs less nasty humans around). Lets see where Wangxian's adventures will take us next!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 99

Wei Ying cast one of his old favourites, from the days when he lived in a humble cave-home infested with bugs during nighttime. He knew it'd still work, despite the demonic changes made to the said bugs - a Shield is still a Shield, after all; after adding a Fire spell to create a bubble of noxious fumes (to the bugs, at least), the swarm of insects were kept at bay - for a little while. Those that dared to fly through lost consciousness, and fell harmlessly to the valleys below; but a few still made it through, though in vastly reduced numbers that can be dealt with, by human standards.

“Jiang Cheng! You’ve got a few minutes in the magical Smoke Shield, so take Jin Ling to the metallic golem as fast as you can!” the man cried out above the deafening drone of buzzing insects, while using his flute as a fly-swatter of sorts to whack any rogue critters that dared to penetrate his smoky barrier.

The Jiang sect leader was at a loss at what was happening, but he recognized the basic spells - and mentally told himself to give a scolding at the brother for releasing too much smoke, later. He grunted and sent Sandu speeding through like a knife that pierces a wall of million-strong locusts, bees, and an assortment of unnatural winged creepy crawlies on steroids. Zidian made sure every last biting mosquito or beetle was vaporized by its purple lightning.

As soon as they left the scene, the monstrous chittering swarm surged and thronged the remaining shielded sword, and the collective strength of zillions of flapping microscopic wings began to blow the smoke away. They crowd around the living men and the sword together with its baggage; Bichen began to tilt dangerously to the side, as the cumulative wriggling massive weight began to drag it down to the depths of the mountain range.

“ Lao gong ! Go ahead and protect those two! I don’t care, use your godly powers if you have to!”

“But... lao po !...”

“No buts! I’ll take care of these things! It takes a Dark Arts master to tackle another, so jump off, now!”

Lan Zhan hesitated a bit, but he trusted his spouse as much as the spouse entrusted the safety of their remaining mortal relatives into his hands. With a final nod, the great angelic white Han Guang Jun leapt gracefully from Bichen and dove a straight line towards the fast-disappearing trail of Sandu. His launch released an immense wave of divine qi , which scattered the swarm briefly and knocked out nearly half of the insects - but more kept rising from the surrounding hills to converge on Wei Ying’s little unstable bubble of Smoke Shield.

Wei Ying wasn’t that good at piloting Bichen, despite having dual-cultivated with its owner enough for the sword to recognize him as another master. He wobbled a little and commanded the blade to rise higher, higher, drawing more insects out from large swathes of forests and mountains, and stopped when he saw that the husband was far enough.

The former Yiling Patriarch lowered his flute, which had become coated with black, gooey insect entrails; he really didn’t need an instrument to wreck total destruction, if he wanted to.

So, he whistled - three bone-chilling, ear-piercing notes that struck and broke the core of all spellcasting laws, igniting an ancient, primal and undefeatable force that resides with the Dark side of Creation, vibrating the air around him, plummeting temperatures instantly, casting fear into the hearts of the living and the dead.

The cloudy skies above suddenly swell and spread out, with swirling colours of greys, browns and dark reds, like terrifying bloody radioactive fallout plumes falling from the heavens, consuming everything on sight as they sank lower and lower towards the earth.

Countless bits of dried leaf, twigs and pebbles - the ones that were summoned to the skies the night before by Wei Ying - including all manners of insignificant, inanimate objects and material, powered by a modified Paperman spell, twisted into their most perverse, murderous nature that can easily overwhelm the Living and the Corrupted dead by their sheer numbers - rained upon the swarm and the bubble that shielded the most powerful Dark Arts practitioner the world has ever known. They cut, sliced, annihilated every insect in the vicinity, and those that managed to avoid instant destruction were brought down and quickly buried by the tremendous weight of Mother Nature. It is a tsunami of vengeance - a warning from the man named Wei Wuxian to whoever out there that dared to defy, and tried to usurp him from his Dark throne.

Wei Ying's eyes glowed bloody red, his hair grew much longer, and an evil sneer etched upon his pale face; he transformed to his unholy image of the fearsome Yiling Patriarch.

Lan Zhan knew very well that miracles do not occur unless with divine intervention or if someone pulled the strings of Fate. He nearly lost his fluffy little girl on the day he set out with his lao po from their faraway home, and less than twenty four hours later, he lost both tentacle-y children when they fell down into a river gorge after being mauled by wolves.

He wouldn't count the third try as a roll of dice to try his luck - no, this time he would make sure there is Perfection in every step of the Perfectly executed kill; he would personally engineer Perfection, if he were to have a final say on the outcome of the mission that was doomed from the start.

Any mere mortal cultivator would be slaughtered by Corrupted animals, be it the birds or the bees; and it goes without saying that any mere mortal from the era of 2000 B.C. would be easily stomped and turned into jianbing s by the twenty-foot tall robot armed with 31st century automated intelligent tentacles, arms and legs that moved like a martial arts master, time-shifted capable sensors, armor made of alloys harder than diamonds, plasma lasers that could incinerate trees in a microsecond, missile launchers to decimate adversaries before they could come within a range of a hundred meters, and an angry-looking humanoid head programmed by supercomputers hell-bent on crushing every last man on earth.

The metallic golem, as it is colloquially known, sensed the approaching men as big red dots on its radars before they had reached its mountain, and had activated his armaments and put itself into a ready battle stance - like a transformed mecha from old 21st century shows. It looked like a majestic dark knight from the fables of the Far, Far West, although the wriggly but extremely lethal steel tentacles that grew out of its back and some parts of its torso, suggested anything but noble nor good. Each tentacle was extendable, very flexible, and had pincer-like grappling claws at its tip which could double as perfect piercing, killing tools.

(If Wei Ying could have a say, he'd probably cackle and roll on the floor with childish laughter, saying that the golem looked like a badly-designed cheap colourful plastic copy of a 70's children's show about fighting transforming machines, and would probably make a great sale during Christmas - in the Far, Far West -, and destined to gather dust in children's toy boxes for decades to come.)

For the two mere mortals, it was the biggest, baddest and meanest monster they'd ever faced - even the Dancing Goddess statue from Dafan Mountain was peanuts compared to this giant. The two spent all their time and energy just trying to stay alive and run, leap, fly away from blazing white-hot lasers and missile bombardments; every time they managed to approach within striking distance, the tentacles would whip either of them and slam them into trees and boulders. Jin Ling spit out blood, broke more than a few ribs, and Jiang Cheng was seen to be in great pain, limping from bruises, sprains and internal bleeding. Zidian only managed to land two hits from an admirable distance, but its electrical storms proved to be ant-bites for the metallic monster; its skin was infused with foolproof anti-conductive materials, and impermeable to water for obvious reasons. Those protective materials, including ultra-enhanced plastic and rubber, proved to be quite effective when Jin Ling let loose a barrage of arrows without aim, in blind panic, and every resulting explosion missed or simply bounced off the golem like cotton candy.

There was no time to mount a counterattack, let alone execute their pre-planned Zidian and crystal armed-arrows combo. There was no time to tell each other what to do, or to watch out because a terrible foot-long spear was aimed at the boy's head from above, or to warn the jiu jiu about incoming volleys of shrapnel shells from the behind. So, when five Tian soldiers and their escort of more than fifty undead creations emerged into the clearing to check out the commotion, Lan Zhan had to hold his breath and raise his metaphorical red card to call for a time-out.

.

The spouse whistled at the scene of carnage, and shook his head in disappointment. He stepped off a hovering Bichen, onto some wintergrass, and promptly flinched when he tripped a little over an unexploded missile head and nearly into a lightsaber-like beam of laser. He ended up walking through dirt and rocks floating in mid-air, and deftly avoided the very real three-dimensional image of a detonating bomb - touching the fiery areas could still melt away one's skin and he'd suffer third degree burns.

“Lao gong , you know, I expected you'd do better than this,” he sighed. He made a finger-hook gesture to call the husband to come out from the forest canopy. “Come down here, and I'll only count to three! One... Two...” he shouted into the total silence - everything was frozen in time, after all.

A flutter of robes, and the downcast husband landed gracefully next to him. The spouse wasted no time to pull an earlobe with one hand, and spanked the man's buttocks repeatedly with the other. Lan Zhan moaned again and again, regardless of whether he felt pleasure or pain.

“You're a bad husband,” slap! - followed by a nnngh, “Recklessly putting my relatives in grave danger with your inaction,” smack! , “I really don't know if there's something wrong with your head,” thwack! , “Or your guts,” whack! , “I’ll punish you again and again because you’re a useless man, and I always have to tell you what to do to get things done properly!” spank!

The fearsome spouse harshly ordered the husband to pull his pants down - right in the middle of a frigid winter - and the husband pitifully gave in. Three layers of garments off and a loosened loincloth crumpled on the dirt, the spouse grabbed the limp penis nestled in pubic curls so hard, that the husband moaned loudly, regardless of whether in pleasure or pain (again). He gave the husband the best handjob with many tasty spanks on the naked, perky, tight springy ass until the skin blossomed with palm prints and pinch marks.

The penile strokes were relentless, moving back and forth at a merciless pace, the husband cried out when he felt his cock was melting, heating up, tightening up and ready to unload, hardening into a molten rocket and soon launched itself into heavens and the outer space, in ten impressive arcs of milky whites (and he saw stars and Milky Ways in his vision, his body convulses, his hips nearly flew off their joints from powerful instinctive pleasurable thrusts through the spouse’s fist), another ten lesser arching fountains of diluted opaqueness (everything spins, the starry universe comes alive, his legs become jelly, he cannot breathe, screams caught inside his throat, but his penis keeps firing shot after shot, the spouse’s vice-like grip doesn’t stop its torturous pumping motions), and the last ten miserable spurts resembled watery whitish pee, dribbling uselessly, splattering on the ground, leaving its passenger sperm cells to die in the cold, cruel wintry air (he is dying, again and again, when the pace of orgasmic seizures wrecking his body overwhelms his nervous system, his cock is rubbed raw, and the hand that was abusing his buttocks moved to the front to give the softening organ a royal, brutal and savage polish - and he skyrocketed straight to heaven.)

“Now, you listen to me, lao gong ! You take out the metal trash over there, make sure those Tian soldiers and their fierce corpses at that corner are permanently erased from this universe, then look for Fairy and retrieve the carts. I’ll arrange those two so that they’re comfortable on the grass, and safe from harm,” the spouse gave the very lopsided instructions, and assigned the bulk of the damage-control work to the significant other, while his hands continued to busy themselves with a rubbing-kneading-brushing-wiping-circling routine that has become as familiar as their every days.

Lan Zhan wasn’t really listening at point; his body lay boneless against the spouse, his throat made delicious pleading howls, his face etched in agony from the ecstasy scorching his pelvis and singed his nerve-ends, and his plumbing had broke - the over six-inch long penis jerked and swung freely, squirting hot pee mixed with godly semen everywhere, spraying nourishing liquids to the dry, barren ground.

.

Being one of the clean-up crew didn’t feel any different from his daily work of sweeping floors with a straw broom. Remove the filth and the dust, pick up things and return them to where they belong, clean up so that everything is back to normal, to the way things were before, back to the point of origin - then rinse and repeat. The concepts are clear, and inculcated into his teachings and practice.

He poked the leg of the giant hulk of metal, and it suddenly became alive, roaring and swinging its limbs and tentacles into a whirlwind of lethal whips and pounding fists.

“Kneel.”

In an instant, the robot buckled under its own weight with a deafening crash, and was down to its knees. It was confused, infuriated, fuming jets of steam from its nostrils. It roared again, enraged at the man in white who seemed so tiny in comparison, who dared to command him with a single word, and wielded such unimaginable powers; it tried to lift its arms and tentacles, but to no avail; everything creaked, metal screeched, twist and bend at its efforts to resist, yet none of its body parts obeyed to rise up against the man that stood in front of him like a tempting target.

He raised an arm to his chest in prayer, and started to chant.

“A creature born without love, therefore cannot comprehend compassion,

Made with unfeeling hands, destined to kill, cursed eternally to be merciless,

Possessed by a voided soul, therefore you have no right to live and thrive on this world,

I judge you to be innocent of your crime that is to exist in this lifetime.

You have struggled much to stay alive in this place that does not welcome you.

You should rest now, your battle is over, therefore you will finally find peace in the darkness whence you came from.

I am all-compassionate, all-seeing.

I hereby deliver you from the suffering of this wretched existence.

Namo Amitabha.”

A single Buddha's Palm, as large and wide as an ancient thousand-year bodhi tree, burning with fury of holy flames, fell from the sky.

.

Later, an enchanted willow branch dipped into a narrow vase filled with everflowing divinely water, and the branch was flicked dry. The God of Mercy sprinkled droplets on the surrounding undead creatures and their female human mistresses, whose armour and weapons bore the Imperial Court's insignia. They disintegrated into black ash, and blew away by unseen winds into nothingness.

.

The husband hauled up a dog, three carts, and his relatives' fallen equipment with a single hand, and a massive section of the former metallic golem's chestplate with the other, and trudged towards the spouse with very heavy footsteps; the golem's chestplate easily weighed several tonnes.

“ Lao gong , what do you think? I tried to cast your repertoire of Healing spells, but I’m not sure if I’ve reached deep enough, or if I’ve made any significant progress. There are just too many bodily injuries, I can’t figure out how to fix them up! I think Jin Ling still has punctured lungs because I can’t seem to get him to breathe properly, and Jiang Cheng over there has his leg twisted in a strange angle,” the spouse complained. He had worked hard - he’d clumsily dragged each man to a small clearing, and whined about suffering from an aching back after that; it’s a terrible occupational hazard, he said. Jin Ling’s arrows dropped all over the place, while the jiu jiu ’s Zidian ring went missing somewhere in the bushes along with Sandu, and further away, Suihua too. He wasn’t worried, though, because he told the husband to take responsibility to search and pick them up.

“Mn. I will check and complete the necessary treatments.”

Wei Ying stood up and stretched, then yawned lazily. “Wow, lao gong , that Buddha’s Palm was really something! My back felt hot and I was nearly burnt from that meteoric heat! And now, my hair’s all messed up because of the resulting shockwaves! So, you better comb my hair and tie it up properly when we’re done!” he praised and complained to the husband - he has very high expectations, and it seemed Lan Zhan’s performance today wasn’t really up to mark.

“Mn. I will comb and tie your hair, lao po .”

Lan Zhan gingerly placed the items one by one on the ground.

“AHHHH! Get that four legged thing away from me!” the spouse cried, and lifted a leg to distance himself from the panting husky, whose face looked like a frozen snapshot of its calm, cheerful self. Wei Ying accidentally kicked the dog’s snout, and Fairy fell to the side with a dull thud, like a giant stuffed toy.

“T-T- Throw it over there, tie it to a tree with a leash or a vine, I don’t care! I don’t want it to come near me when you lift the time-stop spell! And... arrange Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling’s equipment over there, next to the bush. You can start a campfire there. Did you find Zidian? It’s awfully small, being a ring. Oh, you did? Good. And that big square-ish plate, flip it so that it becomes a table for us to put our stuff. You can start unloading the cart and work on preparing dinner when you’re done... oh, lao gong , I’m so hungry, and my biceps hurt after carrying these two overweight buffoons for, can you believe it, more than twenty meters! You better make something good tonight, otherwise my stomach will grumble from hunger and you won’t be able to sleep!” the spouse continued to blabber non-stop, spouting complaints and dishing out vague instructions and veiled threats - however, the husband was satisfied because he could watch lively Wei Ying pout, frown, and make all those adorable facial expressions - including his lovable, bright smile - at the same time.

“Mn. I will,” the husband murmured in universal agreement, and started to carry out the spouse’s instructions.

Wei Ying turned around and tip-toed a bit to give a sweet kiss on the husband’s cheeks, and patted the increasingly warmed, pinkish complexion. “Good boy, you’re a wonderful husband after all” he complimented.

In the spirit of Wei Ying-ness, nothing goes to waste and everything should be perverted to the best possible ways. While waiting for the herbal chicken soup to simmer and venison, mutton and beef steaks to marinade in juicy spices, or for Jin Ling's broken bones and Jiang Cheng's critical injuries to heal - while in a time-stopped world - the spouse invited the husband for a round of sex in the wilderness.

They tried to rut amongst the pine trees, but Wei Ying complained that being pounded with his back against a tree trunk didn't feel as good as it looked on a preview of a particularly famous porn show, because getting scratched by tree bark wasn't fun at all (in which Lan Zhan blushed seven shades of red, because he'd already watched the whole saucy steamy series at nights, with two re-runs). Then he turned around and raised one leg, then asked the husband to drill him from behind, and cried rape, incest, 'daddy please make me pregnant', 'please rape my pussy and plant many A-Ji and A-Xians inside my belly', and 'oh you feel so good inside me, please shoot all your sperms (sic) into my waiting eggs' (with plenty of laughter and snickering in between), et cetera ad nauseum , riling up the husband's desire to unheard-of levels.

Five minutes into the breeding, the husband became too passionate, too excited - his wildly twitching engorged penis danced its one-twos repeatedly until rich dollops of semen started to trickle out of the sweet tunnel of love - and he thrust too hard, penetrated too deep, that Wei Ying lost his balance on one leg, and the couple fell into a noisy heap on the bitterly cold ground. The husband kept pumping his hips with such ruthlessness - because his logical mind had shut down, and he was in essence, a lust-driven beast -, that the spouse yelped at the abrasion on his hands, and the crushing weight of the mounting animal , and he tried to crawl away, swat the offending buck in heat, but Lan Zhan kept his grip on Wei Ying's lower body and continued to fuck at every opportunity.

Finally, Wei Ying had a change of heart - fifteen minutes into the outdoor sex - and decided that he didn't really like the whole setup after all, especially because it was too cold and he goosebumped all over - it was like making love on an ice cube. So, he slowly crawled on all fours to a nearby stream - thank goodness the water was heated from a nearby thermal source - with the husband mating endlessly from above and behind - it would look terribly comical for such a highly-esteemed Gusu Lan man to crawl on all fours, tailing closely another man joined to the hips, with his hips fluttering faster than a butterfly's wings, his angry-red arousal visibly sawing in and out constantly into the latter's leaking asshole. Once inside the comfortably heated waters, Wei Ying sighed in relief and maneuvered their bodies so that he could enjoy his favourite sex position with the husband.

.

“ Lao gong , would it be considered sacrilegious to have sex in front of, or heaven forbid, with a supposedly ascetic Buddha god?” Wei Ying asked in wonder, as he bounced his ass on the husband's supremely hard, pulsing meatstick, with plenty of squelchy sounds, rippling water surfaces, and foamy milky white strands leaking out from where the two men intertwined in the hot springwater.

“Or indulge in a carnivorous banquet of forbidden foods such as meats and you know, stuff that involves the killing of life, with a God of Mercy that's supposed to be compassionate and merciful?” he clenched his buttocks, and made sure every sweet tight moist fold inside his rectum properly gripped and massaged the suffering organ that had surged, inflated and spilled more than three times in succession, without respite.

“Or just in general, indulge excessively in sins that religions usually frown upon, such as greed for gold nuggets, laziness in earning an honest living, being the envy and source of jealousy just because we’re living the life of celebrities, the super-rich and famous, landlords of many realms... you know, that sort of thing,” Wei Ying leaned forward, and let the husband suckle his sparse chest - just as the husband’s waistline had been expanding little by little over the years, so has Wei Ying’s breast size; his nipples puffed up a bit more compared to his younger days, and there was a noticeable sag, or fatty voluptuous bulge - or cleverly-hidden pectoral muscles, depending on whose views one subscribes to -, and he giggled when the husband nearly chewed the nipples and simultaneously picked up the furious pace of drilling into the spouse’s stretched, clamping, squeezezy rosebud. Wei Ying looked down to admire the view of how the husband’s face, neck and chest flared from a healthy slight tan to deep carnation pinks, as sweat beaded on the skin, muscles seized in increasingly pleasurable contractions, tasty sounds coming out from the throat, and he watched, mesmerized, at the offending waistline - those yummy-looking love handles that shyly peek out when the husband sat or curl a little - jiggled in violent waves in tandem with the ageless rhythm sweet hard fucking, trying to spear farther into the spouse, with a single-minded mission to reach the man’s innermost chambers and sow his seeds with the greatest volcanic eruption ever.

The husband could only moan weakly in response. He’d lost his rational thought and speech two orgasms ago. “For...you...” croaked the sweat-covered, shivering, nearly-dying man who lived to sing praises for his spouse, agree with everything the younger man said, and wanted - at that moment - nothing more than to spend his entire life with his shuddering penis living inside the warm, lovely, moist, hot, tight and undulating cavern of his lao po .

Wei Ying perked up with interest from those words, and embraced the husband from the shoulders below while riding fast, to ensure the husband could truly appreciate the meaning of engaging in hardcore sexual intercourse and insemination. He added thoughtfully, “Of course. What is yours is mine.”

Wei Ying decreed that it’s perfectly fine for the ungodly men to continue copulating like rabbits, enjoy good food like greedy mortals, and indulge in seven, fifty, even hundreds of flesh-bound sins as long as they belong to each other, godhood and religion be damned. With his conscience cleared, he proceeded to extract another few more orgasms from the dying husband, and Lan Zhan had never been happier in his life (especially his overheated, melted loins that had been emptied too many times until only vacuum space remained).

.

“Dinner is ready, lao po ,” the husband calmly called out from his makeshift kitchen stove on top of the golem’s chestplate - it was as long and as wide as a huge buffet table. Appetizing bite sized delicacies not unlike tapas and sushis, garden salads, oven roasts, juicy steaks, grilled meats and vegetables, five different varieties of congee, broths and soups, rice and noodle stir-fries, sweet and warm fried desserts, jellies and puddings, a selection of premium quality tropical fruits - all dishes were arranged in perfect sequential order on the table-like construction lined with a cover of plucked and woven wintergrass and reeds, accompanied by natural stone and pebble formations as decor for a rather atmospheric, natural setting of a sumptuous meal in the woods.

“Ahh, lao gong , it’s still early in the afternoon for the other two, so it wouldn’t be dinnertime for them yet. Plus, I’m having a hard time trying to figure out how to explain the situation. I could start a white lie, like saying that they fainted and we saved them - however, as a consequence, I’ll have to keep coming up with more and more fantastical lies to maintain the story's integrity, and the vicious cycle would keep repeating into a degenerate train wreck. Or, I could tell them the truth, but no mere human will believe us, really. Oh, what should we do, Lan Zhan?" Wei Ying whined, while he idled his time away under a tree, chewing on a reed, scratching his tummy, his head in the clouds, and relished the feeling of residual cum leaking from his fondly destroyed ass - proof of undying love from the husband.

Lan Zhan paused, then thoughtfully muttered, "It doesn't have to be a lie or the truth. We could create a new truth that wouldn't necessarily be a lie."

Wei Ying brightened up, almost spontaneously, at those cryptic words.

Later, Wei Ying took up an imaginary role as a film producer, screenwriter, and art director, and pointed to the husband with a half-eaten roasted chicken drumstick. Lan Zhan did everything else; he was instructed to position the fully-recovered Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling in designated spots in mid-air, adjusted their limbs and facial expressions, even made sure that Zidian looked like it was really whipping up an action-packed featurette, and the hovering arrows from the boy's bow was properly angled to the skies.

"Higher! Higher! No, no the left arm! And now, the right leg - no, don't lift it anymore! It has to bend a bit - bend, do you hear me?! - Of course you have to flex it upwards, otherwise there will be a lack of realism in this scene!" the spouse yelled spiritedly with a mouth full of food, and complained, "Lao gong ! The whole thing looks tilted! Use your eyes, you need to make sure that it stays balanced! Urrrgh... I can't be doing everything by myself!" while he huffed and puffed to drag a single unexploded missile along the ground. He took a short break after putting that missile in the perfect spot - while the husband had arranged the other twenty armed projectiles - and went to the cart, where the husband had carefully stowed away their dinner (it was such a waste, to have prepared everything, only to be stored again inside the cramped bottom of the transport - but the husband never protested), and snuck a greasy hand into the special space-time bubble portal to retrieve a glass of iced tropical fruit mix.

Up in the forest canopy, Lan Zhan stood on a tree branch and carefully wiggled his ten fingers - he used a god-tiered version of Invisible Hands to place everything in their positions following the spouse's finicky, unwritten, but highly imaginative script - including fired laser beams, select Twisty Crystal shards that had been set to detonate in the next second, and the entire empty shell of the crushed metallic golem which had been painstakingly knocked back into shape, and weighed several thousands tonnes.

Wei Ying flew up the pine trees to stand by the husband's side. Pleased with their film shooting studio of sorts, and how every actor and prop have been set in place, he let Lan Zhan have a big bite of the drumstick that he ate moments ago, and shared a few sips of the sweet tropical drink together, while admiring their handiwork from high above.

.

“Three... Two... One... Action!”

In this re-start of reality, Jiang Cheng gasped at first and his eyes widened in bewilderment, when he felt a sudden surge of renewed energy (and felt a hundred times better), and perhaps, a little dizzy because the metallic golem suddenly shifted its position. Its back faced him, although it looked more beaten-up than he remembered, and there were crazy explosions, smoke, blazing lasers and whizzing missiles everywhere - he had no time to think or to process his disoriented thoughts. Everything was foggy, covered with noxious burning fumes and ashes littered the entire scene of war-torn carnage.

Zidian swerved and curled around Jin Ling's legs right on time, to his surprise, but not a moment too soon. He yelled, "Now, Jin Ling! I'm sending you straight towards its neck! Make sure you hit it with everything you've got!" The monster creaked ominously, metal screeched against metal - there was no roar -, and it seemed to move sluggishly, the tentacles flapped around uselessly - all the better, in this life-and-death situation -, so the timing was perfect for the final critical strike.

Jin Ling was confused too, because he clearly recalled being slammed to a tree, not flying up towards the golem's back while feeling strangely recharged - but who cares, for a late-teen with too much adrenaline and panic pumping through his blood -, so he wholeheartedly took his jiu jiu 's orders and propelled himself to the skies when Zidian flung him like a ragdoll at supersonic speeds. There were too many explosions everywhere, his ears were ringing, and he couldn't see clearly, let alone identify a clear target on the said monster's neck - he thought the explosions were from his previous reckless barrage of crystal-armed arrows -, but he had to believe that he could see with his heart, as advised by his jiu jiu and da jiu ; Jin Ling closed his eyes, reached behind to grab his last five crystal-armed arrows and pulled the bowstring. He couldn't see anything anyway - there was too much smoke, his lungs were choked with burning metal and pine, his fingers were trembling from too much nervousness, excitement and fear in trying to strike the metallic monster with his final shot.

The boy blindly released the arrows into the thick billowing smoke - all of them missed - but the biggest, grandest explosion happened anyway. Suddenly, like a puppet with its strings cut off, the golem crashed into a pile of twisted metal with resounding clangs and empty, hollow but still terrifying clatters. The great Han Guang Jun emerged as (previously) promised from the shadowy forests, and caught a shriek-y Jin Ling, in bridal style and right on time. Together, the two flew away from the radius of destruction. Jiang Cheng ran with Sandu in tow and tripped several times through some dense, prickly undergrowth; he succeeded to avoid getting smouldered by ballooning dust clouds swept up by swirling icy winds.

Along the way, Jin Ling screamed in happiness when he saw Fairy, alive and well, tied to a tree; Jiang Cheng grinned too, when their carts came into sight - the bulky wooden board that bore the Jiang family name was intact.

Finally, mountain fog seemed to clear on its own. The view pans out - Wei Ying appeared on the other side of the forest to welcome them with open arms, and a wide welcome-back smile.

(... and Cut!)

Notes for the Chapter:

Crazy twists and turns, bring 'em on! :-D It's fun going on a wild ride with Wangxian!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 100

The band of merry travellers would journey on for a few more days deeper into the mountains, mostly by foot rather than flight, because the weather system took a turn for the worse, and because it was impossible to get Fairy with its three carts off the ground. It seemed the dog, they discovered and to the men's amusement, was a little afraid of heights - especially when Jin Ling tried to train it to sit on its haunches and balance on narrow Sandu with just two legs (in which the overweight husky would bark in dogspeak annoyance of 'Give me a break', and tumble down back to earth).

Along the way, they popped by a few abandoned villages-turned-zombie making outposts, and slayed a number of Imperial patrols of Tian soldiers and their supernatural forces, including fierce corpses, vampires, phantoms, and Corrupted creatures; Jin Ling even bagged the achievement of being the first (probably) mortal to defeat a thirty-foot tall golem made of stones, thanks to the crystal-armed arrows. The use of Twisty Crystals made the boy bolder during battles, better in his aim, and more importantly, he racked up more kills than his sourgrape jiu jiu - which sparked a friendly competition between the two on who could bring down more Imperial goons.

Jiang Cheng, not one to admit defeat easily, pestered his elder brother and finally, he was taught to feed Zidian with fragments of those crystals and "let's see what happens". Recklessness was not really in his blood, but the man's desire not to lose face to his nephew pushed him to take the plunge and let the purple-silver serpentine demigod feast on the powerful crystals. (It is a creepy sight to watch the metallic silver snake wiggle alive on the man's hand, then open its mouth widely before a shard is placed between its fangs. It hissed, swallowed, and ended up looking like a snake that had swallowed a fat chicken and had trouble digesting it.)

The results were remarkable - Zidian powered up immensely and could cleanly slice off anything as tall as a man, and whip anything else bigger to topple it, cause tremendous damage, then shred it into smaller, more manageable chunks - often causing instant death to the said toppled monstrous giants. Jin Ling hmph'd and showed off what he could do with ten-shot arrows armed with multiple crystal shards, controlled by an increasingly honed Paperman skill - which basically meant that the boy was able to launch homing missiles with nuclear warhead-like firepower at any time. Then, the jiu jiu seethed in (mock) jealousy, and showed what a real master cultivator can do, if he put his brains into it - and made ten Zidian tentacle-whips sprout out from his ring; which made the sect leader look terrifying with a badass blazing lightning glove or sorts.

Things were beginning to look up for the quartet, so it was a surprise when they came across a major intersection and the road forked into two, and the jolly crew decided to split. To the north, a large shiny gilded sign spelled out Lanling province. To the east and just up ahead, a touristy poster with pretty scenic pictures painted on it, depicting the famous mist-covered mountains of Gusu, with plain and humbly printed words that spelled out the same name of that province.

Jin Ling, who had grown up a bit more during the expedition from Lotus Pier until that point, blurted out with astonishing confidence that he would like to return to Lanling because he was worried about the state of his homeland. Jiang Cheng echoed the boy's thoughts, and drew parallels on how the Han Guang Jun must've felt towards Gusu - everyone wanted to check how their loved ones and their hometowns are doing during these apocalyptic times. The sect leader finally admitted, with slightly shaky breaths, that ironically, he realized that he was no longer the leader of his sect, because there were no more Jiang members in the Middle Kingdom other than him.

“Ah... so you finally noticed,” Wei Ying remarked, rather downtrodden, because he felt he had lost something invaluable too.

“Yeah... da ge , by now you would also notice that I’m closer to the Jin family since raising Jin Ling, and I have visited and attended their meetings more than the other sects. I feel obligated to take our nephew to have a look, with our own eyes, if there are survivors, and if we can lend our help to them,” Jiang Cheng replied, shuffled his feet hesitantly, like a little brother asking permission from his elders to take a walk - or, to leave the nest.

“But everything is already destroyed - you’ve seen all the villages, towns and cities that we’ve passed through. There is no one left alive,” the Han Guang Jun tried to inject some sense into the conversation.

“ Ge fu , call it a gut feeling. I somehow think it’s the right thing to do by taking this path,” Jiang Cheng pointed at the gold-plated sign that still sparkled despite bits of dust and probably a piece of someone’s bloodied clothes hanging from it, “to find out for myself, and for Jin Ling. If it’s of any assurance, we can promise to meet you in Yiling when this whole thing blows over,” he said with a steadfast gaze.

Wei Ying knew his younger brother more than anyone, and made a small wave of hand behind his back to signal the husband that there’s no need to persuade the awakened, resolute heart using the cold logic of the mind. Lan Zhan nodded in vague acceptance, and stepped back.

Wei Ying hugged Jiang Cheng, who gasped at the sudden display of brotherhood and intimacy. Jin Ling opened his mouth in shock.

“If that’s what you’ve decided, then no one has the right to say otherwise because you are the master of your own destiny. Take the three carts with you and make sure to get Fairy to exercise enough by pulling them. I want that fat dog to be fit and healthy when I see the two of you in Yiling by the next Spring Festival,” he murmured. Then, he released his grasp on the Jiang gongzi and hugged a yelping Jin Ling.

“You too, take care of your jiu jiu . The cart has lots of delicious Wangxian-branded food to sustain both of you and the dog for the duration of your trip to the north. There are pouches of Twisty Crystals at the bottom, so make sure you share them with your uncle when you fight with those nasty Imperial soldiers. Tell me the final scores and the winner, when we meet again in the Market Streets of Yiling city,” he said, and Jin Ling started to cry (because he’s still a sensitive late-teen for his age). He shrieked with anguish “Da jiu!”, then nodded fervently.

Fairy woofed, and Wei Ying let it lick the end of Suibian’s scabbard one last time, for old time’s sake.

.

“Was it the right thing to do?” the husband asked, as they waved at silhouettes disappearing into the foggy morning, with the rising sun casting golden glows on every surface the rays touched.

“Who knows? They wouldn’t survive till sundown without us. We’ve been keeping them alive by assisting them in every battle with the Imperial forces. Heaven knows how many times you’ve had to stop time to fix your mess, and I was starting to become sick of it,” the spouse lowered his hands and shrugged, then sighed, at an invisible burden that was starting to lift from his shoulders. Sure, the officials in the Heavenly Palace were keeping tabs of the couple’s performance, but Wei Ying wasn’t too enthusiastic to know how miserable they’ve fared - the fate of the two mortals were, realistically, similar as the metallic golem they’d defeated days ago; unfit to live in this shattered, Corrupt-undead infested world, and should be spirited away to somewhere else.

“... that’s a rather cold attitude you have towards your relatives, and I don’t see how you could be happy about the outcome,” the husband remarked impassively.

“Nah,” the spouse refuted, and hooked an arm around the husband’s, out of bad habit (or maybe, the unsaid need for physical comfort), “Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling are rather warmed up to me by now, and that’s more than I can ever wished for, for the past three years. I was called da ge by my younger brother, and da jiu by my nephew - I’m a very happy man now, lao gong .”

Then, Wei Ying turned around and leaned his weight into the husband with an ‘oof!’, and the latter reacted by catching the spouse in his arms. Wei Ying acted as coy and as he is affectionate, “About the outcome, lao gong , you know what to do. You promised, and no buts,” and the spouse gave The Sexy Look - he twirled a lock of hair and bit it between his pouty lips, fluttered his eyelashes, and wiggled his body while in the embrace of the slightly irritated husband.

Lan Zhan nnngh'd. More godly - actually, husbandly - duties to check-off in his to-do list, to keep his spouse happy, in a Happily Ever After manner.

The great Han Guang Jun, also the Jade Emperor, the Lord Buddha and God of Mercy, would Perfectly engineer a Happy Ending for his two relatives. Both would encounter a band of marauding Imperial goons armed with 31st-century weaponry in the next couple of hours, and be humbled in defeat, then blasted into smithereens within seconds, because Jin Ling will, in all likelihood, miss his shots, and Jiang Cheng's sword and enhanced whip are truthfully ineffective against such superior technology. Of note, Twisty Crystals do not really do anything to 31st-century things, just as a bullet doesn't bite as much when shot at a bullet-proof vest.

However, Lan Zhan, who has absolute control over the space-time-fate continuum of the Mortal Realm, would make sure to teleport the two out of danger at the last microsecond with a memorable fwip!, and send them to an immigration processing center.

He wondered if Jiang Cheng would make a capable store manager for a convenience store in Yiling; he could whip tens of workers into shape and earn a good profit for the company selling foodstuff, household goods, and the odd time-inappropriate gadgets for rogue non-human customers. If his performance is stellar, and if he shows a knack for iron-fist leadership, the company might consider promoting him to manage sweatshop and slave-driven franchises and factories too.

Jin Ling would probably remain unemployed and housed in an opulent Wangxian-branded eight-star hotel chain (with all expenses paid by Lan Zhan's Godly Credit Card, of course) until he passed an examination for immigrants to the Kingdom - he'd learnt enough about the Wangxian company, its foods and various household products, an abbreviated history of the Kingdom's First Fathers, and even could write a short essay about the use of Twisty Crystals which is a form of currency for the Kingdom. Bright, curious and brave Jin Ling would probably be better off starting as a Management Trainee while still brimming with confidence about his life prospects - the fallacy of youth, really; he could slowly work his way up the corporate ladder from serving coffee to serving company policies in the 888-floor headquarters tower of the mighty Wangxian Co. Ltd.

Ah, and who can forget the fluff named Fairy? The couple had no plans for the dog, other than to keep it away from the spouse and all Wei-kins as far as possible. The husband thought they might let the husky serve alongside the Heavenly Sun-Eating chow chows to guard their estate, or maybe let it live its Perfect Happily Ever After as a lab specimen to test Wangxian's pet food line and doggie treats for an entire lifetime, with visitation rights given to the Jin gongzi if deemed necessary.

In either case, Lan Zhan had telepathically sent an official request to his servants in the Heavenly Court to secure and process their paperwork, and issue them temporary working visas as soon as possible.

“Lan Zhan ah Lan Zhan, there you go, dozing off in your daydreaming with your eyes wide open,” the spouse giggled and waved at the husband's face. The husband blinked - he was too deep in his thoughts, again. The spouse tightened the hook of their arms, and started to drag the husband towards the east, towards the dazzling sunrise that beckoned to them invitingly.

The mountains, rivers and valleys of Gusu await them.

.

Ten steps later, Wei Ying suddenly pulled Lan Zhan into a bush at the side of the road, and started undressing. The wife desperately wants the elusive hardcore fuck away from prying eyes of nosy relatives (who are gone, thankfully), and the husband indulges in the request, although he would very much prefer slow, sensual lovemaking anytime.

.

With the thirtieth ejaculation, there is immediate relaxation, tension disappeared, swaying lower and lower, finding relief in the sinking darkness - a sense of floating bonelessly in space along the Milky Way, although the milk had been drained out too many times that there's nothing left, except the sweet, sweet closing act of succumbing into the world of dreams and nightmares.

.

“Oh, A-Ji, A-Ji, my sweet baby, you always make this shushu so happy all day and night, tighten up that hot ass of yours... ooh, I'm seeing stars, shushu cannot hold back anymore, feel my mighty babymaker jerk fifteen times inside your sweet baby womb, take it, take it, open your pussy wider and drink my sperm, get pregnant, make lots of babies inside for me, sweetheart... oooh, oooh... uuuh... uuuh... ahn, ahn, hahh, hahh, hnngh, hnngh, here it comes, OOH BABY BABY I'm raping your pussy! UUH UUH AAH OOH rape rape rape rape get raped now! HNN HNN NNHGH I'm raping your uterus! Filing you up! It feels so good! OOH HONEY BABY SWEET MOTHER OF GUANYIN I'm raping your eggs! My sperms are raping your baby eggs! AAAAAAAAH!"

Uncle Wei had been going at it since pre-dawn, and happily injected many orgasms into the child's sleep-warmed body. Ever since the entire grade school closed down pending a secretive, well-concealed investigation by the Grand Lan Elder Council after receiving numerous complaints from parents (of children getting high and acting disorderly outside of the school compounds, and of adolescents returning home with bruises, pain and often, dribbling strange smelly, sticky milk-like substance around their private parts), Xi Chen as one of the exemplary seniors within the Cloud Recesses, had been conscripted to emergency educational services for the sect. He had to move to a hostel and live there for about a couple of months, to serve as a substitute teacher in an offsite famous and elite multi-sect boarding school where remaining Lan children and disciples alike were temporarily placed.

Xi Chen remarked that he was really appreciative of the opportunity to teach, because it meant that he could earn decent wages as a teacher, meal and board included, and peruse their libraries, sports facilities and outdoors practice fields to improve his cultivation skills with other seniors. The elder Lan brother almost begged a weepy, crying A-Ji to let him pursue his dreams of going to that all-expense paid retreat that only families of aristocrats and nobles had the privilege of sending their children to. Little A-Ji couldn't understand what the whole situation really meant, but he knew in his heart that he would never want to disappoint his elder brother ever again.

With Xi Chen out of the way, their neighbour gleefully moved in. It turned out that the guest houses opposite the brothers' home were earmarked for development and turned to rubble the same day. With the dingy dungeon gone, Uncle Wei knocked on the door a few minutes after Xi Chen left, his hands full of his belongings and a couple of jars of Emperor Smiles.

Trembling little A-Ji cautiously opened the door, and he was every bit scared of the sight of the greasy, smiling neighbour, who curtly asked if he could stay until he could find another suitable lodging.

“Your brother would be so heartbroken, if he heard that the neighbour got sick because he had nowhere to sleep in the cold, freezing nights. Oh dear, what would happen to him, if he couldn’t do his teaching job properly, and had to be kicked out of that school?” the sly, habitual liar suggested with a fake look of concern in his eyes.

Barely after the man walked in through the open wooden door with the happiest smile etched on his unwashed, sweaty face, the luggage was dropped into a messy pile, and the door was locked. The curtains were drawn, the windows were shut. Little A-Ji was raped again and again, his xiao ji ji was abused repeatedly until the body became a heap of inappropriate child-like tasty moans, uncontrollable tingles and drug-induced drunken giggles, throughout the day, and for many days to come. It didn’t matter if the vegetable patch became brown from the lack of care - because only the elder brother knew how to farm, and he wasn’t around to save the vegetables, let alone his victimized little brother -, or if the boy didn’t attend school anymore - because it was closed anyway, and nobody in the Cloud Recesses recognized that the boy had been held against his will by the rapist. Uncle Wei had made himself comfortable to stay (almost permanently) inside the little boy, on the boy’s cute rabbit-themed bed, in the boy’s dark, unlit lonesome home.

.

Uncle Wei lounged on the floor, scratched his exposed hairy belly, and let out a smelly wet fart; A-Ji had made his favourite lotus root pork rib soup and noodle stir-fry for lunch, but he thought the noodles were a little too oily.

“Aaaa-Jiiii, bring me a cup of tea, to help me digest the wonderful lunch you made just now,” the man called and then yawned sleepily, before letting out a loud, long string of crude burps. He had done nothing all day except to laze around in the trash-littered house, drink his wine, read the comics section of the periodicals, and of course, have wild mad sex with the boy imprisoned inside his home. Once in a while, he’d make a few Fairy Messenger calls to his suppliers to bring them needed household goods and fresh food and cooking ingredients, using his ill-gotten gains from gambling and cheating - he was the one who lodged an anonymous complaint to the Council, complete with documentary proof that the headmaster received bribes for selling the schoolchildren’s virginities, and records that the twenty and more foreign men who entered the school grounds under the pretense of being gainfully employed as certified laoshi s, were in fact, hardcore convicts that recently escaped the dungeons of Chang’an. The trap sprung and the criminals taken away in Binding Spell handcuffs, the treasures of his twenty fellow merry friends were easily pocketed for his private consumption. Uncle Wei was, in all respect, the richest man in the province - and he personally arranged for Xi Chen to be sent to the faraway, and very luxurious, very expensive boarding school too.

(Unknown to the residents, the terrible liar also illegally sold the land of the guest houses by faking the signature of a Council member. He profited personally from the sale, and made sure to arrive at the Lan brothers’ doorsteps at five minutes past eight in the morning, right after Xi Chen left for his teacher assignment.)

Little A-Ji shivered as he approached with a tray and a cup of steaming tea. “Here is your tea, shushu ,” the boy whispered, nearly afraid of making any noise louder than a squeak. The oily uncle eyed the boy hungrily up and down, and let his eyes feast on the boy's (imagined) virginal nakedness. The pre-teen blushed in response and squeezed his thighs where he stood - he had been trained to grow hard in the presence of the rapist, after having his genitals attacked too many times, until they malfunctioned and could only sing praises and tingles for the man that taught the cute baby penis and its twin plump juicy eggs about an adult's marvellous pleasures.

"Mmmm... come, come, and hold the tea for a little while longer," the uncle murmured. Little A-Ji understood and took a step forward. Uncle Wei used his fingers to pull back the loosened foreskin and admired the sweet pinkish glans that glistened in the dim light. Another hand started to play and jiggle the balls that had been inflicted by too much abuse that they resembled more like a grown-up's wrinkly, heavy and dark ballsacks. The man chuckled, then leisurely, with all the time he had in the world with this helpless child, assaulted the boy's underdeveloped, immature genitals until A-Ji tingled at least twice, and squirted pee mixed with an eight-year old's bodily fluids from his swollen stretched-open cockslit.

By the end of the second rape session, the tea had gone cold. Uncle Wei growled that the boy tasted too good and he'd grown obsessed, addicted over the boy's youthful silky smooth skin, and started nibbling the boy-bubble buttocks. Rough hands groped every last inch of the boy's body - because Uncle Wei had total ownership and possession of the boy, could devour every last bit of the boy's lost innocence for any length of time, and would savour little A-Ji's cries that would never be heard outside the four dank walls.

The tea was left forgotten on the floor, while little A-Ji hiccuped and snivelled on the floor, with a huffing, grunting man lying atop him, his hairy adult penis drilling too excitedly into the well-used, flooded, blossomed forcibly-ripened rosebud, performing his hourly workout of breeding a boy about a third of his age, until the boy's belly bulged a little more with a growing pool of the smelly man's thick, viscous evil wriggling seed.

At one point, the rapist naughtily inserted a tablespoon of his semen into the child's swollen penis using his much-maligned technique of Invisible Fingers. Then he forced the boy to fuck his manly ass by locking the quaking, erratically twitching body between his spread legs, until the adolescent's eyes became white and his mouth foamed, because little A-Ji still couldn't tolerate the extreme pleasures of tingling inside a warm, wet tight cavern; of experiencing the full adult's orgasm reflex until his unprepared loins scorched and electrocuted from cramping penile convulsions and squeezed-hard balls; of experiencing the mind-blowing sensations of ejecting thirty full thick loads (of the invasive, foreign semen) - twitches - and feeling the tiny underdeveloped penile muscles work so hard, that his pelvis nearly gave way from the radiating spasming climax; of being taught how to make babies before even producing his first viable wriggling sperm cell, and instinctively trained to enjoy the delectable procreating activity between a man and a child.

"Ah, my sweet, darling A-Ji, congratulations, you've become a father! You've just ejaculated into shushu's hairy womb, and soon, your white tadpoles will fertilize shushu's eggs, and we will have a baby inside this fat belly," the uncle cackled mischievously, full intending to lie to the confused, naive child, and rubbed his said bulging hairy stomach - he had gained weight after living in a slothful paradise of dining on an all-day buffet of fitful sleep, good food and mind-blowing sex with the underaged boy for many days and weeks.

Little A-Ji started to hiccup and cry, because he didn't know what becoming a father at the tender age of eight really meant, and especially if it involved a terrible rapist living under the same roof. His fear rooted him in place, and his indecision spelled his doomed fate for the rest of the day.

Little A-Ji was coerced to father more babies inside the dirty sex predator, as he continued to tingle - now termed orgasm - Uncle Wei's dirty, filthy sperm out of his angry-red child-penis, and into the monster's waiting tunnel of twisted love.

.

“Oh, A-Ji, the days are long, the nights are warm, and I've spent so much time cumming inside you, with your xiao ji ji orgasming like a real adult so many times that I've lost count - surely we can be a happily wedded couple by now. What do you think, A-Ji, do you want to be married to Uncle Wei, and we can live Happily Ever After in this house?” the uncle asked with sugary syrup in his persuasive voice.

The eight-year old spasmed and moaned incoherently, as a straw rose up and sank down into his inflamed wee-wee rhythmically, which the uncle gleefully sucked every single last droplet of seedless boy-juice, then spit back into it with saliva and blew bubbles into the wildly convulsing urethra, and the peanut-sized testicles bloated noticeably from the forced insertion. When that didn't garner any intelligible response, the uncle became a little irritated, so he flipped the boy over on the bed, and pounded his hips deeply into the wrecked goo-filled tunnel with little preparation. He would salivate from the friction and tightness around his adult penis, and then roared like an animal in the heat of procreating when he ejaculated - fifteen twitches in total - to fertilize the boy's insides. Still, the boy refused to answer.

“Why are you like this?” he howled in rising anger, and spanked the boy's buttocks until they jiggle and turned red. “Why don't you say that you'll marry me?" Another round of hard slaps, and the boy winced, bit his lips, but did not say a word in return. "If this shushu cannot be your husband, then he'll be your wife instead! Come on, boy, say that you'll marry me and we'll live a happy life together forever! Say it! Say it!" he growled and smacked the buttocks even further, until the skin broke a little with bruising palm-prints, with a tinge of trepidation in his furious voice, because something had changed inside little A-Ji.

Finally, A-Ji took a deep breath and gingerly turned to his side - his throbbing backside was already bleeding slightly. He gave Uncle Wei the Evil Eye look, and clearly, calmly announced,

"I'm sorry, but I already have a wife."

.

What followed was a crazy downward spiral into utter insanity - Uncle Wei, blood drained from his face and with terror in his eyes, realized that his horrible secret had been leaked out, and by none other than the eight-year old he had tried to trick into selling his soul by way of marriage. The uncle roared like an unchained beast, his anger unleashed, and he started to throw furniture and stuff all over the house like a madman. Smoke rose from his skin, which became mottled and grey, horns grew out from his head, wings from his back, his sneer became fanged, his fingernails became claws, and his legs twisted into an animal's hind legs and a tail sprouted in-between, then finally, his eyes turned bloody red - a demon emerged.

Little A-Ji screamed in terror and peed on the floor, and he scuttled and crawled his way out of the house with jellied limbs as the monster thrashed around in blind fury and destroyed the interior of the building. The moment he unlocked the main door - the first time since two months, at least - and had to squint in the sudden flood of sunshine, fresh air and clear blue skies - he tripped at the doorway with a yelp and fell into a pair of warm embracing arms.

“A-Ji, A-Ji, you finally found your way out. You’re here. You’re home. You’re free,” the soft-bodied voice tinkled and chimed in the air.

The eight-year old opened his eyes and they teared from the bright lights and from a halo above his saviour’s head. Ah, he thought, as he finally felt fatigue eating into his tired soul, and the last bit of energy fizzled out from his limbs, Ah... this is A-Xian’s voice, he thought again and again, and he let out a sigh; “Little A-Ji is safe, and he can finally rest,” his heart whispered gratefully.

“I’m... free...” he gasped tiredly, and fell unconscious, sinking gratefully into the arms of the spirited, feisty boy who once came from the streets.

A-Xian had been waiting outside the house for an eternity, it seemed. So, when he finally cradled his then-promised underaged husband, the sweet but miserable A-Ji, in his arms, he stroked the tiny, fragile, delicate broken boy’s hair and kissed A-Ji’s head, then he whispered a prayer for the end of a nightmare, and the beginning of their true happiness.

“Daddy, daddy, I want everyone to be happy. Please make A-Xian happy, and give A-Xian a happy family,” the boy ordered, rather gently and affectionately.

The Gusu Lan master had stood in silence for a long while, for an eternity as well. He simply “Mn”s, and whipped out a fearsome feather duster from his belt, then marched into the devastated home to claim his own demon and overcome its terror - once and for all.

.

“Eh, eh, that’s it? Where’s the ending? The huggy feely kissy touchy happily ever after? The post-trauma sex? The babies that pop out from the new lovebirds? What about the epilogue?” Wei Ying asked, panting heavily into the cold wintry air while lying on a bed of rumpled robes, pine needles and wintergrass, behind some bushes - seemingly their favourite lovemaking setup, if one recalls their First Time.

The husband massaged his temples in irritation, and to prevent any incoming headaches. He had taken a nap after the wonderful sex, and his spouse had rudely jolted him awake just when he thought he’d dreamt about hearing a crescendo of powerful, emotional orchestra music, feeling goosebumps from his spirits stirring, resonating to a rising wave of hope, and the burning flames of vengeance that reignited his belief in humanity in the battle of good boys and men versus one unspeakably evil demon. Wei Ying continued to ride him into another orgasm during sleep, although in reality, he really, really, swearing by the name of the unholy trinity of the Jade Emperor, Lord Buddha and God of Mercy, he really cannot cum anymore - and his body could only jerk to wakefulness and abruptly spoil the ending of the finale of the greatest erotic dream he's had in a long time, which probably arose from his nightly porn-watching habits.

"Wei Ying... there's no ending. I woke up before it ended," he sighed. He'd pushed the spouse to the ground with a wet squelchy sound upon opening his eyes, a torrent of his warm seed gushing to his crotch from the spouse's gaping asshole, and he knew that within a few minutes, he had sentenced millions of his babymakers to a cold, miserable death.

"Not fair. Tell me! Tell me, tell me, tell me what happens next!" Wei Ying whined with a lovable pout. A hairy arm gripped the husband's half-limp and thoroughly slick-y penis in warning.

The husband sighed again, more in annoyance than from tiredness of having too much sex in the last few days.

"... The Gusu Lan master overpowered and conquered the demonic Uncle Wei. He made Uncle Wei his wife. So A-Xian was all smiles for having a new mommy to live with his daddy, and the boy also got his wish to live with his husband, A-Ji. They live happily ever after in the grand mansion. The end," Lan Zhan seemed to read off an invisible script, he didn't even bother to check his facts anymore; the grip on his dying penis was strong, undulating, moving with sensuous kneads - and it was starting to grow hard again. He wordlessly cursed and scolded his own unflagging penis.

"Eh? Ehhhhh? Ehhhhhhhhhhh? It doesn't make sense. It's disrespectful to the definition of families! And it has a very rushed ending. Where's the sex? Lao goooong !” the last couple of words were shouted with such a clingy, high-pitched wife-y tone, the husband’s ears hurt.

“... That night, A-Ji fucked his newfound wife A-Xian, who fucked his daddy Uncle Lan, who happily fucked his newfound wife Uncle Wei, who couldn’t resist the sex, so he bent around to fuck his rape victim, neighbour, now stepson-in-law, A-Ji. So they fuck in circles, and they live happily ever after. The end,” Lan Zhan mumbled to get the spouse off his back, and hopefully release his rising hard-on.

That got a desired reaction. Wei Ying let go of his hands, blinked for a few seconds with an incredulous look on his face, then rolled around the ground with cackly, nerve-grating squirm-inducing laughter until he almost died of suffocation. He finally gave a comment, “It’s an appallingly badly-written script. You’re a terrible storyteller, lao gong ! That’s my honest feedback, but as your wife, I shouldn’t react so badly” and he heaves another breath, “So, I accept your story in good faith, my dear useless, talentless and utterly trashy bad husband of mine.”

Lan Zhan chuckled a couple of times too, for no real reason other than from his amusement. He’s changed a lot since the days of living with lovely Wei Ying, and now, adventuring to the outside world with his now-blissfully wedded wife. They still had a long way to go, such as figuring out how to get to Gusu safely and in one piece, and reach the Cloud Recesses to find out what exactly happened to SiZhui and Wen Ning, the whereabouts of his missing brother Lan Xichen, and demystifying the relationship between the shijie and the Tians, and the seemingly invincible Imperial armies from Chang’an. Technically, they’re still at war, with the Kingdom of Qishan Lan, the Wei siblings and the tentacle-y children facing headwinds in trying to get rid of the scourge that plagued the universe - but there is plenty of time to solve every piece of the puzzle. Lan Zhan told himself that he should enjoy his days on the road while he has the opportunity, and slow down to smell the roses and rosebuds once in a while, with lovely perfect Wei Ying who had long ago promised to stay by his side, in his lifetime and beyond.

“The end...?”

Notes for the Chapter:

Lucky 100 !!! Yippiee, Hooray, Wheeee !!! Thank you for staying with Wangxian !!!

This ends the arc, maybe the fic, and I might take a break, or maybe not.

In case this is it, then I'll say my classic line "Be seeing you..." - you can try to guess where this comes from and how it ties to this fic's universe too! (no prizes for winners though :-))

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 101

The days can be long or short, so are the nights; dawns could feel forever, dusks would pass by in just a blink of an eye, depending on one's luck, perhaps. The sun rises from the east, and just when it crosses into the afternoon, it veers to the north, before heading southwest, then bounces back and decides to set somewhere towards a north-easterly direction; and re-emerges gloriously rising from the west about twelve hours later, sometimes twenty four, sometimes just six. The weather is no longer defined by the four passing seasons, but probably just one dreary long blizzardy glacial storm, or a prolonged wet, humid, stagnant summer, sometimes days as an arid desert, or mere hours as a fairly comfortable subtropical heat of neither too hot nor too cold.

Wei Wuxian, more fondly known as Wei Ying, or simply lao po, hummed a classic Yunmeng folk tune as he lounged in a heated pool while listening to the news from a levitating holographic phone. Same, same, he thought, as a newscaster who sounded eerily like him read out recent highlights with a cheerful and excited voice, also just like him. The Kingdom of Qishan Lan continued to make inroads into endless layers of multiverses created and formerly occupied by the Tian Empire, racking up an impressive, exponential growth of colonizable worlds, galaxies and universes in the process. He'd lost count of how many, and he didn't bother to keep tabs on the battle frontlines or the ramifications to the Kingdom itself - he could always ask someone in ErNet, and his entire kingdom of war generals, genius scientists, financial advisors and farsighted economists could let him know. It's a great time to be alive as a citizen of the Kingdom and an employee of the Wangxian company - there's an endless number of your kin and allies (and more being borned and raised every second), and there is an unlimited number of opportunities out there (with more being created with each new world, galaxy and universe conquered and seized from the Tians).

It seemed to be an infinite journey to keep expanding and to try to end the scourge. With the help of the camera-shy, elusive, tentacle-y children of the First Fathers, the entire Tian biological, sociocultural and techno-magical construct had been reverse engineered, decoded, sequenced, decrypted, demystified and basically turned into the Kingdom's fodder for astronomical, never-ending advancement, evolution, growth, fortune, prosperity and ultimately happiness. At some point, Wei Ying wondered if they, the Kingdom and its company, are the real scourge after all, since all they've been doing is destroying, plundering, capturing and populating new spaces that had been forcibly vacated by its eradicated, extinct original inhabitants. It felt like a classic war between Man versus Nature, where Man once thought Nature was a hindrance, a threat, and something that needed to be controlled and wiped out - but in the end, surely Man himself is the plague and the pest that should've been exterminated.

Wei Ying lowered his 21st-century sunglasses and took another sip of his tropical mango drink floating on the pool's surface using magical means. The weather felt nice, a little of spring turning into summer - based on memory -, although it should be winter if following historical and chronological records. The sun seemed to be around south-east, and bushes in that direction rustled. His handsome husband, the best butler, greatest loyal lover, jack of all trades and master of everything, an amalgamation of the greatest gods and men, a holy entity that should be worshipped by everything in existence, the Grand Patriarch, and the First Father - also, the breadwinner of the family, who signs the checks, pays their bills, does the house chores, flips reality when necessary, gets everything done and more - appeared with leaves and twigs on his hair, and a bit of muddy smudges on his face and clothes.

"You rotten man, where have you been? I've soaked in this pool for so long, that my skin has started pruning," Wei Ying complained with an airy unconcern. He lay back further against the poolside, intent on getting as much tan on his torso as he can while the sun was still up.

“Mn. I took Bichen for a quick spin to collect tea leaves from the hills of Yunnan, but on the way back, the magnetic poles reversed abruptly, the polar compass malfunctioned, a horde of dragons and phoenixes attacked, three spaceships appeared, and the atmospheric pressures dipped to near-vacuum, so I ran into some trouble,” he raised a creased paper bag to show the spouse the souvenir that was procured with much difficulty from the Southeast, “It’s all fine now. This tea would make a nice beverage to accompany our meals, and a gift to bring with us when we visit my hometown,” the husband calmly replied, and started to pluck away debris from his body.

“ Our hometown,” Wei Ying drawled from the pool. He couldn’t be bothered to turn his head to greet properly, let alone look at his soulmate and married partner for life. The tan seemed more important.

Lan Zhan gracefully walked to where Wei Ying sat on the pool, crouched and placed a sweet kiss on the lao po ’s forehead. The latter nnngh’d in annoyance; the husband was blocking precious sunlight from reaching his pale complexion.

“Mn. Our hometown,” the husband smiled, faintly, and stole a sip of the tropical drink, before walking away to their temporary campsite. “ Lao po , don’t forget to leave your loincloth by the pool so that I’ll wash it when I bathe later. Lunch will be ready soon - we’re having sweet and savoury appetizers, seafood pasta, grilled meat and vegetables, your favourite lotus root pork rib soup, and sweet traditional desserts of the Old Middle Kingdom,” the dearly beloved lao gong called out and read the day’s menu before storing the bag of Yunnan tea leaves into a cart - recently built and hammered together using scavenged wood from nearby abandoned barns. Wei Ying grunted in acknowledgement.

It had been rather peaceful lately, and the couple could finally enjoy walking into deserted towns and villages, browse leisurely and take what they need without paying, and leave without having to draw out swords and flutes. The number of Imperial soldiers, Tian officers and their monstrous undead and Corrupted infantry units have declined significantly in the recent days since their main arrival interdimensional portals in the Far Far West have been eliminated and stitched back using Wangxian's new space-time fabric 'Reality Repair' sewing kit. The Kingdom not only pushed back the enemy's frontlines, but also successfully plugged back the holes caused by the plague, and mend the damage caused by their explosive growth, and now, depopulation of their territories. Probably around eighty percent of the Middle Kingdom have been repopulated by the Kingdom's citizens, and there are budding signs of life and the return of daily hubbub activities of farming, production, trading and travel. The remaining twenty percent are still under the Imperial-Tian's control, and continue to be a sinister thorn in the couple's side - such as the occasional ambushes, man-made disasters, or in the husband's case, the irritating source of delays and disruptions when going out shopping for tea leaves.

A flock of birds flew overhead - descendents of the master-kin and beast-kins - followed by an elegant oriental crane Postbird imprinted with a white and black rabbit-themed 'WeiEx' logo. Supply chain, mailing services and even rudimentary air travel have been re-established, as with other forms of communications and exchanges within and beyond the Middle Kingdom, solely run by Wangxian Co. Ltd. Wei Ying also gave a royal wave to a passer-by cultivator on a flying sword and his passenger - his subjects, really - and then realized that the sun had started to reverse its trajectory to a northwesterly direction - the third time it back-pedaled that 'day'. He grumbled in exasperation, and slowly skittered to the other side of the pool to absorb the maximum amount of sunlight.

With the Mortal Realm, i.e. planet Earth, becoming a lost cause for the Tians, the enemies maintained a downsized but still detrimental presence and minimal interest due to their sustained alliance with the Imperial Court. Ground intel identified Grandmaster Gao as the appointed liaison with those extraterrestrial mercenaries and hired guns, and the Emperor of Chang'an, who had remained low-key and not seen nor heard from the throne for quite some time, was rumoured to be a mere puppet of the political forces that continue to shape the landscape of the shattered nation. The Kingdom's citizens that continue to rebel and fight against the sovereign government headquartered in Chang'an masqueraded themselves as common unnamed peasants, rogue cultivators and soldiers, and protesting students and scholars, so that the entire set up will be written down in history books some day as an uprising of a dissatisfied society against the Imperial tyrannical rule - which is fairly common in this day and age of volatile monarchies, disastrous dynasties and plenty of bloodbaths.

The latest twist in the saga is that the Tians have taken their battles to extraplanetary locations while sucking up the resources of other planets in the solar system to build their armies, with the Kingdom tailing them close behind. The enemy had established a vast network of underground military, technological and production facilities beneath the crater of Mount Olympus in Mars, and the Kingdom has yet to break open the well-defended volcanic shell to rid the Martian soil of those pests. Until then, the sister planet Earth would have to just tolerate being abused by space-faring alien weaponry, including: having its core and mantle infected by virulent elements that its magnetic poles, temperatures, spin and rotation have gone bonkers; being showered intermittently by gravitational-cosmic waves such that the planet wobbles and bounces randomly in its orbit - hence the crazy solar cycles being experienced, because the globe spins regardless of its axis in all directions and stagnates whenever it wants; and getting blasted by Venusian and Mercurian hot gases, freezing and toxic winds extracted from the gas giants, showered by radioactive solar flares from the Sun, dangerously close fly-bys by the Moon - and other moons of the solar system for that matter - which causes tremendous tidal forces and earthquakes, and being pelted by plenty of asteroids and meteors deliberately steered into Earth's direction. The Kingdom endeavours to protect its motherland, but there have been accidents and misses too.

With so much going on, the couple decided to just go with the flow, live with the 'new norm', and quietly continue their adventure despite the occasional inconveniences, such as ending up in the Southeastern regions of Yunnan rather than to the east as originally intended. The land had bent, twisted, reshaped and reformed, that the husband couldn't recognize old familiar landmarks that should've led them to the hometown; the directionless sun, stars and other earthly and celestial navigational markers didn't help either.

Wei Ying had enough of getting his toes pruned like raisins, so he rose from the pool waters - without a tan, sadly - and went to dry off with a towel. He wore a sexy bikini - a bra that didn't do much to his sparse bony boobleses chest covered with curls, his hairy, treasure trail glared obnoxiously against the glint of milk-white skin, and a tiny panty that stretched a lot because it couldn't really hide the bulge - one could probably put a small shampoo bottle on it and it might just remain upright, thanks to the sheer tension offered by the elastic panty material.

Lan Zhan appeared again at the pool - the food was probably stewing or simmering on a stove, or roasting in an oven, so there was time for the husband to finally clean up himself after running the gauntlet for the tea leaves. He wore a tight-fitting swim body suit - a pure white one with light blue cloud patterns - made of special 31st-century artificially intelligent thermoregulating fibres and materials, because neither of them knew when the subterranean geothermal fissure beneath the pool may close up and the waters would turn back to icy snowmelt once again. Wei Ying wolf-whistled at the sexy husbando, then bent down to pseudo-jiggle his non-existing boobs flirtatiously - but one could easily spy at his oft-suckled swollen nipples because the A-sized bra cups are still too large for his slim bust -, then wiggle his not-so-curvy manly lean hips sensuously. The young man laughed when he got the reaction he wanted - a red-faced with even redder ear-lobed husband, who had to look away in embarrassment, sported a big boner tenting his super-tight suit within five seconds.

The spouse sauntered towards the rather aroused husband, then easily slid off his bikini - not loincloth as initially thought - and hung them on the latter's hard-on. He gave the husband a few nice strokes, and a few gentle cups at the heaviness dangling down there - eliciting tasty nnh, nnh, uuhns from the other, and a quick jerk of muscular thigh muscles, when the first tendrils of pleasure sizzled and shocked some sexual meridians within the increasingly horny husband's pelvis.

Wei Ying laughed and walked towards their campsite, however the husband stood rooted in place and did not pursue the spouse. Which was strange, really, the spouses thought, because usually - every day - the husband would have succumbed to the lusts and desires boiling in his blood, turn around and grab the spouse, and drag them into some bushes or even haul them into the heated waters, and engage in hour-long beast-like mating rituals which result in complete insemination of the spouse, and leaves the husband with two empty husks, and one very happy dearly-departed dick - usually, if not every day.

It was the spouse that sighed and gave the husband a very hard look - Lan Zhan was, as usual, a little frozen, a bit undecided, quite confused, and totally hopeless even useless when it comes to matters of the heart and the loins; he stared at the lifeless, dripping bikini on his clothed rock-hard penis and probably a million logical processes are going through his mind with no conclusions yet - of whether to go through the backbreaking process of slipping out of the technologically advanced and complicatedly locked bodysuit (it even comes with a password and tens of zippers, buckles and buttons) to free and please the penis, or just dive in and rinse the dirt off his body as meticulously planned earlier.

“A-Ji ah A-Ji, if you stand there looking like a tasty deer in the headlights, your stepmother Uncle Wei will happily eat your xiao ji ji until there’s not a single drop left,” Wei Ying said in a smooth, and very suspect, vile voice, as he embraced the husband from behind, and hands reached down to fiddle and play with the latex-covered meatstick. His moist fingers rubbed, kneaded and shaped the swollen, pulsing flesh, until it looked like an admirable white-clothed cock of impressive proportions, length and girth; the ball sacks were not forgotten either, and more fingers dove in the caress, squeeze and jiggle what looked like twin white smooth chicken eggs that bounced into one another like rubber balloons. A few fingers attacked the sweet spots on the underside of the stretched bulge on the crotch, drawing circles on the penis tip and just right below the glans, and more squiggly lines along the sausage length like painting mustard into a body-warmed hot dog. Lan Zhan moaned and arched his back instinctively, and allowed himself to be manipulated and played like a guqin, until his body sang praises to the spouse’s sexual prowess in the form of delicious hip-thrusts into thin air, shuddering breaths, and a muffled keening growl-turning-into-an-orgasmic-wail; as always, logic left him and he wholeheartedly desired to pursue his first option - to fuck.

Then, Wei Ying stopped time and everything else, with his awesome magic.

.

Throughout their journey from within the ‘Mounds till Yiling and Huang village, then to the many new realms, worlds, galaxies and universes, or closer to home, through the route from Qishan to Yunmeng and now, somewhere in the Southeastern regions of the country, Wei Ying had always gained the upper hand in terms of raw abilities and capabilities. At the outset, any observer would've thought that the husband was the most powerful and wonderful person (also, god) that has ever existed, but unfortunately wrapped around the wife's little finger, and forced to do the wife's (sexually corrupted) bidding at all times; however, that was far from the truth. It was Wei Ying, courtesy name Wei Wuxian, who started the whole insanity that devolved their current reality into what it is today, and he was always a notch higher, better, more agile, more powerful, more savvy, more talented, than the husband, really. Wei Ying doesn't show and tell, so nobody will ever know or hear about this unbelievable revelation that shall forever be kept as a secret of the deepest universes.

Wei Ying could've snapped his fingers, taken control of Fate and rewind everything back into its original state, or, wipe the slate clean and start over, three years ago, three centuries, three millennia or even to the beginning of Time and Creation. Like the proverbial bookshop selling many books, with each book representing a reality, a universe, a story of someone's life - Wei Ying not only owns the bookshop, he also owns the business franchise, the entire town, country, continent, world, and the vast universe that houses that book too (so, he could actually stick out his middle finger at the irritating Tian dalaoye - mastermind of the terrible evil that besieged the worlds today - whom he'd never had close relations to, and tell that old fart to go suck a dick, and the young man would still get off scot-free, really.)

Back to the present, Wei Ying threw caution to the wind, and instead of mending the world, he chose to have a little fun with his yummy trapped husband. He peeled off the bodysuit with remarkable grace - he knew how to unlock all those passwords, buckles, buttons and zippers, since in essence, he created everything that ever existed -, dumped them into a messy pile by the side, and started to give a heavenly handjob and lots of oral sex with the petrified, immobile mouth-half-gaping, half-yawning, eyes-half-closed husband. He'd suck, licked and used straws to inhale, vacuum everything out of the husband's loins, then stuck fingers into the latter's buttocks to fondly rake and shake the prostate gland until it was in a state of frozen epileptic convulsions; to make matters better, he used plenty of Invisible Hands, Fingers and Tongues to do very naughty things inside the glorious pelvic triangle until every last milliliter of sexual fluid inside the older man's body was stirred into whirlwinds, turned foamy and flammable, and came to be on the cusp of a revolutionary explosion of unimaginable reproductive proportions.

No one was there to measure the passage of time, but Wei Ying worked on pleasuring the husband's nipples until they turn swollen chilli-reds; fucking himself onto the husband's delectable erect, foreskin-retracted, glistening and steel-hard penis for days, weeks, who knew, perhaps even years or centuries - because no one is keeping tabs -, until the whole organ looked like it was about to explode into zillions of big bangs to make new baby universes, and his own ass moulded itself into the husband's phallic shapes; playing with the balls until he was sure he'd chaffed and rubbed raw the vibrating skin, and turned the testicles' contents into molten lava that threatened to vapourize into steaming geyser, ready to unload and fire into sweet thick ropes into the air; and groping every last inch of the body until all erogenous zones looked a little inflamed from the excessive adoring massages, pockmarked with ravenous bites and brutal kiss-marks.

He'd done this very frequently - a vague indication of how old the ultimate Dark Arts practitioner really is - so he wasn't really satisfied even after he made sure that not a single hair or skin on the husband was left untouched and pleased to the limits of an Immortal's body. The thought of the tea leaves came to mind - such small bits of dried wrinkled plant material that could yield such big pots of fragrant tea. Somehow, he connected some wildly diverging dots inside his miscreant, twisted thinking process, drew some impossible parallels to the beverage, and thought - why not?

Naked Wei Ying chanted some mystic words that only he knew, clapped and hopped three times, then miraculously, his height shrunk to the size smaller than a guazi 's tip (瓜子; baked plant seed for snacking). With an energetic leap from the ground, he flew like a supersonic jet straight into the husband's irritated but very turgid veiny dick. In his new microscopic world, everything is above and beyond giant-size. Naughty Wei Ying felt like an eight year old again in a slimy smelly water-slick wonderland - he slid and skidded everywhere inside the husband's extremely agitated but frozen-stiff urethra, played waterboarding using Suibian inside the fleshy tunnels, torpedoed and slingshot himself along the meaty tubes, and ricocheted gleefully from the rubber-like spring and bounce. He'd rubbed himself all over the cockslit crevice just to annoy the husband even more, and when he felt achy all over due to overexertion from playing gymnastics and acrobatics on the incredibly sensitive bulbous spongy edge of the slit, he created a number of pinhead-sized D-broom machines to vacuum and sweep the spot with bristly hairs - they are programmed to travel up and down along the urethral tube, punch through the sphincter muscles using vibrating pulses, make a pitstop at the prostate gland where extra cleaning is required, as with all other tubules and vesicles en route to the bladder, and back again.

Tiny Wei Ying had a wonderful time spending countless days, weeks and who knew how long getting swallowed voraciously into the husband's cock (in his perspective, at least). He inspected the plumbing, broke every known valve and barrier with glee, then cast many horrid spells to excite and pleasure the cavernous passageways and the glands and organs within using infrared heat, typhoon winds, earthquakes, sonic pulses - anything that he knew would make the husband more physically upset than he already was -, at the same time, he slid, slipped and rolled his way along the slippery, goo-coated surfaces, performing cultivation moves and practised martial arts using flying kicks and punches too. It was a free-wheeling cartwheeling ride for him to journey until he reached one testicle - he had to squeeze through a spermatic cord a bit, but the tendons and membranes stretched, loosened and let him through anyway.

Once inside a cocoon of fresh sperm cells - as small as a tomato on the palm for a micronized human that he is - and unborn ones - those without tail and still buried in their cradles, ripe for the picking -, Wei Ying happily transformed into a microscopic version of his demonic form, and began to dig in. He was in a swimming pool in the shape of an egg, filled with edible jelly substances, and of course, billions of tomato-sized spermatozoo around him, swimming away in panic at the foreign intrusion - there is no way out, unfortunately. Wei Ying only had to open his mouth as wide as possible, and started to wade into his pool of paradise, bulldozing through and swallowing everything up in sight.

Sometimes, he'd play with his food by holding a sperm cell by its tail, and watched it wiggle violently in alarm, trying to escape - however the act is futile, as the demon started licking the tail, then its neck - the cell shivered and spasmed - and finally he kissed the little head fondly and licked it clean of other bodily fluids. He only needed to jab a forked tongue through the membrane as delicate as wet tissue, and then suck out its contents with kissy squelchy sounds until only a dried, shrivelled piece of sperm-skin is left motionless on the ground, and a demon who licks his lips at the wonderful taste of freshly made unejaculated sperm.

Too much sperm-feasting spiked the demon's lust, so sometimes Wei Ying grabbed a bigger sperm - the size of grapefruits, probably an older specimen - and started to hump into it. He would rub his penis and balls excitedly over the sperm's juicy, wiggly head, and moan out his husband's name. "Oh, A-Ji, A-Ji, Uncle Wei is finally making babies inside you, I'm raping your babies!" he shouted nonsensically, and poked his rigid boner into the sperm, and happily orgasmed - fifteen twitches of rich, filthy demonic seed. Needless to say, the sperm died instantly when its head exploded from the bloating pressure; Wei Ying then crawls around and goes to grab another helpless sperm to rape and satisfy his indomitable sexual perverseness and horniness.

Many other depraved acts happened in the invaded and devastated testicle, and it didn't take long for the eternally-hungry and insatiable demon to feast and lick the organ clean - devoid of any remaining sperm cells, including the unborn ones which have been effortlessly plucked off their cradles like ripened, juicy sweet peaches, chewed and swallowed with greed. He tip-toed over by walking through the spongy, airy scrotal sac, knocked on the thick rather fibrous tendon-y fleshy shell - and when there was no answer, he merely dipped in and invited himself into a second feast, like the hungry wolf that welcomed itself into a house of little trembling helpless lambs.

Much time would have passed, before Wei Ying finally shot out of the rather ruined cockslit like a waterslide, and with three claps and hops, he returned to his normal sized, naked self. He dressed the husband back into his white bodysuit, then rinsed himself off in the pool (oh, he would miss the husband's smelly body odour inside and on him, really!), before getting back up and strode towards the campsite - and time is resumed, finally - with those tiny D-brooms still sweeping, mopping and vacuuming his penile tubes, because Wei Ying forgot to retrieve them on his way out.

Lan Zhan would howl and grunt rhythmically for the rest of the day, dying-living-dying again-resurrected by the poolside, shivered and quaked non-stop, peed, orgasmed and ejaculate absolute emptiness for an immeasurable amount of time inside his locked latex suit (because Wei Ying mischievously changed its password), when the barrage of sensations, pleasures and tingly pain from head to toe, from bladder to loins, from penis to testicles, slowly caught up to the present time and raged inside his body. It might as well be millenias' worth of bodily feelings being compressed into a mere few hours, even more, perhaps less - there is no exact science, no calculations can be made. The husband's traumatic experience reinforced his original hypothesis - he should've unzipped his bodysuit to free and pleasure his penis first (especially when he thought Wei Ying's earlier finger-groping caused his current state of misery - or ecstasy, depending on one's perspectives); he'd never know what really happened to his body, or inside his loins.

Wei Ying didn't really pay attention to the husband's pleas for his body to stop contracting and expelling bodily fluids and puffs of voided airspace, and his anguished cries of why the password to the body suit wasn't working. He sauntered off to check on lunch preparations; his stomach growled in anticipation for much-awaited real human food.

.

The husband is properly trained, he concluded, when he placed a socked foot on the husband's crotch, and felt something ballooned, hardened and heated up impressively. He wiggled his toes along the fleshy turgid stick of pulsing meat that rose between the pants, massaged it with the pads on the sole, and finally, captured the underside of the spasming rod between his large and second toe, and seductively slid up and down along the length.

They were having a quick meal in an empty restaurant that was fully furnished but with no waiters, cooks and patrons. Lan Zhan whipped out a couple of bowls of steaming hot pork noodles garnished with chopped scallions, fried onions, boiled vegetables, pork slices, roasted pork belly and meatballs from the magical cart, and the couple made it as though they were having a nice sit-in dining within the premises. The spouse sat opposite the husband on the square table, and no sooner after they started their first mouthfuls that the latter was sexually assaulted with a single foot.

In a world where rapid depopulation had left towns and villages devoid of people, Wei Ying had no qualms touching the husband inappropriately wherever they went. He could pull off his pants in broad daylight in an empty town square, which causes the highly-trained husband to become erect instantly like lighting up a candle, and stick that said erection into his buttole with ease. The spouse could be carried like an oversized but equally-spoiled child, like wearing a backpack on the front while getting drilled with each step, and the couple could walk around town leisurely with the husband perpetually edged towards climax, because it feels really, really good to fuck the wife, especially when the said wife kept whispering hotly very dirty stories of a dirty uncle raping, breeding and impregnating a little boy, until the husband's earlobes turned red and his exceedingly excited pistnoring penis one-twos continuously to spew out fertile seed deep into lovely Wei Ying's belly.

"Nnngh... Wei Ying... I..." the husband grunted in warning. A growing wet warm patch on the front of his patch evidenced that something bigger was rolling up its way through penile convulsions and tightening balls, although it kept twitching one-two and spurted dollops of seed to release the boiling pressure.

"No, lao gong, you cannot," the spouse shook a forefinger to indicate that the latter was disallowed to orgasm. Wei Ying left his half-eaten noodles for a while, then adjusted his position to sit next to the husband. He callously shoved a greasy hand into the husband's pants and started pumping the meatstick fervently.

Lan Zhan had to steady his forehead on the tabletop, his noodles forgotten. He was shivering, jerking on the chair, rattling table legs and some cutlery on the table's surface. He moaned like an animal in heat, crying for release.

“No,” the order was repeated. Release is denied, the unspoken words said. The husband’s grip on sanity was nearly lost, and Wei Ying could detect the shift when the man groaned loudly and his hips shook insanely until the chair creaked ominously to its breaking point.

Wei Ying snapped his fingers twice, and the sweaty, agonized husband looked up.

“Focus, lao gong , focus. Breathe in, then out,” he said with a measured, restrained tone, while his hands continued to grasp, fondle and stroke the other man’s genitals until they nearly peaked, then climaxed an orgasm that never came, and went beyond that said orgasm. The husband’s eyes become bloodshot, glazed, a little teary, saliva drooled from the lips, and his body trembled uncontrollably as though he sat on vibrating magic wand - he was experiencing a nirvanal state, beyond godhood, the body had long been detached from reality, where his soul had departed past known Immortal limits, and his spirit became omnipresent, all-seeing, all-encompassing. He had calmed down, in some sense, maintaining that delicate balance between sanity, orgasmic and whatever that lie further than the wide, infinite yonder.

“... Mn...” the husband responded, rather hypnotically.

Wei Ying smiled, pleased that the man was fully at his beck and call. He tested the newfound plaything, “Now, meow like a cat.”

“... Meow,” a rather stiff mewl.

“Good boy, now finish your noodles,” the spouse instructed, and went back to his bowl. The husband crouched - like the animal he played - lowered his head and lapped at the broth, along with bits of noodles and meat.

Later on, when their meal was done, naughty Wei Ying continued to forcibly masturbate the man-turned-feline by ordering him to lay on the floor, legs bent and spread wide, massaging his balls, rubbed his imagined furred belly, and played with the extremely excited arousal with long, hard strokes. The husband mewled and yowled like a male cat in agitated heat, and rocked his pelvis in a kind of immoral mating dance to cajole its spouse to engage in scorching hot sexual intercourse.

Wei Ying thought for a while, and then snapped his fingers twice again. “Now, you’re the white bunny, and I’m the black bunny,” he said with a grin. Wei Ying undressed inside the restaurant, cleared a wide open space in the building - because he knew what was coming - then went down on all fours and wiggled his gaping buttocks. He exercised his rear muscles to mimic a kissy movement to entice, invite and welcome the sex-crazed husband-turned-rabbit, and inadvertantly let out a fart in the pooping-like movement.

The couple would spend the rest of the day and night inside the comfort of a fully-furnished restaurant with an inn upstairs, with Wei Ying enjoying getting creampieped for hours on end, and for the husband to finally indulge in his beastly sex fantasies, blessed by the Thousand-Year Rabbit's fertility.

.

“Woah... hold it right there,” Wei Ying called out and hurried to the front - he spotted a written note nailed to a tree at the foot of a hill. The husband slowed the creaky cart to a stop.

The spouse quickly read the clearly-printed words, with each character immaculately spaced out and written with such elegance, one would have easily mistaken it as a mass-printed poster. “ Lao gong ! It says here that since the end of summer, the mountains have been locked down due to the rise in number of people afflicted by a strange disease of the undead, and no non-residents, visitors and trespassers are allowed into Gusu!”

Wei Ying scouted the area - there are plenty of talismans and ropes tied between trees to earmark the provincial borders -; he touched one of the twisted thick ropes made of white fabric written with holy sutras, and jumped back when a neon-blue spark stung his fingertip.

“Owww! Lan Zhan! The defenses are still active, and according to my Dark Arts senses, they’re very strong! I don’t think even enhanced fierce corpses or powerful vengeful phantoms can cross this without getting badly skewered by these talismans! There could be a chance that there may be survivors within, because the ropes look quite new, and not frayed or weathered from neglect!” the young man jumped excitedly and kept pointing at signs of recent usage of the man-made barrier.

“Mn. The message from my brother hasn’t disappeared, and we didn’t detect any traps or trickery in the letter,” the husband said as he fished out from his sleeve pocket the crumpled letter that had been painstakingly preserved throughout their journey from the west, and gave it a good shake to make sure nothing fell out - unlike the letter purportedly sent by Jiang Cheng that had since been disproved and exposed as forgery.

“ Lao po , the powerful barrier could be my shushu ’s doing, and he may still be in the Cloud Recesses, perhaps ill and unable to lead the disciples. If we can find others, we could ask about Tian shijie ’s whereabouts, and then locate Sizhui, Wen Ning and learn about the other survivors too. And I wish... I wish to ask for my brother, it has been too long since there has been any news about him,” his face creased noticeably with worry.

Wei Ying extended a hand to hold the husband’s, and gave a firm, reassuring grip.

“Don’t worry, lao gong , we’re now at the fringes of your home... - no, our hometown. We’ll definitely save it, if that’s the last thing I can swear with my undying breath!” the spouse pulls up a three-finger salute as a sign of his promise to the husband.

The Kingdom of Qishan Lan raises its alerts to Code 7 Level Obsidian Black-Ruby Red. The war for the Motherland had been lost although the territory was regained later at great expense to the citizens. This time, they will not make the same mistake again, and endeavoured to achieve absolute success to save their one and only Fatherland from the same fate. Four alien motherships warped into the Mortal Realm, each carrying Wei da ge , er ge , san ge and Wei didi , respectively; further ahead, a small, two-foot long furry warm and her black octopus tentacle brother hopped through a portal and into the woods beyond the magical ropes that lined the province’s borders.

Little Ni-er smiled, and Ernie sneered. Things are going to get interesting for sure...

Notes for the Chapter:

Just a side chapter to expand a little more about Wangxian and their circle of merry friends. Mostly just playing around with kinks and an unhealthy obsession with sci-fi fantasy, that's all ;-)

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 102

“It’s all thanks to my intuition,” Wei Ying said with pride, while lounging with one leg crossed over the other inside the primitive, but adequately sturdy, functioning wooden cart, “that we are who we are today, and that we’ve come this far, alive and well.” The husband remained silent, crouched by the riverbank just a few steps away, and gently rinsed a basket of freshly picked loquats in a straw basket using water from the river, before shaking them dry. The morning sun was high in the east with few clouds rolling by, painting the landscape with patterns of shadows and bright spots periodically, and the temperature is mild - probably an overcoat or a slightly thick robe would be more than enough, and it seemed things might warm up a little in the afternoon before the evening chill sets in.

“You see, lao gong , it was my intuition that told me I was barred from entry because I wasn’t a resident, or at least a former resident, of Gusu. However, my gut feeling also imperceptibly informed that nothing cannot be solved, because rules are meant to be broken, and so barriers are meant to be deciphered and opened though solving puzzles or devious means, if not by brute force,” the young man explained, and happily raised his arms to receive the said basket of cleaned loquats. The smack of his lips wasn’t missed - the summer fruits looked fully ripe, sweet and juicy even in what should be chronologically, historically, in the dead of winter season.

“Mn. You solved the puzzle, lao po . Well done,” Lan Zhan acknowledged, without so much of a protest, and patted his hands dry on his hips, then tucked a stray lock of hair behind his ears - even with a large silver hairpiece adorning his topknot, things could get a little stifling or iffy while doing mundane chores; a forehead ribbon would do wonders to ease the predicament with his long, lush hair, however he’d promised he wouldn’t need to wear one as long as he had the soulmate by his side, and during this wonderful cohabitation (now marital) journey they'd embarked together since nearly three years ago.

The spouse suffered a few minor burns while trying to tear the talisman ropes (his fingers singed and smoked, because there was very strong Purity-class magic embedded in the mystical sutras, which prohibits all Dark, Corrupted presence), jump over it (he simply slammed into an invisible wall, and ended up with a bleeding nose), and do the limbo dance (his abdomen burned, his hair sizzled on the ground beneath the twisted ropes of holy sutras, and his twin glutes of buttocks ended up looking like they were placed on a frying pan - they turned tomato red, the skin red and blistered.

Unable to bear to watch the spouse try to break the barrier by trial-and-error, crying and whining in frustration from his wounds, Lan Zhan sighed heavily - the spouse could've just asked, really. He rummaged his bag for his near-forgotten Jade Token and placed it in his own hand. Then, he grabbed a dying, near-unconscious, thoroughly barbequed spouse with that same hand so that the token was firmly enclosed within a soothing cocoon of their grasps, and easily walked through. It seemed the Jade Token recognized Wei Ying as Lan Zhan's, therefore concluded that both married Lan men (it didn't matter if it was Gusu's or Qishan's) should be allowed admittance into the province - and it somehow magically communicated the decision to the talisman barrier. The husband cast a few god-tier Healing spells which made the crying spouse feel much better, and less in pain - with an added old-married-couple's kiss on the cheeks, of course. Wei Ying brightened up immediately, forgotten about his idiocy and agony from the reckless attempt to bash through the entrance, then dragged the husband through the woods, and towards the heart of Gusu - springing a few more hunting traps, more defensive talisman thread-lines and other booby traps along the way, of course.

Wei Ying started on the first loquat fruit, and greedily popped a small one into his mouth without further thought. He winced because it was a little sour, and spit the seeds out to the roadside with a ‘ bleargh !’. “Besides that, my intuition told me that we’re in a different dimension, a space-time bubble in its own. So everything outside of Gusu didn’t matter anymore. I know this like the back of my hand, because I’m the greatest Dark Arts spellcaster in the world, and Corruption of space-time fabrics are my breakfasts and lunches! Easy-peasy, anyone of my calibre could’ve sniffed out the clues that there’s awesome Dark magic being used in this place!” he announced with a nose pointed up to the skies while licking his lips from the remnants of the sour fruit, and started to work on the next loquat - a bigger one that required careful peeling.

“Mn. You’re the greatest, lao po ,” Lan Zhan echoed, not really thinking twice. He busied himself by grabbing the handles and pushed the cart like a shopping trolley, with the spouse in it. The first few steps needed a bit of exertion, but once the creaky wheels started to move on the dirt trail, their pace was slow, leisurely, and smooth.

The husband knew they’d entered into a different space the moment they crossed the talisman barrier - the sun appeared at the right location, the season was noticeably different and warmer, the air smelled alive and didn’t reek of foul stench of the undead, and the landscape was once again familiar - he remembered exploring the southern fringes of Gusu during one of the many summer school trips of his younger days. It didn’t take much god-tiered logical thinking processes to understand that in a world shattered and turned topsy-turvy by the enemy, an oasis of paradise and familiarity could only mean one thing - an island-like space-time bubble had been carved out of the map, and spared of the destruction that wrecked the rest of the Middle Kingdom. The only lingering question was twofold: whether there are other changes made to this island, and to what extent; and why would there be Purity-class barriers placed around a Dark-class space-time rip in reality? It would seem contradictory, a yin being stirred into yang and vice versa, the good and evil working hand in hand, and for what purpose?

Wei Ying had split the large loquat into two, and picked out the large brown seeds. He gave a tentative lick to one of the plump, glistening slices - and grinned brightly when his taste buds agreed that the fruity treat passed all tests and received his stamp of approval. He gave the slice a few more saliva-drippy suckles in order not to waste any nectary drops, before taking a small bite - and mmmhs in delight.

“My intuition also led us to take this path, out of many branches and junctions that we’ve seen so far, so that we passed by quiet, rather uninhabited countrysides and bushlands. Safe, unnoticed, and we can gather enough intel about what’s going on, before taking on the bigger, most bustling towns, possibly filled with enemies in broad daylight or in disguise. See? My intuition is such a brilliant strategist, and it’s helping us to make the right choices,” the young man said in between squishy succulent chews.

“Mn. You’re brilliant, lao po ,” the husband murmured along, just to pass the time while tediously (but not tiredly) pushing the cart for many more kilometers to go at a tortoise’s pace, at least based on his memory of the map of Gusu, which he already knew by heart. Wei Ying didn’t really point which way to go; he simply relied on the husband’s decisions and took credit for them - which is perfectly fine, because one of their lifelong promises was that whatever the husband has, owns or does, belongs to the wife, naturally.

The farmhouses looked lived-in, the vegetable farms and fruit orchards look well-maintained, and there were actually livestock animals in the barnyards - chickens, ducks, geese, pigs and goats. The road was frequently swept and used - there are hardly any dried leaves or trash along the way, and footprints and wheel tracks marked the dirt trail. Wei Ying threw caution to the wind and stole a bunch of loquats from a farmer's garden, because he missed summer fruits, and because he wanted to try his luck - and succeeded, probably, because no angry old men with pitchforks appeared in the vicinity to chase them down. The spouse remarked offhand that perhaps he should try to steal a pair of live roosters, just to see what the ruckus of cluck-clucks would do, but the husband tersely said 'No'.

Wei Ying lifted up the half-eaten, saliva-coated slice of peeled loquat to the husband's lips. Lan Zhan nom-noms the fruit without hesitation, and chewed heartily - it was really sweet as honey, tasty as apricots, and invigorating to his spirits.

"Is it delicious?" the spouse asked with a giggle.

"Mn. Delicious," came the contented, calm reply.

Cicadas, birdsongs and chilly end-of-summer breezes accompanied them in their journey into Gusu.

.

"Ah, you're a terrible lao gong ! Raping your wife in the middle of the morning, right after you stole and ate my loquats! You're a horrible rapist, a sex offender, a pervert! You take and take some more! And now...why are you trying to impregnate your wife in a stranger's home?"

Or... are you perhaps, aroused by wild imaginations of having your lovely, fertile twenty-two year old wife gangbanged by strangers? Oh, you bad, bad husband! You like to be cuckold'ed! You want to watch from a sad corner of a dungeon-like room, as your wife is pushed to the ground, her clothes ripped to shreds, and her genitals are attacked by scores of virile, dirty men! You want to see her tremble with fear, quiver with uncontrollable primal, bodily delight, succumbing to instincts to procreate and propagate with genes freely ejaculated by outsiders into her ripe pussy! You want to see her squirt and orgasm in front of a shadowy audience of unknown hungry predators, who salivate each time she climaxes, her body forced to serve and pleasure hairy, smelly penises whose owners you do not know! How twisted can you be!"

Just think... a crowd of greasy, fat old men, grinning and surrounding your nubile, virgin maiden wife! Each of them laughing, drunk, fucking this delicate rosebud until it becomes stretched, used, loosened! Smelly, thick ropes of uninvited foreign semen ejected into this vulnerable, defenceless womb that had been entrusted to you, promised to you, lovingly reserved for your exclusive use - now plundered, pillaged, turned into an abused cum dumpster pool of seed that will bloat this fecund belly into factory for producing foreign babies!

You rapist, who desires to sell your wife's body to strangers to reap the fruits of unknown men's loins, do you really want twins? Triplets? Or more, growing from this fat, healthy belly that will be kept pregnant and properly inseminated, year after year, popping out babies that do not look like you?"

Lan Zhan struggled with his conviction of not having to deal with the spouse's nonsense, but the grip on his sanity wavered when the latter pushed all the right buttons. The husband was caught off guard when the spouse suddenly had a brilliant idea (not), then dragged the older man from the cart into a wooden cabin - it was empty but furnished, and it didn't seem there was anyone around. Wei Ying only had to bend on a table's edge, pull down his pants and wiggle his ass sexily; in less than five minutes, the pantless husband devolved into a hungry lustful beast, mounting its mate repeatedly, dipping his blood-engorged, heavy, wanting penis into the welcoming heated tunnel again and again, and desired nothing more than to stay, grind and rut inside lovely Wei Ying. They were doing it doggy-style - one of the secret favourites of the husband, which the spouse discovered on his own over the years since they've started fornicating everywhere and practised reckless copulation in nearly every known situation and circumstances.

“You're a baby rapist! Why do I say that? Because I know you frequently fantasize about raping unborn children inside a mother's ripe pregnant belly! You know how good it feels to have a hard penis fucking inside your wife's pussy, and the pleasures of having your cockslit puncture the bloated womb, then pressed into a baby's rosebud! What if that penis belonged to a stranger with an unknown face? What if a line of horny hairy men formed between your pregnant wife's spread-eagled legs, jacking themselves off eagerly, waiting for a heavenly taste of two tasty fucks for the price of one? The child, nestled in its supposedly protective uterus, would be fathered by many men, because every single one of them will have the chance to greet the unwanted baby with their lustful penises, inject their happy milk through the broken cervix, bathe the fetus in a soupy mix of fetid filthy and fermented seed, and keep the unborn babe warm with billions of wriggly foreign sperm attacking its undeveloped genitals!”

Wei Ying, the habitual liar, certainly knew how to provoke and arouse the husband in fast and furious ways. The husband's Bichen-calloused fingers started rubbing recklessly around Wei Ying's belly, silently willing it to grow larger - even more than his own which had come equipped with love handles by now - and his mind was filled with very dirty images of big-bellied Wei Ying engaging in forced groupsex with numerous faceless mob characters, and of the said belly wiggling with a struggling life that hadn't been born, but was already sexually assaulted by those despicable, cruel rapists.

“Ah, ah, you’re such a bad boy, groping my tummy like that! What if those strangers started sucking my breasts, so that they’ll grow and plump up, and start making sweet milk for those babies that aren’t yours? Oh no, lao gong, you’re also trying to sell your wife’s fatty milk to the foreigners too! Ah, what if she will be forced to breastfeed twins, triplets of strangers’ children and at the same time, those endless numbers of fathers continue to rape her every day, and she had to nurse those pervert grown-up men too, because those terrible foreign fathers also want a taste of her sweet milk? Ah, no, no, stop stealing the milk for the babies!”

Lan Zhan scrunched up his face when his hands automatically crawled up to squeeze and molest the flat chest - except that the nipples are swollen from constant play, and looked quite ripe, like a woman’s. He started fiddling with the areola, jabbing, pinching and massaging the nubs and their puffy circular mounds that look like a cross-section of a medium-sized loquat. His sweaty hips drilled at an insane pace into the spouse’s ass, ballooning in size and hardness with each terrifying scenario planted into his head by the naughty spouse, his loins were on fire and neared a sizzling, well-deserved peak.

“You’re a horrible monstrous man, you let those strange dirty people, like sweaty farmers, filthy diseased beggars and smelly unwashed soldiers stick their cocks into her juicy flesh and rape your beautiful wife! They play with her body all day, not just from spilling their unholy tainted seed into her, or steal her breast milk, but also, they force their pleasures upon her! With so many men, each tasting her in his own way, surely there would be one, no... three... Three wiggly tongues and many greasy dirty fingers playing with her pussy! Yes, three tongues lick her pussy and clitoris continuously, attacking her virginal innocence until not a single shred is left intact, until she could only cry hot tears and squirt involuntarily into those men's panting, open ravenous mouths! And if that wasn't enough, she starts to scream when evil fingers snaked around her inner thighs, sensitive hip joints, play with the folds of the skin and vibrate against the erogenous flesh, clawing gently and seducing with ticklish kneads, tempting her to open up, open up, and let them in, let them in. Surely she cannot withstand such a terrible sexual assault that felt too good, and had to spread her hips wider, opening her precious entrance to the view of many pairs of gleeful eyes, and soon, tens of fingers poked and prodded inside, hooking, scissoring until her tunnel of love is distended, bruised and battered with grazing fingernails and the force of blunt fingertips against her maidenhood, torn and forever lost!"

Lan Zhan moaned as the first of many penile contractions started to well up from deep inside his pistoning pelvis. He'd lost control of his hands as his legs gradually turned into jelly from the pleasure electrocuting his nerve-ends and numbed his muscles. He touched Wei Ying's belly, then the breasts, and attacked the spouse's dangling, swaying cock and balls generously. He smothered lovely Wei Ying's loins with husbandly love, stroking the turgid organ, caressing the weighty balls, shaking and quaking against one another's hips, his vision sparked with fireworks against blinding white light, his back seized just as the spouse let out an impassioned cry, and they fucked faster than rabbits, made love with a slamming his-thrusts greater than any mortal's, sharing hot, breathless gasps, hnnghs and ngaahs, slapping balls that tightened up rhythmically with each ripple of muscles in the pelvic floor, whispering each other's names between locked lips - thirty aaaaahns from the husband, and half of that from the well-inseminated, screeching, delighted, spasming spouse.

Lan Zhan would enjoy orgasming into lovely Wei Ying's body at least three times, accompanied by very crude, pornographic and salacious stories by the latter, to Wei Ying's delight and giggles that morning.

The poor table in the cabin broke spectacularly into splinters by the time they'd made enough love with each other, and the couple scurried off to the backyard vegetable patches to escape any unwanted attention (or angry old men carrying pitchforks).

.

They stopped at a single roadside store under a big shady tree that had a couple of tables and benches outside. A sign hung on the front, and spelled in one big handwritten word “Tea”.

The couple was surprised to hear some movements inside the rickety wooden building, and with a fwip ! of a sweeping sleeve, the husband transformed their clothes into ordinary brown long-sleeved tunics and black pants - the common attire for simple peasants of that day and age -, and magically hid all their equipment except for the cart, which was magically filled with straw to cover its cargo from plain sight. Wei Ying coughed out the dried plant material from his mouth and nostrils and sputtered a bit, before leaping out energetically to check the suspicious-looking establishment. Smoke rose out of a small chimney atop the roof of the building.

“Is... Is anyone there?” Wei Ying shouted hesitantly, his voice raspy, a little too loud, especially when he hasn’t really talked to anyone other than the husband for nearly two weeks (maybe more, or less, it doesn’t matter in a world when time can be warped by Corruption spells); he’s getting rusty at socializing, it seemed. The husband internally facepalmed at the spouse’s careless approach of rushing in head-on; they could’ve waited a bit to observe from a safe distance, but Wei Ying was never a creature of patience and self-restraint, after all.

The straw door swung open and the couple jumped back in surprise - a rather scrawny bearded old man with a tell-tale squarish dark headwear and plain dark blue robes - the shopkeeper, presumably - appeared at the doorsteps. He blinked and rubbed his eyes twice, before his lips turned upwards full of wrinkles, and his smile had many teeth missing.

“Blessed blue skies and sunshine! Customers... how long has it been since there had been outsiders walking through these empty roads?” the man beamed. He bowed and gestured to two to take a seat at a dusty bench, and belatedly whipped out a hand towel to wipe the table and remaining surfaces.

“Young masters! This is a humble teahouse in the rural countryside, and currently I only have local teas and light delicacies such as guazi , dried plums, vegetable fritters and candies such as haw flakes. I ran out of dumplings, puddings and rice cakes a while ago, and I don’t have enough meats and greens to prepare a decent meal for walk-in customers since the wholesale markets have largely closed a few months back,” the shopkeeper said, poverty evident on his ramshackle establishment as he didn’t have any assistants nor any written menu prepared.

Lan Zhan took his seat and pulled out a gold nugget from his sleeve pocket. The shopkeeper’s eyes widened in shock and his frail body trembled in trepidation as he opened his hands to receive it. Wei Ying sent a telepathic note to the husband that the population in the outskirts of Gusu wasn’t well off, and prices were probably depressed for some time due to the seemingly bad economic situation. Usually a gold nugget would pay reasonably well for a platter of light refreshments for two, and shouldn’t elicit such a dramatic response from businessmen.

“ Laoban , a bit of everything, and a pot of pu’er tea, please. No need to return any change for the payment,” said the man who was probably not recognized in his homeland due to his moustache and beard, and in a commoner’s garb. The old man took the nugget, and bowed repeatedly in gratitude, “Thank you, and yes, of course! Of course! Please wait a little, while I prepare your order with whatever I have left in my teahouse! There hasn’t been resupplies from the borders since the lockdown was announced, and I’ve been trying my best to make do with locally-sourced produce these days, but the markets are always closed and there’s hardly anyone walking about!”

“... Laoban ,” it was Wei Ying’s turn to call out his skill of sweet-talking, once a basic customer relationship was established, “while waiting for the food, maybe you can tell us a bit about what’s happening around here lately - for example, has there been any strange occurrences? Who’s famous in the nearby towns and cities, and why? Has there been any unrest on the streets, or crimes during the nights? We...” he looked around and noticed the forested mountains and hills that bordered Gusu with other provinces, “... came from the low-lying coastal areas on the east, and decided to hike around since it has been... err... rather peaceful and quiet recently. Please entertain us with the latest rumours and gossip in town, dear laoban , we’re thirsting not only for a drink, but also for the latest news in these parts of the land!” he added a million-dollar charming grin at the end, and the shopkeeper reciprocated with a nod.

.

Unlike Yunmeng which was unfortunately located directly on the enemy’s warpath, therefore ravaged and had its cities and population decimated by Tian-led Imperial soldiers and the undead, Gusu was a shiny living beacon of hope in comparison. From a commoner perspective, since the middle of the year, similar to the rest of the Middle Kingdom, the rising number of scholar protests were becoming a thorn in the ruling class' side, and the sporadic attacks by fierce corpses had kept people indoors, with fear gripping everyone's hearts. With trade and travel grinding nearly to a halt, some mysterious events took place which further stoked the general populace's suspicions, including secret meetings between sect leaders at the Carp Tower in Lanling, the spread of Imperial propaganda, and secretive efforts by the Gusu's ruling sects to deal with troubling internal affairs - the details were not disclosed to the public, as elders kept a tight lid on what went on within the walls of their grand councils.

"My wife and I watched with anxiety, when one day, hundreds of young scholars and disciples were rounded up and exiled from their homes, villages and schools around here, and I can imagine the same happened everywhere, even the coastal areas," the old man said, and gave them a knowing look. The couple nodded, not really knowing what they were supposed to know. "I still remember vividly that day - they marched, wearing shameful signs over their necks to label them as unrepentant rebels and rule-breaking protesters responsible for causing social unrest, escorted by more level-headed senior members, and headed towards the northern exits," the shopkeeper pointed at a forked trail just up ahead, with a wooden signpost that indicated the direction. Their family members, who were largely uneducated and remained indoors for fear of any repercussion from the ruling class, wept as their children were quickly and quietly sent away without saying farewell to loved ones, or with hot packed food made by their mothers before they left.

"After that, the borders were sealed, and I don't know if they're ever allowed back in," the shopkeeper shrugged, "so most of the people you see in the countryside around here are aging farmers, tradesmen who have lost their children, or very young 'uns who have just started school. There are still a handful of adults and youngsters in the larger towns and cities, I heard, who are loyal to their elders and continue to practise cultivation and study like good, hardworking students,” then he pointed at himself with a rather proud look on his face, “My teenage son who hasn’t read a book in his life, works in Caiyi Town as a part-time waiter in a restaurant while selling trinkets on the side, and has never expressed interest in those crazy protests started by brainy people. So I know he’s keeping safe, there.”

The couple fell quiet, as they snacked on the food served by the shopkeeper and mulled over the similarities and differences between what happened in Yunmeng and Gusu. The young, literate and spirited were made to leave whether by choice or by force, leaving behind the old, the very young and the weak behind. Imperial forces easily overpowered the remnants in Yunmeng, but somehow Gusu escaped that terrible fate.

Shortly after the exodus, the entire province was put under martial law, assisted by tribal chieftains. Everyone was required to obey the law, and could only go out from sunrise to sunset - there is curfew in place between the hours of nine at night to five at dawn. Rule-breakers would be snitched by their neighbours, then reported to the police, and thrown into dungeons in the heart of Gusu. “But of course you’d also know this, since you’re locals from the coasts, and you live closer to the capital city” the shopkeeper added, as he poured another cup of tea for Lan Zhan, “I heard the Imperial warships were big and impressive, when they docked at the harbours along the coast and brought in the troops. Right?” Another expectant look, and Wei Ying had to swallow down a fritter, dryly, and quickly muttered, “Right. Big and impressive! Very impressive!” and swept his fritter-oiled hands in wide arcs to indicate how impressive those unheard-of warships were.

What followed were a whirlwind of activities - the shopkeeper claimed he saw at least five battalions marched through his roadside store, each consisting of soldiers from the Imperial Court and from local sects; they went around marking the borders with strange talismans, ropes and threads, and other defensive parchments. “I can’t read, but I know those aren’t just signs to ward off foreigners. The village head told us not to go near or touch those important boundaries, because bad things will happen if we did,” the shopkeeper explained.

“Bad things?” Wei Ying queried, while quietly munching on a piece of dried plum.

“Ha ha! Dear customers, surely you jest! Law number three states you should never question your elders! Bad means bad, there’s no need to ask what or why!” the wrinkly shopkeeper guffawed and refilled a plate of guazi for the younger man Wei Ying ate the seeds as fast as a rabbit downs a carrot.

Lan Zhan raised an eyebrow, and recalled a similar Gusu Lan rule with the same sequential number.

The shopkeeper shrugged when he realized his customers weren’t laughing along. He wiped his hands on his apron, “You know, the same things the Imperial guards had told everyone before... people with wild ideas from foreign lands would waltz in and start influencing the community to rise up against our leaders. Our village head can’t have that, because he said it’s like a disease - once it takes root, it’ll spread to the young ones. They’ll become brainwashed and start breaking the rules. Business will shutter, farmlands will be burnt, fierce corpses will appear once more and slaughter the living, and finally, food and money will become scarce. Families will be separated, the diseased will be sent to exile, probably to Chang’an where I heard there are wizards who can fix people’s ways of thinking. Our people worked so hard to get rid of those scholars and their supporters, so we can’t have that happen again on our soil.”

Wei Ying swallowed the plum and inadvertently, its seed as well - and coughed. Lan Zhan handed him a cooled cup of tea to wash down the unexpected morsel.

Somehow, the Imperial propaganda - the mouthpiece periodicals, posters and various sermons delivered by local village heads and shamans, and so on - described the fierce corpses as a by-product of the protesters. Due to the impeccable timing of appearance of fierce corpses attacks and mass protests by the scholars, the state media started putting two and two together, and accused - which became widely believed - a more radical group within the protesters to be responsible. Someone young, bright and eager to topple the government was probably too smart for his own good, researched too deeply into those monstrous creatures, and created them to cause panic among people. This led to a common saying that the protesters were afflicted by 'strange disease of the undead', which locals would understand, but would scare off any potential foreign intruders.

"I think it's true," the shopkeeper said and pulled his beard thoughtfully, "because here in the southern county, where people are generally humble and law-abiding, and the borders have held up well, there hasn't been any attacks by fierce corpses since then. My only complaint is that those borders also kept people and goods from flowing, so I haven't been able to travel or buy anything from other provinces, and we've been staying in all this while since the end of summer. Thank goodness we've had good weather since then, and my crops are doing well back at home. It must be a blessing from the Imperial wizards!

How is it in the coastal areas? With those big warships looming in the background, and with the protection of the nearby Cloud Recesses, surely your towns are thriving much better than ours, right? The village's watering hole was abuzz a while ago about the formation of the great Gusu Tian sect in the Cloud Recesses, and that tea ritual ceremony between former sect councillors and the Imperial Court emissaries - I couldn't read the periodicals, but I saw the hand drawn 'Blue Skies' campaign posters... they're really pretty! That probably generated lots of attention and visitors to coastal areas too, because everyone wants to admire those warships set against a backdrop of eternally sunny blue skies that saved us from the terrible disease of the undead! Oh, oh, and that holy sculpture that laid down our land's new over-4000 laws... it would be a lifetime's dream to be able to go on a pilgrimage to pray and worship that Sacred Scripture Rock! With so many tourists, that's why you are able to earn enough, and travel around the province - such luxury indeed! I wish more customers would stop by, so that I can save up and take my wife to see our son in Caiyi Town, because we haven't heard from him in the last half year or so!..."

Wei Ying glanced in alarm at the husband. Lan Zhan emptied his cup in one go, and his gaze was frighteningly fierce, worried and indescribably tensed.

When the couple finally left the roadside store, a little shaken by the revelations, with quickened footsteps because worry gnawed into the husband's heart, the shopkeeper waved at them.

"Have a blessed blue skies day, dear travellers! May your days always be clear and full of sunshine!"

Notes for the Chapter:

After renaming the previous chapter's title to start yet another new arc, I'm tinkering with a new set of ideas on how to get on with more Wangxian fun!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 103

“ Lao gong ! This is really good and it tastes very fresh! It’s nothing like our company’s packaged processed foods,” Wei Ying munched cheerfully at a large sticky rice dumpling wrapped in bamboo leaves, filled with spiced boiled glutinous rice, fatty pork belly, black mushrooms, roasted chestnuts, dried shrimp, dried oyster, and a whole full salted egg yolk.

After the meagre snack at the roadside store, the spouse complained he was a little hungry although it wasn’t lunchtime yet. The husband sighed and stared at the blue skies for a while - it wasn’t so much about the alarming things they’ve heard that drew his attention; the weather seemed perpetually fine since they arrived at the fringes of Gusu - in fact, time seemed to be perpetual, at least in this part of the space-time bubble; it had been a pleasant, mild and sunny mid-morning for as long as he remembered.

“Mn. I made it following an old family recipe earlier this morning, while you were still asleep,” the husband replied without breaking a sweat or a smile, while he continued to push the heavy wooden cart with a man inside that started to sport stubble on his jawline and a slight paunch in his mid-section - although his very own protruding belly with mini-love handles was more visible than the spouse’s.

“Eh? I would’ve smelled such fragrant rice and pork from afar, and woken up to the sounds of you filling and tying the dumplings before putting them into a big noisy pot of boiling salted water,” the younger man wondered aloud, before taking another bite - he slurped on the greasy but extremely tasty chunk of meat stuffed into the dumpling’s center. Wei Ying ate a lot of good food, mostly the husband’s cooking and food delivered by their Kingdom through various means, since separating from his brother and the nephew; travelling in a cart meant that he didn’t really practise cultivation nor exercised as much as he should, for a supposedly fit, young man at the age of twenty-two.

“Mn. I didn’t want to disturb you while you were snoring. I made these in my dreams, and brought them into this reality when I was up at five in the morning,” the husband explained calmly. After a few false beginnings, the middle-aged man was finally able to wrest control of his god-tiered dreaming ability from his inner demons. As the King of Gods and Men, amongst other flamboyant but needless titles, he can interchange between dreams, realities and all sorts of worlds in-between - and transfer stuff from one to another too. Wei Ying thought it was a really awesome ability - in the language of the Dark Arts, Lan Zhan was dabbling with creation, time and fate-related magics at the highest levels, and his performance was top-notch -, so the spouse always teased the husband to dream of bigger, badder things besides doing boring household chores, mundane cooking, sewing, farming, feeding rabbits and other cute animals, or the occasional swordboarding and cultivation stunts.

“Huh... I watched your dream in the wee hours of the morning, it was full of extremely perverse, filthy porn. You had a harem of a hundred of me, of all age and sizes, and you were chasing us down with a ten-inch dong between your legs. You raped your wives and their babies too, in the most despicable ways, if I remembered correctly. You’re such a bad husband,” Wei Ying nonchalantly accused, though one cannot be sure if he was lying or telling a partial truth, based on how blunt and nonsensical he sounded. He sucked a few fingers clean of sticky glutinous rice covered with greasy lard. Mmm, delish.

Lan Zhan sighed and wondered if he should find a place to stop for a while; they’d been going along the straight path at a tortoise’s pace for at least a couple of hours, with flourishing vegetable and fruit-laden farmlands on both sides, and rarely, they spotted old farmers in the distance who seemed busy tending to their fields and didn't pay any attention to visitors. A line of mist-covered mountains in the horizon straight ahead never seem to grow any closer or clearer in sight.

“ Lao po , there are hundreds, even thousands and more free-to-air channels in my dreams. You could've tuned in to the ones that show the better sides of me, if you wanted,” the husband answered, and finally took off his straw hat to fan himself - a bead of sweat appeared on his forehead (and briefly, he worried if wearing hats may contribute to his imagined receding hairline). Ever since he grasped the basics of nurturing dreams, the growth on the returns have exploded exponentially. He could multi-task while he slept, he didn't need to fervently watch his nightly quota of porn via ErNet because he was actually making some himself (made with perfection, top grade quality, if he could've said so himself), and he created universes, even multiverses of his own in many ways better than his Kingdom could using standard 61st, even 91st-century technologies and magics. He was truly the Grand Patriarch of his empire, although the spouse had been unapologetically stubborn in belittling him at every opportunity.

(The husband continues to dream, grow and create his collection of multiverses, even during periods of wakefulness. He is considering to name this ever-expanding album of sorts, which now includes the Realms of the Gods, and in some ways, the Mortal Realm too, either LanWeb 2.0 or Wangxian net 2.0 - he's conducted a poll to collect public feedback, and all residents of the Kingdom have a chance to participate, suggest a few names, vote their favourites, and be in the running for winning great prizes. Interestingly, the first waves of subscribers and submitted entries turned out to be from the war refugees of Yunmeng, who are obviously barred from watching his X-rated stuff, but are head over heels watching their local hero, the great Han Guang Jun, working in vegetable gardens and gently petting bunnies' rumps.)

“Nah, too lazy. I still think you’re a bad husband, and you never treat me nicely even in your dreams,” the spouse grinned back after finishing the dumpling and carelessly threw the wrapper bamboo leaves to the roadside. That statement was partially true; in some dreams, Lan Zhan loved to abuse the spouse to his heart’s content, although the same can be said otherwise, when there are nightmares of an evil stepmother-in-law Uncle Wei with a ten-inch hairy dong running after naked Little A-Ji in the dark.

“Touché,” the husband acquiesced without further protest, and picked up the trash after the spouse; littering is a punishable offence, if he extrapolated former Gusu Lan rules to the new laws enacted by the Gusu Tians - it was just a hunch, but he didn’t want policemen on horseback in hot pursuit of a creaky old wooden cart.

“ Lao gong , I want another dumpling!” Wei Ying suddenly switched the topic and shouted adorably with glee. Grains of sticky glutinous rice stuck on the sides of his lips, and Lan Zhan couldn’t resist leaning forward to lick them off with his tongue - to the shock, and shy gasp of the spouse. Wei Ying’s rosy cheeks pinked, and the husband just had to give each one a sweet kiss.

“Mn. Let’s stop over there, under the shade by the road. We’ll take a break, lao po .”

.

Luck seemed to be not on their side, when they were pulled over by an Imperial police officer on a real horseback, just when Lan Zhan was about to park his cart under a tree by the roadside. The officer wore a standard brown-grey Imperial military leather armour with light blue cloud-like prints on the bracers, fully equipped with a sword, a bow and a quiver of arrows, and appeared every bit like a typical human soldier except that the person was female, and resembled one of their nemesis, the Tian Fourth Sister.

Wei Ying took over in conversing with the enemy; he was more well-versed in outsmarting adversaries with a game of words or an act of trickery, compared to the straight, no-nonsense and rigid Lan Zhan.

The officer's horse snorted rudely as she read out the charges in a disgruntled manner.

“One, not carrying your identification documents and travel permits while you're out and about. We're still under martial law, y'know, and all movements of residents are under tight supervision and control. I don't have to explain each provision of the law; your village head should do that.

Two, not using Imperial-sanctioned vehicles while transporting agricultural produce. That creaky old thing is dangerous, ma'am, and doesn't conform to Imperial safety standards guidelines. You probably can't understand what I'm saying, and have no means of getting a state-issued vehicle, so you'll get some public welfare aid on this.

Adding on to that, planning to conduct trading activities without a business permit - but since you've not actually committed the offence and we're not the thought police - the ladies from the enforcement agencies in the urban areas are, and I'm just an officer for the rural districts - so, I'm letting you off this charge with a warning.

Three, not being pregnant despite being in the healthy age group. That's a really big offence, ma'am, but I take it that you haven't read the news since you're probably illiterate - so let me verbally repeat the words that have been carved on the Sacred Scripture Rock since the last couple of months."

The officer talked as though she read from a script and her actions were smooth, suggesting that she had handled more than a few such petty cases due to general lack of awareness and understanding amongst villagers in the remote countryside. She took out a booklet and turned to a particularly dog-eared page, obviously a sign that she'd done this many times, and cleared her throat.

"By the Decree of the Imperial Guards of the Gusu Tian serving His Eminence Great Grandfather and Grandmaster Tian, all females of suitable ages shall endeavour to carry at least one male child to term by the following year and for every subsequent year, and the government shall bear the costs including but not limited to maternity care pre and post-natal; and all male children born under the conditions of this Decree shall be willingly surrendered to the Royal Palace located in the Cloud Recesses to ensure the health and success of those children for the glory, honour and prosperity of our beloved nation of the Middle Kingdom. Your noble act of birthing more will replenish the ones lost to the terrible disease of the undead."

Wei Ying, who had hastily untied his hair then pulled out a silk scarf to tie around his head, ended up looking like a demure lady in distress - he even fluttered his eyelashes and pouted his lips for that extra feminine look, and nobody in the world could refute the fact that Wei Ying looks very pretty in either gender - he softly cried with convincing hot tears rolling down his cheeks, with hiccups for added audio and visual effects to tug at heartstrings. He did, however, balked at the last bit from the Sacred Scriptures, but quickly reined in his animated looks to avoid suspicion.

“Oh, Missus Policewoman, we really didn’t know about the new law, and my useless husband is to blame. We’ve lived together for three years now and tied the knot in a small, simple family ceremony half a year ago with just our neighbours in attendance, but he hasn’t succeeded in fathering any children yet. If it’s a son that the government wants, then it’s the father’s responsibility to make one with the wife, isn’t it? Boo hoo hoo, if I’d known this would happen, I would’ve gone to a city hospital to have him checked...

You useless lao gong , please say something! Your wife here is very scared! What if we’re arrested and thrown into jail for these charges?!” Wei Ying sniffled and wailed, then smacked the husband’s buttocks and subtly pinched it to get his attention. Lan Zhan nnngh’d inwardly, being the masochist that he is.

“... I’m sorry, I’m a useless husband and haven’t fathered a son. Please forgive my wife, it’s not her fault,” the older man blurted with downcast eyes, looking rather helpless and uncertain, while holding up the handles to the cart, “We... we just wanted to quickly sell these crops in the city to earn enough, so that we can travel around the province as a holiday gift to my hardworking wife. There is no other intention other than to make her happy, I promise.” Lan Zhan had stealthily conjured illusionary bags of ordinary grains and vegetables under the cover of a piece of tarp in the cart, to cover up the other belongings inside, including the bag of expensive Yunnan tea leaves, generously-stuffed sticky rice dumplings and other suspicious cargo supposedly transported by the poor.

Wei Ying had bowed his covered head and sneaked a peek to the side - the downtrodden husband looked quite convincingly remorseful, in his own special, sometimes endearing, subtle, restrained and awkward ways. He telepathically sent many hearts and thumbs-up to the husband's WeiChat account to praise the man for a laudable ad lib performance in drama acting and speech.

The police officer looked rather pleased at how meek the husband was, and how he elevated the wife. She dismounted from her horse, leaned forward to sniff the couple and wrinkled her nose. She murmured, "That's strange, there's no smell of childbearing fertility here," in which Wei Ying shrunk away from the terrifying all-telling nose of the cloned Tian Fourth Sister, "and there's a healthy dose of desire for procreation, yet none for the feminine childbearing qualities either," in which Lan Zhan mimicked his spouse and scuttled back a little in pretended fear. She shook her head, "I can't fully understand how your kind's biology works, but you definitely need to see a gynaecologist at a city hospital, and the nearest one with that specialty is in Caiyi Town."

The couple nodded again in unison, silently prodding the officer to alleviate the burdens of their journey. Caiyi would be a good place to stop by - anywhere other than these vast undeveloped backwaters of Gusu.

Next, the officer pulled out the tarp cover, stuck her head into the cart without warning, and that elicited a squeak of terror from the spouse. "Whoa, your grains have mold growing on them, and they smell really bad! I can't even pick out your vegetables or anything else from the terrible stench!" she remarked, then quickly pulled out and gagged profusely. Arms akimbo, she asked in-between coughs, "Where do you plan to sell your produce, Mister and Missus... err..."

“Lan!” the couple yelled in startling cohesion. Majority of the population in Gusu have the same family name, and it was the truth, so it was a no-brainer for either of them. The officer clicked her tongue in annoyance, ““Tch, it figures...” and muttered under her breath - barely heard, but the Immortals had no problem in their superhuman hearing -, “... country bumpkin humans and their simplistic societies, no wonder they’re easy prey for us demons !”

“We plan to sell them to the big restaurants, officer, and if there are leftovers, we... might sell them on the streets, you know, like those street peddlers who sell trinkets and other knick-knacks at daytime,” Wei Ying offered, pretending to be calmer and no longer crying pitifully, but in fact, his heart was racing nervously and he spammed the forum chatrooms in ErNet and the unfortunate husband’s WeiChat account with endless - but needless - emoji-laden all-capslocked type-written screams of ‘Oh my god did you hear that? She said demons! They’re all demons! Yao guai !’

“No, ma’am, you can’t do that. Oh, you probably didn’t read the news again... all big restaurants, and in fact, all upper-class establishments are off-limits to commoners. They serve the Imperial troops now, and--” the officer replied curtly and gave a disapproving look at the cart, “-- I’m pretty sure we don’t eat that kind of food,” then gazed back at the tense-shouldered spouse, “but you can keep to the Public areas and there are markets and smaller grocery shops that may want your... unappetizing-looking... harvests.” She waved her hand on her face to visibly indicate that she was still offended by the smell wafting from the bags of grains each time the wind blew.

Having satisfied herself with the interrogation and inspection of goods, the clone of Tian Fourth Sister continued to drone on about some laws regarding civil behaviour, personal appearances, trading and travelling - which sounded quite similar to what the couple remembered about the Gusu Lan's over-4000 rules.

She started writing on a piece of parchment with an ink-brush, "Well, other than giving you strict orders to take a bath by sundown because your clothes reek of stinky masculine sweat, I won't issue any summons nor get you arrested this time, Mister and Missus Lan. In fact, as your friendly neighbourhood police enforcement officer, I will help straighten some things for you, so listen up."

The couple obeyed and stood still next to their cart.

"I'm going to assume that you don't have those government-issued identification papers since you didn't even bother to register your marriage, but that's not your fault; blame your previous incompetent leaders for that. So I'm going to record your statements into the Imperial archives, and issue you temporary documentation to get you through:

Here's an official slip that explains you will be on your way to the nearest City Council, which is Caiyi Town's. So it doubles as a provisional identification and travel permit to that town - and mind you, only to that town, not others. You hear me, ma'am?"

Wei Ying tightened his grip on the scarf, and nodded.

“I’ve written a mystical Imperial code on the official slip, and you need to show it to the guards every time you pass a checkpoint in Caiyi. Remember, most areas are off-limits to commoners like you. The guards will use the code to track and trace your movements and permissions. I’ll be entering three places that you’ll be allowed in, for now - the city council to get your paperwork sorted, including permanent identification papers and registration of your marriage; the city hospital to get yourselves checked and hopefully you’ll be given some medicines to fix your fertility problem; and lastly, to the Public Market, where you can freely sell your produce by the roadside. If you still want a business permit to enter and do business in the restricted areas of Caiyi, you’ll have to talk to the Imperial Merchants’ Guild headquartered in the city council. Am I making myself clear?”

Wei Ying carefully took the parchment handed out by the officer - a slip full of alien writing and mystical language that he couldn’t read - and bowed in gratitude. Lan Zhan followed suit and bent forward.

“Good. Next, here’s a special red talisman you’ll need to attach to your cart; you can hang it at the back, and it’ll also serve as a warning sign to fast-approaching vehicles about your hazardously slow cart. Your cart isn’t roadworthy currently, that’s why the magical borders do not respond to your wish to travel, and it’s a way for the law to ensure people do not simply trespass while we’re still under military control. You can push the cart however long, and you’ll just be running around in circles without this. So make sure you apply this talisman and focus your thoughts on your destination. It has a limited shelf-life once activated, so don’t go taking daytrips on your way to Caiyi. Go to the city council to apply for another, if you need more; they’re designated to aid public welfare and transport, so they don’t cost anything other than filling in your particulars at the council’s inter-district travel registry.”

Wei Ying's eyes went wide and sparkly as he scrutinized the piece of red paper on his hand - there was amazement, bewilderment and curiosity in observing a piece of magic that he hadn't seen before. Lan Zhan cleared his throat and that fortunately jolted the spouse back to reality. Wei Ying pocketed the talisman eagerly with another bow of thanks.

The couple heaved a sigh of relief when the police officer received a Fairy Messenger call shortly after that - they overheard bits of the conversation about a breach found at the southern borders, and the officer quickly excused herself. As she hurried away on horseback while shouting a friendly "Have a blessed blue skies day!", in all likelihood to rush to the site to assist in investigations of the said breach - which was undoubtedly caused by the same couple she had stopped earlier - Lan Zhan whispered and wiped the many drops of sweat that beaded on his forehead, "That was a close call." He wrinkled his nose too, when he realized that his - their - peasants' clothes smelled rather ripe after many hours of trudging under the high morning sun.

"Of course! Luckily it was a clone of the scent-powered Fourth Sister. Otherwise, we'd be discovered and I would have to yell at you to take her down with your godly powers, which might trigger further alarms and put us in a bind," Wei Ying replied casually, already busy examining the documents on hand. He had dropped his act and was once again brimming with glee like a bouncy eight-year old again; he kept marvelling at the talisman and tried to decipher the terrible handwriting on the parchment - which was not unlike a modern day doctor's prescription. The younger man wiggled his fingers and the unpleasant, nearly rotten illusionary cargo disappeared - it served its purpose by deflecting the Fourth Sister's sense of smell -, then he returned to his favourite spot of being curled up inside the cart, and a fat large sticky rice dumpling was waiting for him on the seat.

.

The couple decided to skip the planned break and move on; neither of them knew when they may be caught up by more Imperial policewomen, or if the breach in the southern borders would raise alarms and put the entire county under tighter security.

The spouse kept the flower-print scarf around his face, looking every bit as dainty as an elegant dame in sunshine, except that he was wearing sweaty brown clothes that belonged to the lower class of society. The husband kept glancing at his beloved, because he thought Wei Ying looked lovelier than ever, despite missing ample chests, curvaceous hips and the private bit between the legs.

It didn't take long for Wei Ying to use a combination of magical arrays, much like when he first invented the world's first talisman-powered camera at a tender young era of 2000 B.C., to decrypt the alien words, break them into manageable chunks, apply advanced artificial learning, then reconstruct and mass-produce them, after the third and final rice dumpling.

“Wei Ying, committing fraud is prohibited, even in this province,” the husband reminded the delinquent and habitual law-breaker. The latter paid no attention to the righteous man, and continued to twirl his fingers so that a powered-up eyeball from an Eye spell continued to scan its targets, a brain-like Memory spell to store the information, a rudimentary and handmade glowing magic circle that formed a sentient, intelligent learning machine, and a pair of Invisible Hands armed with ink-brushes stolen from Lan Zhan's writing kit in his satchel, moved about in synchrony inside the cart like a macabre dance of detached body parts. Wei Ying fished out a couple of blank classroom notebooks that could be bought from stationery shops for a couple of silver pieces each, and forged official documents out of them - identification papers, marriage certificates, permits and so on. He reckoned that the prevailing government in Gusu was run similarly as Yiling, because “surely, a clone of Tian Second Sister who had vast extensive experience with Yiling’s city councillors, would be running the show here, headquartered in the Cloud Recesses. Therefore, logically speaking, the documents would look and feel alike.”

“If I’m wrong, then the heavens should strike me three times as punishment for my loose lips... alright?” Wei Ying turned around and gave the husband a wink. The husband sighed - he could never ask his divine servants to send lightning down and hurt his beloved wife, so his answer would either be to confirm Wei Ying’s hunch, or change reality so that the younger man is always on the mark. It’s Wei Ying’s win, every time.

Wei Ying chuckled when the husband did not answer nor invalidate the claim. “Your silence is golden, lao gong . One more thing, I’ve not committed any fraud yet, because these papers have not been used for harmful reasons. For the record, I’m just learning an alien language, experimenting with magic, or just doodling on notebook paper... right?” he added with a grin.

Lan Zhan rolled his eyes inwardly and sighed, to the delight of the spouse.

Later, after a hearty string of burps from having three rice dumplings as a mid-morning snack (and none for the husband, because he wanted to keep his troubling waistline from expanding), Wei Ying succeeded in decoding the red talisman, and made tens of miniaturized copies using tiny strips of notebook pages - because he wanted to be a little more environment-friendly with his staggering rate of paper use, which is really an occupational hazard for all magic-based cultivators. “We’ll never need to worry about breaking any Imperial rules, whether during travelling on non-standard vehicles or using non-standard equipment, weapons and tools!” the man cried out in triumph, before adding, “... if we actually use these, of course,” and cackled in self-praise - the husband couldn’t accuse the spouse of any wrongdoing, if nothing was done, yet.

When laughter died down and only the sounds of the creaky cart wheels remained, Wei Ying leaned back to lounge with a full tummy. “It’s amazing how they use bureaucracy and magic to control the lives of those living in Gusu, rather than to enhance and improve. I thought Yiling was bad, but this is worse. It’ll only invite trouble, and trouble-makers like me! Lao gong, make sure not to follow in the Imperial Court’s footsteps, otherwise people will end up stupid or dead. Okay?” he called out.

“Or eaten,” the husband added thoughtfully, after a pause.

“Dead or eaten... what’s the difference, anyway? It’s a foregone conclusion that your homeland and its people are already a lost cause. Razed to the ground. Picked clean to the bone. Shrivelled up like a piece of sun-dried fruit,” the spouse spelled out his points, one by one. He stood up in the rickety cart, then pulled out his flowery scarf and bent forward to tie a big ribbon bow atop the husband’s silver hairpiece. His fingers were nimble, and he finished the handiwork in mere seconds.

Lan Zhan stared at Wei Ying and at the mole below his lips, right in his line of sight. He stuck out a tongue to try to touch that sexy black dot, but Wei Ying was a little too far, and he ended up looking like a sweaty old lech trying to lick a youthful man’s face that was much younger than he.

“Dead people still have their bodies intact, so only the return of the soul is required - much like how you returned to the world of living. Eaten people, however, had their life force and physical bodies consumed by yao guai s. We’ll need to bake more Heavenly biscuits and retrieve their souls if we want to bring them back,” the husband lectured, then tried to lick the said mole again.

Wei Ying laughed softly when he was done fiddling with the older man’s topknot, and easily captured Lan Zhan into a sweet, tongue-licking kiss. Bichen-calloused hands roamed on the spouse’s clothed body in broad daylight - it seemed no one was paying attention to the two making out in the open -, while the younger man moaned enticingly into the shared breaths. Once in a while, he’d reach up and patted Lan Zhan’s pretty pink flowery ribbon tied on his hair like a large summer flower in bloom.

.

Wei Ying’s alarm that the Tians in Gusu are yao guai s was, truthfully, unnecessary. The couple knew right away that the police officer, and probably all the female clones of the Tian sisters in the Imperial army, are succubi; Wei Ying is a cursed demon himself, although of the related male, incubus kind; while Lan Zhan has had enough experience getting pleased and eaten by his spouse and others of the Wei-kin, both male and female kinds, to spot one the moment his tingling senses come alive and huge red danger signs blared out inside his head.

The husband could see the police officer’s hidden horns, fangs, claws, wings and tail, knew that she was eyeing him like a tasty morsel of male meat, and brilliantly fend her off using tactics that only seasoned succubi-slayers knew - by using unappetizing elements such as overpowering stenches to kill the desire; and by reinforcing his bond with the spouse by showering marital loyalty and praises and therefore overshadowing the succubus' ability to snatch the husband away using standard succubi arsenal of cheap, fake love and lust.

Not far away from the travelling couple, a couple of female Imperial officials had arrived at a nearby small village to start their monthly, sometimes weekly collection of tasty warm male bodies. The village head had briefed everyone about the latest updates carved on the Sacred Scriptures, and his speed of cascading the Imperial order was rewarded by a few gold nuggets; no sooner after the officials arrive in full, impressive military regalia, they were greeted by a staged welcoming troupe with cultural dances, confetti made of flower petals, and presented with baskets of harvested summerfruits. The officials were, however, not quite impressed, but thanked the villagers for their cooperation to replenish the population of Gusu with men of sterling potential, ability, strength and leadership (which sounded straight out of a scripted speech).

The Tian females collected three newborns, an eight-year old boy, and a teenager who had just turned thirteen - willingly given away because their impoverished parents couldn't really afford to raise them and give them good education, so what better way than to let the government do its part, feed them, and train them to be future respectable cultivator superstars in faraway, flourishing cities? There were few formalities and exchange of pleasantries, and the officials remained tight-lipped on what will happen to the boys or when there will be news about their progress in the larger cities of the province. Both female officials left the village right after giving everyone dodgy-looking supplements said to boost their well-being, as a kind gesture by the provincial government.

“Ahh, Lan Zhan! That's a counterfeit of our company's bestseller fertility drug! It makes people grow artificial wombs that enable them to conceive and give birth within a matter of weeks, if not just a couple of months! Look at the colour of the pills... they're blue! The wombs that will grow are set to birth only male children!" Paperman Wei Ying hissed in dismay. Paperman Lan Zhan placed a hand onto Wei Ying's paper mouth (it's hard to be accurate, when one's face is just a blank piece of yellow paper) to shush the spouse. "How dare the Tians illegally produce and use our patented technology! Pirates! Scums! Low-lives!" Wei Ying grumbled, this time hidden behind some leaves on a tree overlooking the collection ceremony.

The two papermen flittered and floated from branch to branch, and followed the Tian officials out of the village until they reached a clearing with a horse carriage. With a twirl of fingers, the two boys who had obediently followed the women with eyes full of hope and hearts brimming with pride - because they had been chosen to represent their villages to bring prosperity to the province, they were told - the two boys suddenly collapsed to the ground with a simple Sleep magical spell.

Like lambs led to the slaughterhouse, the unconscious boys were loaded into the carriage. Wei Ying, in his paperman form, continued to rustle noisily among the leaves while heckling the two demonic women with filthy cuss words. One of the Tian officials remarked that the nice weather must be quite rousing to the natural wildlife, since the birds wouldn't stop flying and singing everywhere in the forests. The other woman easily picked and placed two whining newborns into baskets waiting on the seats in the carriage, like bagging up freshly harvested produce from the land.

Unfortunately, there wasn't enough space for a third newborn, claimed the older of the two women; she had started peeling off the helpless child's clothes and cloth diapers, and was pleased to see that the doomed baby was meticulously bathed, perfumed and prepared for departure from the village. Both women looked at the naked body of the months-old babe, their smiles twisted into evil grins, licking their lips with forked tongues in anticipation, a flash of fangs in the sunlight. They transformed into their succubus forms, to the fearful screams of the remaining two awake babies inside the carriage, as they watched from their baskets, not really understanding, but there was so much pain, so much liquid red, more screams, inhuman sounds and grunts, of greasy slurps and crunchy bites, as their brethren was mauled alive by two demonic females with monstrous appearances.

Less than half an hour after being given away by hopeful but ignorant parents, the first of many casualties was recorded, at least in the eyes of the two spying papermen. The remains of a dried, skinny husk of a mummified human baby was discarded into a bush among unexplored wilderness at the edge of farmlands, its organs shrivelled and bones crushed, its mangled chest a bloody gaping hole and its budding infant golden core gouged out, sucked dry like a tiny pearl candy and consumed to the last shred, it's genitals mutilated and torn open, its scrotum ruptured and the twin eggs stolen, pulled out, ravaged and shared equally among two hungry succubi. The summerfruits gifted by the villagers was thrown away, squashed, uneaten - because pure-bred succubi do not really eat anything else besides a male human's life energy.

Wei Ying cried in anguish - partly for the painful loss of an innocent life, and partly because of the despicable display of how the two succubus messily devoured their prey; which was terrible, deserved an F minus grade, a shame to all demon-kin, an utter disgrace to all respectable succubi and incubi-kin, and lacked any form of delicacy, decency and proper dining etiquettes. Lan Zhan steeled himself and embraced the shaking spouse, telling him again and again to lower his voice, and that the opportunity for revenge will arise soon if they're patient enough. They quietly floated close to the axle at the carriage's underside, and sat there as stowaways shortly before the horse carriage was driven off.

A dark, Corrupted portal appeared like a sore, blackened blistering wound in the middle of the woods. The carriage left for the opening in a hurry, leaving behind swirling clouds of dust, dried leaves and pebbles, that magically but subtly trailed the disappearing transport.

Notes for the Chapter:

A bit of world-building and it's getting kinda dark and violent - but life shouldn't be a bed of roses for anyone in this crazy fic's universe!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 104

“How are you holding up, lao gong ?” Wei Ying huffed, while diligently riding the husband’s crotch with plenty of schlicky and squelchy sounds. The couple decided to park the cart by the roadside after lawfully slapping the original red talisman on it - because, as Wei Ying explained with uncharacteristic paranoia, there were plenty of unseen cursed birds and other phantoms lurking in the bushes, waiting to pounce on any unsuspecting law-breakers and alert the local police. The husband was adamant that they needed to take a bath, just so that they obey the orders given by the clone of Tian Fourth Sister (and rid himself of any feelings of guilt); the spouse agreed when he sniffed at himself (and made retching noises), and together, they sneaked into someone’s orchard, discreetly stole some peaches (at Wei Ying’s orders) and went skinny-dipping in that someone’s backyard pond that somehow came pre-packaged with a natural two-tier, and very pretty waterfall and bubbling hot springs (the spouse looked at the husband smugly, but Lan Zhan turned away with his earlobes coloured red). Naturally, the husband was sexually assaulted the moment they soaked themselves in the refreshingly warm mineral-rich waters.

Lan Zhan moaned, but nodded shakily. He gripped Wei Ying’s waist, and started fucking the spouse in earnest, causing the latter to oooh and aaah and Deeper-Faster-Harder wantonly at the heavenly sensations of a pistoning rod pounding and shaping his insides - thankfully the deafening sounds of the waterfall ensured their rutting nggahs and hnnghs went unheard.

Wei Ying already knew that the parcel of land was uninhabited; his Paperman-powered leaves and litter had scouted ahead and reported that the family of six that lived there recently had been forcibly taken away the night before by Tian officials. The corrupted, jealous bachelor neighbour had falsified claims that the family had stolen some peaches from his garden, received a few gold nuggets for the sale of the father, the mother, and their four children, plus the land title of the dispatched family, and was currently lounging inside his wooden home, enjoying the fruits of his treacherous act - but not for long. He'd ordered an expensive take-out meal using the blood money, and it came with a sexy delivery girl, who was in the process of sucking the happy but unknowingly dying man's life energy to the last delectable drop.

With so many sinful and immoral deeds occurring everywhere, which were commonplace in any Imperial-conquered territories, Lan Zhan agreed that he needed to boost his virtuous defenses. Wei Ying proclaimed he was the best teacher, because "Gusu has been turned into a hellish paradise for the Dark Arts, and there is no better person than your awesome lao po to teach you the ropes of mitigating its corruption, lying, trickery and seduction tactics. It's all textbook material for us Dark Arts practitioners, really," he assured with a million-dollar smile. A good crash course training session was in order, so the couple targeted the husband's greatest flaw - and went straight into engaging in a heated sexual intercourse at the falls behind the missing family's backyard pool.

"Lao gong ! Your focus is faltering! Your Paperman form is about to slip away from the carriage, so pay attention! Multi-task! Be omnipresent like the god that you are! Just like how you can project zillions of free-to-air pornographic dreams in your sleep while keeping a state of peace, calm and mindfulness! One, two! One, two! One, two!" Wei Ying barked like a motivation coach on steroids. It was no joke to try to make sweet love with the harried husband while forcing him to maintain focus in all of his manifestations - including his body currently entwined with the spouse, and the Paperman clinging desperately on a wheel's axle far, far away; loving Paperman Wei Ying held his hand to make sure that the husband didn't flutter away. Wei Ying could effortlessly control zillions of sentient, flying trash while playing musical instruments as demonstrated shortly after leaving Lotus Pier; but Lan Zhan was just starting out with baby steps.

“... Mn!” the husband scrunched his brows and hnngh’d so hard - because his exceedingly excited twitching penis was one-two’ing non-stop inside lovely Wei Ying’s warm tunnel of hot tight love at that point -, that his hips trembled and bubbles of fart rose from the crack of his ass, drowned by the waterfall’s rush. One could see veins bulging around the temples, blood capillaries throbbing and surging beneath his flushed skin, muscles tightening in a bid to control the rising tsunami of orgasmic pleasures while maintaining a semblance of rational thought. He drilled into the spouse’s blossomed rosebud like there was no tomorrow, and Wei Ying squealed in ecstasy; the younger man’s prostate was abused so much that he started ejaculating uncontrollably, his nipples were suckled and licked with lustful lips and tongues, his body pockmarked with lovebites and bruising fingerprints - Lan Zhan would not yield, and he soldiered on to give and receive pleasure with his fated one.

“Don’t you dare orgasm inside me, or anywhere else, you hear? If you cum, it’s all over! All males, regardless of species, are at their weakest when they climax! It’s the golden opportunity for the succubi, while the male is temporarily knocked out in bliss, to carve out the chest and eat the golden core, then suck his life force from his loins using all kinds of devious means !” Wei Ying huffed and puffed like an angry instructor. He picked up his pace of bouncing on the submerged lap, slapping balls and flesh and splashing water on the dying-reviving husband’s groin. Hundreds, no, thousands of Invisible body parts started to etherealize into Lan Zhan’s body, tenderly and lovingly tickling, licking, sucking and caressing the man’s delicate insides until each organ, vesicle and tube started to swell and quiver in their own mini-orgasms.

“Hnnngh... Mn!” the husband frowned in utmost concentration, and nearly spilled - but not before he managed to reign in his shivering, cum-bloated urethra near the base of his about-to-explode penis; his Paperman sitting on the axle of a carriage’s wheel remained steady, which was a good sign -

Paperman Wei Ying gave the husband a thumbs-up, as much as a blank featureless yellow piece of paper could manage. Millions of fleshy folds caressed and clenched his angry-red arousal, coaxing the man to cum, cum, ejaculate and shoot everything out - but virtuous Lan Zhan remained steadfast. He'd suffered through three centuries of blue-balls when he ascended into godhood not too long ago, he could surely do better than that, really.

“You’re doing well, lao gong , so it’s time to ramp up the training, and take things to the next level!” Wei Ying shouted, full of encouragement and hope, “This is the ultimate succubus-incubus attack! Be prepared!” and he transformed into his incubus form. Lan Zhan blinked and stared at the final level boss - a terrifying corruption of his beloved’s image, armed with monstrous body parts, multiple protruding and clawed limbs and wings, hissing and spitting lustful poisons from fanged, forked tongue, savage-looking slimy and clawed tentacles growing out from the torso and abdomen - a demonic fallen archangel befitting legends of the Underworld and the many terrible twisted inhuman realms that had ever existed.

Black scaly, leathery wings enclosed the both of them into a cocoon of sexual imprisonment; bundles of wriggly vile toxin-coated tendrils emerged from the dark shadows within, tickling, licking then entering through the man’s ears and nostrils to reach his brain; even penetrating deep through the throat when the monstrous image of Wei Ying forcibly kissed the rather terrified-but-composed husband, weaving deep down the throat and chest cavity, to reach his soul within the golden core tucked inside the ribcage, where a multitude of those gooey, venomous limbs molested and started enveloping, consuming, penetrating the shiny surface and slowly turned it into a tainted, darkened orb; the incubus’ tail slithered beneath their copulating forms and forced itself through the husband’s rosebud, then like a undulating serpent worse than thousands of Thousand-Year Snakes, the insides are attacked, sprayed with paralyzing poisons, and an elongated appendage directly punctured the husband’s prostate gland and started pumping it with aphrodisiac fluids until the abused gland throbbed on its own like a beating heart, and sent dizzying dry orgasms surging from within the shuddering pelvis and sexual meridians; the incubus' tunnel of love morphed into a chasm of bountiful depraved feasts, when fleshy folds of flesh mutated into functional mouths, and they licked, bite and nibbled at the extremely excited turgid penis that kept pounding deeper, deeper, served unwillingly to those hungry corrupted lips where at the end of the tunnel, the largest monstrous mouth opened with a gaping yawn to welcome the wildly twitching glans with wet kisses on the cockslit, and immediately hundreds, thousands of tongue-like tendrils emerged from the darkness, speared into the urethra to invade the husband's genitals - the greasy mouth sucked and tugged very hard, until the husband was trapped and couldn't pull out his imprisoned penis, while more tendrils snaked into the ensnared delicate shaking organ, inflicting an onslaught of terrifying pleasures worse than an evil ugly green parasitic condom inside the man's body; soon, even the helpless, inundated prostate bloated like a bruised fruit being assaulted from the outside and from within, and started to contract and convulse uncontrollably to expel the invader, which only served to heighten Lan Zhan's soaring pleasures of the flesh even as death neared with a detonation that was about to come too soon.

His senses invaded, his mind controlled, his heart fouled, Lan Zhan grit his teeth and gasped loudly as the lights began to go out from his struggling body. He experienced heaven and hell a million times over; his body turned tomato-red and started shaking uncontrollably, his eyes rolled to the back until only the whites showed and they glowed, his nose bled with lefty spurts of blood from the heat burning up his soul and spirit, his back arched until one could hear muscles strain and bone-joints pop, his penis leaked all sorts of fluids in tiny squirts even as he continued to desperately fuck the devolved demonic spouse, roaring with infinite pleasure coursing through his veins and twisted, thoroughly fucked-up brain, the point where their bodies joined started to smoulder from the scorching friction and heat, radiating with pure white light until everything, his thought process, his vision, the blood-curdling sounds ringing in his ears, the taste of poisons in his tongue, the smell of pheromones, Wei Ying's odours and the acrid, pungent musk of crazy insane pleasures mixed into a soup that he wanted so desperately to swallow down, his finger and skin seared and tingled repeatedly like fire-ants blowing flames to dance all over his body, until he felt himself spin and spiral out of the body and melt into vapours that rise into the atmosphere, skyrocketing through pulsating worlds, ejaculating galaxies and reverberating universes to the beat of his racing heartbeat, until his whole existence became a single throbbing pulsing entity of pure, crystalline orgasmic vibrations - culminating to the soul-shaking sounds of thirty gongs of grand temple bells ringing somewhere in the distant intergalactic horizon.

.

Paperman Wei Ying tugged at the husband's hand and dragged him off the carriage's wheels - just in the nick of time, before someone stepped on a puddle and caused a splash of dirty water on the pavement. Wei Ying squeaked and yanked the two of them violently into a dry drain pipe to avoid the shower of filthy water, and waited in there to catch their breaths - or in paperman terms, to replenish their short-lived qi energy charge. The near brush of death (to a paperman, at least) jolted the husband from his orgasm-tinged reverie, and the first thing he did was to hug his paperman wife. He automatically humped his crotch against the wife's back (it's hard to differentiate between the front and back side of an unmarked piece of paper), until the part between his legs ballooned into a tiny lump, a bubble forming between layers of paper, and air containing excess qi leaked out with a high-pitched squeal-y sound, and finally, finally, a groan of great relief escaped and echoed inside the drain pipe.

"You're a horrible husband, trying to mate me even while in this form, and in this dirty place! How despicable and horny can you be?" Wei Ying laughed.

The tired paperman let out a sob for mercy and crumpled like a wet slab of mulch, before slowly reverting to his original standing stance. The wife helped him up and steadied him, while giggling, “It’s okay, it’s okay. No one’s perfect the first time, although I expected better of you. As your teacher, I’ll grade you as a B-minus. Three stars out of five. Pretty average and ordinary. Not spectacular, but you barely survived, and that’s good enough,” and gave a sweet kiss to the husband’s face (again, it’s hard to pinpoint the cheeks on the flat piece of paper).

The husband nodded with a raspy “Mn” and rubbed his eyes in an illusion of wiping away tears of disappointment. Wei Ying held Lan Zhan’s hand and gently patted on the latter’s forearm, whispering soothing words of “There, there, don’t cry, you’ve done your best and I’m so proud of you, sweetie.”

Later, when the husband regained his composure, both of them peeked out of the drain pipe, and Wei Ying showed him some interesting sights.

“See? Over there, right before we left the slums and just around the gated entrance to the city centre - there are tons of Corrupted Eye talismans on the walls around the city centre, and even the whole city in general, designed to pick out unapproved magics and equipment, unusual faces and people, and detect abnormalities in qi levels. I saw them while we were still under the carriage. If we had marched in with our cart, we’d be detained even before we could set foot into the city!” the wife exclaimed.

“But Wei Ying, if we used your... forged red talismans, permits and papers... and disguised ourselves as peasants, wouldn’t that let us through?” the husband asked hesitantly, clearly uncomfortable with the idea of using illegal materials in a town, or province, that lived up to his ancestry's virtuous virtues.

“ Aiya ... lao gong ! How can you be so smart yet so dull-witted, sometimes!” Wei Ying mocked the other and chuckled, “First of all, your qi levels are off the charts, after being blessed by the Thousand-Year Snake and Rabbit, on top of being the supreme trinity god of this realm. You're a walking beacon in the eyes of the magical sensors installed throughout the city, and I'm sure, in all cities of Gusu! We need to continue your sex training on your sexual desires, which is incidentally the most powerful form of qi , to temper your lusts and suppress them to acceptable levels.

Second, our weapons and equipment are visible even to the Corrupted Eyes, because they were hidden using your Purity-class magic which is antagonistic to Corruption magic; the difference between the two is like painting white on a piece of black paper! We'll need to utilize the concept of 'like begets like' to succeed in infiltrating the Imperial territories.

Lastly, look around! There's hardly anyone wandering the empty streets, which I think is due to the enacted martial law. So, it would be too obvious if we were to enter the city unprepared. You were preoccupied with our sex just now, but I witnessed couple of things that indicated to me what is happening here:

One, we may be outside the gates, but I've left enough enchanted leaves, pebbles and other bits of trash stuck to the carriage to follow though. They're headed towards a large building near the city square, and it resembles the Tian Mi Mi building we have in Yiling's Fragrant Blossoms Street. If my hunch is correct, that certain aspects of this world parallels the timeline that we originated from - that means the whole city, or even the Imperial Gusu government itself, functions as one big brothel organization to feed the succubi!

Two, to prove this to you, I overheard the two officials in the carriage talking about a collection from the day before - coincidentally, a family of six was bundled up into the carriage last night after an arrest! One of the Tian succubus said that the father was dropped off at a fine-dining restaurant to fulfil an advanced order from a general. His three adolescent sons were each given to Imperial lieutenants who had recently been promoted and deserved high-quality meals, while the mother and the daughter were sent to breeding factories somewhere deep in the city centre. Then, the other Tian succubus joked remarked that the mother begged for her and her daughter to work in the Public market or in any businesses that would employ prisoners or slaves, and they didn't mind not getting any food or pay, as long as they weren't sent to a so-called dungeon with a big canine predator. Then... can you believe it... the two officials laughed because there are no such Public markets or businesses in the city!

It's a trap, lao gong !”

Paperman Lan Zhan seriously mulled over what Wei Ying told him, and realization finally dawned on him. The policewoman never intended for them to reach Caiyi Town safely to get their paperwork in order.

“Wei Ying... the red talisman, a secret sign to tell anyone spying on us, and the guards in the city, that we've been checked and marked as food, and to let us through without disturbance.

The official slip, with mystical writings and codes, to let them track us down even within the city walls, and eventually steer us to the designated feeding spots.

Then, separate you, the wife, from me, the husband. You would be taken to the breeding factory, not a hospital. I would be captured either in the heavily guarded city council office or at the non-existent Public Marketplace.

Did I guess correctly?"

Wei Ying hugged Lan Zhan and gave him another sweet paper-light kiss, "Lao gong , you're not as dull-witted as I thought after all."

.

The couple continued to have wild demonic sex behind a curtain of waterfalls - they had a time limit as long as the red talisman pasted on the cart hasn't expired, but until then, they wouldn't have to face stern, devious, questioning police officers or other complicated obstacles on their way to Caiyi Town. The waters turned from murky red to milky white after a few hours, and they waited until everything was cleansed and washed out (aftercare is important, after all) before sneaking into the former occupant's home. Wei Ying snacked on fruits stolen from the surrounding orchards while exploring the small wooden house - it would've made a nice place to take shelter had there not been the terrible revelation of what happened to the previous residents. Everywhere, there were recent signs of the living - a father's well-weathered gardening tools, a mother's kitchen stove with a cooled fireplace, the children's straw toys, balls, wooden swords and other things used during play, and even a cute doll made with clay and cloth.

Wei Ying remarked that the Tians are a very cruel race, and rampaged with genocidal tendencies wherever they went, before he clamped up at the sound of a loud, satisfying slurp, a thump, and a rustle of grass and bushes. The couple hid behind a window pane and watched how the ill-fated neighbour's corpse was thrown out to the courtyard like a garbage bag, before being buried under a pile of loose dirt. They caught a glimpse of the naked, mottled, dessicated and fleshless husk of a young man, his face forever etched in a half-gaping, half-yawn, half-snarl and half-pained look, and the body showed signs of a morbid, twisted version of angel lust caused by succubus attack - the remains were frozen into a spread-eagled position with hips in mid-thrust, the bloodied erection had exploded into meaty shreds and the testicles were ripped out with great force - gone out with a bang, apparently - with some leftover discharge of bodily fluids and coagulated blood all over the crotch, and everything else had been sucked dry.

A female, who looked like a typical young and pretty gu niang, dressed in a tight-fitting pink qipao dress, adjusted her clothes, dabbed a blood-stained handkerchief on her moist, plump lips, and brushed off some dust and bits of her victim's brittle dried dead skin from her hands. She threw away the shovel easily - she appeared very strong, despite her slim and petite stature - and kicked away bamboo trays that used to carry jiaozi, jianbing and other fast foods of 2000 B.C. The half-eaten food tumbled to the earth, wasted and gone cold.

Lan Zhan's eyes opened wide in surprise - but he remained as quiet as a mouse - when black scorpions, centipedes and spiders crawled out of the food, and disappeared into the adjacent gardens; he remembered clearly the many times how members of the Tian clan used creepy crawlies to poison, subjugate and kill their prey. The woman licked her fingers, then conjured a glowing magic sword from thin air - just like how Wei san ge used immense Corruption magic to create such prohibited weapons - with a sign hanging on the hilt that spelled out “TianEx Tasty Treats”. She left shortly on the flying sword to the blue skies.

“Well, at least we know you’ve got your qi under control. She didn’t detect your presence although you were out of the water, and her senses weren’t impaired either,” Wei Ying murmured, and stood up to look out the window and guessed the direction where the delivery girl went. The husband “Mn”s knowingly, and sent a silent word of thanks to his well-trained, leveled-up loins - his penis had strengthened a thousandfold and his sexual stamina had increased tremendously, after all, equivalent to a Thousand-Year sexual torture or a millenia’s worth of blue balls.

.

“Wei Ying, please don’t play with it. That’s... dirty, and disrespectful,” the husband gently chastised, but didn’t kick up a fuss about the spouse’s detestable curiosity for the grotesque. He knew the younger man couldn’t help it - it’s his nature to investigate anything, regardless alive, dead or inanimate, and to find ways to make use of the bounties of the natural lifecycle - or sometimes, just to have plain, childish fun.

Naughty Wei Ying cackled as he dug out the dried-up cadaver from its shallow grave excitedly like finding a shiny new toy. He poked it rigorously with Suibian’s smeared end of its scabbard to find out which parts went ‘squish’ or ‘crack’, and used his unwashed hands to pick up the corpse’s leathery bony limbs, and pretended to play dolly with it - by shaking its body parts like a ragdoll and making squeamish, girly voices while moving its jaws, imagining himself to be a ventriloquist squealing ‘Oh no, I’ve died! I’ve done a bad deed and I was punished by having my pee-pee blasted into smithereens! Boo hoo hoo!’ (and then, performed the unsavoury act of twiddling the charred remains of a decimated dick with a twig.)

Lan Zhan shook his head in exasperation, and decided to let Wei Ying entertain himself - it was better than letting him frolic with anthills and end up with fire-ant bites and hot tears on the cheeks. “Remember to wash your hands with soap after you’re done,” he said, and went back to explore both houses and their estates - rival neighbours in the past - to search for any useful stuff. It felt like looting homes in a classic console role-playing game from the 21st century; plus, he could get a quick glance of how others in Gusu lived, and gain some home improvement tips too.

“Lao gong, I think I’ve figured out their supply chain of fierce corpses that had destroyed the Middle Kingdom,” the spouse called out after a while of dabbling with the man’s corpse. He held a stick in the middle of the gaping wound on the withered, broken ribcage, right at where a human’s golden core would normally exist, and doodled circles, squares and flowers on that spot.

“I remembered that most of the fierce corpses, skeletons, zombies and the walking undead we met during our travels, including those in the Lotus Pier, were mostly in a terrible condition. It looked as though they had been dead and decomposed for years. At first, I thought this could be explained by natural causes, such as the weather, or from heavy utilization, such as being turned into beasts of burden or sent to the frontlines as cannon fodder against archers and swordsmen. Any respectable Dark Arts practitioner wouldn’t resort to using such low quality infantry for combat, but succubi aren’t respectable at all.

Lao gong , I suspect the Tians had poisoned or eaten up all living men, and turned their remains - such as this one - into weak undead forces with damaged bodies. The women are probably treated like battery hens, where they're farmed for more able-bodied males as food for the succubi, and females to replenish their stocks, before they are converted into fierce corpses once they've outlived their usefulness. Since the body is desecrated, the soul consumed along with the destruction of the golden core, only the wispy weakened spirit is left, and is easily corrupted into a feral mindless thing with undying loyalty to its master. There will not be a Ghost General coming out of such degraded undead creatures, and at the same time, the Tians fully used up the victims as nourishment and as an endlessly growing army of soldiers. No wonder the Underworld hasn't experienced any explosion in population, since departed spirits never reached their gates, otherwise the Lord of Hell would be calling you up every other day!" the spouse conjectured, and he started to use the stick to scratch at growing black veins on the corpse's neck and limbs.

Lan Zhan did not miss the alarming sight of the gradually awakening new fierce corpse - one that sported a big hole in his chest and a ruined crotch - so he quickly finished what he set out to do, and told the spouse to be prepared to leave. Wei Ying has a soft spot for the undead, so he rummaged through the man's cupboards to find a decent set of robes and pants, and dressed the groaning body that had started to twitch. It was, at the very least, a dignified way to send off the man's spirit into oblivion and to ironically welcome the birth of a new Corrupted being into the world, with a shirt on and underpants below, so that nobody would have to stare and wonder - very rudely - what happened to the corpse's former golden core, and - worse - his privates. Wei Ying called this ritual 'dressing up the salad' or 'putting icing on the cake', which was what they witnessed during their journey; he had to admit, the Tians did a pretty convincing and admirable job to arm and equip their damaged undead to look presentable, sometimes fearsome - so that the skeletal remains didn't easily wobble or crumble when coming into blows during a heated fight. (On the other end of the spectrum, Wei Ying wondered how many Tian female succubi had been well-fed in their single tracked mission to suck dry all the males in the Middle Kingdom, and why that didn't bode well for the couple's expedition.)

Far, far away in another city, Lan Zhan's Paperman form had learned a new trick of possessing other small bits of trash, such as candy wrappers, discarded tanghulu sticks, pieces of ceramic, torn paper or frayed cloth, gravel pebbles, tufts of sun-baked weeds by the roadside, and of course, dried leaves - Wei Ying's favourites, because they were light, easy for the soul to inhabit, made of natural fibres, and incredibly agile. The couple knew they couldn't prowl around in bright yellow gingerman-shaped talismans, because they'd be easily picked out by the numerous guards with keen senses and Corrupted Eyeballs stationed everywhere within the city.

"You see, lao gong , traditional cultivation education taught everyone to transfer the soul into yellow talismans, so that the law, or at least the elders, can keep watch over those who used the spell. Papermen can often be misused for spying or playing pranks on unsuspecting victims, so the books say," said a small branch of pine needles ripped off from a nearby tree, while it hopped excitedly on the ground, "But not for me! I'm a Dark Arts practitioner, and I live to break the rules! I've learnt how to transfer my soul into all sorts of objects, even multiple objects, which is against everything our laoshi s ever taught us! Ha ha ha!" the pine needles jiggled with pride.

More amusing laughter ensued, when a small block of wood rolled out, disorientated, from a pile of scrapwood, broken wagon parts and discarded furniture. The pine needles cackled, "Bwah hah hah! Lan Zhan ah Lan Zhan, you went through the garbage pile and came out... as a tree stump?! Ha ha ha, you're stiff and rigid, like wood... your new appearance suits you very well! Ha ha ha!" the pine needles rolled around the dirt obnoxiously and became caked with mud, but the block of wood mustered its courage (he was breaking all known laws of cultivation on the use of Paperman spells, after all) to gingerly scrape itself along the ground's surface, then tested its balance with tentative, but blocky, awkward hops. The spouse continued to twist and turn with hearty belly-laughes until its breath, or qi, depleted, and poor Wei Ying coughed and choked as he suffocated for a few moments in silence, and in a dire need to recharge.

All of this happened under the noses of passing-by Tian soldiers and guards, who paid no attention to those two bits of ordinary debris moving around like getting blown by mid-morning breezes. Using their modified, mundane forms, the branch of pine needles and the block of wood planned to spend some time investigating the city where they'd been deposited, and check out how much Gusu had changed since the last time the husband set foot in there, nearly three years ago. Lan Zhan felt accomplished when he started to get accustomed to moving around in his new form, while the spouse bounced and fluttered happily like a sparrow in springtime.

Naturally, sometimes they were accidentally kicked by the boots of marching soldiers or swept by gusts of strong winds, and the naughty pine needles made sure to land on his beloved fallen block of wood. The pine needles wiggled seductively and intentionally tickled one particular edge of the block, until the latter moaned repeatedly, because a lump grew and protruded out like a distended phallic extension to its cubed body; the tickling brushing motions became faster, frenzied, and the wood started to bend and bow uncontrollably, threatening to splinter into two, the pine needles giggled and started to rub all over the heated spot until everything was scented with fragrant pine, that scandalized ballooning lump of wood mushroomed and swelled-- “-- Lao gong , focus! Concentrate! Don't let your morning wood explode, or our training will be for naught!” the spouse ordered with alarm in his voice, while lounging in the cart, somewhere in another part of Gusu. Lan Zhan sighed heavily, his forehead beaded with sweat, and berated himself for spacing out, for nearly yielding to the wonderful pleasures of having one's wood stroked until near-completion that he one-two'd again inside his loincloth, which had become soiled from a spate of similar mini-squirts of thick, boiling hot seed from his wildly twitching cockslit, even though he'd just bathed not too long ago. He conceded that his Paperman skill wasn't as good as Wei Ying's, and he was too easily distracted to concentrate on just maintaining two existences simultaneously - while the spouse could do hundreds, even thousands at any given time.

The husband “Mn”s and took a deep breath to start over his meditative focus; they still had a long way to go with their upgraded donkey-driven cart. In the short span of time fumbling through the now-deceased owners' homes and belongings, the husband emerged with a bag of apples taken from the pantry amongst a bunch of other unremarkable ‘treasures’ looted from the houses - including straw brooms, pots and pans, soaps and shampoos, spices, cooking ingredients; Lan Zhan gave a stern gaze that wordlessly commanded ‘don't ask why’, while Wei Ying stumbled upon and snagged a pouch of gold nuggets from the dead neighbour's hidden trapdoor - before escaping with the newly-awakened drooling but rather beaten-up fierce corpse in hot pursuit.

They shouldn't harm it, Wei Ying advised while trying to catch his breath - he was a little out of shape after eating too much and not exercising enough, and has a paunch to show -, the corpse should not be injured, as it was merely reacting to the smell of the living; it was expected that more Tian officers would return to collect the corpse and induct it into their army - hence, if it was missing in action, that would raise undue alerts throughout the county.

Out of nowhere, a gray donkey burst into the scene from its stables, hunger evident in its sparkly brown eyes that zoomed specifically at the bag in the husband's arm, and after a fair bit of running, the corpse faltered in its steps from fatigue and lost the chase, thus the couple earned themselves an enhanced transport with a new four-legged friend that Wei Ying fondly named as Big Apple (because it was really a little bigger than Little Apple).

Back to the present - Lan Zhan easily built a bench attached to the cart using a wooden plank, hammer and some nails which were part of the items ransacked from the homes (again, 'don't ask why'), fashioned a harness for the donkey using leather straps, ropes, belts and buckles (somehow, these were found among the loot too), then took a leaf from the spouse's book and hung one of the stolen apples on a makeshift fishing rod to propel the donkey forward.

Wei Ying gave useless pointers on how to steer Da Pingguo (大苹果; big apple), while sporadically yelling the driver to pay attention - because elsewhere, his Wood Block form was busy copulating with a branch of pine needles, and because in the present location, Wei Ying, sitting among a pile of pilfered household items and apples, happily let his hands wander around the husband's body, grope the broad muscular back and twin springy glutes that blocked his view for most of the trip, and fiddled with the latter's lower half until one could hang bags of apples off the hardest twitching rod of excited, angry-red flesh ever known to Man, that none of the fruits would tumble away.

"That's it, lao gong , good boy, you're really multi-tasking and omnipresenting yourself in this world, even while under massive pressure and stress!" the spouse spouted out some nonsensical but rather motivational words, and continued to stroke the thick over-eight inch boner between the husband's legs, caressed lewdly every thick throbbing vein lining the foreskin and heated length, polished the purple-red glans and swollen, leaky cockslit with such relentless, vicious pace, that Lan Zhan evolved into a Buddha-like state of existence of all-seeing, all-encompassing.

“... Mn...” the man hummed deliriously. The spouse lovingly changed the husband’s loincloth a few times over the course of the day, because there was too much happy milky goo spewing out; it was fine, since Wei Ying did have some experience changing diapers long ago, and they did bring along extra packs of underwear for their trip; plus, no one was really watching - the population had dwindled significantly due to the encroachment and predation by the Tian succubi, so there’s plenty of empty uninhabited space everywhere.

With the red talisman firmly in place on the cart, the couple finally made some progress in their journey - the mountains began to shift, ever so slightly, closer to reach, and the landscape gradually changed from endless forests and farmlands to grassy uphill slopes.

.

The pine needle made a mistake when it saw a calico cat’s fluffy tail waving sensuously - it floated up, buoyed by the breeze, and dive-bombed at the furred tip, intent on making a quick molestation attack, before it realized belatedly that it was actually no more bigger than a pinkie’s length and even thinner than one. The cat roared - frighteningly loud and low sonic booms in a world where everything is a hundred times larger than usual - and had the branch of pine needles in his fangs in a split second.

“Lan Zhan! Lan Zhan! Help me!”

The wooden block toppled over a window's ledge from a terrifying height of three storeys - like skydiving from an airplane for one whose size is smaller than a child's grasp; the couple had spent the day eavesdropping and enjoying the voyeuristic sights and sounds of sordid, perverted and sexually deviant acts performed within the walls of the Tian Mi Mi lookalike; the husband was so engrossed with opening new doors to sexual dimensions that he'd not known before - because succubi are truly the mistresses of sexual cultivation and revolution - that he'd reacted too slowly to his beloved pine needle's cries.

The stray cat growled irately at a sudden whoosh of leaves and sand around it, but they hardly grazed its furred body, let alone attempt to scare the feline beast away; the cat simply ignored the flying debris and continued to chew at the frantic, hysterical stick of pine needles. Some animals are known to have the ability to detect strange, paranormal creatures, or elevated levels of qi, and find them interesting, tempting, sometimes tasty - such as the case of a pine needle branch fascinatingly scented with sticky rice dumpling and fatty pork.

The pine needles squealed in terror for the husband, as it was munched by gnashing sharp teeth. It couldn't find any other larger, more substantial objects nearby to drive the beast away.

"Wei Ying!" the wooden block yelled, defiant in the face of getting smashed to the ground if it missed its one and only kamikaze lunge, as it fell clumsily from the blue skies - and landed on the cat's head with a loud thud. The cat hissed and snarled, because the sharp edge of the cube really hurt. With a ear-grating meow, the cat released the mutilated branch and ran off into a dark alley.

“Wuuu... wuuu... Lan Zhan... Lan Zhan...” the poor broken branch cried and shed hot tears from its needles. The leaves and sand that had danced around the life-and-death battle scene lost their energies, then twirled lower and lower until they rested on the dirt floor.

The wood block couldn't hold its beloved pine needle branch because it had no hands, so it did its best by nuzzling at his beloved.

“Mn. I'm here (我在).”

Notes for the Chapter:

The story meanders from one trope to another? Let's continue the adventures with Wangxian!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 105

Time didn't really have a meaning in the new Gusu, the former resident realized, when he stared at the sky, almost annoyed, at the perpetual mid-morning sun. Lan Zhan sighed, and swept some dust, grime, used food wrappers and containers, and bits of dead skin and dandruff out to the back; his spouse has a bad habit of picking on scabs and oily dead skin that triggers the itchy instinct to exfoliate oneself, and occasionally picking on his ears and nose too (the husband scowled when he remembered how some of those ended up in the mouth too - ewwww); however Lan Zhan couldn't bring himself to put the blame fully on his spouse regarding the dirty state of their living space, because he was guilty as well for contributing to the pile of detritus - including the long pieces of fallen hair and flaky dandruff on the floor every time he combs his hair (it's only a few, and the amount is normal, however paranoia and an unhealthy obsession for Perfection tend to exaggerate one's beliefs) - which worried the man about his imaginary receding hairline and potentially, the emergence of the much-maligned male pattern baldness.

The couple had travelled for a long while, spending the days raiding more abandoned houses - looting is technically the correct word, but Wei Ying prefers the term 'giving a second chance to pre-loved items' -, and collecting stuff to expand their little cart into a modest motorhome-like module for more comfortable, convenient modern living. They also observed the daily lives of villagers and an increasing number of merchants whenever they chanced upon the few remaining active settlements, and counted the number of devious ways people were tricked and taken away before being turned into food for the succubi-kin.

Lan Zhan wiped sweat off his face after he was done sweeping with the straw broom, and looked back at their little studio apartment on wheels. After suffering a wet episode from riding into the hills in an open cart under an unexpected drizzle, Wei Ying threw the gauntlet and rolled back his sleeves to demonstrate his skills as the Handyman Of The House; the creative carpenter-cum-cultivator (and badass Dark Arts master, amongst other unsavoury titles) single-handedly tore down the cart and rebuilt it with sturdier wooden planks and other construction materials taken from the said uninhabited homes, sheds and barns. The transport evolved into an enclosed shoebox with a thatched roof at the top and a couple of windows to the front and side, with the main doorway entrance at the back. The bench at the front was retained, however Big Apple didn't seem as needy for the namesake fruit as his predecessor of sorts, so the couple didn't need to tie a fishing rod to its back to lure it forward; a couple of slaps on the donkey's rump, and it moved on its own on a relatively straightforward uphill path.

Lan Zhan took responsibility to furnish their newly-constructed mobile home, since he's always been the level-headed one collecting ordinary but useful household stuff during the raids, while the more adventurous Wei Ying went off to hunt for hidden trapdoors and treasure chests in the hopes of collecting pouches of gold, precious metals and gemstones, artifacts and relics, and other useless trash that carry no value whatsoever during desperate survival times like this. The husband made sure their boxed home housed a small low dining table that doubled as a mini kitchenette, with a portable stove, kitchen utensils and tableware stacked on it. He couldn't do any fancy cooking other than simple boiling and heating - making a pot of tea was possible, thank goodness -, although Wei Ying was always happy to start a barbecue outside, and they had unlimited access to Wangxian-branded premium healthy packaged foods sent by the spouse's wonderfully caring siblings, twenty-four seven.

The other half of the home was barely wide enough for lounging and sleeping - which was fine, because Wei Ying loves to cuddle with the husband in that narrow length of space, and sleep on him. Wei Ying complained that because it was always mid-morning all day, he found it hard to go to bed with the brightness from the skies even with the indoors curtains drawn. So, by sleeping on top of the husband - or under, if having missionary sex and slumber at the same time - the younger man could always tuck his face into the husband's warm, muscled chest or the crook of the (musky, husbando-scented) armpits, pillowed by marvellous rising-falling pecs, and listened to a lullaby of strong, steady heartbeats to lull himself to better quality sleep. Wei Ying preferred to top, although at times, he would gladly consent to having the husband sleep above him and between his raised hips and spread-eagled legs, with the husband's arousal nestled warmly and tightly deep inside, and happily milked throughout day (or night - but there's no moonrise anyway).

After cleaning their home, like clockwork Lan Zhan went out to check and clean the exterior - that every plank on the wall was in good shape and properly wiped down, that the four wheels were well-oiled and rinsed using Water spells to get rid of any mud or remnants of roadkills - despite their terribly sluggish speed, Lan Zhan sometimes found grim-looking bits of smashed insects, earthworms and the occasional lizard tail stuck on the rim. Next, he grabbed a bucket that hung outside their home, and filled it with food for Big Apple - summerfruits, carrots, turnips and hay packed from someone's unattended barn; most of their consumables and supplies are stored in bags that also hung on the sides of the mobile home; storage space is a luxury after all, when embracing such minimalistic simple living lifestyle. The donkey was left grazing on a thriving hillside meadow, and it brayed happily at the extra bucket of treats left by its new favourite owner.

.

Not too long after, the husband heard the melodious voice of the spouse, "Lan Zhan! Lan Zhan! Look what I've found this time!" The young man came running through the woods, bursting out in an energetic explosion of leaves, twigs and other debris from the forests, with a bulging hunting net over his shoulder - he'd caught some wild pigeons from their nests, a couple of flying foxes hanging off unguarded fruit trees, a medium-sized wild boar, and a small monitor lizard. “Remember to disinfect them with your Cleansing spells before you marinade the meat, okay? I heard there are plenty of nasty viruses and diseases in bushmeat, and I don’t want to suffer from a stomach ache later,” he called out after dropping the netted catch to the ground, and rushed off to wash his hands in a bubbling brook - he’d been taught that personal hygiene is just as important.

“Mn. I’ll wash and season some sweet potatoes and root vegetables, and wrap them in aluminium foil for you. We still have a few rolls left since the last re-supply from your youngest sibling,” Lan Zhan replied nonchalantly; he knew their kitchen inventory like the back of his hand. He approached warily towards the net at first, and when he was certain that the pile wasn’t moving, he plucked out a cleaver from his sleeves (‘don’t ask why’) and dutifully sorted out the kills, while the spouse happily waded into the stream just a few meters away. Lan Zhan mechanically worked on the animals like a master butcher; he picked up the monitor lizard first, threw it onto a tree stump that functioned as a temporary chopping block, and started washing then beheading the reptile as part of preparing their next cookout - it didn’t matter if it was lunch or dinner, or a snack in between - their body clocks had gotten a little off-track since arriving in Gusu.

The younger man, on the other hand, stood in the gleaming waters to count the number of fishes that drifted by, and then hopped from one submerged rock to another like a kid who’d found a secret swimming pool in someone’s backyard garden. He wondered aloud that perhaps he should get himself cleaned too - he’d been chasing after the animals on ground and briefly, on a flying Suibian too, then scouted the perimeters of a sparsely populated village not too far away, and nearly bumped into succubi - his heart nearly stopped from the fright, he said, and his skin crawled at the sight and smell of females inhaling life energies off their struggling, dying male victims pinned to the ground with wooden stakes, and thought his brown muddied clothes could have caught some drops of splattered blood or undead toxins during the massacre.

“It was awful, lao gong , when the men cried and let out blood-curdling screams until even the hairs on my hand stood up, and I had to watch how their skin discoloured, turned into blotches of purples and grays, then shrivel up into bristly wrinkled mummies with sunken eyes, hollowed cheeks, cracked lips, and long teeth and fingernails, when their blood and life force drained through their bloodied cocks into the succubi’s lower mouth, and even their mouth-like tail-ends!” he said in earnest while performing dog paddles in the deeper parts of the stream, to which the husband “Mn”s in indifferent acknowledgement.

Wei Ying continued to regale the husband sordid, revolting stories from his trip when he skinny-dipped into the refreshingly cool waters, while Lan Zhan started skinning, bloodletting and gutting the dead animals on the wooden stump on land, until his apron turned red with blood and entrails, in a rather relatable, but twisted parallel of what succubi do to humans. Lan Zhan eased into the mostly one-sided conversation, and mentioned in passing that while Wei Ying was away having fun with the horror and gore-themed experience, a couple of police patrols on horseback stopped by the meadow to check out their mobile home and the donkey; however, since they’d plastered the red talisman, the policewomen didn’t pester him for details, and instead, told him to get a move on to reach Caiyi Town soon - while licking their lips at a faint scent of rich qi and life energy emitting from his body.

“I’m your lao po , so I always get first dibs on your privates, you hear me?” Wei Ying called out, and Lan Zhan smiled, ever so slightly, as he slammed the knife down and cleaved a wild boar cleanly into two.

Wei Ying bathed in the shallow stream and tried handline fishing using just a nylon line teleported by ErNet's online delivery service (he paid five silver pieces via his e-wallet for the purchase), a few hooks, some crushed insects and earthworms that Lan Zhan had picked off the mobile home's wheels as bait, and a hovering holo-phone playing WeiTube videos on how to catch fish with the primitive technique. He looked absolutely in tune with his inner caveman, so he went all out to have fun splashing and swimming in the waters, grinned triumphantly when reeling in a full line of small fishes, aaaah'd with great relief for peeing and pooping at the same spot - because nobody would ever know and everything was washed downstream by fast flowing waters -, until he was briefly interrupted when the blood-stained husband arrived with a tray (his hands are perfectly clean and disinfected, by the way).

“Here's your soap, shampoo, a jar of perfumed floral elixir, and a washcloth,” the husband curtly pointed out like the perfect butler, and he placed each item on a flat rock by the riverbank. “Also, lao po, please try this sauce for your barbecue. I've made a bowl using lemon juice as base, honey, soy sauce, brown sugar, and a mix of herbs and spices,” the bowl was handed out, but Wei Ying sheepishly grinned and wiggled his fingers in the water - he'd need to soap them up first, of course, because after pooping he hadn't cleaned and disinfected his hands, unlike the husband. Sighing, Lan Zhan dipped his own finger into the homemade sauce and let the spouse lick it off. He watched, mesmerized, at how lovely Wei Ying stared at his brown-dipped finger tip with demure, downcast eyes, then opened his mouth to carefully, almost timidly, lap the thick coat of sweet-sour juice off his hand, then that lovely tongue retracted to hide in its cavern, but not before licking generous swipes around plump, moist lips in smacking satisfied sounds; he didn't miss the sheen of a perfect set of pearly-white teeth either; Lan Zhan swallowed hard, and was secretly thrilled that even after all those time spent together on shared beds and baths, getting to know the spouse inside out, he still found Wei Ying to be breath-taking, beautiful, and still very, very desirable.

Wei Ying took a while to analyze the finger-licking complex flavours with his discerning tastebuds. “Mmm... lao gong , it needs a bit of chilli. Can you slice a few and add them in?” he asked with bright innocent doe-like eyes, and Lan Zhan had to give in, despite being concerned that he’d overdone the Perfection of the very thick, rich aromatic sauce that would make any barbecued meats drip with Perfectly heavenly juices. “Mn,” he agreed anyway, and went off to arrange everything that the spouse would need to demonstrate his self-proclaimed amazing outdoor cooking skills; Wei Ying only had to hold a sprig of lemongrass to periodically paint the sauce on perfectly cut, marinated and skewered meats on the spit that magically spins on its own atop a hearty campfire, and wouldn’t need to break a sweat to serve a sumptuous feast credited to his name.

.

“The stars are beautiful tonight,” Wei Ying sighed while chewing a mouthful of grilled pigeonmeat, sighed relaxedly, and leaned deeper into the husband’s broad chest and firm but slightly flabby abdomen; he could feel a slight bulge of accumulated fat around the husband’s waist and hips push against the small of his back, if he scooted his buttocks backwards. He really liked spooning against the husband, if not on the bed, then upright against a tree, gazing upward into the dark, dense forest canopy, where tiny pinpricks of morning sunlight filtered through the shadowy backdrop like millions of diamonds coloured with golden sunlight and bright blue skies.

There was a comforting whoosh sound of inhaling and exhaling behind his ears, the sensation of lips dancing along his shoulder, through his long lush hair, and then gentle nibbles along the nape, before a yellow piece of crumbly soft, baked sweet potato suddenly rose like a glorious elongated sunrise to fill his vision. “Nnnh,” the husband grunted in his own endearing way, a universal gesture of offering to the one he worships most.

Wei Ying smiled and blew a couple of times to cool down the steaming chunk of sweet snack, then opened his mouth. The husband popped in the tasty, perfectly cooked morsel, and his calloused fingers went back to peel more for the beloved spouse; those strong arms, lined with thick veins and a nice shade of tan, loosely hooked around his belly, so he could observe how Lan Zhan worked on the potato while he reached for a plate of skewered roasts.

“Mmm?” another incomprehensible sound, this time coming from Wei Ying, while he waved a stick with three cubes of perfectly barbecued meat - one from the fruit bat, one from the boar, and the remaining chunk from the lizard -, with sliced cherry tomatoes, onions and colourful peppers in between. Lan Zhan seemed to hesitate when he didn’t immediately gobble up the proffered food; Wei Ying had force-fed the husband with more than ten sticks of such meats during their lovey-dovey dining under the forest canopy of starlights (sort of), until the latter burped out rather gamey, tangy breaths, and his mouth tasted of earthy, metallic flavours.

“Come on, lao gong, it’s not going to make any difference now that it’s too late. Just imagine this as part of your training, otherwise all these wonderful good food that I’ve made for us will go to waste,” the spouse cocked his head towards the husband and gently chastised him. Lan Zhan “Mn”s and bites the bullet - or meat -, to the sounds of a giggly, delightful mischief in the making, and his own heavy-hearted chews. It actually tasted quite good, much better than chicken, especially when drenched with the spicy, sweet-sour sauce that Wei Ying had a hand in.

Later, they would spend hours cuddling under the shade of trees, naked, brushing skin-to-skin, as they engage in very energetic foreplay to excite each other with tingly touches, sweet kisses and heated handjobs; the husband's sexual qi levels skyrocketed to the stratosphere due to the bushmeat, and he became an insatiable sex demon in human form - frisky Wei Ying squealed a lot throughout their sex romp on the forest floor, goading the hungry, greedy older man to inseminate him until his fantasized fertile womb is inundated with rich white milk, and to father as many babies as possible because 'oh darling your dick is so big, it makes me feel so good, please please make me pregnant today, daddy, uncle, I want to give birth to your sons, twins and triplets too' et cetera ad naseum . Their sex was flavoured with plenty of drilling hip-thrusts, tasty moans and hoarse cries; drizzled with lots of one-twos until the receiving rosebud stretched and started to gush from unintentionally spilled seed; and by adding a pinch of dirty sex talk, it morphed into an extremely pleasurable lovemaking session that led to many accidental dry prostate convulsions and balls quivering with endless testicular orgasms, until the husband's iron-hard spear scorched and smouldered inside the clenching warm wet tunnel, and he tried to hold back, to edge, to crest and fly higher, and sail to the heavens but not burn his wings in the glorious, glorious blinding climax - he'd reach godhood again, while Wei Ying enjoyed getting fucked six ways to the same heaven and without reaching the same godhood, the younger man screamed when he exploded into a string of multiple orgasmic happy endings; in the end, the couple agreed to mutually pleasure each other with a soul-satisfying post-coital snuggle, with Wei Ying falling asleep in Lan Zhan's arms, underneath that unfortunate shady tree, with the latter happily tucked inside the spouse's lovely envisioned womb, dreaming of conceiving a village of baby Wei Yings to raise, nurture and love forever and beyond.

.

Big Apple watched his owners - the mind-boggling sight of an older, taller human chasing after a slightly shorter one, with the former as hung as a horse (which irked the donkey because of the unfair comparison... although that erect ten-inch dong swinging crazily between the larger man's legs was quite intimidating to look at, really), and the latter squealing, shrieking and running like the wild mountain monkeys it'd seen foraging closer to the central hilly plains of the region. Seeing them tumble and roll on the meadow grass, relentlessly mounting like breedworthy pairs, struggling, groaning and grunting like uncouth lustful beasts with plenty of squirts in between - considered uncivilized even for its semi-domesticated standards - was truly appalling, since such useless, unproductive and unappealing acts between two males was generally frowned upon, even within the animal kingdom.

“Ah, ah, Lan Zhan, you just came, but you're still so hard... take me again! My ass is all yours! Ha ha ha!”

“... Mn!!!”

“Unh, unh, ooh, I just climaxed and my hips ache from your constant pounding, please be gentle... ooooooh! You're such a naughty husband, why do you stick it in again? Ah, ah, ahhhh, slower, gentle, gentle, please, unnh!”

“... Mn!!!”

Big Apple snorted and hee-hawed unhappily at the couple frolicking in the nude at its patch of grass; annoyed because they stomped on its dining table and left icky stains of milky white and whatnots everywhere, and somehow, a little envious of the duo that acted worse than rabbits in spring - that it felt rather lonesome on that bright, sunny beautiful mid-morning in Gusu.

“Ah, I’m so glad my siblings sent these Wangxian Premium Xiao Ji Ji Cuts 100 Percent Free Range Chicken Wings!” the younger man declared his satisfaction, while waving five skewers with fancy spins in each hand like performing a strange firedance, each skewer with at least five pieces of deep-fried, honey-roasted and chargrilled varieties of those said wings using different types of herbs and spices. “We’ve pillaged a few abandoned houses on the way, but found only a paltry sum of gold pieces, and for you, only some cooking ingredients that wouldn’t make enough good meals for the two of us. Every chicken has only two wings, and now I have... er... twenty-five... er... twenty-four of these baobei s in my hands,” he announced, as he took a bite off one.

Lan Zhan walked ahead, with a carrot on one hand to lure Big Apple to walk faster, and a stick of healthy cucumber for himself on the other. “Wei Ying,” he muttered between juicy crunches, “Don’t be greedy. Those wings are meant for others.” The spouse pouted, then sheepishly grinned, before putting the skewers back into a large paper bag that bore a huge Wangxian black-and-white rabbit logo; he nimbly peeled off one wing - the one he had taken a bite, and therefore belonged to him - before going around their creaky mobile home to check that everything was secured, strapped, tightened, nailed and properly hung; they were going up some pretty steep cliffs soon, and he didn’t want their bags of foodstuff and kitchenware tumbling down the hill.

“Ah... another red talisman expired,” Wei Ying grumbled, and peeled off an ashen-coloured piece of paper from one side of their shoebox-shaped home. He replaced it with a fake one - made of cheap notebook paper, dipped in liquid extracted from beetroot juice; it worked perfectly well so far, and they've managed to avoid getting held up by an increasing number of Imperial patrols. Wei Ying realized that the closer they traversed towards the central mountainous regions of Gusu, the heavier the police presence, and more worryingly, soldiers as well. Apparently, as one Tian female militia unknowingly revealed, the breach in the southern borders had heightened everyone's alert; the entry of a Gusu Lan person was surprising but not unexpected - a former resident returning to his hometown -, however, magical sensors had picked up an immense Dark presence alongside that person, which confounded the Tians because they had never seen such 'chaotic, turbulent and wildly deviated qi' that couldn't be explained even by their so-called vast knowledge and mastery of Corruption magic.

(At that point, scarf-wearing Wei Ying chuckled, and promptly cleared his throat as though he suffered from a bad cold. Lan Zhan pretended to "Hn" disinterestedly because he was supposed to act as an illiterate peasant at that time; nevertheless, the couple continued to exchange a flurry of WeiChat messages telepathically using ErNet - that the Tians have detected, and acknowledged that Wei Ying's dark magics are probably superior to theirs.)

"Well, that's the last red talisman we'll need to use. After we pass this mountain, we'll be in the heart of Gusu, and the Tian's Imperial-controlled territories which is this detestable space-time bubble," Wei Ying remarked and wiped his hands on his pants, leaving blood-red prints made of vegetable juice. "My siblings' orbital spycams have detected countless Corrupted Eyeballs, a tight network of both physical and magical security devices, and many checkpoints until Caiyi Town. We won't be able to hide or disguise ourselves anymore, I'm sure," he added.

"Lao gong, when can we transform and start whacking those Tians straight to outer space? I want to get out of these smelly peasants' clothes soon! I want to start using my golden flute and Suibian! I want to see you dance on rooftops with Bichen on one hand and playing guqin with the other! Also... are we there yet?"

So many questions from the naggy lao po , but there was only one answer needed:

"Mn. Soon. At the peak of this mountain range, where all cities in Gusu are in sight, we'll send the signal flares to rally the survivors of my former clan out of hiding. Then all hell will break loose."

Wei Ying smiled devilishly in response, and played with a couple of tassels hanging from his belt - he'd summoned them earlier with magic, a striped black-red one for himself, and a fluffy white one for the husband, ready for use as soon as they return to their usual appearances.

The white tassel quivered and squealed softly when Wei Ying's finger touched its hairy end. It smiled a toothless smile, showing the most adorable pink drooly gums that only a mother (and father) could love.

.

For the past few days - theoretically, it was still the same day, since it's perpetually mid-morning -, while the couple took their sweet time journeying deeper into the province (and make plenty of sweet love in-between), wasted fake red talismans and blindsided a few passing-by Imperial patrols, they learned about the state of Lan Zhan's ancestral homeland.

The Imperial forces seemed to congregate in cities and mainly in the central regions of the province. The countryside, so far as they could guess, was relatively spared of the bloody and predatory atrocities of Tian Mi Mi-esque operations and trades of the flesh, with a few exceptions - usually when Tian females get out of control, such as the case of the newborn consumed in broad daylight.

People, usually farmers and traders from outskirt villages, continued their daily lives, such as operating eateries and teahouses, and farming, rearing livestock and transporting goods with the necessary permits. Their population was already sparse to begin with, since borderside towns and villages are few and far in between, and the situation was exacerbated by the devious means by which the Tian succubi slowly cultivated and harvest human beings - the weak and gullible, such as the parents who willingly gave away their children, or the age-old trick of luring hungry or unfortunate men with poisoned food and other traps - a tactic the couple had seen from Yunmeng and now in Gusu; and the greedy and the corrupted, such as the bachelor who got rid of his neighbours and ended up playing into the succubi's hands, or the village heads who knowingly misused the Sacred Scriptures or plain morals to sell warm bodies in exchange for gold, and it goes without saying that those twisted elders will likely get their own bad endings.

Closer to the populated areas, lies an entirely different story. The branch of pine needles and its lover, the wooden block, had scouted an unnamed city where many males were herded into brothel-like buildings and never survived, and where females were sent to breeding factories to give birth to generations that will sustain the succubi-kin. It helped that both enchanted inanimate objects could control millions of rubbish scraps that were sent blowing into other nearby urban settlements by the seasonal winds. They watched, and relayed the information to their original selves, on how cities devoid of people have been turned into massive operations to collect, process and distribute captured humans to the succubi armies who have mostly decided to take up permanent residence and build military bases. The human urbanites had been the first to fall prey, and left a huge vacuum in terms of city space; a few administrative buildings still operated, such as a largely sockpuppet city council, hospital, guilds and out-of-business stores at the fringes, and the bulk of the remaining city is usually walled off, and housed huge Tian Mi Mi-esque nests of succubi that form the backbone of their own government.

The pine needles and block spotted shadows scurrying in deserted alleyways, running amongst piles of refuse and rubble. Some of them wore familiar white forehead ribbons beneath dark, dirty ragged cloaks - in which the wooden block started to bounce frenziedly in a futile attempt to chase after the disappearing silhouettes, and the pine needles finally caught on and understood why its husband was so desperate - so, it dove beneath the block, causing it to yelp in shock, and the pine needles flew faster than a speeding dried leaf. The grateful husband maneuvered the pine needles through the twisting passageways using swordboarding techniques, and soon, pineboarding became the new norm, and they followed the last survivors of the Gusu Lan sect to their secret hideout in the unnamed city.

Notes for the Chapter:

It's been stifling hot in where I live for the past few days, so I haven't been at my optimal state when writing. Things should get heated up a bit soon.

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 106

“Lao gong , lao gong , do I look better in this? Or this? Or this?” a twig, a bamboo leaf and a candy wrapper sashayed, spun and twirled around the unnerved wooden block. The branch of pine needle, which had been mauled by a cat then glued together using sticky rice mortar, suffered enough damage and crashes along the dark alleyway, to warrant a replacement. The spouse’s soul split into three equal parts and each found their potential host.

“It... It does not matter. We’re just here to get them out, and then disappear altogether,” the block replied matter-of-factly, and a little unsettled at the sudden increase in the number of lao po s.

All three items stuck their tongues out (in the most relatable way possible, although none had any), and whined in unison, “You’re always so undecided! I want to make the best first impression, since they’re also my relatives, after all!”

“... All. I like all of your forms,” the block sighed tiredly. There was nothing sexy about a twig, a leaf and a candy wrapper, after all, but he didn’t want to suffer from the wife’s finicky wrath.

“Eh? Ehh? Ehhh? That’s not a clear answer at all! But very well, I’ll use all three forms, then!” the trio shouted gleefully and launched themselves into the air.

At the end of the alleyway was a dead-end, however the wall of bricks was merely an illusion - similar to the one used in the Cloud Recesses to protect the Gusu Lan's ancestral caves, not too long ago.

.

“ Shixiong ! I brought a few jars of water from a nearby river, but they smell of rotten flesh. Please Disinfect them so that we can drink... I'm so thirsty! After playing hide-and-seek with those Tian soldiers for the whole day, my legs are tired, and my throat is parched!”

“ Shixiong ! I searched for hours in the nearby abandoned houses, but could only find a handful of dried fruits... please add some qi so that they become more substantial foodstuff for us! I'm so hungry after foraging for so long with nothing to eat other than pickled vegetables and stale bread these past few days!”

“ Shixiong ! I was with them to make sure that we've always kept our Gusu Lan robes and forehead ribbons on, so that those undead-scented Cultivators cannot detect us. I managed to steal a few remaining magic pills from the deserted medicine shops to boost our qi energies, and I'm pretty sure we are not followed on our way back. Here, please take one, we know you're exhausted from tending to our physical needs, but we really need you to be on top condition to survive!”

Lan Jing Yi sighed tiredly and hesitantly plucked one quail egg-sized brown pill from one of the disciples' hands. He stared at it suspiciously, and gave it a careful sniff - it was bitter, but there was a whiff of qi emanating from it.

“All of you are really useless! We studied in the same class, taught by the same laoshi, learnt the Disinfect and Regenerate spells together, so why am I the only one who can use them during survival times like this? Were all of you asleep during the lessons?” the boy-turned-young man complained, as he popped the pill into his mouth - and winced at the dry, bitter and awful taste - then his body glowed a faint light blue radiance as a sign that his body started to digest the (probably) expired drug. The other three disciples kneeled in front of their eldest and mutually-agreed appointed leader, and lowered their heads in shame. A small fire in the middle of the hidden empty chamber crackled and popped when fed with small amounts of combustible trash, casting long shadows onto all four occupants which created a rather miserable, lonely ambience of survivors during an apocalypse.

Jing Yi sat in a lotus position and began to perform cultivation moves with his hands. He focused the burst of qi energy absorbed from the pill, and the faint glow converged to his right finger tip. He pointed his finger at each of the items laid out on the floor, and a spurt of blue qi energy leapt into them - the jars of water shook slightly and bubbled without heating up; and the dried fruits transformed into small apples, peaches, apricots, plums and pears. There wasn't nearly enough to eat and drink, so Jing Yi politely refused his share and let his juniors have a little more. “I'm the eldest among you,” he said, “so I will make do with practising my qi absorption skills to nourish myself. I don't need food as much as you do, and I hope you will continue to improve your cultivation after this disaster is over, so that you can be self-sufficient like any respectable, honorable Gusu Lan.”

The three disciples bowed with a fist in palm salute to acknowledge their senior's advice, and quietly ate the meagre food. All four looked worse for wear - they wore dark-coloured dirty cloaks over their white robes which had frayed and smudged with yellow and muddy browns; they looked haggard, with dark circles under their crusty eyes, their bodies fatigued and thin from constant hunger; their topknots were a little out of place with messy hair sticking out at odd angles, their faces were smeared with ash, dirt and grime, because they had no chance to wash and take care of their appearances; their boots had holes and one could see blistered toes in them too.

Jing Yi huffed in dismay while watching his juniors crowd around the fireplace. He snatched one of the jars intended for a disciple, took a swig - then winced at the taste - and slammed it lightly on the ground with a frown on his face. “Ahhh! Those terrible Tians! Not only they took over and renamed our sect, they’re murderers like wolves in sheep’s clothing! If that Ouyang gongzi didn’t warn us earlier after witnessing firsthand how his father was killed in bed, we would’ve become food for those demonic Cultivators! If only our elders didn’t sign off our lives during that tea ceremony with those blasted Imperial pirates from the sea, we wouldn’t be in this horrible situation!” he grumbled as though he was half-drunk, likely from the expired pill’s after-effects, although his conscience and annoyance was clear.

“ Shixiong , please don’t get too caught up with the past! The ceremony was nearly half a year ago, back when everyone was panicking about the protests, the fierce corpse attacks, and the rise of the Imperial military powers versus the pressures coming from the Jin-led Grand Cultivation Council. I heard that our elders were immediately taken to the easy promises of peace, security, and the chance to abandon their worldly worries. My grandfather, who has served for five decades in the Lan family council as a scribe, told me that without a Sect Leader present to guide the elders, one cannot fault them for making the wrong decisions after listening to the Imperial Court’s sweet lies and promises, and present their conclusions to the demanding Tian da niang and her army of Imperial Cultivators.”

“ Shixiong , you have to stay positive! I will always be a Gusu Lan, not a Gusu Tian! I don’t want to serve that witch Tian da niang and her Blue Skies trash! That’s why I kept my white robes and forehead ribbon on even though the practice was prohibited, after that terrible Matriarch Tian carved the new rule on the Sacred Scriptures Rock! I’m glad you instructed us to bring our uniforms when we fled the Cloud Recesses! I cannot imagine what happened to those who embraced the new sect, burned their old robes, and were unwittingly eaten by those demonic Cultivators!”

“ Shixiong , don’t worry! I’m sure one day we’ll get our revenge and return to our homes! As you said, now we need to scour every town to find survivors of our sect and our allies who fled that night when the Cloud Recesses was sealed. I know at least a couple of Ouyang families who lived in the next city across the winding Long River - if only we can get through the checkpoints, we can try to locate them and recruit them to our cause!”

The three disciples were so empathetic and concerned about their squad leader’s emotional state, that Jing Yi appeared touched. Lan Jing Yi brushed a few stray strands of hair to the side, and nodded with relaxed shoulders, “Yes, yes, I know, I know. That’s enough talking for now. Go on, finish your meal, we still have to sit down and figure out how to escape this place without drawing the attention of the checkpoint guards and their talismans stuck all over the city. Besides the Ouyang’s and other families, we need to track down Si Zhui’s trail before it grows cold too.”

“ Shixiong , the Gusu Lan sect is truly generous hearted; even in times of danger and despair, we look after those who have helped us, or left us, such as Senior Si Zhui and even former enemies like the Ghost General from the Wen family.”

“ Shixiong , do you think Sect Leader will return from the North soon? We haven’t heard of any news since his quiet emergence before our homes were sealed off. I hope we can complete our mission in time for Sect Leader’s return to bolster our numbers, when Sect Leader Lan Xichen finally takes charge.”

“ Shixiong , do you think Sect Leader will call upon us to engage in war with the Imperial army? With the few reneging elders including Master Lan Qi Ren imprisoned in their clutches and held in Caiyi Town, it will be hard to make a move against the army without endangering their safety-- Shhh! I detect a breach in the magical wall! Shidi , didn’t you say that you weren’t followed on your way back?”

All four rose and drew their swords at the wall - only to see a twig, a leaf, a candy wrapper, and belatedly, a chip of wooden block tumble through the illusionary barrier.

“Ah, the winds must be strong outside, for bits of rubbish to blow into here.”

“Hush, you idiot! Nothing can go through the magical wall spell gifted by our ancestors, other than individuals of the Lan family!”

“Ahhh... am I so hungry, that I see bamboo leaves reminiscent of tasty sticky rice dumplings filled with fatty pork? Or those wrappers that remind me how much I crave for childhood favourites like traditional candies and snacks? And what is this twig doing, drawing circles around us in this chamber? Shixiong , am I dreaming?”

Lan Jing Yi was at a loss for words at the very strange situation, and a painful rumble from everyone’s stomachs seemed to convince them that perhaps they were really hallucinating from having too little to eat for their utterly exhausted thin, frail bodies. Jing Yi took a few unsteady swipes with a shaky sword at the flying trash, as he was still weak and disoriented from the qi pill; more bits of public waste, such as pages from discarded periodicals, paper food containers, someone’s torn underwear, and dried leaves rolled into the chamber to join the circus of flying, spiralling and spinning rubbish that felt suffocating due to the dust, yet refreshing from the hurricane of ventilated fresh air that seemed to rise from the eye of the storm growing from the center.

The firepit blazed with renewed vigour and the room lit up brightly. Jing Yi yelped when the sole wooden block seemed to bounce through the murky, confusing revolving wall of garbage, and touched the edge of his worn-out shoe. A clear, low, comforting and very familiar voice sounded inside his head: “I’m here.”

As all four men yelled “What the hell is this?” and “What is going on?” with arms raised to protect their faces from the harmless onslaught of debris, the twig had completed its magic circle on the floor. With a loud fwip !, they were teleported out of the dark, gloomy alleyway.

Jing Yi had a heightened sense of smell compared to the others, due to his higher level of cultivation. He thought he smelled grilled chicken wings before being swallowed by a blinding flash of white light and a thunder clap.

.

Their work done, all waste material fell to the ground like a shower of detritus in the now-darkened chamber; the fire had gone out when the last bit of oxygen was sucked through the portal on the floor, which had disappeared.

“ Lao gong , Lao gong , did I do well? I’ve taken them to safety using my awesome Dark Corruption magic on the space-time continuum. Come on, praise me, praise me!”

“ Lao gong , Lao gong , did you overhear what they said? What do you want to do next? I can grant you whatever you want - to save everyone, to exact revenge, to destroy the enemy. Your wish is your lao po ’s command. Come on, reward me, reward me, with your next orders!”

“ Lao gong , Lao gong , your Kingdom awaits you. It’s time to lift our family scepter and declare war and victory for the great Qishan Lan. Cherish us with your royal decree, your holy words, your divine wisdom. Come on, love us, love us!”

The twig, the leaf and the candy wrapper danced around the wooden block that had fallen to its side (it’s hard to tell because there are no defining features on the plain piece of wood), on a floor littered with trash, sand and dirt.

A momentary pause, then the block seemed to shiver and sprout out a phallic protrusion at the bottom of one of its edges.

“Mn. Xian Xian, you’ve done well. Let me reward you with my love,” it said and wanted to open its arms to welcome and embrace the trio of naughtiness - except that it didn’t have any limbs.

All three spouses squealed with joy at the endearing nickname, and jumped at their husband.

Soon, the twig drilled one end of the block until the surface became chaffed, dented and rubbed raw. “Oh, A-Ji, A-Ji, my sweet, sweet A-Ji! Uncle Wei is raping your eight-year old virginity again and again! I’m tearing your hymen! I’m going to shoot my sperm into your unprotected womb! I’m sowing my wildest seeds into your uterus so that you’ll grow many babies for this rapist Uncle! Squeeze that ass, shake it some more! Oh, oh, I’m cumming soon, oh sweet father Buddha and Jade Emperors in Heaven, your pussy is too sweet, I can’t hold back anymore! Take it! Take it!”

The bamboo leaf inserted its sharpened end into a tiny pinprick hole at the tip of the phallic protrusion, then wrapped itself around the elongated woody structure tighter than a sticky rice dumpling. It twirled and stroked the length with such zest until the wood seemed to melt, quiver and twitch like real living flesh. “Oh, A-Ji, A-Ji, my sweet, sweet underaged husband, please let your wife drink your nectar, and stick your penis into A-Xian’s baby buttocks! A-Xian wants to carry baby Wei Yings inside his twin tiny quail eggs! Please cum inside me, dear husband, so that you can father many twins and triplets, and they’ll grow up fat and healthy suckling A-Xian’s fatty breast milk! Ah, your hard cock feels incredible, lao gong , please make sweet love to me and rape A-Xian's baby pussy! A-Xian wants to be pregnant with your billions of sperms!"

The candy wrapper wrapped itself around the wooden block until it looked like a present of some sort except for the two bits below that have been taken up by the other two inanimate lovers. It hugged the block, and drowned it with sweet kisses - no more than phantom brushes of shiny colorful foil material against the hard surface of a rigid piece of wood. "Mmm! Mmm! Lan Zhan, Lan Zhan! I love you so much, please kiss me silly and let me lay in your arms forever! Ah, Ah, you're the perfect husband, the best partner, the one and only soulmate in my life, and I will always stay by your side in this lifetime and beyond!"

With so much love going on, the wooden block subjected itself to smouldering friction heat from its three sex-crazed lovers, and soon, it lit up and became ablaze even in the suffocating chamber; within minutes, the wooden block burnt itself into a lump of smoking coal.

.

Elsewhere, Wei da ge 's patience finally snapped. "Argh! I can't wait a moment longer! Let me in on the action! Open the doors, my harem! Victory is ours!" he bellowed in front of the western edge of the space-time bubble that enveloped the province of Gusu, and shot out his gloved hand forward like an overzealous war general drumming up his battlecry. A line of Lan-kin clones raised their arms to touch the sizzling, electrifying borders that radiated with dark, Corrupted magic; the white magical ropes began to unwind, to allow descendents and familial members of the Gusu Lan sect through; each Lan warrior was armed to the teeth with weapons and armour bearing the Qishan Lan family crest of the now infamous black-and-white rabbits.

“Ah...! No! We’re supposed to wait for the signal flare before rushing in! If we breach the borders, the whole Imperial army will find out! We’ll lose the first mover advantage!” the rather cowardly Wei er ge squeaked like one from the opposite gender, still fresh and shaken from a terribly brutal, bloody battle in Yunmeng, and hasn’t recovered his firm footing yet; his limbs were bandaged, and his armour bore many scratches and punctures from waves of assault from Imperial soldiers and their undead forces. He wasn’t as bright as his siblings, but his experience in leading armies into battle had helped him to learn a few useful military tactics over the past few weeks.

“Bullshit,” said Wei san ge , with a pair of fancy beeping black goggles around his helmet surrounded by animated holographic displays, as he sauntered through with an ultra-modern gadget in his arms - it looked like a mutated combination of a huge shotgun that sizzled with pure uncontrolled raging plasma energy, a sword radiating with destructive magic, and a radar dish that seemed to emit strange alien sounds, and in total, probably ten times as deadly against whatever it was intended to strike, “Nothing ever goes to plan, and you know very well that our eldest sibling is the one actually in charge, because he’s just that awesome . If he says jump, we gotta ask ‘how high?’, you got that? We’re here on a crusade to kill off every single Tian member from the face of the planets, so what’s the worry if we did it a little earlier than intended?” and he gave a wide toothy grin.

The nine-year old Wei didi shrieked in childish joy as he ran past, also fully armed like an innocent child soldier of the 21st century, except that everyone stayed clear and gave him a very wide berth to pass through the widening hole in the barrier - because the little boy mischievously broke all laws and brought in his 91st century gear, and no one knew what 91st century things could do to a world still in 2000 B.C. “I wanna join the party too! I missed Ernie and Ni-er, I wanna meet my new Lan cousins and uncles, and I wanna play with everyone again soon!” the adolescent beamed with such innocent joy, that all Wei siblings just had to melt a little and go “aww, that’s so cute” in unison.

A soldier ran up to Wei da ge , and saluted, “Sir! Re-colonization unit #994726 is ready, sir! Three Wangxian supply vessels have docked by the side, and await your orders once the perimeter is secured!” The Kingdom had wrecked and cleared out so many universes and repopulated the vast emptiness left behind, that they had established a standard protocol for such massive recolonization operations. Taking over Gusu was no different - the Kingdom of Qishan Lan planned to wipe out the enemy and replace the former residents with their own, just like the rest of the now-restarted Middle Kingdom. A rudimentary government was in place to compete with the weakening Imperial Court; trade and travel was booming, and so was the population in the new country full of descendents of the First Fathers.

“At ease, lieutenant,” the fearsome-looking brutish General replied with a curt nod, and continued to observe hundreds of men marching through Gusu’s western borders from atop a hill. “Where is the special task force that the Grand Patriarch had ordered from his dreams? We can’t make our grand entrance in proper without them!” he barked out to the crowd jostling through the crack in space-time. Truthfully, he wanted to complete the siege as soon as possible and return to outer space; he still had to focus on getting rid of the Tians from the other planets of the solar system, which was more worrying than tiny Operation Mothers Free Gusu*; there were already two suns in the skies outside of the province, and both Jupiter and Mars were on a collision course towards the Mortal Realm after the alien enemy had fiddled with the laws of physics.

 O.M.F.G in short, not for 'oh my fucking god', because Lan Zhan is the legally recognized god and doesn't want to be fucked by nobodies. Wei da ge takes credit for putting Mothers first, because all Wei Yings are mothers of their Kingdom, after all.*

Then, all hands on deck stood still when they heard, and saw, twenty ugly men parachute from the skies like those seen on wartime television shows aired in the 21st century. They looked like swine, mostly greasy, fat and bald, some had rotten teeth and bad breath, some had scars, warts and tattoos, and everyone wore nasty sneers - hallmarks of hardcore convicts who escaped jail.

“Ho ho ho! You called, sweetie? Bloody Guanyin, I’m so horny now, I could rape every young maiden in sight and make them pregnant ten times over, succubi or not!” the morbidly obese one among them growled, licked his oily lips and rubbed his oilier palms with glee - and a tent in his hole-y pants. Upon reaching the landing pad, one hairy arm reached below the drawstrings and he started masturbating with plenty of heavy panting in the open. Even Wei da ge reeled a little in disgust, so he quickly waved them through and hoped he’d never see those merry band of bandits ever again.

Notes for the Chapter:

Introducing... a side character! :-D Sorry for the short chapter, I just wanted to start bringing in all the ingredients into a giant crazy salad bowl. I haven't thought of the dressing yet.

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 107

Wei Ying made an irritated sound when he sucked air through his teeth while staring at the boy (he'd rather not call him a man - yet) under a tree, surrounded by his peers. Deep down, Wei Ying wished he had friends like them - or fans -, but he only, and was entitled to just, one man in this lifetime and beyond.

“Aiyo,” another cheeky sound, “Look at that rascal! When we brought him in, he was dirty, in tears, and a pitiful hungry boy. Then he grovelled and begged to curry favours from you, and now, look at that brat! He's going around passing those meat and veggie skewers to welcome newcomers and recruiting them like a foodie's club gone wrong, as though he runs the joint. He's easy to influence using food, and he easily influences others with food - plus some bad-boy charm, I guess. Lan Zhan! You better watch out, this boy's going to take over some day with his smooth talk, and it's going to ruin our reputation!” he hissed under his breath.

The husband smiled faintly, and turned over an chain of sizzling, juicy steaks, minced meat patties, and thickly cut root vegetables on a large, industrial-sized barbecue grill as long as three horse wagons (the masterchef moved with lightning speed, so he handles such enormous cookware with ease and finesse, worthy of the best chef's kiss). The next batch of fried chicken, crispy nuggets and vegetable tempura crackled heartily in a colossal wok of hot oil, so the man used his free hand to stir them a bit until they were golden brown, while making hot dog sandwiches on the side and other street snacks such as sweet and savoury dumplings, pancakes and fruit kebabs. Lan Zhan showed his true colours that bright sunny mid-morning - he was a grandmaster at outdoor cooking - much better than Wei Ying was, to the younger man's consternation - and when he happily flipped burgers high up in the air with stacks of sesame seed buns, a selection of Wangxian's range of Fantastically Freshly Frozen™ beef, chicken and fish patties, freshly made salads, tomatoes, pickles, cheese slices and drizzles of sauces that even painted smileys on the buns, Wei Ying groaned in frustration in realization that the husband wasn't supportive of his suspicions of the boy named Lan Jing Yi.

“Wei Ying, I only asked him to take care of the disciples, since he's one of the oldest and most familiar with us. The others aren't that warmed up to us yet, so it's natural that Jing Yi takes up a leadership, even a promoter role here. He's good at socializing, and will make a good sales manager, I'm sure,” Lan Zhan replied and didn't even bat an eyelid; his brows furrowed in concentration when he gave his full attention to the grill - he used chopsticks to pick off an assembly line of perfectly cooked seasoned barbecued meats, sweet potatoes, asparagus, carrots, corn, green beans, mushrooms, eggplants, peppers and onions, then flicked them into a number of trays a few meters away in impressive arcs, and every piece landed in perfectly spaced spots, in flawless sequence of colours, shapes and sizes, and faultlessly balanced in weight and distribution as well. Not far away, a group of late-teens clapped and cheered at the stellar performance expected from a Gusu Lan master.

“It's good, isn't it? That's because it's made by the great and wonderful Han Guang Jun! The living legend himself, who once saved the world of cultivation from treachery of the Jins!” Jing Yi crowed from his pedestal atop high tree roots and under the shade of forest canopies, and refilled an awestruck disciple's plate with fried rice, stir-fry noodles, meats and vegetables. A few seniors lent a helping hand, to pass meat skewers around (like how one would hand out balloons to partygoers), drinks, napkins and other necessities.

Most of the boys (Wei Ying still refused to call them men) have been raised with stories about the big bad Jins who ruled others using money and other immoral means, so they agreed with thunderous applause and by banging noisily on empty plates with their chopsticks. One of the boys asked timidly about what everyone thought about Han Guang Jun's short tenure as a Chief Cultivator, with slanderous reports about how he cheated the Grand Cultivation Council out of gold nuggets, or how he failed to tackle the issue of fierce corpses. Everyone gave him the evil eye - because Jing Yi did so, and nobody wanted to run out of chicken wings and other good food made by the accused - so that boy shrunk into the smallest insect among the angry, squawking swarm of hungry bugs (Wei Ying still refused to call them men, anyway).

“Don't be ungrateful and take the side of the enemy! Han Guang Jun is a true-blue Gusu Lan! He's one of us! See? He gave us good food to warm our bellies, and nice clothes to wear in this chilly weather! He's the kindest man in the Middle Kingdom!”

“Right? You were also starving when you fell through the hole on the ground, like the rest of us! And look at your new robes! My mother used to work as a seamstress in our former home, and I know these robes have the best holy sutras suited for sect elders! Han Guang Jun is really powerful to be able to weave such worded spells into the fabric!”

“Yeah! You should believe in your own family and not outsiders, like what Jing Yi shixiong said! So what if there was a blip in the records? Nobody's perfect! Don't be tricked by sensationalized news and mass panic caused by schemers! That's what many of us learnt during the days of the scholar protest!”

“Exactly! Look at what happened to those who aren't here! The younger ones protested, and they were exiled! The older ones lost faith in our Han Guang Jun while he was Chief Cultivator and said bad things about him, so they willingly gave up and burnt their robes when the Tian witches arrived... so now they're gone! Forever!"

"Open your eyes! Han Guang Jun is our savior! You must believe him! He's like an angelic god to some of us who were with him during the last two decades or so!"

(Wei Ying spied at the crack of the husband's buttocks to see if any peacock tail feathers grew; alas, Lan Zhan was not a Jin, and he wore his pants snugly this time - but his face did look a little livelier as he started on a few sacks of grains to make a batch of mushroom risotto, tomato-basil chicken and rice, seafood paella, coconut milk rice, sushi with fresh salmon, roe and egg rolls, lotus leaf rice and more delicious rice dishes.)

Wei Ying shrugged at how easily these boys, aged between their late teens to mid twenties - about the same age group as his current body - were swayed into a cult of Wang Ji worshippers; old enough to see through the lies and blinded emotions of the scholar protests, young enough to rebel and not take the sides of old-fashioned seniors and elders who weren't quite impressed by Lan Zhan's performances during the days of night-hunting and investigating fierce corpses attacks.

"Oi, ringleader! Come here!" Wei Ying called out and waved a tray of steaming hot food at Jing Yi's direction to signal that he needed a helping hand. The grinning boy rounded up a few of his friends to bring out more food and huge jugs of drinks to the burgeoning crowd under the trees and around a campfire - the boys were fortunate to have a choice of plain pu'er tea or the more colourful, tastier cordial drinks full of sugar and addictive artificial colouring and flavouring.

Wei Ying tagged along because he wanted to feel young again and be with people of his age - the twenties. He tried to snoop in and cut into people's conversation, but hardly succeeded, because all they wanted to talk was about their traumatic experiences while being holed up in secret hideouts, desperate survival stories, the recent past which was unrelated to what he went through since the peaceful days in the 'Mounds, and some boring intellectual discussion about Gusu Lan's over-4000 rules versus the perverted version carved on the Sacred Scriptures Rock which he hadn't seen. He couldn't even gossip about who did what behind someone's back, because it had been at least three years since he'd gotten together with the youths of Gusu Lan. After a while, he gave up and decided to make sure the boys are well and healthy, like a gracious host of an outdoor party reminiscent of his family's secret garden just a stone's throw away from bustling Yiling city.

"Hey, your fingers are dirty! Did you bathe when you entered this camp? You, over there, take this boy to the hot springs and clean him up before he touches the food! I don't want any cases of food poisoning around here!"

"Ah, you sneezed! Go over there besides our caravan tied to the donkey, there's a pile of towels and more robes for you! Don't worry if you spot a two-feet long... errr... silky furry worm! Yeah, that's a kind of intelligent family pet, an exotic creature from the Far West who's joined our travelling troupe, that makes furry winter clothes. She doesn't bite, but don't put your finger in her mouth because she drools a lot!"

"The few of you over there! Don't just stand around the trays of meat and stew! Eat some vegetables and fruits too! Drink more liquids, and there are also congees and soups at the other end of this picnic table! Don't bother about the cold black thing hiding under the tables. It's.. err.. another exotic creature from the Far West who's like a servant, no, waiter, and it takes out the trash. You can give your used plates and cups to it for washing, and no, it will not bite!"

Wei Ying felt rather accomplished in herding the boys to do what should be done, besides just crashing into a forest clearing, littered with dried leaves and other trash, and gobbling up food and drinks that are too sweet, salty, savoury and irresistibly delicious for their bland palates. Some of the arrivals did better - the ones who had cultivated a lot more, like Jin Ling and his classmates - while some fared worse - the younger ones who starved and appeared emaciated and diseased, but lucky to be alive, and were healed and pampered by their caring *xiongdì*s upon landing. The Gusu Lan, Wei Ying realized, was extremely family-oriented where a clear structure of hierarchy and responsibility existed that was respected; the spirit of brotherhood was strong among the boys, and he thought that perhaps he could take it upon himself to be the oldest--

-- Wei gongzi , it's as though you're like our mother, and Han Guang Jun is our father - except that he's the one doing the cooking, and all you ever do is to serve the food and nag at us!" one of Jing Yi's friends laughed candidly, and hiccuped from too much gas in the carbonated cordial drinks; Wei Ying remembered him during the second siege of the 'Mounds, but not his name.

"Ha, ha, very funny," the man dead-panned and didn't find the joke amusing at all, "But what if I told you that Han Guang Jun and I are already married and we already have monstrous kids... like the cold black thing over there, and the furry white worm there?" and he smiled back in a sinister way that caused some disciples to gasp in fear.

The noises died down to a murmur, and Lan Zhan stopped flipping burger patties on the other side of his makeshift kitchen.

Another of Jing Yi's friends, an obnoxious boy who had just reached legal age, took a big gulp of the tasty cordial drink and burped, and slurred because the refreshment was too cold with ice cubes in it (which was a novelty in this day and age), and packed the punch of a jin of sugar per cup, "Huh? Si Zhui told us before that you were like a mother who probably gave birth to him in the wild, while Han Guang Jun was a proper parent that raised him to be a person of virtue and dignity. It was like that, wasn't it? And you've always dabbled with your Dark Arts... I remember seeing you fight using your flute and that creepy-sounding music, like summoning dark creatures from the night... fierce corpses and monsters are your thing, aren't they?"

Jing Yi stepped in to pull his friend back by the collar, who probably had too much sugar in his bloodstream, "Wei gongzi , I know you lived with Han Guang Jun in the past few years. We've talked a bit when you frequently dropped by our former home for a year and travelled with him during the investigations and night-hunts. After the two of you left, Si Zhui wouldn't stop bothering me about stories of how the two of you settled down happily in the Burial Mounds from his visits to your new home, when I met him for drinks at the teahouses near Caiyi Town.

So, you gotta bring him here, because I want to see him again and give him these chicken wings made with love! Just like the two of you!" he ended his inspiring speech with a million-dollar smile that rivalled even Wei Ying's, and held up a huge chicken wing to emphasize his point. His friends cheered, and the rest followed suit although they didn't really understand what really went on - as long as there were more chicken wings coming off the charred grill.

The energetic self-appointed band leader of sorts leaned in and whispered into Wei Ying's ear, "Besides, the moment I realized that the trashy bits that entered our secret hideout were the two of you, I knew that you've bonded with Han Guang Jun - because the magical walls only recognizes pure-bred Lan descendents and their immediate family members!"

Wei Ying "Enn"s in tears many times, at how Si Zhui was heartwarmingly brought into the picture, and how his relationship with Lan Zhan was officially accepted by Jing Yi and his noisy bunch of sugar-drunken friends, but he was afraid of being seen in his crumpled overemotional state (oh, the shame, the shame of a crying man!), so he quickly turned around and ran towards the husband while sobbing and laughing at the same time - his face was a flushed mess by then. Lan Zhan pretended to dab sweat off his cheeks with his sleeve, and silently started opening a new bag of Wangxian-branded marinated chicken wings for the barbecue.

Jing Yi continued to welcome newcomers that popped into the campsite one by one throughout the day, and when he ran out of fairy tales about the great and wonderful Han Guang Jun, a teary-eyed Wei Ying, through ugly sobs and hiccups, explained a bit about what he and the husband went through in the past couple of years after starting their new lives together in Yiling - the humble beginnings of a farming family that also sold street snacks on the side, the establishment of Wangxian Co. Ltd., the birth of Qishan Lan - the sister (or brother) sect of Gusu Lan, and a highly abbreviated and altered account of their journey to Gusu - that the Middle Kingdom was indeed still under attack by fierce corpses, but generally the cities and towns are still fine (and populated; but he didn't reveal by whom).

To take the boys' minds off the raging world outside, Wei Ying showed them their company's products and logos printed on the packaging, told them about the significance of the black-and-white rabbits that relate so well to members of the Gusu Lan, talked a bit about the virtues that the Qishan Lan family adapts - which is so much akin to Gusu Lan's over-4000 rules compared to the nefarious Sacred Scripture Rocks that essentially placed a death sentence over the province; to the point that when Wei Ying had to stop to get a drink, Jing Yi smoothly slipped into place and continued to spin wild tales - but mostly truthful and believable, reasonably made up tales - to his wide-eyed captive audience; that Wei Ying finally, gracefully, bowed out from the campfire and decided to stay and help the husband with a new batch of chicken wings, and declared to the latter that he thought Lan Jing Yi, now distant relative of his, is a fine, young man indeed.

.

By the time the welcome party was over - which could've been a few hours or a few days, but nobody kept watch of the water-clock in the corner of the campsite because it was always a beautiful, pleasant mid-morning -, everyone sported bulging bellies and nicely settled down into their furry robes-turned-sleeping bags, which were really fluffy and extendable, and made of high quality wooly fibres - like cocoons for caterpillars to pupate, sleep and await their next spring. There hadn't been any new arrivals for quite a while - unfortunately, no signs of Si Zhi or any other notable Gusu Lan members -, so the couple assured themselves that they'd done their best to search for Lan survivors in every known settlement in the province where man-made trash are aplenty, and decided to call it a day (or a week, perhaps). There were about a hundred rescued Lan sect disciples in total, and sadly, none were found from other allied families including the Ouyangs. The brave survivors took the news calmly, despite knowing that they have just been officially told that there were more losses among their circle of friends. Wei Ying thought, rather in despair, that perhaps they boys, now men, faced enough grim news about deaths of their comrades daily, and were probably numbed by then.

Jing Yi was actively up and about when he wasn't taking a nap from too much good food, or chatting tirelessly with every disciple, making sure his brethren were comfortable with full tummies and drunk from their favourite new cordial drinks (Gusu Lans never had so much sugared water filled with tasty chemicals in their lives before, it seemed), and they lay in a strangely perfectly ordered manner around the campsite like a mathematically-calculated matrix on hilly grasslands. He took the couple's mish-mashed stories very well, such as the explanation of how portals and Papermen magic work, because Gusu Lans were also trained in teleportation and opening doorways through space (Su She too, but that was quite long ago), and Papermen were considered child's play in the world of cultivation; only Wei Ying knew how to trash the spell completely, literally, and Jing Yi wasn't surprised since the former Yiling Patriarch had many unbelievable accomplishments and crazy inventions credited to his name.

(Wei Ying did take a moment to pull the husband aside from cleaning duties; Lan Zhan was busy hosing down the cooled-off, greasy barbecue grill with jets of Water spells and a bottle of Wangxian-branded detergent liquid - he asked if the husband was aware that there were about a hundred Lan boys, or men, lying down in perfectly balanced, sequential in size and height, and symmetrically rectangular formations. The husband wiped sweat and grime off his fingers with a washcloth and admired the scenery, which was calming for some inexplicable reasons. "There are no girls among them, and I thought this morning I saw an ad in ErNet's classifieds section about a recruitment drive to fill a hundred vacancies for our businesses in Yiling's Market Streets, that explicitly mentioned 'male applicants only'," the spouse gave an accusing look at the husband. Lan Zhan lowered his gaze and resumed his cleaning, not responding to the accusation at all. Wei Ying rolled his eyes and mumbled something about Lan Zhan and his free-wheeling use of godly powers, and the obsessive need to achieve Perfect Hundreds.)

Small orderly groups of disciples helped with the clean-up while others rested, accompanied by soft, calming guqin music from magical strings conjured between trees that played but their own. In the tranquil atmosphere, Wei Ying remarked that Jing Yi had certainly matured over the years; the man used to be whiny, blamed others when things go wrong, and cowardly in avoiding responsibilities - in which the latter simply laughed and said that he'd grown up and learnt a lot while handling the protests and later, surviving the massacre caused by the Tians and trying to keep his xiongdi s alive. Lan Zhan added that both he and Wei Ying changed a lot too, during the war with the Qishan Wens, which parallels what Jing Yi's generation is going through.

A few boys - men, probably - played with little Ni-er and Ernie, fondly called as the furry white worm and the black lizard's tail, as though they were having fun with pets. Adorable Ni-er made it a point to guu-guu and nom-nom at every disciple's drool-coated fingers to imbue every individual with her brand all-compassing cuteness tinged with unseen god-tiered protective powers; the less adorable Ernie entertained the boys - he thinks they're still adolescents, from his arrogant teenage emo viewpoint - with ballerina-like acrobatic stunts that only a cold black mass of tentacles could perform; while he was oogled and ooh-ahh'd by fascinated disciples, he secretly absorbed miniscule amounts of their qi and genetic materials, analyzed the collected substances, and started to reverse-engineer them out of bad habit inside his own self-contained universes.

The disciples seemed unfazed by the two tentacle-kin, as they've seen stranger, even fouler creatures crawling out of the decks of Imperial warships anchored to the coasts - living in the mountaintops gave them vantage views - which had been the first signs of danger to those who harbored suspicions about the sudden arrivals and the unexpected declarations of peace and security promised by Tian witches over discussion tables richly decorated with bags of gold, expensive food and unfortunately, jars of the finest and most fragrant wines from Chang'an that no men, not even sect elders, could resist.

One of Jing Yi's friends said, while sweeping the ground with a straw broom after having fun with the two tentacle-kin, that he watched from a slightly parted open bedroom door how his working-class parents went goggle-eyed over such bribes in exchange for a vote during the Lan family council election, a good word to some influential elders, and later, a new set of 'blue skies'-themed robes for the young and old that lacked holy sutras and other typical Gusu Lan magical defenses. They were also given a copy of the Sacred Scriptures and one of the first few passages instructed them to rid their family of the forehead ribbon, and therefore, any attachment to old traditions and outdated ways of thinking.

"I was deemed a rebel because I spent more time with my friends and with Jing Yi shixiong when he started to run secret nightly meetings with our classmates. That was shortly after the first missing bodies were reported by the Ouyang families, and we heard terrible rumours about how people were slaughtered by assassins who originated from the Imperial ships, and their remains turned into fierce corpses - that gave us a hint of the type of monsters that we were dealing with, and why the Gusu Lan robes were so important. I had a big fight with my parents and siblings because I refused to read the Sacred Scriptures or set my old robes on fire, and instead, I ran off the same night the Imperial soldiers quietly sealed the entrance gates and all mountain passes around the Cloud Recesses," he said, softly, with guilt-laden voice. "Most of us experienced some form of separation from our families - we're a lost generation, for sure - and some of us actually witnessed our family members die in front of our eyes and lived long enough to warn others, just like Ouyang Zizhen. The older ones among us recognized the setup as a demonic attack, and got us safely out of the Cloud Recesses, however, the Tians were relentless and tried to pursue us, so we had to split into smaller groups to evade the enemy."

"Yeah! Altho' we couldn't make any Fairy Mess'nger calls to each oth'r, luck'ly we had people like Jing Yi shixiong to lead us, and force us to focus on surviv'ng and regroup'ng far away fr'm home, ya know?" another person, with heavy Gusu accent, chipped in while wiping spilled sauces and leftovers from the tables, "When you found us, there were four in the group - originally we had ten; but don't get me wrong, I don't blame our shixiong because so many things had happened that were beyond anyone's control - some lost hope and surrendered themselves to the police, some were caught during the chase, the youngest fell into a coma for a week with high fever, and never regained consciousness - and Jing Yi kept pressing on because he believed that Si Zhui is alive somewhere, and is waiting for him, perhaps in some teahouse with a drink in hand."

Wei Ying decided that he'd heard enough, for now. He called everyone in the clean-up crew to put down their gear, sit together at a table like a prayer circle and take a breather, while giving them a great big motherly hug. Lan Zhan walked over to Jing Yi who was blissfully unaware because he was busy taking out the trash with the two worm - or tentacle - like creatures circling around his legs, and he nearly tripped. Jing Yi received a supporting grip on his arm to avoid the fall, and he could only gasp in surprise when his idol, the great and wonderful Han Guang Jun, turned him to the side and embraced him in a very fatherly way.

Ernie quietly conjured a holo-phone from the forest canopy and directed it to take a wide panoramic view snapshot of the serene campsite - of surviving Gusu Lan disciples sleeping soundly after the rescue campaign; of Wei Ying and Lan Zhan hugging and cuddling some men - some, boys - to hopefully soothe their pains from the sufferings of a war that had gone terribly, terribly wrong; of the two tentacle-kin keeping close to their newfound distant cousins; and in the far, far western horizon, the first kindling of smoke and fires, and a sea of Qishan Lan-white barely peeking out from the hilltops. He'd store the pictures into an album in the family cloud drive, aptly titled in a touching way, "To my dear mother and father".

“Three conclusions,” the extinguished cigarette butt announced, “is what I can make, after visiting nearly all the villages, towns and cities simultaneously with my awesome omnipresence.”

“First,” next to it, a nearly flat, lumpy burnt-out candle said, “Not only do they have such terrible table manners, they also have downright despicable energy savings and waste disposal management practices. I’m ashamed to even call these females respectable qi -sucking demon-kin!” Its wilted wick smoked as it talked, clearly agitated by what it planned to spew out of its invisible mouth.

The couple (the spouse loved to exist in multiples, the husband learnt. So he had to contend with travelling with many annoying Wei Yings who form a kind of trash-y harem - which was fine, because harems are one of his kinks and fantasies) hid behind some cupboards, and spied on the activities of a succubi nest, which was in most cases a large building with Tian Mi Mi-esque architecture built in the city centre, a town square or the village head’s backyard. The outside looked normal, despite the lack of visitors and the heavy presence of Imperial military and police bearing ‘blue skies’ insignias on their impressive armaments. The inside, however, was an entirely different story - one that was full of rooms where unspeakable immoral horrors happened, that the couple had to stomach and watch like one of Lan Zhan’s free-to-air all-nighter nightmarish pornographic channels, except that it involved female dominatrixes, heterosexual sex, BDSM, blood, gore and torture elements, bad endings for the male prisoners, and followed by a jarring display of magical prowess in reviving the dead bodies into fierce corpses.

“You see, right after the victims are killed, there’s plenty of hatred, fear, disgust and vengeful feelings that could be harvested as a form of dark qi . They could’ve light up torches, move heavy equipment, heat up bathwaters, or even package into inhalable food for the undead and blast spiritual cannons with the free, surplus energy, but they didn’t. They simply collected the bodies from the rooms and dumped them into a common morgue in the center of the building, allowing the corpses to cool and let all that precious energy go to waste. No wonder this place smells of rotting flesh and there are plenty of flies and maggots everywhere!” the glop of candlewax added.

A third version of the spouse, this time a discarded piece of betel nut-flavoured chewing gum, followed up, "I’ve also studied how they mass-converted the bodies into fierce corpses. Unlike decent and honest Dark Arts practitioner like yours truly, rather than spending time reviving each corpse with proper rituals, then bathe, cloth, educate and care for them until they are fully conscious, these lazy demonesses simply rely on injected poisons through the victim’s bloodstream during sex or through tainted food, and let the dark magic work its way to transform the body on its own. Do you remember that feral fierce corpse made from the man who sold his neighbour for a handful of gold nuggets and a deadly food delivery? See, that’s what happens when you let nature take its course - it’s highly ineffective, it’s wasteful, and you end up with unintelligent servants at your beck and call that need more instructions than a three year old does!"

Back to the cigarette butt, who hopped irately to gesture at a hideous scene not far away, "Ah, ah, look at that! The Tians didn’t even bother to segregate the decomposing bodies according to age and condition! They should incinerate the diseased so that others are not affected by flesh-eating bacteria, of which the damage is irreversible; recycle the youngest ones that cannot be revived anyway, and turn them into dehydrated feed pellets for other dark creatures’ consumption - don’t get me started on the shell of that dead newborn that was thrown into the bushes the other time, because that’s a crime against hunger for some!; and dress up the brittle, wrinkly aged victims with prosthetics and joint replacements, rather than let them try to stand shakily on their own and end up as a pile of dusty bones on the ground. It's basic management principles of cadavers 101, really! This whole place is becoming a huge garbage dump!..."

All three spouses agreed wholeheartedly, and huffed and puffed in mutual frustration (because Wei Wuxian, genius extraordinaire of the Dark Arts, authored several books about fierce corpses and other denizens of the undead, although he never published them). The husband, always a wooden block of various shapes and sizes, depending on what kind of block he could find and inhabit while searching for hosts, remained indifferent at the spouse's endless tirade of accusations and complaints. He wasn't all that hyped up about the process of turning freshly dead bodies into the walking undead, since that wasn't his forte nor his area of interest.

Instead, he was morbidly fascinated at watching how a ten year old Gusu Lan, no, ex-Gusu Lan boy was consumed by a band of succubi. He never really had an enriching childhood, never observed how snakes strike and devour rodents in open rice fields and chickens locked up in their coops; or study how praying mantis or spiders ambush, capture then chew their struggling, living prey; or had the experience of drowning bugs in a bowl of water to watch them die, and later pick them up to squash them with a shoe to see whether they squirt out water or greenish guts. It was cruel, gruesome, grotesque, yet engrossing, captivating and compelling - a gripping theatrical play on the life and death of someone or something else, where one can marvel from a safe distance without the risk of being accused of inaction or misbehaviour; mock or empathize the victim without the burden of guilt on the heart; desensitize and detach oneself without regard to morals or over-4000 family rules - because no one was really watching or judging him; the spouse may be a little more critical of his actions, but he could boil it down to Wei Ying-ness that could be ignored or treated as air coming out from someone's rear end.

The boy, clearly from his former home because his forehead sported a strip of fairer skin, and he wore the detestable 'blue skies' robes - clearly a fraud, since the garments were graceful and flow-y as Gusu Lan's famous designs, except that it lacked the cloud-themed patterns, and had a deeper shade of sky-blue in colour. For someone who had given up his sacred forehead ribbon and robes, whether by will or by force, it meant that the person no longer abides by Gusu Lan's rules, and therefore, is no longer considered part of the community. To the husband, watching the screaming, crying boy being helplessly pulled out from a dirty cage, then effortlessly stripped by salivating, cackling succubi, was as interesting - and morally heartless - as watching another sect's disciple being murdered from miles away - because in reality, as a wooden block smaller than a baozi dumpling, he really couldn't do anything to save the boy's life.

The boy was given a hellish hand and blowjob and brutally woman-handled until he was hard as steel, and blossomed like a juicy, ripe, reddened fruit served on a shiny platter. One succubi used her keen sense of smell, and said that the boy no longer carried a mild scent as before, and had suddenly taken on a tell-tale tasty pungency; the next tingle would be the first wet experience for the boy. Another succubi used her sharp hearing to listen to the racing heartbeat, and the rush of sweet liquids down, down in the boy's swollen genitals, and would announce the spectacular ejaculatory moment that warranted a celebration of sorts. Yet a third succubi licked the skin over the boy's thin, heaving chest and announced that his golden core has ripened tremendously overnight due to the approaching puberty and admission into adulthood, and that she will gouge a hole in his chest upon climax to let everyone sample the sweet-tasting candied fruit.

The wooden block watched, with voyeuristic intentions, how the ten-year old boy was molested, caressed and savaged by a group of ten succubi - their tender kisses and panting shrilly breaths inhaled life energies off the dying child's shivering figure, their excruciatingly painful clawed touches poisoned his arteries and veins, their fangs injected massive amounts of aphrodisiac drugs into the body that was too young to experience the lethal pleasures of demonic sex; how he suffered his inaugural true, syrupy climax, one that consisted of his first-time ejaculations of nearly ten life-changing and incredibly pleasurable spurts; and how the succubi enjoyed their feast of draining their prey's sexual qi - the most powerful form of qi and the tastiest of them all - until the very last drop was slurped off his shrivelled loins that had exploded into a bloodied mess, and ruined by multiple demon-fuelled orgasms on the first day of manhood, and had his ribcage ripped open by ten open jaws waiting to lick, bite and chew the golden core and consume adjacent internal organs, including the fading, erratically spasming heart that couldn't keep up with the climaxes, and the blood-filled lungs that couldn't fill up enough air for the uncontrollable pleasure-induced gasps and moans.

The husband watched, enthralled by the deathly spectacle, while the spouses droned on about more distasteful, self-proclaimed conclusions about the succubi-kin.

.

It was a brief slip-up, perhaps from watching demonic bodies slithering and rubbing sensuously all over their sole prey, had a rather visual effect on him - one that made his vision blurry, turned his muscles into jelly, or maybe he was a little tired from adventuring too much in too short span of time - that he closed his eyes just for a moment of respite, and dozed off.

“Unnh... Unnh... Uncle Wei, please, not so hard. Ahh... my wee-wee feels strange, it's like something is coming out. It's so itchy inside, and it feels like a fever down there... I... nnngh... I want to pee...”

Uncle Wei wouldn't listen to his whiny pleas, and continued to play with Little A-Ji's xiao ji ji until it bloomed into beautiful angry reds and pinks, as turgid as a bouncy elongated balloon, and the quail eggs had instinctively tucked themselves at the base, tightened too much until they cramped, ready to unload the first volleys of springtime lust. The boy hadn't sleep well, and experienced disturbing dreams during the night; when he slowly opened his eyes at the first sign of daybreak, then wanted to stretch and yawn on his sleep-warmed bed decorated with pictures of little bunnies - little A-Ji gasped and moaned loudly because his private parts were burning red hot, his buttohole was fondled by lubricated fingers, his adolescent prostate was fiddled all night until the gland inflated twice its size and overflowed with nectar that only little boys could produce - he was being sexually assaulted by the man he hoped to avoid in the morning.

"No, A-Ji, I'm your stepmother now, so you must call me Mama," the rapist, who was forcibly married into the family, warned, and clenched his O-ring of thumb and two fingers that pistoned rapidly along the boy's wildly twitching penis. "Mama is making your mornings special, so don't complain. Every day when you wake up, it comes with a tingle and a little more. You better appreciate it, boy," the man murmured into the wet schlicky sounds; little A-Ji had started to leak out a lot pre-cum recently. Uncle Wei didn't even bother to mention that sometimes the boy wakes up with an adult's penis drilling into his blossomed, thoroughly deflowered rosebud.

While the rigid throbbing flesh received mind-blowing strokes along its length and that special spot beneath the exposed glans was rubbed until nearly raw, Uncle Wei dipped his head between the child's open thighs again and again. He stabbed the cockhead with a greasy, slimy tongue, grazed yellow-stained teeth along the spongy bulbous surface, generously licked circles around the dome-shaped tip - even the sensitive parts beneath the foreskin was not spared - before attacking the toothpick-size cockslit fervently with kisses and suckles, until little A-Ji could only grunt and jerk his hips repeatedly into Uncle Wei's waiting, greedy mouth.

“Hnnhhk... aahnn... nnnhgn... Uncle-- Mama, Mama, it feels so good... my wee-wee wants to pee, I can’t hold back, my hips are shaking on their own, everything is squeezing out...” the sexually flushed boy cried out with heavy panting, toes curling, back arching, fingers clawing at messy bedsheets, skin glistening with sweat. It had probably been about two years since he started living with this twisted monster under the same roof, and was raped every hour, every day. His child bride - now wife - was in the next room, fornicating with the daddy, and sported a bulge in his fertile child-belly because there was just too much semen ejected into little A-Xian's ass every hour, every day.

“Oh my sweet, sweet son, A-Ji, the day has finally come! You’re ten this year, and I could smell, taste and feel the approaching adulthood inside you. Today is the day you will finally orgasm as a true man, and your mama is here to receive your heated, virile love! Shoot for me, boy! Release the dam, and let your virgin sperm free!” the dirty messy-haired man grinned his million dollar smile and bared his canines in front of the trembling child-penis. The strokes picked up their pace, the lips enveloped the entire cockhead and little A-Ji was depththroated so well, the oral sex could’ve been performed by a top-notch prostitute, except that the ten-year old didn’t really understand these terms, or why his lower body felt so different, so tensed, so swollen, so incredibly good this morning, despite the fact that his body had been well-trained to tingle and experience an adult’s pleasures well before his time.

Little A-Ji cried out “Mama!” with tears in his eyes, his vision turned white with sparkly stars that for a moment, he thought he fell sick and was becoming blind from his first ever waves of ejaculation, as the first powerful contractions ran up and down his penis, his nervous system sizzled and electrified, missiles of thick, viscous semen on their maiden voyage out of their cradle, muscular pulses pushed, pushed, until the molten seed bloated the barrel of its cannon, and spurted bountifully in beautiful arches, straight into the boy's Mama's impatient tongue and down the chasm of a sweet tight throat.

Spurt one to five was heavenly, delirious, feverish, very thick and warm, saturated with millions of sperm cells that reached the finishing line, only to die uselessly in someone's vat of stomach acid minutes later.

The six to tenth shots were slightly diluted, still creamy, and had a distinctive, delectable musky flavour that only Uncle Wei, the stepmother, knew too well.

From the eleventh until the twentieth throbbing twitch, the eruptions gradually eased and became slower, sluggish, less viscous and more relaxed. Each dollop oozed out in fluttering spasms and looked like a river of melted warm ice cream being pumped into a depthless drain.

The last ten rhythmic pulses were weak, erratic, increasingly pained and agonized in the way they squirted too excitedly, too randomly, unable to bear the short-circuiting pleasures, yet too exhausted to squeeze out anything else.

“Ah... Mama, I... I just... c-c-came... it's t-too s-s-sensitive, please, enough, enough! No, please! I beg you, Uncle Wei! M-Mama! S... Stop!” the boy sobbed and buckled as his underaged body was wrecked with incredible bursts of sexual agony.

Uncle Wei continued to suck and swallow the boy's first wet orgasm until little A-Ji started hiccuping in tears, because he became unfamiliarly, and extremely sensitive, but the man would not let go. He attacked the child's genitals while in bed, forcing every last liquidy sweetness to spew out of the tortured, engorged cock until they turned into squirts of pungent morning pee, inflicting sadistic pleasures upon the inexperienced, immature body until the boy's nipples were puffed up like strawberry pastries, his lips swollen from too many passionate kisses - and when the sun was up and shone gloriously through the open windows into their sex-stinked bedroom, Uncle Wei was already rutting deeply into the boy, missionary style, and fertilizing the ten-year old with his own blasts of adult sperm - however, the hairy hands never left the shuddering genitals, and rough, calloused fingers continued to knead and play with the dying, but impossibly hard young youthful organ, and poor little A-Ji was forced to orgasm again and again with nothing left to ejaculate, well into the bright, sunny blue-skies morning.

The wooden block woke up with a groan, to find that indeed, he had fallen asleep for a short while. His three spouses - the cigarette butt, the lump of candlewax, and the chewed chewing gum - made sweet love to him in the manner of a sex-crazed harem that only inanimate objects could, until the orgy left the block smouldering, chipped and cracked due to too much thrusting and shearing forces and sweet, sweet delectable friction.

Nobody noticed the procreative action behind the cupboard inside the Tian Mi Mi-esque building, even when the third male victim was vacuumed dry by the succubi during that idyllic mid-morning.

.

To the Far, Far East, underneath the vast expanse of a deep ocean, undersea earthquakes rumbled, vents started to boil and eject explosive volcanic rocks, and the dark, shadowed seabed becomes deformed with massive cracks, continental plate shifts and the resulting subsonic shockwaves. Huge kraken-like tentacles from legendary underwater denizens emerge in whirlpools of bubbles, followed by the rise of gigantic sea turtles, serpentine dragons, huge manta rays, whale-sized sharks and others, including humongous clam shells that cause tsunamis each time they moved. The ocean becomes dark when it is swarmed by the fish-kin and armies of mermen.

The Dragon King of the Seas that serves the Kingdom of Qishan Lan has awakened, and commands his people to swim towards the Imperial navy fleet anchored off the coastlines of Gusu.

.

“ Lao gong , are you really okay with this? We’re in a nest full of victims from the Gusu Lan... err, Gusu Tian sect and nearby towns and villages. They’re dying one by one, and yet you haven’t said anything about rescuing them.” The lump of candlewax had melted itself and coated the wooden block like a wriggling, undulating pleasantly-heated mass of gel. To the husband, it felt like a pleasurable body massage. Some tobacco bits were added to the mass, and they nicely scratched the presumed back surface when the candlewax jiggled - the equivalent of giving the husband a nice back scratch.

“Yeah, lao gong , what happened to our promise to overcome all evil and protect the weak? Those poor, wretched things end up as food, and they fatten up our enemies day by day!” The chewing gum stretched itself on the now-familiar phallic protrusion on the wooden block, and wrapped it together with bits of dried, flaky tobacco like a spring roll that bounced with the consistency of living flesh. The elasticity and the abrasiveness of the resulting gritty gum gave heavenly pleasures to the husband's makeshift penis, though he had ascended to his own Buddhahood some time ago, and could peacefully restrain himself from diving head-first into the pleasures of the lowly Mortal Realm.

“Why don't you save the surviving residents of Gusu, including your former disciples, from their prisons? Or resurrect them with your godly magic? Or slam a great meteor and destroy everything on this cursed land so that you can rebuild it to your satisfaction?” The cigarette butt had magically sported limbs, and picked up a piece of wire mesh, which was fashioned into a primitive-looking spoon-type earpick. The wooden block was laid to rest, in a very relaxed way as much as a hard block of wood could, on the cigarette's length, and given a very pleasurable and aah-inducing ear cleaning session; one side of the said block had a slight indentation, a small crevice, that was lovingly scraped and scratched for many minutes, even hours (because time had no meaning in this perpetually mid-morning world).

The husband nnngh'd in annoyance at the naggy comments that questioned his integrity, his being, his decisions, his authority. He really wanted to lay down to enjoy the quadruple of earthly pleasures - having his spouse fuck his hardwood like an automated self-moving cocksleeve, doubling his joy with a body massage in tandem with a backscratch, and that wonderful, eye-rolled-back ear-cleaning that can turn even the greatest Han Guang Jun into a drooling, groaning, languishing idiot. But alas, the spouses were merciless and wanted an answer - they paused their tender loving movements and threatened to leave the husband in cold storage if they didn't receive a satisfactory response.

The wooden block sighed. “Everyone, everything in Gusu has been reverse-engineered and backed up in our family cloud drive, lao po . There’s no reason to save the population in Gusu, because one exact copy has been made in the Realms of the Gods. I’ve instructed my servants to rebuild Gusu and re-create everyone within the heavens above the blue skies - it’s just next to the supermarket around the corner, down the main road from the Heavenly Palace. When your cultivation level is high enough, you should drop by for a visit - it’s very beautiful in its original pristine state, the people are safe and happy, and everyone is healthy, youthful and fine, unlike here. Even those who had denounced me will be given a reprieve, and be reborn in the heavens with a clean slate of mind, and a loyal heart to our Kingdom.”

The candlewax squealed with delight, and started massaging and scratching the husband with renewed vigour, as though the act itself could really level up its cultivation level - Wei Ying always loves to explore and venture into new promising lands, after all. The husband involuntarily aahns, hnnghs, uuuhns, then bent and twitched as much as a piece of wood could, and further cracked and warped his surface - but that was fine, as long as it felt good.

“The entire space-time bubble has been classified as a glitch of the root directory of the Mortal Realm, caused by viruses. After your siblings and the rest of our Kingdom are done having fun wrecking the Tians, I will use my All-Administrative Master Access to log in, and delete the folder for Gusu. It’ll be cleaned-up with the latest anti-virus software, then re-formatted and turned into a brand new piece of empty land; the land title will have my name on it as its new owner, so no evil shall be able to corrupt it from henceforth.”

The cigarette butt was pleased, and started cleaning the husband’s imagined ear. Fragments of sawdust started rolling out of the crevice, and tumbled to the ground. The husband gratefully moaned incoherently.

“The only reason why I tagged along in this journey with you, was because I wanted to see with my own eyes to select a perfect hundred Gusu Lan disciples to match with your hundred Jiang disciples currently living in our estates in Yiling. Everything has been preordained, but the only thing left to do is to pair each Lan disciple with his fated younger Jiang disciple. I want our Kingdom to blossom with more love and peace, according to our family’s rules and virtuous principles based on our legacy to our Kingdom.”

The chewing gum sobbed at the touching, inspiring words, and started to drill itself happily on the husband’s wood, with the maximum depth of penetration and the best torque and shearing forces a gum could give to its beloved block of wood. The husband shivered and started to smoke - the scent of burning betel nut and tobacco wafted into the surroundings, and nearby succubi, who were busily engaged in sexual intercourses with multiple virginal teenage boys and pretty young but dying men, detected the smoke but thought it smelled really bad, and attributed it to the pile of rotting bodies left behind by their sexcapades, and so, ignored the signs of their impending doom.

Back in the campsite, Ernie and his meimei had received telepathic instructions from the Grand Patriarch to replicate themselves into pairs of glitzy black-red and feminine furry white tassels to tie to sashes and accompany each rescued Lan disciple. They also prepared a backpack for each individual, which contained Wangxian-branded One-Press-Button freeze-dried and nutritious packaged food and beverages, toiletries and other daily necessities (including a handheld straw broom, no less), and an extra set of Ni-er’s All-Season Collection Robes. Little Ni-er had acquainted with her newfound cousins and felt very close to them, so she made velvety Bags of Holding dotted with cute pink hearts and flowers for each lovely tang ge (堂哥; paternal-side elder male cousin) and filled them with goodies for when they start their new lives in Yiling. Ernie made sure the logistical arrangements are flawless, including an elaborate teleportation spell to send them off, and he also swiped his father's Heavenly Jade credit card (without the owner's consent - but that was fine) to make sure the boys had more than enough funds in their pockets when they arrive at Yiling's immigration processing centres (he still refused to acknowledge the disciples as full-fledged men, though).

In a nutshell, Lan Zhan had already won the war before it started. Wei Ying couldn't help but to give the husband a pleased and proud, loud wet kiss while in the presence of about a hundred snoring, sugar-drunk Lan disciples, all nicely wrapped up in their furry silky cocoon sleeping bags-cum-robos from Ni-er's imaginary boutique.

Notes for the Chapter:

It took a bit of effort to come up with a script for this chapter, because I have once again run out of ideas, and work in my dayjob has piled up. Thank goodness the pandemic is easing at least in this part of the world, so things are looking up :-)

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 108

Wei Ying contemplated, from a safe distance, at how the great and wonderful Han Guang Jun, undoubtedly expressed uncharacteristic interest at a potential rival of sorts, when the handsome man put a hand around the younger boy's shoulder (yes, it's back to being a 'boy' because of the rivalry, and that Wei Ying considers all rivals as immature and inferior to the great ex-Yiling Patriarch), and led the latter down the hill and into some bushes. There were some subtle gestures from the husband - a slight nod, a tilt of chin, a thumb pointing to a secret meeting place, and so on - which told the jealous (Wei Ying balked at that word... would he really feel jealous over the husband having a heart-to-heart talk with his distant relative? Or did he simply feel slighted or left out?) spouse that the husband wanted to have a chat with the brat named Lan Jing Yi. (Oh now it's downgraded from 'boy' to 'brat', Wei Ying's inner self commented wryly.)

The spouse maintained a solid connection to the husband using ErNet, but some things can be deliberately hidden from sight or hearing. Lan Zhan admitted to the spouse before that he considered some exclusive Gusu Lan matters to be quite private and confidential to that sect, and too sensitive to involve outsiders even within one's own family. It was tough to wrap the idea around the head, for Wei Ying at least, because he's always been open to Lan Zhan even about Yunmeng Jiang's problems - and then caught himself, because he remembered several episodes in the past when he ganged up with Jiang Cheng and kept out the poor husband-to-be, a couple of decades back. Wei Ying sighed, and accepted the fact that they always hid secrets behind their own backs despite being, in exterior, blissfully married and madly in love with one another - and perhaps that was perfectly natural as far as human behaviours on selfishness and self-preservation goes - but that acceptance wavered a little when it involved his husband and a younger boy, disappearing into the shady shadows of dense undergrowth, and a mortifyingly suspicious gag placed on any psychic connections between the Qishan Lan couple.

Wei Ying sighed again, louder this time. He looked around the campsite - everyone's fast asleep in perfectly arranged rows of sleeping bags of butterfly-like pupae wrapped in soft wool, wearing eye-masks under overcast skies; the perpetually mid-morning sun had gone hiding behind passing-by clouds, so the temperatures on the hilltops dropped a little, chill started to set in, and it was perfect to start hibernation with full tummies, in some ways. The two tentacle-kin were still busy making preparations, toiling hard on the cleaned picnic benches to manufacture enough gear for the disciples' onward journey, when Wei Ying barked out their names to catch their attention.

Ernie didn't even need to listen to what his mother wanted to say next - being the rebellious teenage emo, he'd think of himself as superior to all Mankind and could predict how people will think and react just by eavesdropping on their conversations and tapped into their emotional-cognitive-psyhic frequencies via a parallel astral dimension - and be ostensibly true, in most cases.

After an emo roll of eyes, the so-called black lizard's tail grabbed hold of his meimei, who squealed in surprise at her gege's strong grip, and the little fluffy worm was lifted up shaken like a salt shaker in mid-air. She giggled, beautiful baby tinkling crystalline sounds that soothed any darkness or sourness in one's heart, and her worm-like body was rattled to core; tufts of snow-white fur dislodged from her delicate, velvety coat, and floated upwards to fill the air like puffy dandelion seeds blown by summer breezes.

Wei Ying licked his lips. If the husband wanted to play, so could he, after all - in retaliation, of course.

.

The two men talked a little about the weather, as with all conversation starters. It appeared that Jing Yi, and probably the other hundred or so disciples, did not realize time had somewhat stopped in the middle of a harsh winter - which to the Grand Patriarch knowledge, supported by his aides' thorough effort to comb through every known database including the entire Wei-kikipedia website and the annals of the Book of Judgement, confirmed his suspicion that the entire population of Gusu had been assimilated into the curse of the space-time bubble, commonly known amongst gods and universe-creators as 'the story book effect':

Those afflicted by the curse were essentially woven into the time-stopped bubble. For example, they could no longer comprehend nor tell the difference between mid-morning or any other time of the day, or the passage of time. Everything was relative and nothing can be described in absolutes. Jing Yi believed that he escaped the Cloud Recesses 'earlier the day', but could not point out how much time had passed; although he should know that he'd fled his home a full moon ago, and spent weeks hiding from Imperial soldiers, yet his mind could not calculate the total time nor compute the logic behind it, because he had been painted into the pages of a twisted story book rather than being the independent reader who reads the said book in a bookshop, outside of the book's covers.

Lan Zhan postulated that this probably explained the strange, cardboard-like quality of the disciples - everyone behaved and reacted rather stiffly, a little detached from reality, sometimes dumbled down to a mob character's standards, driven by an invisible but unrealistic and perverted script rather than the other way around, and always displayed a rather absurdly optimistic or idealistic but impractical positive outlook despite the terrible fate of their world. Any boy, regardless of sect culture or upbringing, would've displayed signs of shock, distress and break down in the face of hopelessness, of losing their homes, of mounting death tolls, even of watching one of their comrades being raped by demonic females; he wished he could fully attribute the sturdy build of character in the Lan survivors to their teachings, but he knew otherwise.

Servants from the Heavenly Court texted the Grand Patriarch via his private LanWeb account. They could probably move the survivors out of the space-time bubble's corrupted programming code upon a successful exit teleportation, patch them up and rebuild their natural human elements into the sparse, featureless and artificial - even plastic - cardboard-like scaffold of sorts. However, such ultra-nano surgical procedures would render the disciples rather feeble in the mind and heart - like emotionally nursing a child back to adulthood once again -, and they would require a strong leader to love and care for them during the recovery phase, and lead them into a better life. A pack leader at least, or a pair of parental figures at most, his counsels advised.

Lan Zhan nodded habitually after receiving the needful information from his royal subjects, and turned to the remarkable young man next to him. Jing Yi stared back, quizzically, and wondered at their peculiar secluded location and circumstances. The great and wonderful Han Guang Jun asked, in a very abbreviated manner, for what the man thought of three rather whimsical, but very important topics.

“Love? Oh... Han Guang Jun, you know we're not encouraged to fall in love outside of the relationships and marriages that our guardians arranged for us - however, since you brought up this topic, and you asked for my honest opinion... well, when I was about twelve or thirteen, there was this really pretty girl in my class, she's the daughter of one of my uncle's cousins. She was a little talkative, like me, and we got on very well during team assignments. I think I had a crush, but I can't really remember how that felt like, though.

But now, I just want to get all of us back together as a sect, and find a way to return home and save as many as possible, if they're still alive. I miss my pals, really, I miss playing and practising cultivation with them, I miss reciting our family rules in the mornings with them, I miss gathering during our daily assemblies to greet our elders and wish them good health and wisdom; heck, I don't even know if my aging parents are still around, but at least I want to greet them one more time while I'm still breathing in this world! That's the biggest form of love, in my honest opinion - love, understanding and respect for your family members, friends, and your kin. Oh, I have to include partial outsiders too, because I can never, never sideline Si Zhui, despite the fact that he left us to take up a nomadic life in the outskirts a few years back. I want to find him, hug him, make sure he's alright, and have some tea with him while sharing our stories in a rowdy teahouse! I know he's still out there, somewhere, I can feel it in my bones!"

"Leadership? Uhh... you're the greatest and more wonderful, Han Guang Jun, do you really need my opinion? You do? Oh... err... I think the elders have been a little disappointing since you left, really. They kept making mistakes in their decisions, backtracking then finger pointing when things go wrong - or worse, not making any decisions at all. I'm a more assertive, go-getter type, so I usually spend more time doing something than mulling over stuff. I think some of the older ways of thinking need to evolve - our rules may be extensive and burdensome, but they're not necessarily bad. It's just that times have changed. I can't speak for the others, but I've survived my first two decades by living according to our leaders' words and wisdom, so surely that means something, right? If the elders had come together as a unified voice of virtuous values against the Tians' corrupted ways, rather than being bribed and tricked one by one, like a wall being torn down brick by brick at its foundation, we wouldn't end up like what we're seeing today.

Me? Erm... I don't really see myself as a leader. Well, maybe a kingpin of five or ten spirited boys trying to survive a war, yes, but not for a clan. I probably need Si Zhui's help in managing more disciples, because he's the perfect calming counterbalance to my more fiery ways of handling issues, which I know turns off some people. Ha ha ha, Han Guang Jun, you're too generous in your praises! I just follow orders and apply good common sense according to our family rules, that's all! As long as everyone is safe, healthy, thriving and isn't under some form of duress and discomfort, then I'm fine, really."

"Life? The world is so big, and I want to travel to new places, see new things, meet more people! That's one of my life goals! After this whole thing blows over, I'll probably get a few of my mates together, seek permission from the elders for a study trip or something, and hop on a horse wagon. Can we visit you, Wei gongzi and the Qishan Lan in Yiling? Maybe you can let us stay for a while in your new home, which I heard is as big as a fortress? After all the fantastic stuff I've heard from Wei gongzi, I think I want to try applying for a transfer student scholarship to your sect, it sounds awesome! There aren't many cultivation sects actively engaged in trade and commercial activities like yours - well, probably the Lanling Jins too, but they're about buying up businesses, not actually running grocery shops, restaurants, large-scale farms and other services like yours.

Wei gongzi said I may have the potential to work as an intern in a sales department, and that could be my life's second calling. I'm a little unsure about that, because I've never tried to sell anything for a profit, but maybe with Si Zhui working alongside to cheer me up and soothe my anxieties, I might be able to pull off a few good bargains. Do you think so too, Han Guang Jun?"

Jing Yi was as charming and persuasive as a budding, amateur but already quite chatty sales agent trying to sell insurances, cosmetics or even the odd set of kitchen knives and household goods to housewives. His character was evaluated, from a Lan perspective, to be friendly, approachable, convincing, curious, not aggressive, humble, virtuous and principled, rational and logical in his thinking process, kind and thoughtful towards others, and very wholesome. Wei Ying would definitely remark that Jing Yi is still a little stiff and bland from a cookie-cutter mould of an exemplary but boring Gusu Lan, but that could be worked out, given time and enough life experiences outside of the space-time bubble, of course.

To the last question, Lan Zhan thought for a moment, and concluded that indeed, this junior had successfully closed a very good deal.

“Mn.”

.

On the other side of the hill, Wei Ying had transformed into his incubus form and enjoyed a mass orgy with scores of helpless, hypnotized and demonically-seduced virginal boys. Invisible Hands gently peeled them from their protective cocoons, then woken them up to the splendid sight of swirling fur in the air - some sneezed, some coughed, some inhaled bits of white hair and choked - all of which had the desired effect of fanning everyone's loins and lusts, and tear down any virtuous walls that the Gusu Lans are famous for, with a bit of hypnosis and brainwashing added, for style of course - Wei Ying is a Dark Arts practitioner after all, and corrupting boys and young men is one of his favourite pastimes.

“Ernie! Can you serve these brats some cordial refreshments? They’re probably a little dehydrated after going on for several rounds in me... Ahhhnn, you naughty boy, how dare you shoot inside your mama’s womb right after sticking your pointy pee-pee in! Are you so excited that you cannot hold back even a minute? And you, over there, stop waiting in line and eat mama’s dick like a good boy. I want to feel good too, and not just from these yummy maiden cocks rubbing all over my body!”

At any given time, at least three naked Lan disciples copulated with the incubus, crying “Niang! Niang!” (Mommy! Mommy!) because of the first-ever volcanic premature ejaculations rocking through their hips that sent volatile electricity scorching their nerve-ends and sexual meridians. All hundred or so boys were in their late teens and early twenties, had experienced wet dreams before and learnt a little about self-pleasuring, but they were too easily tempted to taste the sweetness of losing their virginity to a man’s tight asshole - their first hole - that was quickly overflowing with fresh youngling’s sperm and other bodily fluids. A long queue formed behind Wei Ying, who was on all fours on the ground, and sometimes he flipped over to accept the boys missionary-style; the demon easily swayed their growing horniness and impatience, and cajoled the boys to cut their queues and simply jostle with their hard dicks for a hot touch, a tender rub or if they’re lucky, a furious fuck into one of Wei Ying’s many holes, orifices and crevices.

“Ni-er, more, keep gassing the air with drugs better than those sold in brown vials! Make more of those snowflakes for us! Ah, ah, you’re a bad boy, Mama’s going to cum because you keep shaking that hairy snake of yours inside mama’s pussy and that special sweet spot. Does it feel good? Mm? It feels good doesn’t it, to fuck your mama’s hairy pussy and shoot your baby batter into it? Unnh, uunh, come for me, boy, keep squirting that hot fertile milk! And you too, there’s always room for more! Squeeze your dickie in mama’s hole, you know you want to make more brothers and sisters inside this rosebud!”

As masses of warm, moaning, sweaty bodies converged between the man's spread-eagled legs, with plenty of virginal penises vying for the chance to penetrate and thrust through and spurt out lovely rich seeds, those who didn't mind lesser pleasures took to other tasteful places - Wei Ying's mouth was always filled with at least three cockheads at once, and every minute, someone would cry "Mama, mama" and ooze, spew, sometimes wildly twitch creamy warm boy-milk down the man's throat; Wei Ying would grin and let his forked aphrodisiac-laced tongues rain indescribable pleasures upon the convulsing boys' groins, and he always took care to tug and caress, then suck those brimming-full testicles to coax them to shoot out, shoot out more of that exquisite musky elixir that only virginal young men can produce.

"Oh, there's five of you? Tsk, tsk, such impatient boys... here, let mama hold her asshole wide, can you see how deep it is? Can you see the many fleshy folds waiting to touch and massage your pee-pees? Can you see juicy moist lips waiting to kiss the first cock that breeds into this fertile babymaking canal? Can you see a long wiggling tongue inside, slick with forbidden nectars, waiting to wrap around your penises with so much love - oh, and do you know that tongue can slither into your peehole... imagine how wonderful that feels! Ah this hole... it's filling up pretty quickly, so you better rub out directly at the entrance if you cannot bear to spear into the tight hot womb! Ahhnnh! That was so hot, and I could feel my belly bulge because someone's dollops of happy milk accidentally spilled inside... it was you, wasn't it? Oh, oh, there's more coming out from your crazily jerking cock, jam it in, boy, I want all your orgasms inside mama's womb! Come, my sweet love, come make some babies inside mama's ass..."

His clawed fingers busied themselves to give handjobs, and guided the younger ones who could fit through the wall of wiggling panting, trembling bodies to crouch over his sizzling-hot torso, so that they, too, have ample opportunities to fuck Wei Ying's swollen nipples and suckle them like the babes they had mentally degraded into, and even try to mate with the man's belly button in a desperate bid to impossibly return to Mama's womb. Wei Ying squealed with delight when he received a shower of hot semen streaks, and cajoled everyone to have a go into his sweet, clenching tight tunnel of love.

Eventually, every boy had a chance to ejaculate onto, or into Wei Ying, and with a little more calm and composure to control the crowd, they mingled around with the intention to keep breeding that sweet hole that they found to be extremely addictive and irresistible. Wei Ying cackled and lay his back on the ground, then raised his hips and spread his legs wide open - sloppy white foamy goo drooled to the ground, but that didn't deter the boys at all - because they had never participated in an orgy before, and now, they wanted to savour the experience to the fullest. They continued to masturbate in front of the incubus while waiting for their turns, who laughed and had a wonderful time having endless sexual intercourse; as soon as a boy's steel-hard turgid organ was ready to explode, he would rudely push others through and try his best to fornicate the Mama, crying out for mother, fucking desperately with the speed of a rutting rabbit, then he stilled with quivering hips and arching back, made an "Ooh" with his mouth and started to froth in the mouth with silent screams of mind-blowing nirvana, shuddering uncontrollably as he experiences life's greatest pleasures of emptying one's loins into another man's buttocks, fifteen, sometimes twenty twitches and no less, of beautiful, heavenly contracting, pulsating orgasms inside lovely, lovely maternal Wei Ying. Seconds later, the boy was crudely yanked away and another exceedingly excited, leaking angry-red penis took his place, and ejaculated to its satisfaction, and so on, and on.

Every Gusu Lan disciple in the campsite eventually happily deflowered himself into Wei Ying's loving, generous, eternally tight and youthful anus, while the latter, in his demonic form, enjoyed sexually exploiting the inexperienced boys, forcibly taking their innocence, thus marking them unfit for future relationships with the opposite gender. Wei Ying cursed them with his incubus magic, so that their lusts will only react to men, particularly to the one they will always dream about, or have nightmares of, with the backdrop of swirling blurry snowflakes and everflowing sweet cordial drinks, about the one, extremely alluring and desirable but terribly voracious Mama Wei.

.

Lan Zhan walked into a scene of sexual carnage, and it felt like deja vu . He immediately hand-chopped the back of Jing Yi's neck and rendered the boy unconscious, then carried him over his shoulder. The man realized he'd ruffled some dangerous feathers, but he wasn't sure how or what, when he spied the spouse from a safe distance.

“ Aiyo , boy, move your hips faster, harder and deeper! I know this is your eighth round, but you're young and strong, surely you can keep going! I want every last drop of sperm from you, boy! One, two, one, two, one, two, keep it coming, I can feel 'em spilling out because you shouldn't hold back! Come on, you're no longer a virgin, and you've tasted this sweet tight hole seven times before, you want another one, don't you?”

“Nnnh! Nnnh! Niang , Niang ! This unfilial son cannot bear it anymore! My hopeless p-p-pee-pee hurts, it feels overwhelmed and there's nothing left! My legs cannot stand, my hips are cramped, I'm so exhausted, but it... aah, aah, I feel those lips and tongues inside your womb, mama! They're biting, licking and kissing my p-p-pee-pee! I'm dying, it feels so good to be squeezed, to be eaten inside, I cannot control my shaking, I'm floating, I'm flying... I... I think I can see myself from up above... ooh, ooh, Niang , Niangggggg !”

Wei Ying lovingly crossed his legs over the boy's back, reeled him in like a prized catch on a fishing rod, and trapped him in his clutches of sexual slavery, death and revival - because the boy experienced how it felt to be immobilized while being sucked dry ala incubus-style, until he was at death's door because he suffered from intense heart attacks from the shock of demonic pleasures, from having his qi vacuumed out from his body's orifices and through his wildly twitching cock, and from the alarming loss of bodily liquids (which was fortunately not blood), and then the qi was recirculated and returned to him and he was invigorated at the same time; the experience was extremely disturbing, vividly arousing, incredible confusing for the crushed body, devastated mind, and shattered-then-reborn soul, that the boy finally broke down and cried hot tears. Wei Ying cradled the boy, kept him close and patted his head like a mother, and continued to milk aftershocks from the boy's hypersensitized penis with his admirably agile and nimble ass muscles.

Lan Zhan cleared his throat and marched through the scene of sexual depravity - a hundred naked, moaning boys piled up amongst themselves like a tasty nest of lewd immorality around the spouse. Wei Ying stared at the approaching husband - and his baggage - with burning jealousy in his bloodshot eyes, while pushing off the dried-up victim, and then wordlessly welcomed, simultaneously, two more boys who had been waiting for their turns and staggered desperately with only one thing in their minds, and their two semi-limp dicks speared into his gaping, flooded hole. They were blissfully unaware that their great and wonderful Han Guang Jun could see their buttocks greedily pumping into that man's wife .

The husband dropped Jing Yi on a clean patch of grassland, after he made sure there were no streaks of cum around. Then he gingerly picked his way through dense masses of unconscious - probably sleeping - bodies, careful not to step on semen, drool or other expelled fluids.

“Ah, ah, boys, what if your daddy comes home and finds you making babies inside your precious mama? You despicable, undisciplined, horny brats! Irredeemable, deplorable and unforgivable! You’ve sinned, boys! You love to drill your mama’s hole right in front of your daddy! Your mama is cheating your daddy by having your unrepentant dicks inside his sexy pussy, and you like it, don’t you? You want to fertilize mama’s eggs right under daddy’s nose, don’t you? You want mama to carry your babies in her pregnant belly, thinking that they belong to daddy, don’t you? That’s right, keep fucking mama’s sweet hole, spray every last drop of sperm in there, so that you’ll go to hell with mama and all the sweet fat babies that we’ll be making together!”

Wei Ying was angry and he snarled, even when he reached down to smack at the duo’s springy rumps, alternating with brutal finger-grasps, then loving massages, upon the two masochistic boys’ testicles, causing delicious waves of orgasmic pleasure to burn through their loins, sweet nnnghs and pleading noises for their Mama to scold and punish them more, followed by another twenty ejaculations majestically jetting out each from dicks rubbing upon each other inside the tight, inundated, body-warmed cocksleeve of sorts. The boys remained oblivious to the larger man’s presence, obviously too drugged and drunk to notice.

“Wei Ying,” Lan Zhan called when he loomed over the rutting spouse. It was hard to decipher the intention between the way the name was spelled out, because of the lack of emotion or unspoken non-verbal cues. Not appealing at all, for the spouse, at least. Wei Ying kicked the two spent boys away, and wiggled his bum to entice a set of three hungry dicks next in line.

“What? You had fun with that brat on your shoulder behind the bushes just now. Was a quickie or two not enough for you? I couldn’t read your mind, so I wouldn't know. Do you want to join my party of fresh young meat? Oh sorry, I forgot, they're not so fresh anymore, because I took their virginities hours ago, lao gong, while you hiding behind those bushes," the younger man sneered in a rather obnoxious manner, clearly irritated by the husband's lack of honesty and transparency.

Lan Zhan thwarted the veiled insult, and maintained his cool demeanour.

"No, I just went to have a talk with Jing Yi. There were some sect matters to discuss, that's all. I needed to ascertain if Jing Yi is the right person to be elected as the leader of the survivors when we transport them to Qishan; the same as Jiang Cheng was made the head of the remaining Yunmeng Jiang disciples upon arrival at the immigration centre."

Wei Ying slowly returned to his human form - the horns, fangs, claws and tail started to shrink, but his stretched swollen asshole was still as impressive as usual. The trio of boys picked up their furious pace of fucking into a tightly packed canal, and made very crass and animalistic grunts to accompany the juicy squelchy sounds of excess seed being forced out. Wei Ying looked away, pretended to check his fingernails which weren't painted or varnished, his body shaking to the rhythm of being drilled to the ground like hammering nails to a board.

"So... why did you shut down our psychic connection?" he asked disinterestedly and blew at a few fingernails, as though there was lint or grime on them.

Lan Zhan sighed, “I needed to make an unbiased, objective and appropriate assessment of his condition and mental state, according to Gusu Lan rules that govern the procedures for electing a Gusu Lan leader. I cannot use our Qishan Lan sect’s criteria, and you know that. According to the precepts of election, the assessor must be perfectly knowledgeable of the over-4000 rules to ask the right questions, and evaluate the answers in all possible aspects. You memorized many, but you don’t know them all, and you sometimes twist some rules for your own benefit - you know that, Wei Ying.”

Wei Ying stilled, and there was a pang of guilty in his looks. Still, he wasn’t quite convinced, because there were little holes and doubts in the overall story.

“And? You guys took so long, you couldn’t just be talking about electing a leader, right?” He bit his lower lip, anxious.

The husband rubbed his temples. “Yes we also talked about what happened with the council of Lan elders, the last days of the Cloud Recesses, my brother and Si Zhui. I also tried to find out and gauge the situation for Wen Ning and my shijie , which was unfortunately out of purview of many younger Lan disciples. It was my mistake to have left the ErNet connection switched off during the entire time. The whole conversation has been recorded and uploaded into ErNet for retrospective investigation. You can access the files anytime too.”

(In hindsight, Lan Zhan is the archetypal techno-unsavvy person forced to use technology. If it was a video conference, he would be the one whose camera view captured only his forehead, and his audio was permanently set on mute until it was his turn to speak, in which he forgets to unmute himself, to the annoyance and amusement of others.)

Wei Ying hmm'd and realized the three vulnerable-looking boys had inhaled too much demonic aphrodisiacs and pheromones off his sweaty body; their emptied bodies were incapable of resisting the perpetual yearning for their Mama's flesh, and they yielded to their sexual impulses - their hips shook feebly, and three more very eager but probably blank squirts of warmth pooled into the now-pregnant belly full of men's smelly congealing semen. The boys cried in pleasurable agony, and promptly fell asleep atop Wei Ying, with their wilted spilled penises safely tucked inside a muscular tube of warm gooey milky soup.

The younger man finally accepted the husband's explanation after a quick glance at the uploaded files using psychic powers, and awkwardly disengaged from the three snoring but very ecstatic, satisfied boys still stuck to his ass.

"Ernie! Clean this up for me, please? And don't forget to detox the disciples too, there's too much drugs and sugar in their blood. I know you can do it without needing my help, alright, sweetie?"

Ni-er! We need these boys back in their sleeping bags and straight into hibernation! Can you do that for mommy? That's my sweetpea!"

The cold black thing groaned and rolled his eyes - he never had any interest in watching nor getting involved in homo sapiens procreation activities, and he wondered why he was dragged into the whole farce in the first place; the furry silkworm coo'd and went straight to work without protest.

Then as Wei Ying flipped to all fours and crawled on the ground - he sported a gravity-defying belly worthy of a second trimester of pregnancy full of sloshing seed, his hips seemed to have dislocated into a bow-legged position and he couldn't stand up or walk straight for some time - he gave a final accusing look at the husband, "You wouldn't mind that I've ruined my ass by having sex with my in-laws, and therefore your distant cousins and other relatives... do you?"

Lan Zhan sighed. He'd have sex with plenty of their Kingdom's subjects too, and not long ago, he was raped by a hundred Jiang adolescents. After that, he's been trying his best, but still struggling, to claim abstinence from all worldly pleasures except for his undying loyalty to his one and only soulmate.

"No, not at all, lao po ." Let the payback be sweeter for the spouse, rather than be kicked out from the bed to the sofa at nights.

Wei Ying continued to crawl towards the nearest picnic bench to steady himself, noisily farting out frothy egg-whites, dribbling out abundantly down his thighs to leave puddles of still-warm ejaculated semen on the ground. "Good boy," he said with a tired but satisfied huff.

Lan Zhan hummed and went to find a mop and a pail of water, and commented casually that the spouse better douche his insides, lest he gets runny diarrhea from all the incestuous sperm attacking his buttohole.

Wei Ying shot the husband a very dirty look.

Notes for the Chapter:

O...kay, this really went nowhere except for the smut. I had a bit of time today and an overimaginative imagination, so there.

This one's written as a response to one recent Comment asking if Wei Ying would get his hole-in-the-wall sex. Sorry, I really couldn't fit that scenario in, but I guess a mass orgy works equally well, hopefully. Sorry if there is disappointment, but keep those Comments coming, in case you have any kinks or themes you want to request from naughty Wangxian! :-D

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 109

Sometimes, Wei Ying felt that in life, he was always given the short end of the stick.

“Ahhh... lao gong , that’s not fair,” he lamented, “My Jiang boys merely fwip -ped into thin air, whereas your Lan boys get to ride a mega-UFO like that!” and pointed at the offending massive interstellar transport that blocked the blue skies from their view. It was probably chartered, and an overkill, for the purpose of an unnecessary hyperspace jump from one end of a country to the other.

An impressive, large circular disc-shaped space vessel the size of an entire village hovered atop the hill, casting deep shadows on the grassy landscape that beautiful mid-morning. The metallic surface glimmered when sunlight reflected back to the atmosphere, countless blinking and running colourful lights and neon-lit panels glowed on its underside. The roar from its tremendous OxyHydrogen-fusion engines was surprisingly muted into a soothing humming by superior noise-cancellation technology (and the exhaust fumes were essentially clean water vapour), although the resulting powerful vertical thrusts destroyed some unsuspecting nearby pine trees and sent broken trunks and branches spinning into the windy air (again, drenched in clean water vapour - it’s extremely environment-friendly).

Wei Ying’s lips puckered and curled downwards into an adorable pout, and he had to grab hold of his red topknot ribbon and a large portion of his crowning glory, because his long lush hair was blown in all directions. He groaned at the sheer injustice of it all.

“It’s done out of necessity, lao po ,” the husband calmly and clearly explained, while putting his hands behind his back in a sagely manner - strangely, the whipping tornado winds did not affect him at all, probably due to his godly status -, “The disciples cannot be simply teleported back to Yiling in their present condition. Based on the advice from Heaven's surgeon-general, at least 41st century medic-equipped transports should be used to safely pick them up using non-physical means, perform the delicate surgeries to peel their bodies and souls off the fabric of this corrupted space-time bubble’s reality, then the autonomous medic robots inside will complete the required repairs to bring them back to their original state - while in a specially-created hyperspace to prevent natural sub-atomic degenerative processes - before being shuttled off to our Kingdom at warp speed for further treatments and to undergo needed medical observations.”

“Nnnh. Too complicated, and I don’t understand a single word that you’re saying. We were both born from the same era, so when did you become so smart?” the errant spouse refused to agree with everything under those dissenting circumstances, and stuck a tongue out towards the husband to show his disapproval.

Lan Zhan leaned to the side and gave Wei Ying a sweet kiss on his rosy cheeks, before unveiling a prized jar of Emperor Smiles hidden inside his sleeves; the poor spouse hadn’t had the chance to sample the exquisite liquor since arriving in Gusu, so Wei Ying gasped in surprise and his face turned cheerful once again.

“Mn. I’ve always been smart as your lao gong . Perhaps I’m just a late bloomer.”

After a couple of swigs from the ceramic vessel, Wei Ying smacked his lips at the wonderfully fragrant, sweet taste, and could at least agree that he enjoyed the authentic elixir made from source, and could probably bother the husband for a few more jars - a fair compensation indeed.

Perhaps life isn't too unfair after all, and the metaphorically short end of the stick he received appeared to be longer than expected, he thought.

.

One by one, each disciple, wrapped in his cocoon-like sleeping bag equipped with stuffed backpacks, pouches, and a set of two name-tagged tassels - one black/red and the other fluffy white - was lifted up from the ground and into an opening in the middle of the huge UFO using golden-coloured tractor beams. Apparently, everything was considered fragile when entering into different dimensional spaces within the transport, so the process of loading the passengers (or patients) was done slowly and with great care.

When the first couple of persons were sucked into the beam, Wei Ying was an excited ball of energy, because he wanted to be part of the action too - he'd jumped into the broad pillar of light and laughed himself silly when he was airlifted for a few seconds, before he veered to the side and back into the domain of gravity, then tumbled unceremoniously onto the grass. Barely half an hour later, after the second person was loaded into the UFO, the man became bored of playing, experimenting, jumping and parkour-ing through, performing acrobatics, flying up then crashing down using the tractor beam as a toy. His boredom and dissatisfaction multiplied when he realized that the entire snail-paced Heaven-led operation of filling the medical cabins with one hundred disciples, at fifteen minutes each, would take more than a day.

Lan Zhan remained quiet and content, as he affectionately tended to the spouses' new bruises and scratches from playing too much with the tractor beam. He had prepared some snacks for them to pass the time peacefully, including a pot of pu'er tea - no more cordial drinks, the husband declared -, plates of dried plums, toasted mixed nuts and vegetable crisps, and even a chessboard - in which Wei Ying played a few rounds and lost every one of them, then counter-declared that board games were prohibited from henceforth, which resulted in higher levels of stress and boredom, until Wei Ying simply groaned in exasperation, stood up from the picnic bench, pulled down his pants and mooned at the husband with his ass-cheeks.

“Wei Ying...” A silent roll of eyes, although the said eyes refused to roll because Lan Zhan is truly mesmerized and bewitched by the beauty of Wei Ying's moon-white unblemished ass.

Twin buttocks globes swayed seductively and drew an imaginary smiley-face for the husband to see.

“Ahhh... nobody's watching and I've already bathed in the hot springs earlier. Come, come, my dear husband, come and get it while it's still fresh and clean!”

The young man politely let out a soft, pure, airy fwwt ! fart to emphasize his point. The husband wrinkled his nose at a whiff of off-putting smell, and wondered distantly if the belly-full of Lan cum was truly rinsed off (and pollute Gusu's waterways, no doubt) or had been absorbed in its entirety by that insufferable incubus (because it would be a crime to let such a nutritious, virile meal go to waste. Plus, it's always a good idea to diversify one's food source besides the lonely tormented oft-drained husband).

A few minutes later, Wei Ying was seen running around the campsite without his pants on while bellowing out childish laughter, because he succeeded in stealing the husband's pants too. Lan Zhan trailed behind without so much as to utter a word of protest at the goosebump-ish feeling of cooling drafts caressing his naked bottom. Naughty Wei Ying morphed into an energetic and cocky juvenile, weaving through bushes and in between pine trees, twisting and turning around the hapless husband. He stole pinches on Lan Zhan's nipples when he nearly bumped into the latter, swatted and nipped the buttocks when the older man wasn't looking, frisked the crack of the ass when the latter reacted too slowly, and he squealed like a squeaky toy when he managed to reach below and give the taller man a generous grasp, or a swiping tickle at a pair of loosely-hanging but very plump pair of family jewels adorned with stray strands of curls. The mischievous games, though insignificant and inane, culminated into a profoundly agitated, riled-up husband who ended up caterwauling Wei Ying's name across the bushes as he started to chase the spouse ardently with the single-minded intention to catch that troublemaker and put the younger man beneath him, to where the man named Wei Wuxian truly belongs.

Further away, the two tentacle-kin started to pack up the campsite, by stowing away conjured equipment, rolling up canvas and mats, and washing the last few pieces of kitchenware. Everything fwip -ped to their respective warehouses located in Ernie and Ni-er's personal universes tucked safely inside their tummies. The brother really didn't want his meimei to watch (again) their parents play childish games and breed like rabbits in broad daylight, because he was a little worried that she might be traumatized or pick up bad habits from those two, so he carried her to a safe distance and hid behind some rocks. It didn't really matter that tentacle-kin were unaffected by human mating and propagation behaviours; Ernie wanted his meimei to have the best tentacle-kin upbringing and education that she deserves, after all.

The gege cradled her with his cold black slimy arms, and started to hum a mix of old Yunmeng and Gusu lullabies while rocking her to sleep. Little Ni-er coos and gurgles softly, before curling into a ball of fluff and into dreams of giggling children, colourful soft toys and plenty of new cousins to play with.

.

Elsewhere, Wei Ying had to stoop and bow his legs as he walked like an ape around the campsite's perimeter, with the husband in tow and safely nestled (and attached) inside him, drilling his rosebud like a jackhammer on unlimited (energizer bunny) batteries. The spouse knew the husband was aroused by the sights of being cheated by the latter's younger cousins and relatives - the impressive pent-up tent in the older man's pants did not go unnoticed; so, Wei Ying made a preliminary conclusion that Lan Zhan had an immoral fantasy for being cuckolded.

As the mating couple slowly made their way through tall grass and towards one of the picnic tables, Wei Ying started talking about everything that caught his attention - the weather, the disciples, the UFO that was hard at work to suck one person at a time, the fluttering waves of green grass, the invigorating breezes, the odd flock of birds in the skies that were also unknowingly sucked into the tractor beam, what he dreamt the days before, how their bulging waistlines were showing, that the husband's bald spots were becoming visible day by day (a blatant lie, really), and so on. Lan Zhan wheezed, groaned and begged Wei Ying to stay still, because his exceedingly turgid and excited penis kept slipping out in his quest to fuck that tasty blossomed ripe rosebud that truly (and legally) belonged to him, but at the same time, freely searched for more lovers' penises when he wasn't looking (the husband repeatedly defended his claim that he did not go into the bushes with Jing Yi to have a quick romp, because he was not interested in that boy in that way). To show his love and dedication for the spouse, the husband tried his best to cream and cram as many one-twos into the spouse's tight asshole as possible - which wasn't too difficult, as there were plenty of pleasurable fleshy folds that kissed and massaged his hard-on so well inside that intimately familiar cavern between the bowed legs -, and hoped that the loving act would convince the younger man that the person named Wei Wuxian is the apple, the pearl, the most desired one, in the eyes of the infallible Lan Wang Ji, who only falls when he's in love with his destined soulmate.

"Ahh, at times like this, I miss our old home. There were so many more lovely bumps, curves, sharp corners, granular, conical and cylindrical shapes that I could rub myself against, compared to this plain old picnic table," pantless Wei Ying complained, as he draped a used, soiled loincloth over a table's edge and started humping on it, like the good old days. The equally pantless husband was infinitely grateful that the spouse had stopped walking around, and he could finally, finally mount like a dog in heat (the name of the animal is forbidden, so he kept the thought to himself), and started pistoning his about-to-burst meaty rod as hard as he could, to enjoy every tasty thrust through soft, juicy flesh, to plunder his love with the deepest penetrations.

"Lao gong , do you think we'll be able to return to the 'Mounds when... ahh, you're a frightening husband, stop biting my neck and leave lovebites all over my shoulders! You've got really bad table manners, you know that? Eh... w-why are you getting bigger inside me?"

Lan Zhan groaned in agony, his face flared into the beautiful tell-tale sign of blossoming sexual flushes, as finally, the first sparks of joy sent powerful twitches surging through his penile nerves and muscles, ballooning the desperate organ that needed to eject and launch its payload, lustful flames licked his tightened balls as they loaded up the first of many volleys. He ramped up the pace of pumping hips, when he lost his line of rational thought and started to grunt like an animal interspersed with sweet husky noises of ‘Wei Ying’ and uuuh, uuuh, aaah, oooh, and nnnghs. His hands groped and clawed at spouse’s thin muscular chest and slightly flabby waist, his legs turned into jelly as they faltered, trying to balance the thrilling sex position while holding up his weight against the creaking, shaking table. His pelvis slammed hard against the spouse’s buttocks, and he was melting fast into molten liquids of good-feelings, the pressure within built up, his nostrils flared because everything suddenly felt too good, smelled too good, Wei Ying’s hair in his face, Wei Ying’s sweaty skin that needed more nibbles and bites, his lungs screamed for air as his back arched and bent repeatedly, seizing with plenty of epileptic fits of heavenly sensations that burnt electricity up and down his spine and through the crazy countdown of the launchpad between his legs, he opened his mouth in a gaping yawn and his facial muscles froze in ecstasy, his vision sparkled and spun, volatile liquids rise, rise, welling up from the bladder, prostate and every sweet gland and tubes inside his groin, pressurizing, steaming hot, boiling and frothing--

“Ah, ah, lao gong , you’re a hopelessly wild beast, a stallion during a rut, you’re crushing me with your heavy weight, do you hear me? We’ve done it so many times since winter started, and yet you’re never satisfied at all! I want to have a decent, intelligent conversation to work out our next steps, like how to find Si Zhui or... hey, stop coming inside me when I’m talking to you! Auuugh, you dumbass, you’re not listening! You insatiable monster!”

Wei Ying sighed, and let the husband cry out in pleasurable agony and ride out his well-earned thirty twitches; he knew that once Lan Zhan started, there was no stopping, after all. Later, with a wet patch on his bum, he stepped away from the ruined picnic table and pulled the husband's earlobe to reprimand him about maintaining good conversational etiquettes (in which the latter blushed, secretly loving the attention and the unwarranted scolding from the spouse); then added a few spanks on the older man's exposed springy tight ass until they were decorated with fingerprints, as punishment for ejaculating thirty times without a single permission; then unsurprisingly, the husband grew hard again in front of the spouse because of the sado-masochistic treatment, so Wei Ying crouched between the husband's legs and started berating at the stubborn, over-responsive shiny wet angry-red penis jutting out proudly from its nest of black curls.

“Bad penis, you're a really bad penis, aren't you?”

Wei Ying pushed down the bulbous cockhead with a finger (with some effort, because Lan Zhan's erection was massive and contained admirable hydraulic pressures), until it looked like an elephant's downward-pointing trunk, then released. The errant organ bounced back up fiercely and nodded, proclaiming that, yes, it was indeed a 'bad penis'.

“You're always hard and up, eager for a taste at any occasion. You can't control your appetite at all! Bad boy!”

The meatstick was slapped several times on the sides along its throbbing length, and Lan Zhan nnnghs. Pre-cum started to ooze and dribble out.

“Naughty penis, you should be punished until you cry!”

The back of Wei Ying's hand started tapping, then spanking the underside of the increasingly excited rod. The spouse deliberately aimed at the special spot right beneath the leaky glans. Lan Zhan aaaahs and let out a very raspy, unmanly noise, and he one-two'd when he couldn't hold back the second rise of volcanic pressures running up from his refilled testicles and maddening pulses radiating from the base of the very earnest and honest arousal.

Wei Ying stared at how a lump of viscous liquid oozed out from the sputtering cockslit, then grew and sagged downward as it slowly inched its way out - a fat, warm glob of unejaculated milky-white seed that managed to escape the heated boiling vats inside the husband's loins. He licked his lips, and was tempted to reach out with a tongue to savour the taste for the husband's seconds.

"You're incorrigible, and you know that," the spouse concluded, although the comment was directed to the penis, and not to the man himself. Wei Ying returned to the picnic table, which was coincidentally and conveniently at waist-level, and lay on the surface on his back. He spread his legs again, raised his hips, and seductively invited the recalcitrant hairy penis for a tasty missionary-style fuck into his cum-drenched, but still loving, grasping, erotic, sweet tight tunnel of love.

Lan Zhan nnngh'd with delight, and shivered with renewed excitement gushing straight into his swollen, ballooning loins.

.

While the couple engaged in very enjoyable but fruitless procreation activities in the hilltop campsite - because there was hardly anything else to do besides to eat, sleep and have sex in the open -, Wei Ying's siblings analyzed the latest updates and customary practices introduced by those two First Fathers.

Wei da ge was the first to grasp the bona fide concept of polygamy - of having multiple husbands besides the venerable Han Guang Jun and his clones, descendents and an array of differential inter- and intra-species qualities. The burly and hairy-chested man already owns harems of hundreds, thousands, countless of Lan Wang Jis milling around in his penthouse on top of the 888-floor Wangxian Headquarters tower in an offshore planet - and was mind-blown to think that adding variety - the spice of life - to his harem could even be considered - once distant, now very probable, reality.

He immediately dispatched multitudes of aerial mini-UFO fleets to raid cities, towns and villages, pillage the succubi nests, to secure and retrieve as many living, dying and dead former Gusu Lan boys and men from their prisons in Tian Mi Mi-esque buildings as possible. Everyone would be given proper treatments and documentation so that they could be legally and comfortably transferred to the da ge 's ownership and inducted to his burgeoning harems. The living would be processed, trained and properly imprinted; the dying would be rejuvenated with healing magic, fed with lots of delicious, nutritious food and given tender loving care with hot baths; the unrecognizable skin-and-bone husks would be pumped back to life with gas cylinders full of bottled qi with added life energies, supplementary biological forces and other colourings, flavourings and preservatives (the bottles are mail-ordered from the Heavens, where Immortals are aplenty and their qi is freely supplied through non-governmental organisations, like running charity blood donation campaigns in modern terms). Later, he'd discover that he had also inadvertently collected female Lan members which he wasn't too interested in (because it was challenging to distinguish male and female corpses, when every patch of skin was wrinkly, dried up and mutilated to some extent) - but that was fine, because every living specimen is another statistic to be added to his very own personal sub-Kingdom of sorts.

Wei san ge , though bright and brilliant and fast, was second in line but ran up to a predominantly empty plate on the dining table, because the eldest had swiped away all tasty Lan males. However, he wasn't disheartened because he knew how to hack into the password-protected family cloud drive folders - he snooped around leisurely, undetected (because he is just that awesome when it comes to exploiting securities issues in computer systems) until he found the files he wanted, then downloaded them into his personal universe. He left some worms, viruses and ransomware in case others of his kin decided to break their family rules and steal the same data (the Wei siblings are an elite class and considered privileged in the Kingdom's multicolour, multiracial and multi-layered society). Later, he would take his time to un-digitize the Gusu prior to its destruction, pick out tasty-looking Lan boys and recreate them in his dark, dingy master server room of sorts, and ravish the newborn innocent teenage males to his heart's, and cock's, content behind dimly lit PC monitors and neon-lit gaming chairs.

Wei er ge , not as smart or clever as the rest, couldn't figure out what to do, but he knew he had to work harder than anyone else to do something and achieve it, whatever that 'it' may be. He'd experienced the art of running universes, companies and businesses, led strategic discussions and sent armies into war to conquer new galaxies, planets and lands, so he thought he could give science a try this time. He set up a huge underground laboratory from scratch (there were no instructions that came with the box), extracted samples from the da ge 's expanded harem with the owner's permission, begged the san ge for a copy of the downloaded data in exchange for a delicious seafood dinner and authentic Yunmeng-style grilled fish - but he couldn't really decipher nor understand what needed be done, or what he really wanted to do - so, he ended up cooking cauldrons of genetic liquids from Jiang and Lan breeds including his own blood, filing up test tubes of synthetic embryos and sperm cells, running sticky and weird smelly chemical-y substances through pyrex glassware - and ended up with a dystopian birthing chamber lined with plastic-like pods, each with a growing fetus, or baby, or child, or even an adult floating in artificial bubbling amniotic fluid surrounded by nasty-looking robots, tubes, biomechanical arms and evil blinking green and red lights. The er ge did not realize that he had created a whole new generation of Lan-Wei-Jiang cyborg hybrid males and females with his experiments; he simply wanted to follow his maternal instincts and have more children to nurture and raise in his own humble downtown apartment suite.

Wei didi wailed when he realized that everyone else had done something, except him. The da ge was most concerned among the three elder siblings for the youngest's predicament; he'd always had a soft spot for the nine-year old child, after all. He kissed tears away from the boy's cheeks, and told him that Wei didi is always the most special, because he owned Lan Wang Ji's original body, after all - the personal handsome, strong adult butler-cum-lover with a budding soul that accompanied the boy all day. He promised the boy that he could always come over to the Headquarters and play with the huge harem, and take some back like taking toys from the toy store if the latter found some individuals to his liking, and return them when he's done, like a children's library. The boy didn't really understand what the deal meant, but it sounded good with the (twisted) analogies to a toy store and library - which he likes -, plus, he'd have more reasons to visit his da ge and have more friends or lovers to cuddle up with. Mastermind Wei da ge happily shortchanged the boy with empty but sweet promises, and got to keep his harem intact.

(Of course, nobody realized that Wei didi did the same to the other siblings, and acted like the lovable boy who cried pitifully because he missed the last bowl of lotus root pork rib soup served on the table; soon, everyone's resolve melted for the bawling babe of the family, and they gave unlimited access to the nine-year old to waltz into their homes and borrow stuff that he liked. Wei didi secretly cloned and made plenty of copies of the da ge 's amazing harem and everything inside his towering fortress, the Headquarters; the san ge 's incredible collection of digitized databases of the Kingdom and its assets, the multiverses both friends' and foes', the whole Realms of the Gods, the Mortal Realm, the Middle Kingdom, Yunmeng Jiang and Gusu Lans; and the er ge 's unbelievable first-in-class robo-hybrids and other treasures he'd collected during his short lifespan thus far. The nine-year old boy then stored them into hidden compartments inside vast, highly-secured storage spaces within factories and warehouses built under his name, and became the richest of the four siblings after that scam.)

.

The couple, who had tired themselves from relentless chasing and lovemaking, decided to go skinny-dipping inside a bubbling hot springs pool adjacent to the campsite. Their conversations meandered from how to reorganize their Kingdom to stir things up (and reignite certain conflicts to cause growth spurts of cultural advancement, bring new innovations and encourage improvements for their then-51st century modern living), to how many babies to make when they retire from their worldly adventures (Wei Ying wanted to form a football team and create the best cultivation squadron on flying swords ever; Lan Zhan vaguely 'Mn's and preferred to leave things to Mother Nature, though he did not explicitly mention that he was actually more interested in the process of baby-making rather than watching the spouse pop out resulting miniature versions of themselves). Eventually, they debated about the merits and disadvantages of an incubus versus a succubus over a plate of toasted mixed nuts and a pot of ice-blended pu'er tea, when Wei Ying chanced upon an interesting twist.

“Lan Zhan,” the younger man started, and nibbled on a guazi , “since I have an incubus' curse in my blood, which makes me partial to, and automatically qualifies me as an ideal demon-kin, what do you think will happen if I find a decent succubus and mate with one?”

The husband bit into a roasted pistachio nut, but it wasn't a fresh one, so his expression soured. “I will send three strikes of lightning to make sure that will never happen,” he said with scorn in his voice, and went to pour himself a cup of refreshingly chilled tea.

“Ah... humour me this time? The airlift rescue operation is taking forever and I don't know what else to do other than to talk about everything under the sun,” Wei Ying whined and dog paddle-kicked the rippling waters, then flung the guazi shells at the husband - they hit the tip of his nose; bullseye!

Lan Zhan rubbed his grazed nose and sighed, “Based on the library archives in Heaven, an incubus is born to consume the life force of a woman, while the succubus for a man, although gender specifics are arguably rarely a hindrance in certain circumstances such as yourself. Theoretically, the amalgamation of both related species brings forth a formidable terror in nature - a perfect combination of yin and yang in the demonic world, phenomenally powerful and solely designed vacuum up all qi and any other form of energies in the universe, unrivalled by any other species known to Gods and Men. In short, you'd create a monster to suck everything up that exists.”

Wei Ying blinked twice, then scratched his mop of wet hair on the scalp, “Eh...? I don't really understand what you've just said. So it's like giving birth to a baby with genitals made of black holes, you know, the type that eats galaxies for breakfast?”

The husband shrugged, because even he could not fathom what that might look like, “Let’s just say that you’ll be giving birth to the biggest sucker in the universe.”

Curious, and a forefinger on the lips, chin tilted up; Wei Ying looked absolutely absorbed in crunching the numbers and to explore, at least within the confines of his mind, the possibilities of making one, “Mmm. I could live with that. The Tians are inferior succubi compared to what our Kingdom could manufacture from the bio-reactors. Maybe I’ll ask Ernie what his master and beast-kin can do. I’d love to be the biggest sucker in the universe with my dick, someday!” and gave his million dollar grin.

Lan Zhan rolled his eyes and went to pick up the biggest groundnut from the plate. He wondered if he had just wasted five minutes of his life talking about an inconsequential topic - however, any time spent with lovely Wei Ying should always be cherished, after all.

(Far, far on the other side of the campsite and hidden behind a rock, Ernie secretly stole Wei didi ’s prized collection using his master access in ErNet, his namesake by the way, and added fornicating incubi and succubi for his personal amusement and experimentation. Ni-er continued to snore and blow saliva bubbles with her toothless gums.)

Just then, the couple was jolted from their reveries when they heard a shout. The bushes around the pool rattled and burst into a kaleidoscope of leaves, twigs and bits of earth.

“Han Guang Jun! Han Guang Jun! Wei gongzi ! Thank goodness you’re here! What’s happening? I woke up swaddled in my robes and saw our xiongdi being levitated in a pillar of light into this giant metal monster flying above us! This... this big thing on top of our heads, don’t you see it?! It’s so big, I can’t even see the sun anymore! What is it? What’s going on with our comrades? Why didn’t they respond when I tried to pull them away and shake their bodies? Why is the campsite empty? Where’s everyone?... Why do the two of you look so calm in the bathwaters? Wuuuu... wuuuu... Han Guang Jun... please...”

Jing Yi appeared on scene and promptly became overloaded with time and reality-inappropriate information. He broke down and started crying, panic and fear evident on his trembling body, he didn’t know where to look, what to say with stuttering lips, what to point his fingers to, where to run with his shaky legs, and he collapsed into a ball of confused sobs and pitiful weeping.

Belatedly, Wei Ying remembered that Jing Yi wasn’t involved in the mass orgy which was the prerequisite to send all disciples into a satisfied, relaxed hibernation sleep (just as how the entire remaining population of Jiang disciples had a wonderful time getting deflowered with the butt in the wall, before they were spirited away). He slapped his forehead, winced and made an “ ai yo! ” sound.

The stricken husband dropped the groundnut into the bubbling pool waters.

Notes for the Chapter:

Things seem to quieten down a little and there's a long holiday weekend coming up. Maybe I'll write more, or maybe I'll take a short rest :-)

This chapter felt more like an interlude or an ad spot during a movie run. Let's hope more substantial events happen next...!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

P.s.: Added a few more yummy descriptions!

Chapter 110

(A small detour before getting back on the main track...)

Besides the plate of toasted nuts and the pot of chilled pu'er tea, Lan Zhan also prepared a bowl of tangerines. He spent time inside the bubbling thermal springs shaped like a shallow pan with a depth of a little more than a feet, lounging against the poolside, resting his aching hips from too much workout and his throbbing balls from being pleasantly drained too many times (he also loved the sensation of a jet of lukewarm water aimed between the testicles from beneath his seat).

“Lao gong , lao gong , kiss me please? We haven’t had a wet smooch for a while,” the spouse asked with a grin full of half-chewed peanuts, and he didn’t look terribly appealing, especially when some chunks fell off the mouth and into the water, to be carried away by turbulent outflowing swirls downstream.

“Nnnh. I’m busy peeling roasted guazi for you, and my lips are a bit salty,” the husband replied. True enough, he diligently selected a number of guazi , then one by one he cracked them open with his perfect set of teeth, and gently picked the fragrant seed out of the shell and dropped them onto one corner of the plate - so that Wei Ying could easily grab a handful to pop them into his mouth for a tasty snack.

Wei Ying was undaunted by the reasonable refusal. But he swiped away the peeled guazi from the plate and ate them all, anyway. Mmm, delish.

“ Lao gong , lao gong , touch me please? My wee-wee wants to be played by your manly fingers,” the spouse asked next, half chewing, half talking. The husband may have orgasmed twenty times over the course of two hours, but the spouse’s share measured only a fraction of that.

Lan Zhan stole a glance and noted a half-erect ‘Wei Ying’s son’ sticking out between the legs, but he paid no further attention, because he had hit rock bottom in terms of desires and lusts. If one could read qi level readings and decipher the language of metaphysical corporeal aura, one would understand that Lan Zhan’s body had soared into the heavens long ago from extreme bodily pleasures, and he had achieved multiple nirvanas and Buddahoods; earthly sensations no longer mean anything to the godly man whose loins had been vacuumed into nothingness.

“Nnnh. I’m busy peeling the pith off the tangerines for you, and my fingers are a bit oily, even bitter,” the husband replied calmly. With a keen sense of undying love and care for the spouse who preferred swallowing hearty bites of sweet juicy tangerine segments rather than spitting the stringy bitter or tart parts into the pool, the husband worked hard to prepare the perfect treat for his beloved. Soon, at least three mini tangerines have been perfectly peeled and separated, and the cleaned segments were arranged meticulously into an orange-coloured radial bouquet on the plate, with layers of segments alternating in clockwise and anti-clockwise directions.

Wei Ying got a bit upset the second time, and felt that the husband deliberately dodged his requests for hot lovin’. Still, the plate looked too lovely to be ignored, so he swiped a handful of segments and popped them into his busy mouth, thus ruining the bouquet in the process; which was fine, because Lan Zhan was already working on another tangerine to rebuild the plate for his beloved.

“Ah, lao gong , your mouth and hands are busy, and being seated next to each other like this, while chatting and eating, is a little too boring,” the spouse complained. He noticed that beneath the rippling waters, his hairy legs nuzzled the husband’s smoother limbs out of bad habit. His face broke into an impish grin.

Wei Ying scooted lower into the water, and straddled Lan Zhan’s thigh.

“Ooh, ooh, lao gong , your thighs are so smooth and firm, they’re full of muscles!” he praised and then made sure the other felt the unmistakable sensations of ballsacks rubbing against the skin on those thick thighs, “Aah, aah, your thighs, knees, your legs, they’re so sexy! I think I can get pregnant by rubbing them like this,” and started humping deliriously against the solid hard meat - Lan Zhan’s legs twitched in response, “Lao gong , lao gong , please make babies inside me that have strong muscular legs like yours? Imagine our babies growing inside my womb, twins, even triplets, kicking feistily each time daddy shakes their cradle, because daddy is such a strong, virile man and makes sweet hard love to mommy every day and night!”

Lan Zhan’s achievement of multiple nirvanas and Buddhahood began to crack. He tore one particularly long ropey pith too hard, and the tangerine segment oozed out its sweet, slightly tart juice.

Wei Ying slid down lower and lower along Lan Zhan’s leg, humping and making terribly sexy noises mixed with a generous drizzle of dirty talk. When he finally reached the feet, Lan Zhan sported a raging hard-on, but Wei Ying pretended to take no notice. He caressed the shins, kneaded the tough tendons and ligaments from knee to ankles, massaged the meaty soles especially that sweet passage from the ball of foot through the nnnghinducing arch to the heels, pressed circles and stars on every delectable and tender spot on the pads of the toes and between them; the husband was helpless to nnnnh loudly at the wonderful de-stressing feelings radiating from his lower limbs, that one tangerine segment was accidentally squashed and dropped to the poolside. The husband relaxed and sunk a little lower into the shallow waters, his tilted-up neck barely clinging onto the poolside and keeping his face above the surface of the pool so that he doesn't drown, the tangerines blissfully forgotten.

Wei Ying gave Lan Zhan a fantastic foot massage. The pains and complains from barefooted chasing after the spouse earlier through rugged terrain, from rutting energetically in awkward, sometimes precarious sex positions, and the strains from keeping his body weight off the younger man lest poor Wei Ying is flattened like a pancake from getting too many hard hip-slamming fucks - all melted away from the wonderful podiatric treatment blended with classic Middle Kingdom reflexology. The guazi and tangerines were certainly worth it, when Wei Ying happily cleaned the plate while Lan Zhan ascended to a different form of heaven - one for the legs, wiggly toes, and plenty of moan-y mmmms, in particular.

Lan Zhan thought he couldn't feel his lower regions anymore since his feet had happily gone rogue and the jolly nerves had numbed to cloud nines; so he was caught off-guard when his big toe felt terribly slick and warm all of the sudden - Wei Ying had naughtily spread his own legs and maneuvered one ensnared and float-y foot to his buttocks.

“Ooh, ooh, lao gong , you're a terrible husband, why are you using this to deflower your wife's virginity? You sadist! Pervert!” the obnoxious man whined playfully, then choked, before breaking out into giggles, “Aah, aah, your toe is fucking my rosebud! I will definitely get pregnant if you keep boning my pussy with your dirty digit!” and started shaking his hips, pushing deeper until Lan Zhan's big toe was swallowed into his butthole, “

Lao gong , lao gong , take it out, take it out! The babies will not only have muscular legs, they'll also grow big hairy toes! Ah, it's raping my ovaries now, how many more babies do you want to bake in the oven today?"

Wei Ying degenerated into suffocated hiccupy guffaws and coughs, when water got into his mouth and nostrils because he leaned too deeply into the pool - and promptly peed and farted when he lost control of his inner muscles (unfortunately, Lan Zhan is a superman of sorts, equipped with thermal infrared imaging and x-ray vision; so he could see a cloud of red-hot warmth spouting from the spouse's dick in the water, and pinpoint how many big bubbles escaped from the younger man's stretched anus - and incidentally, he felt feather-light sensations of warmer waters foaming around his captured foot. The husband sighed at the ludicrous scene, tagged it as yet another proof of Wei Ying-ness, and added 'toe-sex' to his vocabulary for posterity - he makes a note to always keep his nails trimmed and filed too).

"Wei Ying, come here," the husband finally relented. The spouse pulled out his hairy toe with a pop, danced a small victory jig inside the pool, then launched himself with a splash into the other's welcoming arms. However, the spouse had other plans in mind; having been rejected twice, he doesn't forgive and forget as easily. Wei Ying straddled the husband's hips, then snaked his hands to the older man's sides and made a grab for the love-handles that captivated his unhealthy obsession for too long - the grip wasn't as ample as he'd like (yet), but there was enough for a nice feel of a visible, budding tyre of fat around the husband's dad bod waist.

Wei Ying tugged Lan Zhan towards him and ended up knocking jiggly tummies together, with their now-hard cocks sandwiched in between. The husband nnngh'd at the sudden squeeze on his stubborn, lively penis that refused to go to sleep despite having tired itself during the past few hours.

Wei Ying performed some up-and-down humping motion against Lan Zhan's belly - and their trapped cocks -, while mewling, "Ooh, ooh, lao gong , you've got too much belly fat, and I can't seem to ride you properly this time! I don't even see your six-packs anymore!" he teased the body-conscious husband, then rubbed their stomachs vigorously until the water around them vibrated and splattered violently outward, "Aah, aah, your flabby blubber is so eager, it's squirming inside the water! It's alive, trying to get inside me... will it seep in through my belly button? Oh no, what if your tummy fat reaches my ovaries and womb through the navel?" and started humping feverishly until the husband howled an ugly haahhngghhhhuunnngghh sound because he one-two'd excitedly into the heated friction against the spouse's fertile abdomen, "Lao gong , lao gong , your fatty belly is a sick, perverted swine! It wants to mate my womb and make lots of fat and healthy babies inside! What do you think, lao gong ? Ah, ah, what if your belly fat grows chubby cocks and they swarm around my helpless eggs and rape them, filling them with grossly fat sperms! My eggs will be covered with greasy sperm! Our babies will be born as pink round cherubs! Is that what you want? Come, come, dear husband, come and make babies inside my tight ass-pussy, I feel good getting impregnated by your naughty oily seed..."

Lan Zhan frowned and his patience wore thin - another one-two twitch erupted, spouting a sticky droplet of blank ejaculate that was quickly washed away into the pool. He let out a warning growl and pushed Wei Ying into the water, then flipped the smaller man so that his raised ass angled perfectly with his revived arousal. He blamed the toasted nuts and tangerines for his troubles, as illogical as it sounded.

Wei Ying simply laughed, in a pool of rippling waters set against a backdrop of a huge metallic UFO that swallowed most of the beautiful mid-morning skies.

.

(Back to the story...)

The pivotal moment for the last conscious and functional Gusu Lan disciple is an existential crisis not only for the boy (let's call him 'boy' for now), but also for the entire sect itself; simply because the boy had been designated as the leader of the remaining population and therefore, will drive the new narrative of the subsequent chapters of the sect's destiny moving forward - and both Wei Wuxian and Lan Wang Ji, former sect members who understood better than any other about how every tiny, seemingly miniscule, action and reaction could push the a fragile, near-extinct sect to a new beginning, or turn around then crash and burn into oblivion.

It was regrettable that Jing Yi saw what any mortal shouldn't have, at the most inopportune timing, that is, before his moment has arrived. The couple had planned to ship the remaining Gusu Lan to Yiling, then gently awaken the boys, then slowly - very, very carefully and with utmost care and deliberation -, introduce them to their new reality. They would start out as refugees, be given ample resources to form a tribe of sorts, then mingle with the rest of the Kingdom until the point where they could be considered as fully-fledged citizens; having a strong, charismatic and compassionate leader was paramount to keep everyone in line and united, in order for them to plant their footprints to where they belong in their new world, and write their own history from henceforth.

The Yunmeng Jiangs are well on their way to recovery, with the angry sourgrape who, surprisingly, accepted his and his people's new fate, and adapted well under his tyrannical rule - which was actually a godsend, given that his people were mostly insecure, rebellious, ignorant, incompetent and emotional pimple-faced teenagers undergoing their most tumultuous years of growth. The Gusu Lans are an entirely different in composition - the survivors are mostly older, more mature individuals who do not need to be spoon-fed, rather, they need someone that they can bond to, agree with, count on to receive help and support from, and place their trust upon, and Lan Jing Yi seemed to be the perfect candidate for that. The decision had been made by the only other former Gusu Lan senior who knew inside out of what the Lan sect requires for a grand new relaunch, and it wouldn't be too difficult to say that Jing Yi's not-yet-announced leadership position, though precarious at this point, must be preserved at all costs.

The couple's plans now in shambles, Lan Zhan rose from his spot where he'd soaked in the cosy springwaters and raised a hand, intent to chop the boy's neck one more time to send him into a coma.

"No!" Wei Ying hissed and stood up to block the murderous glare and aura emitting from the husband. He pinched the back of Lan Zhan's free hand to get his point across - and it worked; Lan Zhan nnngh'd from the pain (not to forget, pleasure too), and backed off, his hand entwined with the spouse's because Wei Ying was afraid the husband would do something else crazier.

Jing Yi, blood drained from his face and about to lose his marbles, was overwhelmed and started grabbing blindly at his hair, sobbing and weeping, shivering in wild fear and confusion, then stared upwards at the huge UFO above them and yelped and screamed like a petrified, terror-stricken person about to be buried by a falling meteor or other disasters of unimaginable proportions. The behaviour was unbecoming for a future leader, and something ought to be done before the damage was made irreversible.

“J-Jing Yi, I can explain... there’s nothing to be afraid of,” Wei Ying tried to pacify the boy with one hand reaching out for the latter’s shoulder, despite his naked and drenched state. Jing Yi flinched away, bloodshot eyes as wild as a cornered animal.

“WHAT DO YOU MEAN THERE’S NOTHING TO BE AFRAID OF???

WHAT’S THIS MONSTER FLYING ABOVE US???

IT’S GOING TO LAND AND EAT US, RIGHT???

JUST LIKE HOW IT’S SUCKING OUR COMRADES ONE BY ONE!!!

IT’S A GIANT SUCCUBUS!!!

HAN GUANG JUN, OH GOD WHY AREN’T YOU SCARED???

THIS IS A NIGHTMARE, RIGHT???

WHAT’S WRONG WITH YOU PEOPLE???

WHAT’S WRONG WITH ME???”

Wei Ying winced at the capslocked ugly screams, and attributed Jing Yi’s outburst to the ‘storybook effect’; a character written according to the rules of the space-time bubble could be stretched and bent but within certain limits, as long as his core story, and the story of his environment remains familiar and fine; however, once those limits were broken, such as the case of a 2000 B.C. boy meeting a UFO and 41st-century technology for the first time, and having all his beloved-bonded-fate threaded friends taken away before his eyes - would break the soul of the character who becomes torn-off from the pages of his storybook, and ends up permanently damaged (or glitched, in root programming terms).

Wei Ying flung himself forward and embraced the boy nevertheless, in the most brotherly or motherly manner, and tried to ignore the fact that he was in the nude and that he was not interested in that boy that way. Jing Yi reciprocated the hug a few moments later - because that act was one of basic human instincts - and crumbled into a pile of sobs and wails.

The man flipped open (more like, summoned) his holo-phone and sent a prescription to remedy the dire situation, signed by Doctor Wei. He shoo'd the husband out of the water - he didn't need a man who could only think of chopping people's necks in times of crisis - and telepathically ordered him to put on some decent clothing and get rid of the source of Jing Yi's distress.

Lan Zhan sighed at being treated like a pariah, when in fact, Wei Ying passionately called out his name repeatedly just a short while ago while making tons of love inside that pool. He walked back to the campsite with nothing on but water rivulets dripping off his body (with a generous-looking graspable midriff framed by a tight well-trained, well-exercised body) after the interrupted bath, then hopped into their mobile home tied to Big Apple to search for his much-neglected white bathrobe, buried underneath layers of perfectly folded white Qishan Lan robes that looked the same as one another (his wardrobe consists mainly of one kind of attire, after all).

With no time to lose, he strode to the centre of the formation of sleeping Lan disciples, then pulled out a straw broom from the folds of his bathrobe. He waved at the UFO to signal it to hurry up the evacuation operation. Heaven's officers on the deck spotted their scantily-clothed Emperor and understood the urgency; immediately, they instructed the ship's crew to open a hundred panels at the transport's underside in neat ten-by-ten rows, resulting in pillars of light that beamed out from each. Instead of the slow levitation procedure, a rope dropped from each glowing hole, and a Heaven cultivator-soldier appeared to slide down with a large hunting net in hand. Like an efficient military operation, each white-garbed soldier with angel wings on the back and a halo on his head quickly bagged up every sleeping disciple like a caught wild boars during a day-hunt, and soon, the soldiers climbed up their respective ropes and disappeared into the UFO with their catch.

With a thunderous fwip !, the UFO dematerialized into a different dimension; the hyperspace jump also launched blazing trails of colourful flares into the blue skies that once again reigned the hilltop campsite. The flares shot up and exploded into brilliant sparkles that glitter with such dazzling incandescence, that the Kingdom of Qishan Lan declared a free-for-all status for Gusu - with the survivors secured, citizens may start their raid parties and have all-out fun with the land until the next Reboot.

.

Wei Ying held Jing Yi tightly with the latter's back facing the heart-wrenching scene of mass emigration of the remaining living Gusu Lans. The dazed boy gripped his upper arms so strongly that fingernails dug into the skin, as though the loss of any physical contact may result in him being inhaled into the humongous metallic disc-shaped monster's mouth; his body shook with such strain that veins stuck out on his neck and on other parts of the skin, while his wails and sobs continued unabated. Wei Ying reached behind and rubbed soothing circles, then gently patted the back of the head, when he realized that the front part of the boy's pants had a damp patch.

Wetting one's pants was unsurprising for someone still so young and inexperienced in the cruel ways of the world, hence Wei Ying took the liberty to gently lead the boy into the pool, where he hoped the warm waters would calm his disoriented, deviated soul and lower stress levels. His plan worked, to some extent, and when the husband returned with a raised eyebrow - because both the spouse and the boy were naked in the pool and had their hands pawing all over each other (not really, but the kinky husband imagined the possibility of adultery); Wei Ying simply lifted a forefinger to his lips and gestured a 'shhh' to allow Jing Yi some time for himself.

It's not what you think! He wetted his pants and I thought the waters might calm him down and rinse him off... ahh, don't tell me you're thinking of me doing him?! How shameless can you be!, the spouse shot an accusing look at the husband while sending dagger emojis to the latter's WeiChat account via ErNet. The husband did not respond immediately because morally-depraved curiosity got the better of him; he stared down and angled his head, tried to squint through the reflection in the waters and figure out if some man-on-man action was happening beneath the bubbling surface. Wei Ying groaned but pursed his lips because he didn't want to trigger another panic attack in the boy whose breaths were so close, too close to his ears, their naked chests stuck to each other until he could feel Jing Yi's racing heartbeat, their limbs entwined like lovers usually do.

Lan Zhan, I swear I'll spam your nightmares with plenty of revenge porn after this! Stop staring and for goodness sake, please do something useful, like wash Jing Yi's clothes over there! the younger man seethed wordlessly and bared his canines for the husband to see. The husband obliged and picked up the discarded clothes - and noted the wet pungent yellow patch. As the older man squatted by the poolside and started to scrub and wash the garments, he kept his interested gaze at the two, admiring how both men with an age gap of less than three years held each other in the lotus sex position; he never said a word, although the spouse continued to spew unspoken angry cusses back, because fuming Wei Ying knew that the sly

Lan Zhan was secretly having fun ogling and fantasizing about being cuckolded by a Lan boy half his age.

.

Jing Yi is a brilliant boy, though he lacks the blind optimism that is Wei Ying's signature, and instead, his positive outlook is somewhat tempered with realistic caution - in this case, his world comes crashing down when he realizes that what he knew, isn't, and what he doesn't know, is. It took nearly an hour for him to digest some top-level revelations about his homeland, or the world itself - while his hundred strong comrades were blissfully spirited away to a new land -, and his mind valiantly tried to reorientate itself in this topsy-turvy reality where Gusu is long gone, and the Lans are in actual fact, technically, considered as an extinct sect, especially when viewed from outside through its deceiving glass-like bubble.

He was given Lan Zhan's bathrobes because the couple believed that its soul-healing powers could ease the boy's pain (and also because their clothes were hung out to dry at the campsite), and relieve the fatigue that sets in when adrenaline and panic stops pumping. It became a rather unreal scene, when Jing Yi sat by the poolside with the robes draped over his wet body, his legs still kicking in the water like a child who didn't want to swim, and two naked adult men held him close, side by side. A floating holo-phone, a Weiphone and a Weipad hovered in front of him, projecting rather grainy pictures and videos that showed three times the amount of live-feed from various locations around the province, footage taken from battle scenes at the Kingdom's frontlines against the Tians (propaganda-like heroic clips of the Wei siblings holding swords, guns and banners, stamped with bold impactful victory slogans, were inserted as well, insinuating that the war is won before any official tally of body counts), and documentaries about who or what the Tians are, where they come from, and surrounding conspiracy theories on how they are linked to the Imperial Court - topped with a cheesy, creepy ending where the shadowy, faceless mastermind Tian dalaoye emerges and lurks behind a strange, stop-motion puppet show of females with horns and wings slaughtering masses of male peasants, while Jaws-like music played in the background.

Unlike Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling who underwent multiple rounds of meltdowns before accepting their new reality (that continued even after arriving at Yiling's immigration centre), Jing Yi was surprisingly calmer after his initial outburst; probably due to the fascination with the 51st-century gadgets that hooked his attention, and the colourful, exciting presentations that painted a rosier picture than expected.

"I've told you, and showed you, the gist of what has been happening in Gusu, and the world outside, but I don't expect you to take everything in one go," Wei Ying cautiously explained and peeled a freshly toasted pistachio nut, before offering it to Jing Yi's busy mouth; like feeding a baby chick still in its nest, "It would've been better if you'd come to terms with the new reality through reading brochures, watching slideshows, go on 3d-virtual tours and binge on introductory movies of the Kingdom of Qishan Lan, while on the flight in that airship - the one you called the 'flying disc-shaped metallic monster' - to your new home. So take it as a crash course of sorts, and don't worry because you'll be getting more history lessons about your new home in due time!"

"Mn. Matriarch Lan is correct," Lan Zhan continued, "Now you're in a better position to understand the circumstances that lead to the present, and you can already see the light at the end of the tunnel," and he offered a tangerine segment to the boy.

Jing Yi didn't think twice to 'ahh' his mouth because he's come to trust the great and wonderful Han Guang Jun as a fatherly figure, "Enn. Han-- er... Grand Patriarch," he obediently called out the older man's formal designation, "I think I can wrap my head around the entire thing after a good night's sleep, and as you said, it's not as bad as I initially thought." He turned around to stare at the blue skies in the horizon, forlornly, "I already miss my xiongdì s, but I should look forward to the day when I will see them again in our new home, though I'm a little... skeptical and anxious... of being appointed as their leader."

The war raged on in Gusu, smoke columns drew closer with each passing hour as the Kingdom made inroads into the province. Jing Yi saw everything with better clarity when he wasn't sobbing like a babe. Now that basic understanding of modern technology and god-tiered magics have been revealed, he could see through the veils that the Imperial forces and their Tian accomplices have used to cloak people's awareness and knowledge. He didn't even jump when fighter jet planes roared across the skies, then launched missiles at a swarm of succubi in mid-flight while dropping bombs at one particularly nasty, burning town-turned-nest; or when a twenty-foot golem appeared in a faraway valley and was taken down by impressive organized squadrons of cultivators with ultra-modern cannons on flying swords and white robes patterned with black-and-white bunnies; or when more smaller disc and aerodynamically shaped rescue airships whizzed by while tightening their dragnets to secure and retrieve as many Gusu Tian prisoners as possible.

Wei Ying, fondly known as Matriarch Lan, sighed and lay on the grassy poolside, his legs kicking in the water just like Jing Yi - probably mimicking each other's behaviours help to bring the two together. "Don't worry, junior disciple, you'll do well as a leader - have more faith in yourself, boy! Once you're in Yiling, life will be so much easier and livelier; Jin gongzi has sent word that he wants to take time off his studies for citizenship examinations and meet you. He's thrilled that he can show you and the other Lan disciples around, especially since his fearsome jiu jiu has been promoted as senior branch manager for nearly all businesses operating in Yiling.”

Jing Yi, who could be nicknamed as ‘the junior disciple’, sighed and it was his turn to lay on the ground and gaze at the blue skies while the sun hid behind some clouds - it was quite a nice, sunny and beautiful mid-morning, now that feelings of fear, dread and hopelessness have all but dissipated like gossamer in the wind. “Enn, Matriarch. I haven’t been to Yunmeng since summer, so I’ve missed Jin gongzi for nearly half a year now. It’d be nice to go shopping with him during the day, touring the city and visiting fun fairs, and participate in night-hunts at dusk,” he said while churning the pool waters with his paddling legs, referring to some of the leisurely activities that the Kingdom’s youths typically enjoy in Yiling.

Lan Zhan didn’t want to feel left out, so he followed the other two and lay on the grass stiffly with his hands on his stomach, ala coffin-style. “Jing Yi, the next regular airship to Yiling will arrive in a few days’ time, is there anything you’d like to do before leaving Gusu? Once we leave, the whole land will be erased and reborn,” he reminded.

“Err... I still want to find Si Zhui. I did plan to slowly make my way back to Caiyi after fleeing to the south earlier, before Patriarch and Matriarch found me. I want to see him again and have tea with him, if... if that’s still possible,” Jing Yi stammered a little at the end, suddenly choked with unfamiliar feelings bubbling from his chest.

Surprisingly, both adult men held Jing Yi’s hands, one for each side. Jing Yi felt warm, whether from embarrassment or from the admission of something he has towards his best friend.

“ Lao gong , what do you think? What do your godly powers say about the fate of A-Yuan and where does his future lie?”

A thoughtful pause.

“Mn. There’s always space for one more in our new home in Yiling.”

Jing Yi shed a tear, and he hoped neither men noticed.

(Later, Jing Yi - who felt absolutely comfortable in the company of naked men because nudity is natural among Gusu Lans - only had to turn to the side and marvel at the incredible tufts of curls on the Matriarch’s hairy naked body, especially near the chest and groin area. Of course his mouth slipped when he said something about the amount of body hair as compared to a typical Gusu Lan man - the Patriarch snickered inwardly and started searching WeiTube clips of ‘Brazilian Wax’.

The Matriarch retorted by deflecting the discussion towards body fat, and sent suggestive looks towards the Patriarch’s slight paunch in broad daylight. The junior disciple looked to the left, then right, then left again, and remarked that both men looked fatter than he remembered, from the last time he saw them nearly three years ago.

The Patriarch hnn’d impassively, and explained curtly that they’ve lived a peaceful, contented lifestyle with plenty of good food during the last few years - another plus point for aspiring candidates for the Kingdom's citizenship; then suddenly, he scrunched his face in a sudden anxiety attack, then asked Jing Yi in all seriousness - even bowed his head a little - the all-important question of whether his hairline is receding.

Jing Yi was confused but he tried to peer at the older man's forehead and scalp to see if there were any signs of male pattern baldness. He finally concluded that he couldn't see anything out of the ordinary, and that Patriarch looked as handsome as he had been, including the added love handles around the waist.

Lan Zhan sighed in relief. Wei Ying could only bite his lower lip and curse himself for another lost trump card.)

.

Lying by the pool could be one of life's most relaxing moments, so it wasn't a surprise that Lan Zhan dozed off soon after. He found himself in a strange, but familiar alternate world in his slumber.

One of the Gusu Lan master's nicer memories of living in his mansion with his family of four - surrounded by fruit orchards and vegetable gardens as fertile as the two boys who run around naked all day, and the hairy, ugly demonic wife that needed extra spankings on the buttocks to keep him in place in the household's hierarchy -, is a memory of rewarding his lovely A-Xian with presents from obscure, peculiar toy shops of the Far, Far West.

“A-Xian, A-Ji, when you’re done, come downstairs and see what we received in the post. It’s a surprise from your favourite toy store,” the man called out while arranging plates of cupcakes and chocolate chip cookies freshly baked from the oven onto the dining table, served with dainty-looking cups of fragrant milk tea. He knew that the boys were cuddling on the bed, and sometimes they’d forget about the time, such as important afternoon tea rituals.

Upstairs, A-Xian squealed when he heard the words ‘toy store’. After giving A-Ji an apologetic smooch, he pulled out with a wet plop. A-Ji whined at the loss of heat and friction, because he enjoyed their heavy petting sessions which consist of sweet kisses that involved plenty of tongue-action and tongue-massages, slow-burn caresses and groping until every inch of skin was nicely rubbed in affectionate circles and stars, dick fencing and frotting until both of their wee-wees leaked clear droplets at the tips, and just seconds ago, he managed to stick his child-excited penis into the ‘wife’s’ super-tight virginal rosebud (ah, the magic of youth and elasticity!). Barely twenty thrusts into the sweet tight baby hole where his baby cock truly belonged, A-Xian was called out by their daddy.

“I’m going to check what daddy brought this time, A-Ji. You better come down quickly after cleaning up, because I smell delicious butter cupcakes and homemade Oreo cookies waiting for us!” the spirited boy with unruly hair cheerfully crowed; it’s a family tradition that the Lan side is responsible for all manners of cleaning, including aftercare. He hopped off the bed, leaving poor A-Ji with a throbbing lonesome angry-red wee-wee that didn’t manage to tingle yet, despite how badly it really wanted to.

As soon as A-Xian bounded for the stairways, the bed creaked and rumbled. Dark, viscous and toxic-looking black wisps rose from beneath the covers, like the infamous Monster Under The Bed that A-Ji had heard from scary fairy tales for naughty kids. A pair of hairy muscular arms crawled up to the sides of the furniture and into the increasingly apprehensive boy's view.

“Hello, my sweet, sweet A-Ji. Mommy has been waiting under the bed for the chance to see you in person. We should have a heart to heart talk once in a while, don't you think so? Let's have a chat before afternoon tea, boy. I hope you don't mind,” Uncle Wei's raspy voice sent blood draining from the terrified boy's face. Suddenly, the bedroom door shut, and the curtains drew together on their own. The rapist uncle shoved away a lock of sweaty, messy hair and brushed off dust and grime from his shoulders; he probably hadn't had a bath for a few days under the bed, and he smelled of bitter alcohol, strange drugs and pungent body odours.

The terrible sex offender easily overpowered the boy and pushed him down to the dangerously tilted bed. It was all too easy for the man in the twenties to crouch between the boy's shivering legs, with nefarious intent to ruin any last shred of innocence left in the victim's body. Uncle Wei licked his lips when he realized he stared at the tastiest buffet of a finger-length erect child-penis softly bobbing in his line of sight.

“A-Ji ah A-Ji, be a good boy and never hide such presents from Mommy, you hear me?”

Little A-Ji sniffled and nodded. He shivered when he felt a finger, no, two fingers with long fingernails graze his rosebud. They never even said ‘please’ before they were rudely inserted; the invasion was unpleasant, unlubricated, and disgusting because he could almost feel the bristles on the hairy digits tickling his insides.

“Nnnh. You know what to do, boy. Come, unwrap your present and show it to Mommy,” the man ordered with a vulgar sneer. Little A-Ji started to cry softly, hot tears leaked from his eyes, and his face flushed with sheer embarrassment tempered with fear, as he raised his hips higher, then with both hands, the boy pulled back his foreskin as far as possible to reveal the hidden prize that Uncle Wei won this time. Pink penis glans that shine and glisten in the dim light, with a toothpick-sized slit peeking from in-between. A-Ji’s cock had swollen up nicely from engaging with titillating sexual foreplay with his child-lover earlier, but now it faced the terrifying and unwanted prospect of being devoured by the dirty rapist; the boy’s hormone-darkened grape-sized testicles tightened in alarm and tried to hide into the base of the quivering genitals, but to no avail.

The ten-year old boy hiccuped and moaned, unable to control the unwelcome, even detestful flaming lusts boiling from within his pelvis, when the rapist attacked the boy’s exposed privates repeatedly; little A-Ji cried for help during the sexual assault, but no one in the house could hear his pitifully weak protests. Three greasy fingers violently raked the boy’s budding but functional prostate gland until it shuddered continuously from the distressing treatment, filling up rich creamy loads into the pulsing, increasingly excited urethra; more hairy, grimy fingers cupped and molested the helpless testicles with such zest until they, too, started to inflate, then contract rhythmically to squeeze out more milky nectar made of newborn seed towards the loathsome goal of fueling the demon’s appetite; the man puckered his lips and gleefully hollowed his cheeks to draw the desperate penis deeper into his demonic oral cavity, where fanged teeth grazed circular pinpricks on the delicate bulbous cockhead and injected sexual poisons into the organ, tongues emerged and forked into many tentacle-like appendages, each tightly swirling, kneading, rubbing in mind-blowing spirals and curls, a hardened spear of turgid flesh easily forced its way into the captured child-penis and started to lick the insides of the pee-slit, then the urethral tube; instead of vacuuming up the unejaculated seed that started to pool inside the boy’s raging hard-on, the demonic rapist lets its tongues play inside the ten-year old’s xiao ji ji , caressing the lumps of pent-up loads, stirring the soupy potent liquids inside each deposited volley that only a ten-year old's genitals could make, coaxing the adolescent's sperm to shoot out, shoot out, quickly, quickly in orgasmic explosions before their time.

A deep thrust of sharp fingernails pressed against the prostate, a tight squeeze on the sexually-flushed bloated scrotum that had smoothened out its wrinkles, and a particularly hard suck on the engorged length of the poisoned, exceedingly excited penis; A-Ji yelled in shock at the triple assault, pulled on Uncle Wei's greasy hair and scalp, his thin legs futilely tried to kicked away the man's shoulders and his clutches on his groin, but he knew he'd been defeated when his hips couldn't stop shaking, his thighs trembled, the inevitable countdown of a volcanic eruption started, his eyes rolled back and stars started to dot his vision.

Little A-Ji's gift to A-Xian, of thirty precious twitches of thick, milky fresh boy-semen he'd produced and carefully stored since morning, was lost to the dirty, unwashed rapist.

"Mmm, delish. Mommy craves for more presents. You're a good son, aren't you? Be a good boy, and give Mommy more presents," Uncle Wei growled and swallowed with joy, then resumed his attacks on A-Ji's genitals with renewed vigour. The ten-year old adolescent would be brutally sucked dry by the incubus, have his balls savaged by forked tongues that extended and dipped all the way in to penetrate the sweet juicy boy-eggs, then royally fucked in the ass and hammered into the bed by a grunting smelly pervert with a hairy, monstrous veiny cum-leaking penis twice his age, before he would be allowed downstairs to finally have his cupcakes and chocolate chip cookies for afternoon tea.

Elsewhere, A-Xian, being the apple of Uncle Lan's eyes and allowed to act callously and greedily like an undisciplined child in the mansion, happily received a wrapped present and tore its packaging paper into pieces like a stray dog (or cat) would when given some food. He shrieked joyfully at a teddy bear soft toy about two feet in height, coloured to look like a Middle Kingdom panda, and absolutely warm, adorable and huggable in the child's eyes.

Little A-Xian thanked Uncle Lan many times and began to play with his new soft toy almost immediately with many fistful grabs and squeezes because the material was just too appealing for the ten-year old who had missed being embraced and cuddled during his childhood days of wandering alone in the streets.

“A-Xian, don't be too rough on your new friend. If it gets dirty, let me know and I'll wash it for you,” the Gusu Lan master sagely advised and outlined more house rules for the boy who would be better suited as a troublemaker. He dutifully fed a cupcake to the child while the latter continued to squeal and shriek over a new companion made of artificial fur and other elastic materials; to the point where the boy rolled around the floor with the unfortunate toy in his arms; when Wei Ying finished eating one piece of cake and grinned a mouth full of half-chewed bits, Uncle Lan smiled faintly, and dabbed the boy's lips with a napkin.

Just then, the Gusu Lan master stilled and hnngh'd - he'd been masturbating with one hand while serving tasty treats to the boy; it was an easy task, since they were both naked in the dining room, and the man in his thirties was easily aroused by the sight of the boy's perky tight ass; Little A-Xian not only rolled around the floor with the teddy bear, but also fucked it with his cute hardened wee-wee because the bear had an ultra-stretchable silicone fleshlight buried into its crotch - it was designed as a sex toy for heterosexual males (the shady toy store manager did say, “I hope you don't mind,” when the master paid for the purchase), so the snug cocksleeve was stuck on the front side of the teddy bear’s lower abdomen and between its knobbly furred legs; watching how little A-Xian humped energetically into the bear’s pussy - the fleshlight - turned on the man tremendously, and thus, he easily hnng’h’d with just a few strokes.

“A.. A-Xian, let d-d-daddy cum, oh, oh, daddy is cumming...!” Uncle Lan groaned. Little A-Xian knew he should get off the bear and let his daddy ejaculate thirty twitches into the fleshlight, but he really enjoyed the squishy fleshy sensations massaging his xiao ji ji so much, that he was most reluctant to let go. So, the boy had a bright idea and lifted one of his legs like a dog taking a pee, and persuaded his daddy to ‘let’s fuck Mister Teddy Bear together, Papa’ - at that point, Uncle Lan was about to burst and he couldn’t think straight, so he squeezed in with the boy, somehow and miraculously, two dicks into one bloated fleshlight entrance shaped like a woman’s vagina; A-Xian cried at the pressurized squeeze because Daddy Lan’s penis was gigantic compared to his pencil-thin one, and the elastic tube strained to accommodate them until everything within was deliciously compressed.

Uncle Lan howled when the first of thirty volleys fired out from his exceedingly hard meatstick, and Little A-Xian followed suit because he could feel Daddy Lan’s penile veins popping out, the penile muscles pulsing in delicious massaging waves, the soaring heat licking his simmering xiao ji ji so intimately wrapped and rubbed against daddy’s, the surging pressure of hot creamy daddy cum ballooning like a nuclear bomb gone off inside the sweet tight tunnel of teddy-bear love, squirting and forced int o the boy’s wildly orgasming wee-wee, reverse-flowing into the adolescent’s defenceless urethra and straight into the nut-sized prostate gland, until A-Xian learnt what retrograde ejaculation felt like because he felt blessed, and recognized it as a gift from the daddy, to have daddy’s sperm swimming inside his prostate - the boy-womb - and wondered briefly if Daddy Lan’s energetic wrigglers will make babies inside little A-Xian.

The father-son couple ended their dual and dirty lovemaking with the teddy bear's ruined vaginal fleshlight with lots of sensual kissing, touching and tasty moans into each other's breaths flavoured with sweet butter cupcakes and Oreos.

Later, A-Xian wondered what was taking A-Ji so long to come downstairs and join them for tea - but that thought flew out of the window when his thin boy-hips picked up the pace and fucked the cum-covered teddy bear earnestly towards another climax. He pumped his hips while on all fours with the bear spread-eagled beneath him; sometimes he rained sweet kisses on the teddy's cute nose and rosy cheeks, his hands grasped wildly the bear's furry material because his underaged body shook with incredible pleasures - while his xiao ji ji experienced heaven inside a taut tube of flooded, frothy, gooey warm daddy-sperm, even squirting out the excess deluge with each tasty fuck, Uncle Lan huffed and puffed above him equally vigorously as the man mounted, slammed his hips and fucked the boy from above; A-Xian giggled every time he was crushed by his daddy into a sandwich of made of man and teddy bear; the boy's hips didn't know where to shake - on one hand, it wanted to raise up for the fertile springy ass to kiss and meet his daddy's twitching fat cock, on the other, it wanted to grind downwards and let the child-penis savour the taste of fucking the fleshy tube like a real adult, and gulp down more of daddy's virile thick seed. It didn't really matter in the end, as long as Uncle Lan enjoyed the afternoon tea by spilling hot semen and planting lots of babies into lovely A-Xian, while A-Xian enjoys the best of both worlds by getting lovingly impregnated by Daddy Lan's sperm, and he got to empty out his baby Wei Yings - the ten year old's testicles - into fifteen or more shuddering exquisite twitches into the cutest teddy bear ever.

Notes for the Chapter:

What a nice relaxing weekend with long holidays! My draft remains skeletal and I don't really know where the story is going - that's why you can see that it has slowed down considerably, and there are awkward moments too. Oh well. At least I had fun writing the smuts.

Sorry to add a kind of interlude or a missed section from the previous chapter at the beginning. We had hot springs but didn't have hot sex in the last chapter, so this has been fixed :-)

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 111

The trio journeyed on when they remembered that although Time in the oasis of their paradise may have remained broken and unchanged forever, there is still much to do - for two Immortals and one fledgling leader who wanted to rescue his best friend.

Jing Yi probably looked the happiest in recent times, as he jolted the reins to urge lazy Big Apple to take a few more steps. He sat at the front of the carriage and rewarded the donkey with a bite of the eponymous juicy ripe fruit tied to a fishing rod every so often - a trick he learnt from the Matriarch's holo-phone. Wei Ying had done what most parents should, when stuck in a car (or a carriage) for hours on a long journey at a snail's space with very curious children on the side - he simply relinquished his phone to Jing Yi, specially unlocked it so that it could operate with limited access into ErNet, then taught him how to surf using the browser, watch WeiTube videos, and if nothing else catches the youth's interest, he set up a WeiChat video call with Jin Ling so that the two youngsters can yammer to their heart's content. There were moments of incompetence and stupidity, such as accidentally closing apps when trying to minimize them, or rude music blared out when some pop-up ads appeared (thank goodness Jing Yi was recognized by the system as below the Kingdom's legal age, so porn sites were off-limits) - but eventually, the boy managed to get the hang of using the strange device that connected him to the universe and beyond.

(Jing Yi also Wei-gle'd up about donkeys, and learnt that asses are the symbolic national transportation animals of the Kingdom of Qishan Lan. He read about the history, watched a few videoclips titled 'Untamed Romance', and "awww"-ed at some of the more lovey-dovey moments involving the Patriarch; then he laughed when he saw old footages of stubborn Lil Apple - the predecessor of all symbolic donkeys of the Kingdom - giving trouble to the Matriarch, and when that equine kissed a few bunnies in the Cloud Recesses, a few years ago. The boy wondered if they could set up petting zoos in Gusu or Yiling, filled with much-loved animals for everyone to play with.)

With Jing Yi given a task (to steer the donkey) and a fruitful way to spend the time (with a holo-phone), Wei Ying finally had the chance to enjoy a cuddle with his husband inside the confines and the comfort of their mobile home. Ernie was relegated to a seat cushion, because despite his cold and slimy surface, he was soft, very malleable and provided ergonomic support to anyone's heavy buttocks. Wei Ying only had to command the errant son with a mother-complex to activate a massage-chair function, to get a delectable rattling on his pelvic bones and kamasutra-worthy energetic vibrations to his loins.

The husband relaxed into his normal seat while trying his best to ignore the snuggling but moaning spouse trying to wrest control of more prime estate of paunchy six-pack abs from the other contender - their favourite little girl held snugly by her father's warm muscled arms and against a pillow of heart-throbbing pectoral muscles. Little Ni-er whined and made some uncomfortable noises every time her mother bumped into her fluffy body and was inadvertently pushed away when Wei Ying twisted and turned against Lan Zhan's tummy for a better cuddle.

Lan Zhan decided that his burgeoning body had more than enough space to love his two family members, so he let Wei Ying occupy the regions below his navel, while little Ni-er could finally snuggle up to her father's ample firm breasts for a suckle that she'd missed so much ever since they parted ways from the unfortunate wolf attack. He had some interesting revelations and felt some goosebump-y sensations running through his body, when his daughter breastfed hungrily (alas, there was no milk), while naughty Wei Ying swooped down through a stretched waistband to suck off his turgid erection.

The furry silkworm was lovingly stroked by her father - on her back, where she received terrific back scratches and she wiggled violently to let out shrieks of childish delight - and around her tummy, where the father kneaded circles to help her digest the wonderful meals from the campsite, and her puckered anus-like rear orifice pulsated regularly due to the nnngh-inducing peristaltic waves running through her adorable two-foot length.

“Oi, stop pooping diamonds on me,” Wei Ying complained, when he felt glittering stones tumble from above and onto his head, where he was trying to face-fuck the husband’s exceedingly excited penis ardently. Lan Zhan sighed - he needed to catch his breath because he was on the verge of cumming - then kissed Ni-er’s cheeks sweetly and coo’d at her to listen to her mother’s words, “Be a good girl, Ni-er, and poop out something better for your mommy.”

Soon, rolls of freshly made talismans, protective amulets, modern gadgets, and tiny weapons such as hand-held guns and bombs landed on Lan Zhan’s sweaty crotch, just as he exploded into a string of thirty twitches into the loving spouse’s waiting mouth, with rhythmic hnnghs that fortunately never filtered out the walls of their home and to their junior disciple who manned the carriage. Ernie thought it would be awesome if his parents orgasmed together, so he ramped up the massage function of the mother’s cushion - which came with a cold slimy black dildo and snaked into Wei Ying’s pants to do nasty things to the man’s bottom. Wei Ying joined the husband’s chorus around the latter’s fifteenth’s hnngh, and added his own melodious ngahhs and uuhns, and together they crescendoed into a glorious finale of shouts, groans and juicy wet eruptions.

Later, in the aftermath of spilled seeds, soiled loincloths and a snoring Wei Ying on his lap with semen on his lips and running down the unfortunate cold black slimy seat (which was fine - tentacle-kin are immune to the effects of human-kin's sperm), Lan Zhan lounged and stretched and popped a few joints and nearly melted into his chair because he was so boneless, drained and beautifully buoyed after the powerful climax that he actually sported a drunken smile - then his eyelids closed on their own, and he finally fell into a restless sleep.

.

Little A-Ji was eight again, and he wondered if his world is one that ricochets between two ends of a spectrum, schizophrenic and random in nature; in that he was ten and living with his own happy family of four in one dimension, or he could be the innocent, pre-pubescent boy once again under the care of his older brother.

“Wang Ji, it's the fifteenth of the lunar month today. We should offer prayers at the temple and seek the gods' blessings for good health and luck,” Xi Chen da ge said, while working in their vegetable patch. The youth put a hand into his pocket and fished out a silver piece. “Here, take this to buy a few stalks of lotus flowers from the market, and give it to the temple,” he explained.

“Enn!” the eight-year old boy nodded and accepted the silver gracefully, then bowed respectfully with folded hands in front. At such a young age, he didn't have many opportunities to go out of the neighbourhood - even the local grade school where he attends classes is built just a few blocks down the road from his humble home. Xi Chen is the most caring brother the boy has ever known, so the boy lived a rather sheltered life - which in some sense, meant that he was kept on a tight leash and hardly ventured further than necessary. Thus, the boy considered this to be a golden chance to broaden his horizons and see the world.

A-Ji felt a little strange that this world seemed brighter, colourful, even more tolerable than before; perhaps because he had wonderful physical experiences in the other 'real' world and felt totally relaxed and sanguine on whatever that may befall upon him, perhaps because he'd mastered this 'dream' world and was comfortable in his own skin, and perhaps because he knew that every 'bad guy' in this 'dream' world cannot really harm his body or hurt his feelings - and if anything, his best friend and pretend-wife, A-Xian, and his pretend-daddy, Master Lan, are ready to help, just right next door. (or not)

So, the boy bid good-bye to his brother, and walked with a skip in his steps to the road leading out of the neighbourhood.

"Oh, A-Ji, my boy! You look happy this morning! What terrible things has your brother done to you this time?"

A-Ji rolled his eyes and gave a barely-visible frown of disgust; it is rude and prohibited to show disdain at one's elders, after all. The dirty neighbour, somehow still his stepmother of sorts, sat at the doorsteps of his temporary house that had strangely been rebuilt (or was never torn down - it was hard to say, in this 'dream' world, after all). Uncle Wei grinned a full set of yellowed smelly teeth, and had a hand jiggling under the waistband of his pants. The boy wondered briefly if the unwashed man was scratching an itch or picking a flea in his groin - there could be some on his messy uncombed hair, though.

“No, my brother hasn’t done anything, and you better leave him alone. In fact, he entrusted me a piece of silver to buy flowers for the temple. I’m going to pray for the two of us, and you are not included!” little A-Ji shouted back like a child retaliating an adult’s teasing.

Uncle Wei’s eyes widened at the rudeness, then those red-tinged pupils turned into evil slits when he grinned. “Oh, what a noble mission you have in your hands! Say... if I offer you a gold nugget, would you rather spend the day here with me? I have pork roast, chicken dumplings and boiled fish in my kitchen today. There are plenty of people offering flowers to the temple today since it’s the fifteenth, so surely, the gods and even your brother wouldn’t notice a missing few bouquets,” the greasy man offered. The uncle had pulled down the waistband of his pants, and A-Ji watched, with a slightly horrified look, at how a fully grown adult man masturbated his dark hairy penis in broad daylight, with plenty of schlicky sounds. There were no passers-by at that time, because most housewives had gone to the market too.

His best friend A-Xian would have stuck out a tongue at that point, but little A-Ji was polite. He simply shook his head and walked on, “No, I already had breakfast and I promised my brother that I would pray at the temple with a few stalks of lotus flowers. I will not break that promise.”

“Then, tell me, boy, do you know how to choose the biggest, the most beautiful and the most magnificent lotus flowers with a silver piece? Who knows, your brother or even the gods may be disappointed if you didn’t try your best and offer the best flowers at the temple,” Uncle Wei countered, and was unfazed - because he knew how to push the right buttons and trick the eight-year old boy.

Little A-Ji paused in mid-step and bit on his lower lip when he realized that the uncle was right.

“I... I...” he stammered hesitantly, because he was torn between running away from the sex predator (because, oh god, Uncle Wei had pulled up his pants, stood up and was walking towards him... hurry, hurry, he should run away!), running back to his brother (which could mean a good scolding), or running to the market (which could land him in trouble because he really didn’t know how to choose the best flowers with a silver piece).

The pre-pubescent boy stood in the middle of the empty street, confused and undecided on what to do next, and took forever to mull over his options - which spelled his doom, when Uncle Wei lunged forward in just a few strides, and caught the boy by the wrist.

“You know, A-Ji, indecision is my favourite flaw in you,” the dirty uncle smiled wickedly - but the boy didn’t really understand those complex words, so he could only stare, bewildered, at the uncle, half-hoping that he would be released, half-hoping that he would be offered the best answer -, “Let this uncle decide for you, because adults are always right. In fact, I’ll even put a gold nugget into your pocket, if you follow what I say,” Uncle Wei added with a glint in his eyes, and licked his lips in anticipation. One calloused hand - the one that had touched his hairy smelly smegma-coated penis earlier - slid down into A-Ji’s pants and caressed the boy’s smooth pale buttocks; one finger dipped into the crack of the ass, then grazed the unused puckered rosebud (so far), and A-Ji shivered in trepidation.

Less than five minutes after little A-Ji left his house, the unkempt but charming man in his twenties was seen walking hand in hand with a boy a third of his age, to the market. They made several stops along the way, and Uncle Wei took his sweet time with detours along the scenic route. The boy complained that they were headed the wrong way, but the man simply tsk'ed and said that adults are always right, because of Rule Number Three. The boy promptly lowered his head in humiliation for having nearly broke the sacred rule; his face reddened even more, when the man shamelessly inserted his hands through the underside of the boy's shirt, and started to grope and brush the adolescent's chest, until the peanut-sized nipples flared up into puffy strawberries. To passer-by housewives, the two looked no more than a couple of closely-knit xiongdi playing a ticklish form of wrestling with each other - because in the Cloud Recesses, nobody recognized that a pervert was molesting an eight-year old's sweet body and fiddling with the child's titties beneath those loose garments.

The first pitstop was an old abandoned rickety building. It was painful, alarming, but not surprising, that little A-Ji was forced to undress where no one could see, and he was raped on the unswept, littered floor to the uncle's heart's and penis' content. Uncle Wei savoured the boy's body from head to toe, from adoring kisses on the lips to hungry rimjob licks on the blossoming rosebud peeking between plump ass-cheeks, from hard thrusts into the ragdoll-like figure to listening to the thrilling music of a boy's scream for help - that goes unheard - and a man's satisfied grunts when he ejaculated fifteen times, because sweet fertile A-Ji is simply too breedworthy and had to be bedded passionately like a victimized child ought to be, to where he belongs. The rapist made sure that little A-Ji was properly inseminated by at least three servings of his stinky creamy semen by the time they were done. Thick seed dribbled from the A-Ji's ruined, gaping rosebud down his thighs as he staggered out of the cursed deserted building.

At the second pitstop, A-Ji tried to resist, but not before his buttocks were rudely slapped and he became teary-eyed from the stinging pain - then he was given a stern warning not to make any weird sounds or eye contact with pedestrians on a lonely trail. Behind some clumps of dense undergrowth, the red-faced eight-year old had to endure the horrifying embarrassment of standing amidst the prickly bushes, while drawing curious glances from some market-goers. He stood as still as a mouse and gritted his teeth, because beneath the top layers of the bush, he was pantless as a newborn babe, and Uncle Wei happily crouched between the boy's legs and played with his xiao ji ji with greasy fingers and oily lips. The adolescent had to experience the trauma of tingling in broad daylight, bit his lips until they bled a little, his rosy cheeks turned tomato-reds on their own and he couldn't help when a few tasty moans escaped his throat - then his pelvis pumped into branches and shrubs maddeningly until the bushes shook with the timeless rhythms that only child rapists knew, which scared away a few mothers and their young children when they walked too close. Little A-Ji would have to tingle several times into the sex offender's mouth, before he was released.

Back on the trail, Uncle Wei smacked his lips and remarked that the boy tasted good despite bearing no seed yet. "Your one and only rooster flew away three times just now, but I was able to catch it every time it crowed," the man laughed rudely, "Rest assured, boy, the two eggs are still there. I made sure to crack them open for a taste, though, so they're a little bruised. You should come over to my place after this, I have some special recipes for cooking eggs that have been cracked open. I hope you don't mind," and he guffawed like a madman - more alert housewives stared at him and quickly shuffled away in discomfort upon hearing the strange conversation about chickens and eggs. The trembling adolescent walked with a slight limp; underneath his loosened loincloth, his cock was inflamed from brutal suction and injurious tugs, and his sensitive balls stung and itched from abusive handling, swollen to nearly twice the original size.

The last pitstop was just before the market's entrance. This time, the boy sniffled and hiccuped loudly with hot tears on his flushed cheeks, as he was forced to stand by the roadside with his pants pulled down into an untidy pile on the ground. Old ladies and other shoppers spared curious stares at the two, of a man standing behind a boy and stooping over the latter, one hand on the boy's waist and the other doing something nasty in front. Uncle

Wei grinned cheerfully and made excuses at a few passing-by spectators, such as “I’m his big brother, and I’m just helping him pee before we queue up to buy meat and vegetables” and “He’s just a little kid and doesn’t know how to aim” - which drew some endearing giggles from the womankind, and eventually people stopped paying attention to them - because people in the Cloud Recesses do not recognize when a child is molested and has his penis touched in a very, very wrong way by smelly, grimy fingers.

Little A-Ji was mortified when the terrible rapist’s O-ring of a curled thumb and forefinger tightened and pistoned along his pinkie-length wee-wee with renewed vigour. His shiny glistening exposed cockhead was polished ruthlessly in public view, and he had to bite his tongue to stifle age-inappropriate sexual moans when the child’s body was forced to jerk thirty times in rapid succession - thirty spurts of healthy pee arched to mimic an adult’s orgasmic ejaculation; although it was way too early for the eight-year old to experience such earthly pleasures.

Under the pretense of helping a fellow youngster with toilet needs, the horny uncle managed to extract another three tasty tingles from the helpless boy; his fingers never stopped assaulting the boy’s genitals during that time, so he enjoyed playing with little A-Ji until the latter crumbled to the pee-stained ground because air left his lungs in heaves and wheezes, strength left his legs because he couldn’t contain the electricity short-circuiting his nerves, and plenty of bodily fluids spurted out until not a single drop was left.

The sun was high in the sky, and the younger Lan brother wanted to call it quits. Just when he pulled up his pants and wanted to march back home - he would rather get a scolding from Xi Chen da ge than suffer through more abuse in the terrible rapist’s hands -, Uncle Wei grabbed his wrist and merrily said, “Oh look, the flower shop is just over there! We’re almost there! Come on, A-Ji, you're so close to completing your task, surely your gege will praise you for a job well done!"

The silver piece in his pocket clinked persuasively.

.

The child forgave the rapist easily, when he held the biggest lotus flower bouquet he'd ever lay his eyes on. The flowers were so pretty, as pink as his rosy cheeks, and their glorious blooms were like a whiff of springtime freshness in the crowded market. He paid a silver for it, as instructed, and Uncle Wei paid for the rest - along with a stick of tanghulu, a sweet dumpling, a bag of candies and toasted nuts, and a cup of sweetened fruit juice from a beverage vendor.

With a full tummy and his prized flowers by his side, little A-Ji was content and his mood improved greatly - especially when Uncle Wei praised how handsome the boy looked while holding the flowers. The praises turned into a bit of goading and plenty of harmless flirting, when Uncle Wei bought a mixed bouquet and politely asked, with plenty of fake admiration, sweet lies and dangerous coaxing, for the boy to pose with flowers 'for a bit of memorable fun'. Then the man mentioned about a gold nugget inside the boy's pocket, which meant that the latter had accepted the condition to follow the man's order for the day; thus the child was easily swayed and tricked into believing the man's words.

Uncle Wei found an empty stall in a rather concealed area of the market, and behind it, little A-Ji was made to go down on all fours. The man chuckled when he inserted a few large flower stalks - carnations, peonies and sunflowers - between the boy's buttocks, and then, a few other smaller specimens with hollowed stems into the boy's penis. A-Ji had to gently bite on a rose while Uncle Wei brushed the stuffed, swollen and very irritated genitals with tiny prickly blooms - baby's breaths, heather and thistle - until the boy nnngh and aaahn'd uncontrollably. Having evacuated the boy's bladder not too long ago, Uncle Wei took the liberty to enjoy refreshing sips through the hollowed reed-like stems from the purple-red cockhead - the faster he brushed the shivering penis, the more seedless clear nectar it produced and oozed straight into the man's waiting palate. Mmm, delish - and Uncle Wei got a free view of how the preteen experienced sexual climax before puberty, judging from the way the body bent and bowed repeatedly, and how the tell-tale red sexual flushes bloomed and spread across the boy's chest, neck and groin, just like the beautiful flowers that sprouted out of little A-Ji's cute rump.

.

Eventually, Uncle Wei took the boy to the temple; he said he had the responsibility as an adult and as Xi Chen da ge 's favourite neighbour to see through little A-Ji's journey. There, following local traditions and rituals, the boy offered the lotus flowers to the monks with a respectful bow, and he was given incense sticks to light up for prayer at the main shrine.

Uncle Wei stood in a corner and did not join the boy, partly because he didn't want the holy effigies and statues to see him - his demonic self would be revealed by the gods' all-seeing powers and that would endanger his life. So, instead, he roamed around the fringes until he bumped into a wrinkly, bald and fat old saffron-robed monk lazing under a secluded verandah with a smoke pipe and a platter of meat jerky on the table, and who appeared to have 'seen it all, done it all'. After an exchange of words, a shake of hands, the man was handed a pouch of gold and he was gracious enough to hide the illicit transaction with his sleeves, away from the gods' prying eyes. "It's not much, but there will be more if he's as tasty as you say," the pompous-looking monk said, "I hope you don't mind." Uncle Wei sealed the deal with his million dollar smile.

.

"Little boy, little boy!"

A-Ji turned around, and saw the sagely Head Priest calling out to him with a friendly wave. He quickly tucked the smoking incense sticks to the designated bronze ornate vessel, gave it three bows, and quickly left the shrine.

"What is it, Master Priest?" A-Ji tottered in his approach, and felt humbled by the presence of such a venerable elder of his community.

"You're such a good child, dutifully praying for good health and luck for your family!" he commended, and placed a reassuring arm on the boy's shoulder. A-Ji felt pride in his chest; it felt like meeting a celebrity superstar of this day and age, after all. The eight-year old grinned a little, but he remained restrained - these are the temple grounds, after all, and any excessive behaviour is forbidden.

"Do you know it's better to pray at another shrine, one that returns three times the merit for each bow you make, and thirteen times the good karma for each incense stick you pray?"

The adolescent's interest piqued - because all he really wanted was to live happily and peacefully in his humble home with his brother, with their vegetable patch -, so he nodded.

“Come, follow me, little boy, and let me show you,” the Head Priest murmured, then suspiciously, his rough, calloused hand on the A-Ji's shoulder slid down to the pre-pubescent boy's waist and trembled a little with excitement. The obese, wrinkly wart-faced Head Priest, who probably lived a rather long luxurious life pampered with (ill-)gotten gains, led the boy to a windy path deep into the temple; where spiralling stairs descended into the dark, dingy basement, where a huge, ancient and probably rusty iron door was opened with an ominous creak, closed with a thunderous boom, then clicked crisply to signify that it was properly locked - because behind closed doors, no one - not even the gods - could see or hear a child's pleas for mercy, and later, cries of immoral ecstasy.

Not far away, grandiose temple bells rang thirteen times in a rare, strangely soothing rhythm hardly heard in the Cloud Recesses - but no one in the settlement recognized that it was a secret code amongst corrupted, debauched monks to gather for a feast that happens only once in a full moon, on the fifteenth of the lunar month. The temple would be closed for the day - which was fine, since everyone deserves a holiday sometimes. The young monks look forward to showcase their virility and lose their virginities to a sweet, delicious eight-year old boy's tight buttocks, while the older ones cannot wait to erupt a month's worth of passion and take their worldly pleasures from their lovely underaged, immature and inexperienced victim trapped in a room with no windows. They endeavoured to enjoy the child's fertile body to the last spurt, until only a tainted, impregnated, swollen, bruised and abused dried-up husk was left sobbing, desecrated with milky white streaks of the unclean both inside and out, reeking with the stench of the unholy from head to toe, a pitiful figure curled up on the cold hard floor robbed of its innocence too many times in the span of one fateful day, deep inside the dungeon beneath the temple.

.

In this strange, twisted world, eight-year old A-Xian was already a master wizard and had a penchant for powerful spells - such as an advanced modified Eye spell that projected the entire world into their living room.

The Gusu Lan master wasn't really interested in observing the daily lives of his clansmen - not when a fecund, terribly precocious and devilish preteen with messy hair and smooth boy-body happily spread his legs beneath him, and willingly raised his hips to let the older man plunge like a beast and breed the little boy atop semen-stained carpets.

“Ah, Lan Zhan, the two of us slept together in the ‘real’ world, so I was able to enter your ‘dream’ world simultaneously - but I didn’t expect how lively and amazingly detailed your world is... oh you naughty daddy, you’re such a shitty rapist monster, aren’t you?” the boy giggled just as the master hnngh’d, jerked his hips so hard that something could’ve snapped, his adult hairy penis speared so deep and so lovingly clenched and massaged by folds of warm flesh inside the boy’s insatiable and incredibly addictive rosebud - that he crushed the boy into the carpeted floor and unleashed thirty pulsating jets of steaming hot man-milk - for the third time in a span of half an hour. The master was dying, alive, flaming hot, shivering to the bones, as his loins try their hardest to pump out every last viable sperm into the boy that continued to spur him on with dirty sex stories.

They weren't really stories, though; A-Xian merely narrated what he saw on the various screens projected from his awesome Eye spells.

In one market operating within the secure fortress-like walls of the Cloud Recesses, adults are generally lax about the safety of their children, because it was so peaceful and the elders continue to spin tales and harp on the sect's non-violent culture - that no one realized there were sex predators lurking amongst the market stalls, the trash-littered streets, the maze-like alleyways, and the occasional suspicious-looking, dirty, unkempt man loitering around, pretending to buying something when he was actually pickpocketing, or cheating housewives with fraudulent and cheap-looking goods stolen from elsewhere.

A-Xian watched, with mild interest, at how a boy around his age, still clinging on to his mother's legs while she haggled spiritedly with a vegetable seller, was distracted when one of those dirty men called out to him. He waved a lollipop at the boy's face seductively - a sugary bait that drew the child's attention - and he slowly backed into a dark alley - the child was tempted, because he wanted the candied treat that his mother would never allow - so the boy let go of his mother's legs and followed the man into his den. The mother never really paid attention because she was adamant that a decent-sized radish should cost only one silver but the seller argued for two. In the dark, dank alleyway where nobody would care to squint to see what goes on, the oblivious boy sucked on the given lolly while the grinning, scar-faced and unshaven man happily peeled off his victim's pants, fondled the boy's hairless, soft penis, then devoured it greedily like the same offered candy lollipop.

An hour later, the boy emerged from the now-empty alley, tears in his eyes and with flushed cheeks, looking desperately for his mother because his bruised private parts throbbed with terrible pain and had swollen twice its size from the grim sexual assault; but he hadn't been taught what is meant to be violated, or which kind of touch is 'bad'. The mother was still haggling for fruits at the other end of the stalls when the boy reunited with her with sobs and wails. She scolded him for loafing around, refused to hear the rest of his snivelling complaints when he mentioned 'playing with an uncle' (because it's unthinkable that a friendly stranger in a public place would hurt a boy - so 'playing' meant 'wasting time', as far as the mother was concerned), and pulled on the boy's ear to warn him not to run off again. The boy sniffled his snot away, rubbed the hot tears away, and pulled on his pants uncomfortably, his innocence lost when he learned for the first time in his young, untainted life what it meant to tingle into a stranger's mouth - and how terrifyingly, confusingly warm that felt.

In another screen, a young teenage boy about the age of twelve appeared rather conflicted when staring at a wall. He had followed hastily scrawled signs that said 'Kid's Toilets' next to the cordial drink vendor, where children are abound, and ended up in a very quiet, unoccupied cul-de-sac. It was a known fact, at least amongst the criminals, that the drinks were spiked with powerful diuretics, so one by one, youngsters ran through the windy passageways with multiple forks and with bursting bladders. By the time they reached the dead-ends, they faced a plain brick wall with a hole in the middle. As a true disciplined and well-mannered Lan member, the boy couldn't just relieve himself at the wall no matter how much his bladder screamed - that act would immediately break at least five sect rules in one go. There were arrows drawn around the hole, and instinctively, with caution thrown to the wind, the adolescent pulled down his pants and stuck his trembling wee-wee into the gap.

Immediately, a trap was sprung, and Binding Spells appeared to strap the shocked, struggling boy to the wall. The child cried with terror when he felt unwashed hair - spindly moustaches, curly beards and bristly stubbles - rub against his shrinking, captured penis and balls, and greasy fingers caressed the sensitive groin until the skin goosebumped. On the other side of the wall, A-Xian watched, with more interest, at how a band of dirty, smelly, panting jailbroken convicts slathered their foamy tongues, generously bit and sucked with wart-studded lips and foul-smelling rotten teeth, and savaged the screaming boy's crotch with grimy fingernails. Of course, nobody paid attention even if the child's shrieks of terror echoed down the passageways - on beautiful sunny days, surely it sounded like the music of children's playful laughter and joy.

In the throes of ecstasy and at the pinnacle of the natural urge to pee, tempered with deep fear that causes one to lose control of his nether regions, the boy's plumbing broke in the final moment, and he ejaculated and urinated at the same time into the waiting rapists' jaws, in glorious arches through the abominable glory hole. The sobbing boy was held against his will on the surface of the cold, unforgiving wall for a couple of hours, until he was deliriously emptied over a series of rapidly detonating multiple orgasms that the underaged body was not prepared for. When everything was over, he staggered out of the maze with torn pants and back to the market, dazed from the shuddering sensations that continue to sizzle and throb from his inflamed genitals, hot tears rolling down his pimpled cheeks, a clear sign that he is yet another unnamed victim of sexual abuse by the network of heinous criminals at work during the day.

(For the unfortunate teenager, wet dreams will never be the same again, and he would always walk past the cordial drink vendor at least once a week, with the same conflicted, confused feelings tugging at his conscience, and his loins. A-Xian could fast-forward his superior Eye spell, and see that the boy will make many visits - because trauma finally morphed into a twisted depraved obsession for the boy, and for a score of other young preteen victims too, where one by one, they would queue up to savour the joys of having their youthful penises pleased by vile hardcore convicts.)

On a third screen, A-Xian told the Gusu Lan master what went on in another part of the market, as the latter had revived his lusts and began to drill the boy for the nth time that morning. It was the classic trick in any rapist's handbook. A man who looked more like a pirate than an aspiring cultivator, walked up to a young boy who probably reached puberty not long after a birthday, and politely asked if he could help to save a cute kitty. "The kitten is stuck in a broken section of a wall, and it's mewling pitifully from hunger. It refuses to crawl out even when I try to lure it with a piece of dried anchovy, and my body is too big to climb in to get it out. Will you help me, brave boy?" the man asked with a greasy smile. The boy felt like a hero who had been called to service, and he quickly told his mother who was preparing lunch in the kitchen. "It'll just be a while, ma'am, and it's a good deed to save another life, isn't it?" the man assured the mother. Less than a minute later, the boy joyfully ran after the man and into a very quiet and deserted part of the town.

It was, as expected, a hole in a brick wall that was just large enough to fit a ten-year old's chest. At that point, A-Xian whined that he'd seen this before and he could already foresee the outcome. The Gusu Lan master remained quiet, his earlobes reddened from shame; he continued to work his aching hips to fuck the eight-year old child's flooded gooey rosebud with such zest that he hoped the boy would forget about the recent, embarrassing past. The child prodigy wizard fast-forwarded the video; the ten-year old victim was easily tricked to climb through the wall to find the non-existing kitten, and unsurprisingly, he was caught when he found himself stuck and unable to move forward nor pull out from the malevolent hole.

Another time-skip; a horde of unwashed foreign men crowded around the wall to inspect the catch, and began to rape the hapless boy's ass, happily orgasming into sweet tight buns that had never tasted men, deflowered the boy's maidenhood so brutally until it became a ruined, torn, wilted bloom, treating the inviting springy buttocks like a disgraceful, smelly, cum-overflowing toilet. The boy's cries went unheard, since no one in the Cloud Recesses recognized the alarming shrill screams when a boy was gangraped right under the residents' noses. Every rapist in town lined up for a taste of a ten-year old who was at the cusp of experiencing his first wet ejaculation, and had their fill of emptying their balls at least thrice into the sweet tight tunnel filled with tainted virginal love. It wouldn't be too far fetched to say that on that fateful day, the boy experienced too many tingles until his genitals blossomed explosively to unload his first unwanted creamy wet orgasm - a life-changing eruption of ten weak unwilling spurts, flavoured with screams of terror, of buttocks being slapped until they bled, of child-testicles being roughly grasped and clutched until their contents were forcefully ejected, of endless warm wet slimy fountains gushing into his rectum and intestines, bloating his belly like a pregnant bitch bred by hungry dogs, of lustful, greedy adult penises jostling for a tasty fuck inside his elastic youthful asshole.

The ten-year old stumbled back home with wobbly knees, only to be scolded by his mother for skipping lunch and with no kitten in hand nor a heroic deed to show. He was mentally disturbed and traumatized by the experience, and he didn't even manage to take a good look at his attackers; dark shadowy figures continued to haunt his nightmares, and every time he walked past a hole in the wall, he would remember how good it felt to be raped by faceless men with stinky sour breaths and greasy skin, to be pinned down and rendered helpless on a cold hard surface, to have his budding genitals warm up and ejaculate at the thought of being penetrated against his will, to be told, "It feels good doesn't it? You like the feeling, you like to be raped, you asked for it so now you're getting it! You're getting raped because you want to!"

A-Xian laughed hard at the cheesy corny dialogue line at the end - and the squeeze the a turgid rod of flesh buried deep inside the child was unmistakably mind-blowing. The Gusu Lan master hnngh'd, pleased that his sweet loverboy wasn't teasing him anymore, and delighted that A-Xian's happiness passed on to him as well. He heard thirteen gongs from the nearby sacred temple bells, and wondered what auspicious occasion led to such proclamations from the holy monks. It didn't really matter though, since he had something better to worship; he proceeded to tickle the eight-year old's belly until the child shrieked and struggled for breaths, his tiny but incredibly snug body bent and bowed, convulsed endlessly, wrecked by childish and joyful laughter - truly, a Laughing Buddha reincarnated into this twisted nightmarish world, if such was possible - thus, the master received exceedingly pleasurable massages to his very tired, but very satisfied dick that stretched the boy's anus to its limits. He picked up the pace, and fucked the child deeper into the fluffy bed with plenty of tasty squelches and uuhs, aaahs and ooohs.

.

That afternoon, after a sumptuous lunch paid by sinful monies, Uncle Wei sauntered back with a bag full of Emperor Smiles on his back, and he waved at Xi Chen when he reached the front gates.

“Xi Chen! Xi Chen! Did you know?” and then he lowered his voice to a loud whisper, “Your brother’s staying in the temple grounds on this blessed day of the full moon! The Head Priest was smitten by the perfect ways in which he performed his prayers, so he asked A-Ji to stay back to receive special lessons in holy sutras!” the habitual liar grinned.

Xi Chen was surprised - he hadn’t heard of such wonderful news, and none of the neighbours had said anything too; getting free education from the temple was considered a sacred reward for the devoted.

Uncle Wei continued his terrible lie with even more twisted intentions, “You know, your brother was flustered and acted very shyly when he was given the honour. So don’t go asking him directly about what happened when he comes back, because he’ll probably clam up and hide under his blanket again if word of this gets out.” The man gave a reassuring wink at the teenager, “I’m a certified child psychologist, so I know. You can trust me.”

Xi Chen nodded fervently and thanked the man for accompanying A-Ji all the way to the temple and returning with the good news, though with no sight of the said younger brother who had, in actual fact, gone missing. Uncle Wei informed that little A-Ji will probably return in a couple of days’ time after the special lessons, “... but I’ll drop by the temple daily to check on him, so there is no need to worry!”

Xi Chen smiled and felt grateful about his brother’s prospects. He returned into the comfort of his home, and packed away the simple lunch of rice, tofu and vegetables he’d left on the table - since A-Ji wasn’t returning anytime soon, there was no need to cook extra portions for the boy. He wouldn’t need to worry about his younger brother and he could focus on farming, selling green produce, and getting household chores done.

The Lan da ge doesn’t know that his eight-year old brother had been locked inside the temple, sexually ravaged and mauled alive by snickering unholy monks of all beastly shapes and sizes; his erogenous zones and child genitals were merrily divided up and conquered so that each puffy nipple, each swollen half of the glans, each shrivelled testicle, received terrible abuse for hours on end; he served at least twenty grunting, gasping and ecstatic naked men at any time in the name of the Gods, for the days and nights to come. There were no brown vials this time, since drugs are forbidden from the sacred temple grounds, after all.

.

A few days later, outside the local police station - A-Xian had fast-forwarded so much that the video ran like a slideshow with subtitles on, with very brief bits of conversation captured in between. The Gusu Lan master watched while spooning the child from behind with cum leaking generously from where their sweaty bodies joined - they quite liked their Friday movie nights like this, after all.

“Are you sure you want to do this?” said Uncle Wei, who had miraculously arrived on time to pick-up the sexually abused victim from the temple grounds, and was asked, even begged, by the victim to take a detour to the local authorities.

“Mn. According to eight rules out of over-four thousand, any wrongdoing must be reported to the elder, such as the highly esteemed royal Gusu Lan police force,” replied the boy, with an uncharacteristically steely gaze, despite having haggard looks, dark circles under his eyes, and plenty of love bites on his neck and slap marks on his cheeks.

“Although I’m an outsider and I’ve no right to intrude on your troubles... you should know that you don’t have any evidence, and you look just fine. Don’t forget, the temple’s fame and influence is stacked up against you, and they have plenty of alibi who will defend the monks’ honour. You can’t go against the temple, they’re men of the gods,” the sleazy uncle tried to persuade the boy otherwise, after cowardly claiming innocence by saying that he couldn’t find the boy in the temple grounds that day the Head Priest approached A-Ji, and hence, left without saying good-bye. He wasn’t even one bit concerned about the boy’s welfare, after all.

“If it’s wrong, the elders must know,” little A-Ji insisted.

.

Uncle Wei pretended to be the innocent WeiEx (or Wei-ber or Uber) driver who was paid to drop off a client, and had nothing to do with that client nor his troubles. He picked his ear, then his nose, pretended the cracked ceiling was the most interesting thing to look at inside the small building lined with peeling cloud-themed wallpaper and painted with the uncomfortable stench of mildew everywhere.

“How can I help, little boy?” a uniformed Gusu Lan officer asked quizzically - they never really had cases involving children of under the legal age. A few more officers milled about with little to do, other than to fill a few forms and chat over a pot of pu'er on a worn, creaky table.

“Uncle Policeman (警察叔叔; jingcha shushu), I... I want to report a r-r-rap.. no, a s-s-se... an assault, sir,” the boy stammered, and drew a few curious glances from the other officers.

The policeman hushed little A-Ji with a finger to the boy's lips, then took him to a corner where they sat together on a bench, “That's a little vague, boy. You need to provide some more details - who is the victim, who is the assailant, where did this take place and at what time, and what kind of assault are we talking about?”

Uncle Wei hummed disinterestedly as the boy provided details of his horrible experience with low whispers. He clicked his tongue in annoyance when the policeman waved and called out to him, “Mister, you're his guardian, right? Can I ask you to complete some paperwork over there while we check on him in a private room?"

The dirty uncle rolled his eyes - he was already doing overtime for sending the boy home and he wasn't getting paid for that - so he reluctantly agreed when another stern-faced officer shoved a stack of papers and an ink-brush to work with. He watched as the policeman placed a reassuring arm over the boy's shoulders, and led him into a room deeper inside the building. The hairy arm suspiciously slid down the boy's back and reached for the buttocks, but then they turned into the room, and the door was locked with a resounding, crisp 'click'. Uncle Wei sighed and tapped to his magically enhanced hearing just for the sake of entertaining himself while he filled out a number of forms that asked exactly the same thing - name, address, age, gender, education, hobbies, favourite food, et cetera with no relevance to the boy's case.

Some rustling sounds of robes being untied. The unmistakable brushing scrapes of someone's calloused hands gliding on a child's unblemished skin.

"There are no scratches or bruises, and no foreign liquids or residues anywhere... What? You think you were healed with the temple's magic, and washed clean in a bath?"

"Mmm, that won't help, because there is no physical evidence. So, maybe rather than looking for physical evidence, you can show and tell Uncle Policeman what happened, alright?"

“Let’s start. Tell me, how did they kiss you?... tongue in the mouth? Can you show me how that works? Here, put your mouth on mine, and show shushu how it was done. Mmm... no, wait, wait. Let me demonstrate this to you, to prove that I’ve understood what you tried to show me, alright?... okay, hold still, tilt your chin, and open your mouth. Make sure to move your tongue like you described. Uncle Policeman is coming in... Mmm...”

“Next, did they touch your breasts? Were they gentle or rough?... you’re not sure? Here, let me try, on your chest... how does it feel?... that was ticklish? Alright, how about this?... too hard? Here, let me touch with both hands... my, my, you’re growing up well, aren’t you?”

“Where else did they touch?... down there?”

More rustling sounds followed, of pants deliberately pulled down, of loincloth willingly unwound and dropped to the ground; the last defensive barrier was lost to the child that was locked in a room with the Uncle Policeman.

“Show me how they touched your privates... you don’t have to be shy, boy. Come on...”

“You’re too stiff from embarrassment, I guess. Come, let this shushu help. I’m a certified police investigator, so I know. Now, lie on the bed and open your legs. Yes, yes just like that. Mmm, that’s quite a nice view.”

“Did they touch you like this?... or like this? Are you sure it’s not the other one? Here, let me touch it again with my fingers...”

“How did it feel?... you’re not sure? That’s not right. You need to be honest with your feelings. Here, shushu will hold it and start moving it back and forth very quickly... yes, like that. Tell shushu , how do you feel?”

“It felt good? Oh no, that’s not right either. You should know that if it feels good then you can’t call it rape... you’re not sure again? You just said that it felt really good, and now it doesn’t?... No, I’m not stopping my fingers until you give the right answer.”

“It doesn’t feel good? You’re lying, and I’m a certified police investigator, so I know. Your face says it all, boy. Come on, where are your Gusu Lan manners? Be truthful, boy. Do you want some more? Of this? Or this?”

You can have both, shushu will comfort you if you feel uneasy...

You want both? Yes?

Does it feel good that you want both? Hmm?

So what happened to you felt really good, right?

Good boy. That’s the right answer.”

“Next, did they play with your balls too?”

“Show Uncle Policeman how they touched your balls.”

“Ah, you’re not doing it right. Here, let shushu show you how it’s done with both hands. See, one for your wee-wee, and one for your balls. Is this what happened?... what do you mean you cannot remember? I can’t understand what you’re saying, you’re making incoherent noises. Let shushu do it again, with both hands. Do you like the hand on the wee-wee? Or the one on your balls?... both? You’re greedy, but you liked it, don’t you?”

“Alright. You said they used their mouths... like this?... or like this? Ah, it’s hard to do this alone. I’m calling in a few of my police friends to help you out, so don’t feel alarmed, okay?”

Hey, the two of you, bring in some snacks for this poor boy!”

Uncle Wei raised an eyebrow when two more younger officers exchanged excited whispers, grabbed a few bags of candies, dumplings and drinks, and they filed into the room. As the door closed again, he caught a glimpse of those men unbuckling their belts. Another roll of eyes - he still had tons of forms to fill, anyway.

The dirty uncle imagined that the senior policeman sucked on little A-Ji’s cock, while each of his junior officers attacked one defenceless testicle. They would take turns kissing his lips, molesting and groping his sweet pre-pubescent body, sucking the boy’s nipples vigorously, and of course, there had to be fingers caressing inner thighs, legs, tiny toes, before moving in for the main course of a deflowered eight-year old’s tight buttocks. He was a professional and experienced rapist, so he knew the tactics used by men as vile as him, knew that they strive to insert many fingers into the delicate anus to dribble the undeveloped prostate like a basketball, so that the boy experienced intense adult pleasures before his time - the gland would swell sweetly until it starts to contract uncontrollably, sending torrents of seedless nectar that only eight-year olds could produce from their virginal loins, straight into waiting, greedy mouths.

“Ah, there’s a bit of stickiness inside your bum. We need to scrape it out, maybe there are some leftovers that we could use... ah, boy, you’re feeling it, aren’t you? Tell shushu and his friends how you’re feeling now. You have to tell us, because it’s part of the process. We’re certified police investigation officers, so we know... what did he say... yes and no? What on earth are you moaning about, boy? Shushu will keep moving his fingers inside your bum until you can clearly tell us how you’re feeling. Hmm, does it feel good?”

“No, no, you can’t run away like this. You’re reporting a serious crime, so we need to examine every inch of you, otherwise you’ll break many sect rules. You’ll have to stay here for a while, and we will take care of you.”

“Stop crying, boy. This handsome junior Uncle Policeman is just trying to examine your insides. We found some stickiness just now, didn’t we? He’s just using his special tool to have a better look, so spread wider, and for goodness sake, stop struggling!”

“It’s not a pen-- You’re a bad boy, how dare you use coarse language inside the police station! Shut your mouth or we will punish you according to the sect rules for disobeying the elders! Bend your knees further to the back, he can’t reach the deeper parts if you keep kicking your legs like that!”

A few minutes later, the senior police officer who interviewed little A-Ji, now a little dishevelled and breathing heavily, walked out of the room with a visible tent in his pants. He wiped his mouth of unnamed clear fluids and grinned at Uncle Wei.

“Sir, we need to detain the boy because he’s lodged a very serious accusation against the Temple’s High Priest and the monks, and there is no evidence of the crime on him. We’ll conduct our own investigations over the next few days and keep you posted. He’ll be cross-examined by the relevant authorities, and he’ll be in good hands, I can assure you. I hope you don’t mind.”

The uncle was most pleased to be released from his burdensome predicament. He raised his hand to ease any tension in the air - clearly little A-Ji was resisting another gangrape, and the police officers weren’t exactly happy at having to fight a feisty little runt to satisfy their sexual cravings. “Oh, not at all, not at all, officer, Sir. But what should I tell his older brother who’s been waiting for his return for the past two days? I cannot go back empty handed, you know that, officer.” He gave a sly wink.

In a terrible turn of events, the temple’s Head Priest emerged from nowhere, and marched into the police station, fully dressed in his revered saffron robes. Uncle Wei snapped his fingers and gave the wrinkled, obese but calmly smiling monk a thumbs up. Erasing the evidence, of course! the uncle thought, and checked off one last item in his list of ‘things to do when conducting a sexual offence’.

“Here, for your troubles,” the Head Priest murmured and didn’t even bat an eyelid - a pouch of gold ingots landed with a thud on the man’s open palms. Uncle Wei bowed respectfully with mutterings of many thanks. The Head Priest pointed a finger outside the main entrance of the police station, “There are more fragrant wines and plates of grilled, stewed and braised meats, fresh vegetables and summer fruits in the cart outside. They’re all yours - tax-free harvests from the temple’s devotees, sorted by the most gifted of our monks with sharp acumen for worthwhile investments to make sure that our new.. business partners, such as yourself, will return for repeat transactions. I hope I made myself clear?”

Uncle Wei grinned his two million dollar smile and bowed repeatedly; he had gained the favour of the Temple’s highest ranking priests, after all, and only if he played his cards right. The Head Priest waved off the man and walked straight into the main office of the police station.

“Of course! The pleasure is all mine! I will ask my good friend, the Headmaster, to sponsor a scholarship and send the elder brother to a study trip for new teachers. Would... two weeks of detention for my boy be enough?” the uncle started to skip and hop out to the doorsteps to the bright afternoon sunshine, salivating at the thought of free-flowing liquor.

“Yes, yes, more than enough to satisfy my men and break the boy so that he doesn’t leak a single word out. Now go along, peasant,” the Head Priest harrumphed in mere disinterest, followed by the senior police officer, and disappeared into the many dark, dimly lit corridors inside the building.

There was a small commotion at the police station, because suddenly a group of monks took up temporary residence with the policemen. However, nobody in the Cloud Recesses realized that something very, very wrong had happened, or that a boy had been sacrificed for the sake of continued peace enjoyed by many.

The door to the room opened again, with many footsteps shuffling in.

“Hello, boy. There are some men from the authorities who would like to ask you a few questions to assist and conclude the investigations. They’re really powerful men, and they can make sure a swift, decisive judgement will be delivered to justice.”

“Hello my sweetie. We meet again. The Head of Police is my relative, so you know what this means.”

“It’s a bad, bad thing to do to report on your elders. That’s Rule Number Three broken many times over. You need to be punished so that you won’t repeat your mistakes again. The gods will forgive your diabolical deeds after we’ve cleansed your body with our everlasting love.”

“Your Uncle Policeman said that we can use the police station for two weeks. Until then, you should repent and open your heart and body to us, you infernal rascal!. Come on, drop those pants and spread your legs on the bed, now!”

“Ah, the fragrant scent of a child! I can lick your atrociously youthful skin all day like this, and this! Stop squirming away! These kiss marks and love bites aren’t just for show, they’re holy marks to show the gods that you’ve received our love!”

“Oh, lovely wicked boy, come to papa priest, it’s time for worship and you know which part I love to worship the most! Peel it back, boy, lift it up and peel it back, my wet tongue longs for a taste!”

“Heavens be blessed, your rosebud needs some hot loving to bloom into spring! Open up and spread your baby buttocks for us. Us sinful monks need to purify ourselves by making some hot holy babies inside your divine boy-pussy, because we’re just so pent-up day after day reading boring sutras! We’ve missed your sweet tightness after you left, boy, so let’s continue from where we left off!”

.

Little A-Ji would sometimes wake up with a fever - or perhaps his body felt too hot from the constant rapes and molestations, or perhaps his throat was parched because he screamed until his voice was hoarse, or perhaps because he was fed with drugs inside the food and drinks while being held inside the tiny room with four white walls. His body was battered and bruised all over, he didn’t even dare to look at the state of his crotch, because many terrible Uncle Policemen and evil monks lined up and held a mass orgy inside that room over the span of many hours... or was it days? - he couldn’t tell because there were no windows in the room -, and each of them spent immeasurable time inside him, breeding him like a bitch until his belly bulged with smelly men’s seed, his buttocks flared and lay in a pool of cum, his genitals had been horribly wrecked and mutilated, but he wouldn’t know because he was numbed to the attacks, all he could remember were horny, excited men rubbing his dying child-penis, bouncing between his legs, layers of sweaty fat rolling upon his frail body, the frightening sounds of racing heartbeat and tasty grunts, of bites on his nipples, limbs and everywhere else because of the passionate lovemaking that took place where men's bodies joined with the child, until little A-Ji's insides were creampie'd and inundated with enough sperm to impregnate a whole nation, when men rutted uncontrollably into his rosebud, then sprayed countless times to sow their wildest seeds into his garden of ruined, devastated, barren love, and more Uncle Policemen and monks would ravage his xiao ji ji, telling him lies that policemen can be trusted, that the temple was the last refuge for the weak and the helpless, but that trust has been broken, irreplaceable, irreversible, irrevocable, just like his virginity, innocence, the days of pure happiness sweeping the floors with a straw broom and helping with the laundry, gone dirtied, muddied, covered with smelly cum, more and more men surround his shivering body on the bed, urinating, ejaculating, groaning upon him, telling him what a good boy he is, spreading his ass like a willing prostitute so that pleasure can be torn away from his adolescent flesh, shredded, his mind couldn't stop thinking, sperms swimming inside his destroyed anus, fertilizing eggs that had turned poisonous black and loosened from their sacs, aborting all signs of life within, his penis looked bloodied, it was swollen, played with saliva, vicious bites, hollow straws pushed into it until agony blinded his vision, bubbles and more saliva being blown into it and sucked out like a plump juicy summer peach, adults ejaculating directly into his testicles, his cockslit peed and sputtered unknown liquids, then dipped into chilli paste and soy sauce, served with his favourite boiled fish he remembered eating with Xi Chen da ge, but not before Uncle Wei snooped in with a basket of fruits and pork roast, greasy meaty fingers continue to fiddle his penis, his torn penis, it was always about his penis, everyone wanted a taste of his penis - those greasy, slimy men, Uncle Wei and his merry friends, the Head Priest who raped him too many times, the monks that waited in line, the policemen who grinned when they pulled down their zippers and forced their penises into his mouth, into his rosebud, yank and spank his child-penis with a feather duster, fiddle and play with xiao ji ji flying away, crowing, cracking their eggs, it was always about the penis--

The eight-year old boy was broken. He hiccuped and laughed like a newborn babe, then reached down to his throbbing, terribly swollen wee-wee, and pulled down his flabby foreskin to show the men - his audience - surrounding the bed, his sanctuary, his heaven - the purplish, blotched but glistening head marred by too many sprays of adult men's cum and forced injection until the cockslit looked inverted and mangled.

Little A-Ji jiggled his ugly child wee-wee suggestively and started to leak out warm pee mixed with pungent, fermented cum that had invaded and infected his genitals long, long ago.

“Uncle, uncle, please play with A-Ji's penis... please, please...” he smiled with a perfect set of pearly white teeth, his eyes glazed with uncried tears, his cheeks wet and hot, his mind already gone far, far away.

.

Uncle Wei thought that things were a little too quiet in the neighbourhood, a few days after the fifteenth of the lunar month. Xi Chen had been sent away with luggage bags, his younger brother never turned up, the Lan brothers' house seemed a little abandoned, neglected, dusty sometimes, the vegetable patch turned brown because no one watered the plants. He sat at the doorway of his house, scratched his crotch and took another swig of his favourite drink. He distantly wondered if he should go to the market and join some merry friends to prey on other innocent boys, but he was too lazy now that he was surrounded by riches sponsored by the Temple, the headmaster and the local authorities.

As far as he knew, there was never an investigation into the temple's activities during the subsequent days or weeks. He waved imaginary little banners to support his favourite new business partner, the Head Priest, when he learned that everyone got off scot-free, and all records and evidence, if any, had been buried or destroyed.

He lifted his jar to toast to the bright sunny and mildly chilled morning air - three drunken cheers for those who, like him, love little boys most.

“ Lao gong , you have really terrible dreams, you know?” Wei Ying snubbed at the husband in broad mid-morning daylight, when he took a bite off his grilled wild pigeon.

The pack of three white-robed men decided to take a short break after an uneventful trip between a couple of unimportant farms in the outskirts. With the Kingdom making a mess out of the Tian's nests, the local police women were gone, and the roads were empty, devoid of any Imperial forces because they were mostly concentrated on defending their cities. Villages had been emptied out, presumably to feed the ravenous succubi who, to the Qishan Lan's amusement, lost a significant portion of their nourishment overnight when a host of Gusu Tian humans along with any recently captured men who still fiercely declared their allegiance to the extinct Gusu Lan, had disappeared from their cages.

The trio chose to travel along the fringes of counties and away from any areas of conflict and confrontation, although that meant they had to take some detours and spend more time on the road without making any real progress towards civilization. During this time, Wei Ying hunted for food, Lan Zhan prepared the food, and Jing Yi - well, he ate the food, mostly.

(Big Apple happily grazed around nearby uninhabited pastures, Ernie stayed indoors with his meimei because poor Ni-er was a ill with mild stomach cramps after eating too much good food with her tang ge s at the campsite, and she kept on pooping amazing stuff inside their mobile home.)

“Matriarch... do you share the same dreams as Patriarch?” the junior disciple asked with naive curiosity. He also partakes in the aromatic meats of wild birds, and showed his appreciation with lip-smacking goodness with each bite.

Lan Zhan’s ears burned into shades of deep reds when he shot a glare at the harassing spouse. He carefully downed a spoon of chicken congee - made using an old jungle hen that Wei Ying had trapped earlier, topped up with chopped cabbage, diced carrots, julienned ginger, wild herbal roots and a drizzle of scallion and sesame seed oil.

Wei Ying laughed in mid-chew, “Ha ha ha! Jing Yi, when you’re married and have lived with your significant other for a long time, like me and this great and wonderful man, you’ll share anything, even dreams too! Right, lao gong ?” and he plucked a chunk of succulent pigeon meat then fed it to the husband. Lan Zhan thought Wei Ying was flirting with him to placate his mood, especially when the younger man tickled the husband’s lips with that offending chunk of oily meat. He ate the offered bite anyway, then licked his lips to cleanse his palate that was still used to bland food, like congee. You're forgiven, he wordlessly said with a petulant "Hn".

Then, Lan Zhan fed a spoon of congee to the spouse. Jing Yi remarked that he really admired how the two acted so comfortably in each other's presence, and he wished his own parents were like that too, whether staying under the same roof, studying music and reading scripts in the same study room, or dining on the same table as a family. Wei Ying ripped a juicy roasted pigeon wing and aimed it at the boy's mouth; simultaneously and without prior warning, Lan Zhan too, scooped some congee, blew a few times then placed the spoon in front of the boy's face.

The boy didn't really know what to make of it, but he accepted, albeit hesitantly, the offered food, like a baby chick being fed by its overzealous parents.

"Eat well, because after this, we'll be entering one of the larger cities in Gusu, and we'll need all the energy to fight the enemy," Lan Zhan remarked. They had run out of back-lane routes and there was no choice but to run the gauntlet and traverse through occupied settlements.

"Yeah, make sure your sword is sharp, your eyes stay bright, and your stomach is full when we go in! We're following Si Zhui's trail and you said he could be in one of the upcoming cities that we'll be passing by," the spouse cheerfully said, as he waved a fatty pigeon butt (the bishop's nose - a classic favourite) into the air enthusiastically.

"Enn!" the boy nodded.

Jing Yi's best friend had left very few clues about his whereabouts, but he knew that the closer he was, the stronger his intuition - he could feel it in his bones. He'd found a strip of white cloth tied to a messenger pigeon's legs shortly after he fled his home and ran to the south. The cloth bore markings that reminded him of Si Zhui - it was hard to describe, because again, he felt it inside him and his guts told him that it was Si Zhui's message for help - and because the cloth smelled like the Si Zhui he remembered whenever they got together for drinks in the teashouses. One word was hand-written meticulously well - just like Si Zhui's - "Cai"; the other words were lost to the frayed edges of the cloth. There were several cities named "Cai" in Gusu, and most of them were in the vicinity of Caiyi Town. Jing Yi bet his meagre life savings that Si Zhui was in one of them, if not Caiyi; he hoped Si Zhui managed to escape the dire situation, because he knew that Caiyi was one of the Tians' most powerful, hellish stronghold in the province.

Notes for the Chapter:

This was a personal 48-hour challenge since I have two extra days of holiday after the weekend when the last chapter was posted. Ta-dah! Smut in its full glory during a two-day retreat from the real world. Well, actually I don't really have any ideas for the main story right now, so I'm just having fun typing whatever R18 stuff comes to mind during these boring post-lockdown days.

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

P.s.: oops, forgot about the lovely Laughing Buddha!

P.s. 2: a slight addition of icky details!

Chapter 112

They were about to ambush and halt a mass kidnapping operation being carried out by unmasked Tian succubi, when Jing Yi very, very timidly asked his Matriarch - his mommy of sorts -, with reddened earlobes and two hands covering his crotch, if he could go and pee first before launching the first attack.

It was expected that as the trio got closer to the former human settlements located in the heart of Gusu, the more populous the areas surrounding the perimeters. The number of villages increased, but they were already vacated - very recently, though; they found that the farmlands were deserted just a few days ago - in relative terms in this time-stopped world -, livestock animals were abandoned not long before and were still healthy, the houses weren't too dusty, the food on the tables were a little stale but edible, and there weren't that many dried leaves, overgrown grass or piles of trash lying around. Lan Zhan even pointed out some faded footprints in the mud, and clear signs of struggle on walls and against tree trunks; Wei Ying conjectured through his overactive imagination that due to the lack of food and the increasingly dire situation that the Tians faced, the succubi probably stopped disguising themselves as humans - transforming oneself is a major qi drainer -, and ditched proper management of their food inventory - rather than spending time carefully cultivating, harvesting and breeding their own human stock, they were actively rounding up as many living bodies as possible to immediately fuel their armies needed at the frontlines of battles.

So when they chanced upon a few Tians - now garbed in their scantily clad Far, Far Western clothes made of furskins, reptilian leather and plenty of metallic armour plates -, forcing a group of terrified captured farmers and merchants into a large wooden cage pulled by a giant horse had red eyes and emitted black wisps flavoured with Corrupted aura - they knew they had to do something, fast. Poison-tipped spears poked and jabbed at those who resisted - the men who cursed the females “You... You were those officers that showed up every week to deliver good news and collect tithes! How can you be demons?!” and womenfolk who cried “You murderers! I gave my sons to you earlier today, please return them back!”. One unfortunate victim fell unconscious with black veins growing visibly on his neck and limbs, and his lifeless body was thrown into the cage like dirty laundry, as a visual warning to those who continued to refuse to climb into their doomed prison.

“That one still has life energies circulating in his body, although tainted with toxins and therefore will taste a little sour for the succubus. He will still eventually turn into a powerful fierce corpse if left on his own, since he died full of fear, frustrations, regrets and vengeful feelings. Given the lack of food for the enemy right now, he'll probably be fed to the lower ranking succubi as a tart energy boost, sucked dry, then discarded into the dumpster where he'll rise as a weak feral undead creature. One fully sated succubi can be as strong as ten powerful fierce corpses, which is equivalent to hundreds of feral weak ones...” Wei Ying was sterile and detailed in his calculations, since the Dark Arts of toying and manipulating the dead is his forte (he'd written a few books on the subjects, which he claims has never been published).

Lan Zhan nodded in understanding - as the husband, he was very much in tune with his spouse's thinking. Jing Yi was visibly shaking and sweating, and he finally admitted that he'd never slain a succubi before, because he'd been running away from them for nearly the last half of the year - and that his bladder suddenly felt full, enough to trigger disturbing sensations that will probably be a handicap if he faced an eight-foot tall succubus with horns, wings, fangs, huge breasts and a voluptuous figure, head-on.

Wei Ying sighed, looked around their surroundings and remarked that the boy could relieve himself on the spot, since they were still quite some distance away from the enemy. Jing Yi “Enn”s gratefully and started to stand, but Lan Zhan yanked his wrist down, and the poor boy had to stifle a yelp.

“Not like that! You can’t stand up above the bushes, otherwise they’ll see you! Also, the downwind will carry your scent to the succubi too!” Wei Ying hissed, then knocked on the boy’s head with clenched knuckles.

“But... but... I really want to pee...” Jing Yi rubbed his scalp and whined. He squirmed as his bladder contracted desperately against the bursting sphincter, and closed his thighs while squatting amongst the dense undergrowth; he hoped nothing leaked.

It was the Patriarch who showed the right way to pee without being discovered by prowling succubi. He calmly instructed, using a few wise and impactful words; they should remain squatting, carefully fold up their robes, roll down their pants, pull out their dicks from the loincloth, “... then aim at the ground, like a girl. Not too hard, otherwise you’ll splash and your shoes will get dirty. Use your fingers to gently hold yourself and adjust the trajectory, because there is a tendency for the stream to arch upwards like an uncontrolled garden hose, if left unchecked.”

Wei Ying was already on to it, and he pissed like a girl, modelling the perfect crouch with his legs bent and spread wide. It didn’t bother the Matriarch that he let the boy stare at his hairy crotch (and a dense jungle of black curls surrounding his penis, all the way around the perineum until they abundantly covered the entire butt-crack). Lan Zhan sighed at the spouse’s crass behaviour, and so he too, adjusted his clothes and followed suit - he also needed to ease his bladder anyway, as with all men before a big battle.

Seeing his foster parents of sorts enjoy peeing in the bush, Jing Yi no longer felt ashamed or helpless in facing his dilemma. He mimicked their actions, and finally ahhh'd when hot steaming urine jetted out of his finally, finally deflating bladder.

(Later, Wei Ying would make crude toilet jokes about the fact that he has a 'hairy, oily, messy but ordinary-length mama penis', Lan Zhan has a 'well-groomed, not-so-hairy but the longest-ever papa penis', and that Jing Yi's was 'a cute little rooster with smooth baby chick eggs, still too young to leave the nest of fine and dainty curls'. The boy reddened into seven shades of tomato-reds, but he couldn't find a cheeky comeback, because when he compared their penis appearances and sizes, he was clearly at the losing end - and every bit of what the Matriarch said was true.)

.

Wei Ying realized, that being a Dark Arts master whose main instrument of terror was a flute that evoked Dark beings, when faced with foes of the same Dark kind that conjured similar terrifying Dark magics and monsters - was akin to being invited to a pillow fight party, and whacking each other with pillows. He watched from the corner of his eyes, while the villagers escaped and ran for their lives, how his screeching ominous-looking Dark spirits collided into those called forth by the succubi-kin, and they dissipated harmlessly into thin air with echoey screams. He summoned a few corpses who had decomposed and festered in some unoccupied huts (whose owners had disappeared long ago) and unmarked graves in the village's cemetery, to fight against fierce corpses that the succubi brought with them, hiding behind rocks and cliffs. Again, he watched, disappointedly, at how creaking, disintegrating and crumbling bodies pummeled each other with untrimmed fingernails, gnashing rotten teeth and sheer blunt force - until both sides collapsed into tired haphazard piles of disjointed, disfigured skeletal remains.

With nothing worthwhile to do, he tucked his golden flute back to his sash, then cast a modified version of the Paperman spell into Suibian. The blade unsheathed itself from the wooden scabbard, crackled with dark lightning and glowed with creepy black light, then with impeccable telekinesis powers, Wei Ying steered the blade independently into the air and straight to the battlefield. Jing Yi was having a tough time evading the lower-ranking succubi's attacks; he was surrounded by five individuals, and they raked their claws at his clothes, threw poisoned bombs and mind-bending spirit clouds, and those armed with traditional weapons swung their swords or rained arrows on him. He was getting bruised and clobbered from all sides; fortunately his Qishan Lan robes held up well and never bore a scratch nor a tear, however getting pushed around by feisty demonesses wasn't really a good way to fight.

The boy lunged forward, then performed sweeping slashes to the sides - classic basic sword fighting moves for tackling three opponents at once and keeping them at an arm's length. He barely nicked the succubi's armour, but at least the toxic claws didn't reach him. Suddenly, five long fingernails grappled at his blade to wrest it away - the monster's bare skin was tough as nails - and he couldn't pull his sword off. Another succubi hissed and growled in the most unladylike manner, with dripping fangs and forked tongue aimed at him, and she leapt for the immobile boy's neck. Jing Yi screamed in panic - and Suibian flew in to stab through the heart of the succubus whose gaping jaws nearly touched his face. There were plenty of angry screeches when Suibian spun, sliced, and propelled itself as though it was wielded by a master swordsman; soon, all three succubi lost their limbs or had their hearts punctured, gushing out black poisonous blood which wilted the grass, melted the surrounding rocks, but fortunately sizzled off harmlessly upon contact with the robes and sleeves of the Qishan Lan. Two more succubi ran after after the frightened but fleet footed Jing Yi - the weakest and tastiest morsel on the ground (fortunately he had peed before the battle, otherwise he would be seen sporting wet patches on his pants) - those two demonesses were, in turn, pursued by the disembodied black-blooded blade, and it became a matter of who will be caught first in a merry-go-round chase around the village.

Alone in the blue skies, Lan Zhan hovered without the need of any sword, and had an easier time despite shouldering the responsibility of taking down the leaders of the kidnapping - higher-ranking succubi who flew into the air because they had been well-fed, and wielded powerful fireballs, electrical thunderstorms, typhoons, ice blasts and all sorts of elemental magics at their disposal. One hand played a levitating guqin, the other twirled the ivory-white broadsword Bichen to flick away anything that dared to come close to the holy trinity of Jade Emperor-Lord Buddha-God of Mercy manifested as a human in majestic white robes. With an impassioned earth-shaking twang ! of musical strings, a rippling shockwave was sent radiating outward from the guqin, and instantly beheaded three succubi in a cacophony of a single fearsome note of Purity; unfortunately, Jing Yi was too busy yelling and running away for his life to notice such an incredible display of firepower, while the spouse sighed and berated the husband for being a show-off to no one in the audience.

True enough, black dots started to rise from faraway towns and cities - easily identified as swarms of more succubi and their servants. Red laser lights appeared on Lan Zhan's torso, strange whistling and beeping sounds were heard; nuclear warheads, missiles and all sorts of long-range weapons were aimed and locked at the man floating in the midst of blue skies. "Ah, Lan Zhan, you've stirred the hornet's nest with your Purity magic! It's like lighting up fireworks on a moonless night for these creatures of the Dark! We were supposed to infiltrate undetected!" the spouse whined from afar.

Wei Ying had to piece together an escape plan in record time. He quickly ordered Suibian to slay the two succubi on the ground, then weave under the surprised, yelping boy's feet so that he could surf (and fly) on it - Wei Ying knew that Jing Yi probably couldn't fly his own blade that well yet, given his young age; then, he waved at the two tentacle-kin hiding in the bushes to come along, but not before gifting Big Apple with some spikes, thorny protrusions and extra weapons and armour because that donkey had gone ahead to charge at the Corrupted horse - it brayed and honked angrily at the disturbing, perverted image of naturally beautiful equines, intent on ramming and running it down with its hooves; Ernie quickly gobbled up their motorhome and the wooden cage intended for human prisoners with its formless slimy extendable mass, then slingshot himself and Ni-er straight into their mother's loving arms; Wei Ying was furious when he realized that the husband was still flying around in the air, deflecting armed missiles, plasma fireballs, catapulted toxic globs, boulders as large as cows, and an insignificant but growing diverse collection of projectiles raining upon him from the stratosphere - so he used his enhanced Invisible Hands to yank that errant husband down from the air, with one hand particularly twisting a shell of the ear so that Lan Zhan winced and groaned, "Ow, ow, ow, ow, not so hard, lao po , ow, ow, ow, ow," until he tumbled to the ground unceremoniously in front of the spouse.

"Did you even hear what I said?" Wei Ying hissed, "We're getting out of here right now , and straight to the nearest town! No more showing off, do I make myself clear?" and he slapped the husband's meaty buttocks with many whacks, while the poor older man tried his best to get on his feet, flinching and whimpering at each terribly painful and spiteful spank (and he nnngh'd loudly in between, because pleasure flared out from the stinging pain too). The spouse continued to hit the husband's backside with his bare hands even as they disappeared through the shadowy forests and dense bushes, scolding the godly man for not using his brains, for not thinking ahead, for being too careless, and for many other reasons. The husband's cheeks flushed into chilli-reds, and he nodded repeatedly, promising to repent, and begged for reprieve from the terrifying wrath of the butt-slapping wife.

.

In a town named after generic weather elements (in this case, say, Caihong Town; 彩虹; Cai hong ; ‘rainbow’), the trio sneaked and sprinted between unoccupied buildings, broken crates that used to house human prisoners, and mountains of putrid remnants of corpses that failed to revive as the undead. Sirens rang, Imperial troops patrol the empty streets occasionally, rats and other vermin scuttle around buildings devoid of life; once in a while, fierce aerial combat took place in the blue skies above between men on flying swords and demons with wings, however such skirmishes lasted only for minutes before they disappeared to the horizon and an uneasy peace settled in; from a far distance some rumbling and explosions could be heard - it was the quintessential scene of a wartorn town.

“Jing Yi, don’t let your hood fall out, otherwise they’ll see you,” Lan Zhan warned while peering at a lonely street from behind a mound of trash, and the boy tightened his drab-looking brown cloak over his shoulders - it reeked of someone’s old sweat, but it was clean. Wei Ying hummed very quietly, while he held up the boy’s hand to dab medicinal paste from a jar in his hand. “This herbal paste will render you undetectable from the succubi’s keen sense of smell, taste and touch, and it works well on mosquito bites too. It’s our traditional family recipe for a healing salve,” he added, before adding a warning, “so that leaves only the sense of hearing. You must remain absolutely stealthy when you scout ahead, and do not make any noise. If you have to say something, try to make it high-pitched so that you sound like an unappealing female that stinks of bitter herbs, okay?”

Jing Yi nodded fervently, although he probably didn’t understand what he really needed to do to protect himself - because he’d never really experienced fighting such an insidious, overpowered enemy before; he thought fierce corpses were bad news, but these lethal ladies were worse. “Matriarch... what about you and Patriarch?” the boy asked, perplexed.

Wei Ying waved off the unimportant question (lest the boy's curiosity killed something worse than a cat), then remarked gruffly that they can take care of themselves, and that Jing Yi had nothing to worry about, as long as his personal set of standard issue Qishan Lan black-red and white tassels are tied snugly to his belt. The boy reluctantly "Enn"s and skipped across the street when Lan Zhan informed him that the coast was clear.

The spouse sighed, "This is the third place named 'Cai' that we're investigating, and I still don't see any signs of him or even Wen Ning. What do you think, lao gong?"

The husband hunkered down and sat on the ground in a lotus position, closed his eyes with a frown, and was already hard at work, in more ways than one. He started to project good vibes radiating from some of his heterosexual free-to-air all-nighter hardcore pornographic channels in ErNet; there were thought police scouring the towns - or more precisely, there was a constant presence of mind-reading and spying magic throughout succubi bases, whether in the form of talismans, Corrupted Eyeballs or invisible sensors, which are hallmarks of the Dark Arts (Lan Zhan remembered Wei da ge 's awesome abilities - if the succubi had even a fraction of that, he wouldn't be surprised). By airing hardcore porn into the minds of the occupants in town, he could neutralize such magics, and better yet, send many succubi into a relaxed, post-orgasmic lull, like pumping a room full of drug-laced vapours and send people to psychedelic and pleasurable sleep. With such a powerful tool in hand, Jing Yi could safely check buildings for signs of his best friend - guestbooks of local inns, records found in teahouses, receipts in the drawers of shopkeepers, prescription scripts in medicine shops, and so on.

Wei Ying knew he wouldn't receive a firm answer, because both were banking on the boy's gut feelings to locate their precious A-Yuan. Wei Ying slid a hand into the husband's pants and gave him a few really nice strokes. He crouched and dipped his head between the husband's legs to power-up the husband's greatest asset against the succubi. Lan Zhan scrunched his forehead and beads of sweat appeared - his concentration was top-notch. The husband's hardness was pleased tenfold by the spouse's exceptional blowjob - he'd taken a page from his san ge and deep-throated the man so well, that the older man's legs quivered and his hips jerked on the floor uncontrollably, never faltering even for a heartbeat. Finally, Lan Zhan hnngh'd in his meditation, and one-two'd straight into the spouse's waiting mouth - rich, creamy, full of sperm-y goodness -; Wei Ying continued to lick and suck noisily at the exceedingly scorching wildly twitching penis, that became the beacon of shining hope, literally - it beamed across the town sonic pulsations of very nice sexual feelings tuned with heterosexual flavours to suit the succubi's tastes.

Later, the couple raced downtown to catch up with the junior disciple (the husband ran with a slight limp, because he had to keep his erection that acted like a radio tower, and it was hard to run with a giant dong swaying from side to side like a voluminous pendulum). Along the way, they weaved into various Tian Mi Mi-esque buildings around the town square to release crying and overjoyed human prisoners who had beaten all odds and survived the Tian occupation. They ran helter skelter, screaming because they were terrified of the succubi's true form - vampires, ghouls, zombies, and a tirade of distasteful names were given -, and more importantly, caused chaos in the streets; Imperial troops and their monstrous guards chased after the escapees but they were sluggish, uncoordinated and clumsy in their drugged state. Jing Yi was blissfully unaware of what happened, but he took the chance to question the many people he came across about whether they've seen the last true Gusu Lan boy in existence - now man, probably - who would never part with white cloud-patterned robes and a forehead ribbon, whose smile is as sweet as sunshine, and whose face is as calm as the deepest rivers in Gusu, and who may have asked about teahouses that serve the finest pu'er tea that two same-aged, unrivalled Lan xiongli could spend an afternoon to catch up, for old times' sake.

.

Jing Yi poured through many documents, checked storefronts and the walls for any possible hidden scratched messages, and he tried to ask every fleeing, panicking fugitive about a person in white robes, or someone that could match the description of his best friend - but to no avail. Then, his Weiphone in the sleeves vibrated - the trio agreed to keep in touch using technological means, because Fairy Messenger spells could be easily hacked and listened in by Corrupted means. He fumbled with his shiny black gadget, nearly dropped it, and accidentally ended the call after entering the wrong password twice.

“Goodness, you still don’t know how to use your phone yet!” Wei Ying’s huffing voice buzzed from the receiver end, “Listen up, the two of us are in the middle of the succubi’s nest... yeah, that big bloated moving veiny thing that looks like a rotten chicken liver... oops, hold on -- Oi, Lan Zhan, stab their hearts! I said STAB THEIR HEARTS! They can still move without their heads and make terrible noises as long as their vocal cords are intact. The more they struggle and scream, the more back-up will arrive! -- sorry, your Patriarch is such an old sod sometimes...” Jing Yi had to suppress a giggle at how his foster parents (of sorts) were acting even while in the middle of a bloodbath.

Wei Ying informed the boy that he’d found the town’s registry and other related documents in the main office of the succubi’s nest - the Tians were smart to have stolen the huge tome from the former town council upon conquering the settlement. By following the paper trail, they could trace every citizen and visitors and hunt them down - and be assured that every surviving human in the vicinity fell into their clutches.

“Ah, Matriarch... no wonder I couldn’t get any useful information when I questioned the escapees. They keep telling me that they weren’t from Caihong and they were recently shipped in cages into the town after being captured or tricked by the Tians. None of them knew anyone who lived in this town,” Jing Yi remarked - and both realized that meant that the entire town’s former population had probably been decimated, cleanly, with not a single survivor left.

“But hear me out, junior... the book seemed to be well used until recently, and the names of people are crossed after they’ve been consumed too - I was able to check using a couple of corpses found in the heart of this nest that wore their names on their jewelry. Every name, marked with a home address or a date of entry, has been crossed out, at least in the first hundreds of pages...” there were sounds of many pages flipping, “but on the last date of record, there are a bunch of names of visitors who entered Caihong, and they’re not crossed out... the writing seems a little messy and hurried, with missing strokes and all that... hmm... this was probably penned about the time the gates closed with the lockdown...” Wei Ying’s clear, curious voice went into full detective mode at that point, but not until he was once again interrupted with angry hisses, “ Lao gong ! We’re on a stealthy assassination mission, so you can’t just decapitate everything on sight! Urgh... Jing Yi, can you believe this man...!”

The boy laughed again, softly. They exchanged some thoughts and ideas over the phone - like most Gusu Lan adults, Jing Yi’s line of thought resembled a typical logical thinker’s (and very rigid, even irrelevant during times of conflict - how could one find a missing person by visiting emptied inns and teahouses?), while Wei Ying’s was all over the place, but dabbled with creativity, inventiveness and out-of-the-box thinking (and a stroke of good luck - although the spouse didn't notice the husband's smug smile when he pulled out the heavy bound book). When Jing Yi mentioned that the fugitives kept labeling the Tians as 'vampires' amongst other terrible nicknames, that sparked a lightbulb inside Wei Ying's mind. The man asked: in a typical Gusu town, where do people go if they suspect they are chased by vampires?

“And check this out - there's an entry for an 'A-Zhui' on that date, with a comment that he brought a donkey that pulled a casket, said to be a distant relative of a resident of the town who had travelled outside and passed away recently. The official at the entry gates confirmed that there was a body inside the casket, but he didn't check further since it was a dead body anyway... so I tracked this A-Zhui's movements through a series of documents, and I have a slip here that says he can seek an audience with the local temple priests about performing funeral rites and storage of the casket... oh crud, lao gong ! No! Put away that guqin, now! We can't afford another blunder like the other time!...”

Jing Yi felt the situation had turned surreal, and he wiped a tear that for some unknown reason, found its way rolling down his cheeks. He had spent many months on the road, hampered by many obstacles, trying to stay alive with his xiongdì s, grasping on imaginary last straws when he thought he'd lost his best friend and that the trail had gone cold - then suddenly, there was evidence that his best friend, in all likelihood, entered Caihong under a pseudonym that resembled his true name, together with his blood-related companion who could only pass off as a dead man lying in a coffin (and he knows this has been done before - they'd shared many stories together, particularly about on his best friend's worldly travels and adventures), and probably a bunch of other survivors too - all of them must have gone and hid in the temple after being pursued by those hunters presumed to be unholy, particularly if there is an adjacent morgue or cemetery that is well taken-care of by the priests - because succubi have zero interest in the land of the dead, where caskets are typically stored, safe from those qi -sucking demonesses.

Victory and revelation was short lived, though - footsteps echoed into the teahouse where Jing Yi was.

.

It was Jing Yi's turn to squeak when one fully equipped and rather overweight succubi walked into the empty teahouse while Jing Yi busily searched through the eatery's bookkeeping, records and receipts strewn all over the payment counter. Her spiked boots thudded on the wooden floor, her gear creaked from being stretched by her fat arms and thunder thighs, and she trudged forward, albeit rather unsteadily. In mere seconds, she loomed over a shrivelled Jing Yi who immediately, and fastidiously, arranged his cloak, then dropped the Weiphone into a pocket, praying hard that he would not be recognized. The line had gone silent on the other end, when the succubi rasped in the most unappealing way - gritty, rough, filled with flying spit, drowsy -, "... Where... where did they go?"

Jing Yi stilled and shivered in place. The succubi, nearly nine-foot tall, leaned down and vacuumed the air around the boy with a loud sniff. She wrinkled her nose, and sported an ogre-like snarl, then slurred again, "You really stink... I said... wherrreeee... did they g-goooo?" She was obviously high on something, so Jing Yi thought, with a racing heart, that the succubi didn't realize who she was talking to. He raised a hand and pointed to a vague direction behind her, and tried his very best to mimic the voice of a shrilly damsel in distress, "There, b-behind that building."

The intoxicated succubi grunted, stared at the hooded form with mild interest, before growling something about having to work too hard to hunt down food of a particular gender that ran on two legs, and shuffled out of the teahouse lethargically and with a gigantic yawn.

Jing Yi finally exhaled and his legs gave out; he fell on his rump - his neck was still intact, his bladder throbbed from an urge for release again - he appreciated that his private parts were still intact - then the Weiphone slid out and tumbled to the wooden floor too.

“Jing Yi? Jing Yi? Are you still there? Oh god, I hope you didn’t put yourself on mute... answer me!”

The boy whimpered and floundered on the ground, dropping flipped-opened books and stacks of papers, before he grabbed the surprisingly slippery Weiphone firmly in his hands. To the other side, there were some moments of painfully deafening rustles and distorted crackles when the microphone was rubbed or touched - but at least the emergency situation seemed to have passed.

Wei Ying directed the boy to head to the local temple first, while the couple worked to free the remaining prisoners and “finish up what we set up to do”; Jing Yi could hear the roar of flames, distant screeching and the swish and clangs of blades upon wet flesh, at the other end of the call. He quickly picked himself up, dusted his cloak and clothes, and hurried out of the teahouse before that ogre returned.

Notes for the Chapter:

Moving along... plot, and more plot, I guess. It'll be a while before inspiration hits again, so brace yourself for a drought and a dearth of ideas...

I couldn't get myself to write more smut after wringing my arms dry from the previous chapter, so hopefully some dirty jokes might help.

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 113

“Ahhh... Lan Zhan, you cheat! I spent hours pouring through these town registry records while you had fun with the hot chicks,” the spouse whined. Wei Ying looked fatigued and had dark circles under his eyes, because he’d been up all night (but there is only mid-morning within the confines of Gusu) going through towering stacks of documents that surrounded him like an ugly bird’s nest. He’d ransacked the office and made sure every bound book or scroll was not left untouched - the last time he challenged his speed-reading ability was probably the time when he looked up medical books for a cure to treat Jiang Cheng’s loss of golden core, nearly two decades ago - fortunately, the payback was quicker, and he had found clues pointing to where Si Zhui and now, the real probability of Wen Ning, were last headed to.

The husband “Hnn”s impassively, clearly unperturbed by the spouse’s usage of inexcusable words. “The succubi are not hot because their skin is chilled like the Dark undead. They’re not poultry either, and in fact, they’re more closely related to reptiles, if anything,” he replied, while wiping black sticky blood from Bichen with a ragcloth. He looked absolutely stunning, as always, even after a gruesome battle - god-tiered ethereal handsomeness, majestic in all aspects, neither a speck of dust or a splatter of blood anywhere, and his hairpiece is never out of place.

“Tch, you’re such a spoilsport. Can’t you go along with the joke and say ‘Yeah I had a good time banging the girls’, like any other normal man?” Wei Ying drawled and then yawned; he even stretched his hands and arched his back to pop a couple of vertebrae to emphasize his point. Lan Zhan did not respond to that unsavoury comment, and simply started to put away the registry documents - despite the fact that nobody would ever use them anymore, and that they were currently in the heart of the enemy’s fortress in Caihong Town, Qishan Lan family rules dictate that books must be sorted, scrolls stacked in neat rows and parchments properly arranged according to sequential if not alphabetical orders, before leaving them to wither in the dust. Wei Ying could never comprehend the intangible value that the Lans place upon written records, but since he was a rightful Lan member as well, he chipped in by bulldozing them into a presentable pile, in which the husband then twirls his fingers, and everything re-arranged themselves back into their respective bookshelves, drawers, cabinets and cupboards.

Just then, thunder boomed in the distance, and the earth rumbled. Invisible ripples of Dark energy throbbed from the center of the Tian Mi Mi-esque building which used to house hundreds of succubi and thousands of marauding fierce corpses and other Undead creatures; a quarter of them have been slain by Bichen - one by one meticulously by stabbing their black, poisoned unliving hearts, as dictated by the spouse, since the husband was forbidden to use fancy sword moves to wipe out the entire army with a single strike -, while the remaining were either prowling the streets of Caihong to locate their fleeing human prisoners-cum-food, or regrouping outside the building for another wave of attack to recoup their losses and try to reclaim their nest.

(It helped that Wei Ying summoned a swarm of earthworms, caterpillars, maggots, millipedes and other disgusting relatives of the same appearances to rise from the grounds outside the nest - that itself successfully held back the Tians from advancing into the nest, because it is a generally known fact that Tian females screech and step-dance with admirable quick-foot moves at the sight of worms, just as how Wei-kin detest and fear canines from the animal kingdom.)

The husband held Wei Ying's arm and pulled him close for a chaste kiss on the cheeks. The spouse was surprised at the brazen display of affection, right in the middle of the battle for Caihong and in pursuit of the last surviving Gusu Lan.

Wei Ying turned into seven shades of red, “Wh-Wh-What was that for? You naughty hero, how dare you kiss your wife at a time like this, what if the other women around here saw us and they become jealous?” he grasped his fingers and acted coyly, including sending cheeky winks, shy smiles and swung his arms a bit flirtatiously.

Lan Zhan’s lips curved upwards faintly, calm and contentment clearly expressed on his face, “Mn. It’s for my good luck. The succubi can burn in their jealousy, my soul belongs only to you, lao po . I’ll see you at the temple.”

Wei Ying mewled and purred his “mmmm!”s (with little hearts all over the speech bubble), then wiggled his hips sensuously as a silent promise that when the whole situation is resolved, he would repay the sweetness a hundredfold. According to the Book of Judgement safely tucked in the husband’s possessions, Lan Zhan was destined to meet the reincarnation of Tian shijie in a few minutes’ time - the husband had been loitering around long enough, killing succubi and other monsters to pass the time, not to mention to guard the spouse while the latter checked through registry records and later helped with the clean-up. Wei Ying didn’t want to be dragged into an old family spat between the Lans and the Tians, especially when it involved time-travel, resurrections, alternate dimensions, complicated disciple relationships, assassination attempts, mass murder, landgrabs, animosity between in-laws, a missing Sect Leader Xi Chen da ge , and very powerful magics that could jeopardize his personal mission to rescue their precious baby Lan Si Zhui and the baby’s adorable friend, Wen Ning.

“I’ll text you the exact location when it’s time for the pick-up, so don’t you dare to put your holo-phone on silent mode on me this time,” Wei Ying reminded the husband, then with the graceful finesse of a Dark Arts grandmaster, he snapped his fingers and instantly teleported out of the building.

Not too far away, in the central atrium of the building, atop a mountain of dessicated, freshly slaughtered corpses, an unnatural tear in space appeared. It crackled with pure Dark energy, emitted lightning and caused mini earthquakes that caused walls to crack, furniture to topple and rubble to fall to the ground. The rip expanded, and the corpses beneath began to twitch and rise; the pile of dead bodies began to squirm and move on their own like Mexican waves from the 21st century; skeletal, sinewy arms rise into an unholy prayer gesture to herald the arrival of a grand evil queen.

Lan Zhan strode out of the office, a steely gaze on his face and his hair blew to the back from invisible winds; a shiny cleaned Bichen firmly grasped in one hand while the other glowed navy blue in preparation to conjure the magical guqin; he was due for a royal appointment.

.

Wei Ying arrived at the local temple's main gates with a clash of lightning strike and thunder, and not a moment too soon. The soot-coloured walls bore ancient history that stretched back to centuries before, rich with stone carvings, sutras and drawings depicting the stories of local gods and renowned sages, and sculptured effigies. A large, impressive red tiled roof, built on wooden beams, stretched as far as the width of the temple grounds, however when Wei Ying walked through the gates, he saw a scenery of devastation - residual firepits that used to burn with bodies and trash, skeletons still garbed in rusty armor or frayed saffron robes lay haphazardly on the ground - their blessed bodies cannot be turned into undead monsters in the afterlife -, multitudes of holy statues have toppled, lost their heads and limbs strewn amongst overgrown weeds, scriptures and portraits that used to hang on walls have been burnt and only ash and cinders remain, broken swords, arrows and monks' staffs littered the cracked floor.

Outside, the air began to chill and the skies darkened overhead into a carpet of overhanging cumulonimbus clouds; there was a sense of dread pervading the temple, and eerie groans could be heard amongst the dense forests. He heard some females barking out orders in alien languages, there were the sounds of heavy footsteps - some marching, some dragging their feet -, there were snarls, growls and - his blood ran cold - dogs barking and howling as well. It seemed a group of Tian soldiers and their multi-species army had lie in waiting and acted upon detecting his arrival (he cursed the lightning and thunder - hallmarks of a Dark Arts master's grand entrance, which made him susceptible to being hunted down too easily).

Wei Ying knew he needed to find Jing Yi, who should be somewhere inside the temple grounds, but not before the Imperial forces caught up with them first. He needed to stall the Tians and buy more time for themselves.

With a silent word of apology, Wei Ying cast an incredibly long-distance Invisible Hand to stroke the husband's radio tower between the legs - Lan Zhan on the other side of the town Hnngh'd but that only strengthen the man's resolve to man up, and face the great adversity with his fearsome brand of bravery and tenacity - the husband shifted his legs into a ready-stance, in preparation to wreck indescribable destruction while sporting the biggest hard-on his groin has to carry; Wei Ying simply tuned into ErNet to pick out a sexy dream from the husband's infinite free-to-air hardcore pornographic channels and beam it through the said twitching radio tower, so that very, very good vibes blossomed and radiate through the entire town and the temple itself. Wei Ying direly hoped those good feelings would drug or stun the Tians into drowsiness while he frantically tried to locate the junior disciple.

.

In one particular free-to-air channel that airs twenty-four seven...

A-Xian loved to spend his Sunday mornings browsing through markets and exploring the local fun fairs; creature comforts for a boy who spent his childhood alone in the streets, now blessed with a home, a family and a lively community. With a few silver pieces in hand given by his master, he rushed to his neighbour's house to drag his boyfriend A-Ji out of bed before six o' clock (A-Ji would be considered a husband, or at least a fiance, except that the laws of marriage and betrothal do not extend to underaged children in this particular circumstance). As usual, Xi Chen da ge was doing the laundry in the dark backyard, so he told A-Ji to go ahead and make himself comfortable at the Lan brothers' humble home.

A-Xian shrieked like a feral eight-year old kid that he truly was, but stopped in his tracks when he walked into A-Ji's bedroom. Poor red-faced A-Ji was on his bunny-themed bed, with his knees bent and his hips raised unwillingly, and a very out-of-breath, sweaty and unwashed half-snarling, half-sneezing, half-yawning, half-back arching ecstatic Uncle Wei snugly lodged between the boy's lean thighs - he was on his last five ejaculations, and he desperately tried to unload everything he could within the span of five seconds.

“I could hear you from a mile away, you brat,” Uncle Wei grunted when he was done, referring to the new arrival. He groaned with satisfaction, then pulled out his turgid, cum-slicked hairy purple-red penis out of A-Ji’s stretched, puffy anus with a wet loud plop. He ignored the soft whimpers from A-Ji, who had woken up to the horrid sight of a rapist moaning happily inside his taut rosebud, hot rancid breaths panted into his pillow above his head, the sweaty, grimy abdomen of the abominable sex predator crushing his tiny child-body with each painful shove, each thrust of shaking hips. Uncle Wei raked his messy hair to the back, exhaled loudly - because it was always exceedingly pleasurable to rape a sweet eight-year boy first thing at daybreak and empty his balls into the boy thrice, since he snuck into the bedroom an hour before, at five -, then snubbed the other boy frozen at the bedroom’s doorway, “You’re too late, nyah, nyah, nyah, the early bird already caught the worm and flew away, and I’ve bedded your boyfriend long enough to father my babies. The last one wasn’t as good, since your kiddie screams spoiled our intimate and romantic atmosphere, when I was in my last five shots into him,” he remarked dryly and stuck his tongue out at little A-Xian, deliberately intending to provoke his most hated child in the neighbourhood. His greasy hairy hands lingered on the A-Ji’s semi-limp cock and continued to fiddle the spongy tube of flesh that had oozed many droplets of clear nectar even before sunrise.

A-Xian was unfazed, and launched himself at the two on the bed with a fiery high-pitched roar. The bed creaked dangerously, as A-Xian pummeled Uncle Wei with his tiny fists, then bit his arms with sharp teeth, and clawed at his thighs with untrimmed fingernails. That got the desired effect, and the dirty rapist uncle yelped in pain, then stumbled naked out of the bedroom while cursing every single child in the world with a shitload of cuss words.

Outside, Xi Chen chuckled softly - he thought it was rather lively ever since his neighbours - the highly-esteemed but extremely low-profile Gusu Lan master and the adopted child, A-Xian - started to befriend them, particularly A-Ji, and made frequent visits, often clashing with Uncle Wei’s daily intrusive stay-ins with the younger brother. He continued to scrub some garments, soap and rinse them, before hanging them out on the clothespin.

The boy helped his crying, sniffling abused boyfriend to rise up from the bed. He took him to the pool behind his house for a quick rinse especially around the buttocks (Uncle Wei's curd-like sperm was really stinky like cheese) and his wee-wee (Uncle Wei's saliva smelled bad in the morning, and he probably didn't brush his teeth before sucking off A-Ji). Next, A-Xian dabbed the boyfriend dry with a fluffy bath towel, applied some medicinal pastes on the bruises and scratches (he'd do this everyday, so he wasn't perturbed by the ugly marks that marred the boyfriend's smooth, unblemished eight-year old body), and clothed him with his robes. "There, A-Ji, you look very handsome today, and you're ready for our Sunday morning date!" the boy beamed his million dollar grin, as he used his tiny fingernails to comb the boyfriend's matted and long lush hair. A-Ji blushed and couldn't contain a smile, because his heart bloomed with nice feelings with A-Xian's tender loving care.

On their way out, A-Xian grabbed a few dumplings from the dining table - gifts from Uncle Wei, and perhaps the payment for his morning workout with A-Ji - and cutely hooked his hand with the boyfriend's, and together, they sauntered out to the streets. They bumped into the Gusu Lan master, who was on his way to meet Xi Chen - he promised to give the teenager a good education at no cost, and visited every few days to give him free tuitions - and also, to help out with the Lan brothers' household chores, because the master was adept at everything, ranging from sweeping with straw brooms to leave no dust on the floor, to folding clothes impeccably to leave no creases or wrinkles. Both children respectfully bowed with folded hands at the front, and wished the master well.

(Unknown to the pair of eight-year olds, Uncle Wei stalked them from behind, running from bush to bush, biting his fingernails and lips disappointedly at the lost opportunities to spend the lazy Sunday morning inside lovely A-Ji - but he would find ways to make up for it.)

.

Within the secure towering walls of the Cloud Recesses, weekend markets are boisterous, lively and thronged with people who sought out good food, great entertainment and wonderful ways to spend an enjoyable wholesome family time together. The two children went from stall to stall, browsing their wares (A-Ji loved to annoy the vendors with his endless prattling and unsolicited advice based on his A wesome S elling S kills), sampling delicious foods (A-Ji anxiously asked A-Xian not to spend so much money on snacks, but when the adorable wife - of sorts - prodded sausages, cream puffs, fish balls and fruit wedges to the boyfriend's lips, A-Ji was tempted to try them all, because he was a little hungry - they're growing boys, after all), enjoying a brisk walk in the warm morning sunshine and breeze (while holding hands! Then draw little hearts around where their hands intertwine...), watching buskers and acrobats perform their jaw-dropping skills (A-Xian kissed A-Ji's cheeks every time the latter smiled from the delightful shows; nobody really took notice, because there was nothing eyebrow-raising about two innocent-looking kids smooching each other in broad daylight in this world, after all).

(Uncle Wei tailed the two, but was distracted when he met his merry band of good ol' friends - hardcore convicts, pirates, smugglers, murderers, rapists and the lot, masquerading as vendors and shopkeepers. They had plenty of good wine to share, which the dirty uncle happily partakes, and therefore he lost sight of his targets; when his friends offered plenty of alternatives to a healthy, wholesome Sunday morning market, in the form of nubile young children served in tastefully sexual ways, Uncle Wei couldn't resist and ditched his original plans.)

A-Ji was very naive, kept to the straight main roads, and he enjoyed his Sunday morning trip to the market, swaying his arms lightly, humming children's songs and relaxed his mind, body and soul. A-Xian was much more street-savvy, and he cleverly steered his boyfriend away from impending threats - slapping away the greasy hands that tried to grab the boyfriend's buttocks; using a fruit kebab stick to poke at fingers that reached for the groin; cleverly talking out of shady-looking vendors who try to sell stolen goods at unbelievably low prices, or worse, invite unsupervised children who wish to buy some colourful clothes into their dingy fitting rooms (A-Xian could see how little boys and girls walked into those rooms and later, ran out crying while grabbing their molested crotches, their modesty thoroughly outraged); fending off men who wait around and offer free candies to children, before taking them to back alleys; avoiding cordial drink sellers set up near Kids' Toilets; pulling the boyfriend away when some stranger tried to approach them to ask for something - a direction, a plea to save a non-existent kitty, or something similar. He was busiest when they walked through tightly-packed crowds, and performed lightning-quick cultivation and martial arts moves to break and bruise any sex offender that dared to touch their bodies.

(Uncle Wei grabbed so many children's buttocks and their front bits as he meandered around his friends' businesses, served with a hearty dash of nipple-tweaks and indecent groping, that his hands were happily numbed - it was akin to getting massaged all over, and twice as pleasurable. He had the privilege of wearing some disguise - bandit eye masks, fox masks, false moustaches, fake silicone faces and so on - then following unsuspecting children into fitting rooms, toilets and to quieter places with candies to reel them in like baby fishes from a pond - when the time was right and the victims were trapped, he'd molest some, he'd sexually assaulted some and he thought that perhaps he'd planted more than a few babies because he was on a raping spree that included girls who had just reached puberty too. Of course, the children ran away crying, but nobody could trace the insidious serial rapist nor document his record-breaking run of child abuses; simply because he had the police, the temple monks and the headmaster on his side.)

Eventually, with full tummies and having had a couple hours of clean, fun time, the two decided to drop by a small corner marked 'Fun Fair'. It was a small playground for the children, and there were some games, rides and a few dodgy-looking venues. The couple tried everything on site (and had a wonderful time, really), until towards the end, A-Xian remarked that he was a little tired (because he ran so much like the feral wild child that he really was) and wanted to sit down to watch the 'Friends of the Farm' show. A-Ji was still quite energetic and awake, and didn't quite like how the show took place in a dingy-looking darkened circus tent, so he opted for 'Barnyard Babies', which was the most harmless-sounding petting zoo he'd ever known.

(Uncle Wei finally caught up with the two runaway kids. He was about to pounce and kidnap them into a dungeon, probably his monk friend's, but then a merry friend with sour alcohol breaths called out to him - the grizzly beer-bellied headmaster himself, who runs a respectable franchise of schools, kindergartens and childcare centres nationwide. They needed an extra hand in the kids' corner, where parents drop off their children to be cared for by responsible adults, while they shop in the market, and the number of customers had swelled to unmanageable numbers during the mid-morning. "You'll also get an hourly wage of one gold piece," the headmaster winked at him.

The greedy man weighed the potential returns of investment inside his mind, figuratively speaking - two bratty children versus a buffet of toddlers, adolescents, and pre-teens up to the age of twelve, plus enough money to buy a crate of Emperor Smiles; it was a no-brainer. Plus, he wanted revenge for his insatiable loins for not being able to orgasm inside his favourite rosebud during a beautiful Sunday morning, so probably he could vent his frustrations by sodomizing little boys and inseminating little girls to his heart's content, safely within the network of hardcore criminals operating in town; he noted there were no gender-segregation at the kids' corner, and thought that such outdated barbaric practices should be outlawed, because as a professional child rapist-for-hire, he should have the choice to choose between either little boys or little girls; not that he really mind, because both taste just as good for his excited meatstick twitching inside his pants at the prospect of getting a warm, wholesome child-fuckingly good squeeze of either sex.

"I'm not claiming responsibility if a few kids pop out in nine months' time," the Uncle responded gruffly, then turned towards the kids' corner while unbuckling his sash - there were too many kids waiting for him, and he has only one eager cock. The headmaster clapped his hands with glee and handed Uncle Wei, a new temp worker at the kids' corner, a few brown vials as his tools of trade.

"Oh, you don't have to worry, I'm taking class attendance at all times," the headmaster's oily smile was unmistakable, and he lifted then shook an evil-looking notebook in front of his new hire. Uncle Wei knew the headmaster's modus operandi - the grandfather of ninety-nine (and more illegitimate children) was an infamous veteran child trafficker, owner of a chain of breeding factories, and the top dog of the seedy sex slave industry, before he disappeared into obscurity, was never apprehended by the authorities, and underwent plastic surgery in the meantime. He was well-versed with the techniques used to effectively drug children, brainwash them, and use hypnosis and other tools of a child-rapist psychologist's arsenal to ensure that none of the adolescents remember what usually happens on their Sunday mornings other than a strange, unidentifiable throbbing pain and sticky white residues inside their private parts.

The girls who had their monthlies would be tracked down in school, and the headmaster would organize dirty foreign men to kidnap and gangrape such girls so that they would become properly impregnated. With growing bellies and the parents' dignity at stake, a few gold ingots and well-made threats would pay for the girls to be taken out of school and have their class records falsified, and to silence the affected families and bond them to the slavery system. The girls would then be carted away to be sold as sex slaves, particularly to men of finer tastes in the Far, Far West who wouldn't mind the flavours of used girls or those who sported heavy bulging bellies, then give birth to a generation of profitable child-slaves; the prettier girls would be used as commodities to barter with the Imperial Court for favours, so that the Emperor of Chang'an could raise the numbers of harem wives and concubines. Some would eventually be returned to town as soon as the next year or until they no longer command any value amongst dirty horny perverts, and back to their parents' safe haven.

// At that point, one wonders why there aren't many pretty girls within the walls of the Cloud Recesses, and that the Lan sect rely on the influx of outsiders of the female gender to keep their numbers up - such as nomadic families where the Tian shijie used to belong to, or perhaps, even Lan Wang Ji's ill-fated mother from outside of Gusu. //

The Uncle grinned with satisfaction with his new part-time job, after having fully evaluated his options, and marched with determination to his new destination - the kids' corner; somewhere, music blared, fireworks lit up, colourful sparkles and explosions blew up behind him from someone's magic show, he ruffled his outer robes and flung it to the side... (drumroll)... it's Rape Time!)

(cue goth metal music)

.

In the ‘Friends of the Farm’ show held inside a dark, rather dubious-looking circus tent, excited children on rows of creaky benches facing a small, shoddy stage squealed; for them, it was akin to watching Sunday morning cartoons without the constant reminders from their parents to complete their homework, because the (ir-)responsible adults have gladly left their offsprings in the hands of questionable-looking staff to enjoy a day of uninterrupted shopping therapy.

A few minutes before the show started, men wearing kitschy and poorly-sewn rabbit costumes appeared to say hello, to become acquainted with the audience, and to ease into the jarringly suspicious atmosphere of a few men in unwashed mascots in a room full of tasty tots. They wore rabbit eye-masks complete with wilted ears though the lower part of their faces remained uncovered, worn-out fursuits including paws, and a blob of frayed rabbit-tail at the back. Children screamed with delight and crowded around the rabbit-men, who were fondly called “Uncle Bunny” each; they kept touching Uncle Bunnies’ fur and in return, the Uncle Bunnies waved at them, hugged them, and began to undress the children; A-Xian knew something wasn’t right when little girls with their dresses confiscated were rounded up and shepherded into another chamber inside the tent, and the door closed behind them with resounding clicks.

The boys that remain were instructed to strip because the Uncle Bunnies would be painting their bodies with cute animals and colourful patterns - they were going to be little roosters for the day! A-Xian went along with the vile ruse, because he was curious of what kind of games would be played. When it was his turn, he gave up his robes, shirt and pants to one of the men, then raised and stretched his arms. A couple of Uncle Bunnies started to work on his eight-year old body and he giggled at the ticklish sensations around his armpits, abdomen, the joints of his hips, inner thighs and the crack of his butt. Ink brushes started to swipe his body, painting random circles, feather-like curves and other organic patterns using natural food-grade colour palettes of whites, yellows, reds, browns, and blacks. It was a little strange that the men concentrated on painting squiggly colourful plumage-like patterns on his nipples, a streak of red on his belly button to represent a rooster's comb, a splash of yellow on his wee-wee as a chicken's beak, and coated his grape-sized ballsacks with white - they should be a rooster's wattle, but no, he was told that they were chicken eggs; at that point, A-Xian realized, unsurprisingly, that the show was a scam. One of the boys beside him hnngh'd - he was a little older than A-Xian, and when fat brushes painted his testicles, smaller brushes tickled the underside of his turgid, inexperienced dick, then one micro-sized brush started wiggling its hair into the boy's cockslit - the boy experienced a very uncomfortable and embarrassing orgasm in public view that his body was not prepared for, and he grunted, jerked his hips three times, and spurted out dollops of rich boy-milk straight into one of the men's waiting jaws.

With the body-painting session done and every child has a rooster's portrait on his groin - a few looked uneasy because their erections refused to back down after the foreign artistic treatment - the show finally started. A disembodied storyteller voice boomed from the stage, accompanied by simple and folksy tunes, and guided the children on what to do. The youngsters were called upon to participate as much as possible in the show, and Uncle Bunnies stood ready beside their preferred naked child on the bench to demonstrate how to have a good, fun time.

Once upon a time, in a faraway village, there lived a lil' rooster named Xiao Ji Ji (小鸡鸡). He wakes up at five in the morning, crows and wakes everyone up before sunrise.

The stage was covered by dark, thick curtains, and little cardboard cutouts appeared, held by hairy arms that peeked out from behind those curtains.

There were pictures of houses, trees, farms, mountains, and very, very slowly, a bright yellow sun inched up behind the jiggling ensemble. Uncle Bunnies excitedly encouraged the children to stand up and crow as imaginary roosters. A-Xian chipped in to follow what the other boys were doing - he grabbed his dick and started stroking it, then pumped his hips into the air and flapped his elbows, "Cock a doodle doo!" he shrieked, just like everyone else. He saw from a corner of his eyes one particularly young boy who was probably six or seven in age, and had trouble keeping his wee-wee pointing to the ceiling. It wasn't a problem for long; a kind Uncle Bunny crouched between the boy's legs, then performed an adult's oral sex until the boy winced and squirmed very uncomfortably - but it had the desired effect; the toddler's wee-wee blossomed bright pink and stood as straight as a flag mast, and he stammered, red-faced, "C-C-Cock a d-d-doodle d-d-doo!"; with Uncle Bunny still licking vigorously along the undeveloped pinkie-sized length, coaxing it to grow unnaturally harder and longer than it should at such a tender young age.

Xiao Ji Ji is a hardworking rooster, because he always carried two eggs with him, which he loves and cares for very much.

Every boy proudly showed their two white-painted testicles to their attending Uncle Bunnies. The men grinned and one by one, each boy had his testicles lovingly fondled, kissed and swallowed. Some whispered sweet praises, such as "your balls are so cute" and "show this shushu your cheeky little eggs"; the older boys proudly displayed their youthful muscular controls and started to contract their pelvic floor and related muscles - it was a surreal sight of pre-pubescent balls being weight-lifted and jiggled to the amusement of horny adult perverts. A-Xian was rather mediocre in terms of appearances and size, plus he arrived late, so he had to sit at the last row, and thus he was relatively untouched. Those at the front, the most excited and enthusiastic ones, the early birds, received the most attention from the child-molesters.

Xiao Ji Ji has a good friend, a lil' bunny named Xiao Tu Tu (小兔兔). They like to spend their time together near the chicken coop. Tu Tu would nibble on cabbages and carrots given by their owner, a farmer, while Ji Ji would peck on the ground for grains and worms.

All Uncle Bunnies crouched down to pretend as the boys' own best friend of the said rooster. The panting men started to suck excitedly at the defenceless exposed underaged cocks. "Little boy, come, come, peck your Ji Ji into shushu 's mouth," the greasy, sly voice growled hungrily, and A-Xian giggled at the enchanting scene. He pecked very hard, snapped his hips forward and hoped he hit the man's gag reflex - unfortunately he was too small and short to reach down man's throat, so he settled down for a nice blowjob. A few boys, especially the older ones, started to grunt very loudly and their bodies shook into seizures, coupled with syrupy eruptions into their pre-teen orgasms, thus slaking the thirsts of some Uncle Bunnies in the process.

The farm is always green and full of food for the animals. For Xiao Ji Ji, there's always something to peck - such as a juicy peach, an ear of corn, and squiggly worms that he loves to swallow in one go.

Uncle Bunnies whipped out the described items from unseen pockets. A-Xian got a juicy peach with a tight tunnel already carved into its core, so he happily child-fucked the soft plump fruit until it became a mangled mess of drippy sweetness, which his attending Uncle Bunny eagerly lapped. A reluctant boy about his age in the front row was not so lucky; his wee-wee was sandwiched between two ears of shucked corn, and his hips were forcibly maneuvered to thrust between them. The boy hiccuped with uncried tears as he tingled droplets of nectar because there were just too many bumpy kernels rubbing his abused wee-wee. Further to the front, a number of boys started to cry softly when bendable worm-like straws were inserted into their private parts, and Uncle Bunnies sucked and blew bubbles into them while fluffing the irritated cocks with matted, dirty unwashed rabbit paws. However, more cardboard puppets appeared on the stage, performed acrobatic dances and sang a few songs, and soon, everyone forgot about the agony burning inside their violated loins.

Ji Ji loves Tu Tu because they're best friends, and they always hang out together. Sometimes Ji Ji pecks at Tu Tu, and Tu Tu nibbles at Ji Ji, especially after they've been fed.

Oral sex ramped up in pace and intensity to full swing. A-Xian, like every other child on site, tingled a couple of times while swaying side to side to the rhythm of the cheerful songs featuring a variety of farm animals puppets bouncing onstage, with his eight-year old arousal happily caught between a man's greasy lips. However, his attending Uncle Bunny left to play with other children who had prettier dicks and needed more suckles, so the boy had to scramble with a bunch of other boys clamouring for a chance to be nibbled by the remaining Uncle Bunnies milling about in the circus tent. "Come, come, little boys, peck at Tu Tu's mouth so that Tu Tu can nibble at Ji Ji," the men chanted and gladly received two of three pre-teen cocks greedily served straight to their waiting sweaty lips. A few more boys fell at that point, as they experienced intense pleasure never felt before, and learned how good it felt to orgasm into a stranger's oily mouth.

Sometimes, Tu Tu helps to keep Ji Ji's eggs warm when the rooster is busy crowing to wake everyone up.

A-Xian lifted up his wee-wee and tried to get an Uncle Bunny to molest his balls, but his ballsacks were quite wrinkled, not as appealing, nor as succulent and plump as some of the other bigger Lan children's. Thus, while most boys had their ballsacks kneaded, caressed and molested, A-

Xian walked around the seating area while thrusting his hips repeatedly in tune to the music, like fucking a sex doll made of clouds in the air, imagining his rooster crowing to the skies; to no one's attention, of course. The children in the circus tent started to wheeze and pant, and their complexion pinked and flushed, though not really from any physical exertion.

One day, when Tu Tu was away at the supermarket, a snake appeared near the chicken coop.

Scary music played, all the cardboard figures zipped away and disappeared from the stage. Five meaty, rock-hard and twitching hairy adult penises popped out from the curtains. The children shrieked and screamed, partially from fear, and from becoming too engaged with the show's dramatic acts.

The snake had just shedded its skin, and was a little weak and hungry. Poor snake, poor snake!

Uncle Bunnies nudged a few boys to climb up the stage, trailed by others, to touch the penises and peel off condoms from them. As each penis was released, it twitched happily, then flopped up and down. Some curious hands reached out to touch the angry-red turgid, and expectant penises.

Ji Ji saw the snake and knew it was harmless. In fact, Ji Ji felt sad for the poor snake that had nothing to eat in the past few days. Ji Ji tried to keep the snake warm and snuggly, and gave it lots of kisses, licks and hugs.

A-Xian was rudely pushed off the stage and he fell on his rump; but that didn't deter him from trying harder to find a spot to stand at the crowded, narrow platform. Boys thronged around the penises and tried their best to rub the Mister Snakes and console them from their imaginary sadness and suffering. "Oh, poor snake, poor snake! Boys, give Mister Snake a good hug!" Uncle Bunnies hollered from behind. The children literally obeyed the story to the letter, and kissed, licked and hugged the six-inchers against a backdrop of sad, emotional music. Uncle Bunnies stood guard on the downstage area to make sure every child had a chance to play with the adult penises - somehow A-Xian fell out of the equation, because he was too small, unattractive and kept getting pushed away by jostling bodies - the men also took the opportunity to molest, pinch and jiggle smooth perky boys' buttocks that mooned at them, while the young ones were distracted.

He kept the snake warm and comfortable, and asked neighbouring hens to give the snake some eggs to eat, just as how the hens had given Ji Ji the two eggs to take care of.

"Boys! Give your eggs to Mister Snake to eat! Yes, that's right..." the instructions echoed from the back. A few boys started humping the hairy adult penises in earnest, rubbing their bouncy peeled pink wee-wees and moist, unripe and delectable testicles all over the exceedingly excited six-inch shiny veiny snakes, as they started to experience another round of pre-pubescent tingles from the delicious friction and heat.

Tu Tu also helped to feed the snake with food from the supermarket. The snake cried tears of happiness and gratitude, and soon it was healthy and strong again.

Unsurprisingly, pre-cum leaked generously from the five adult penises seemingly hovering from behind the curtains. Uncle Bunnies persuaded the most curious and innocent boys to lick the sticky liquid off the meat-sticks - their faces soured in disgust at the smelly pungent taste.

In fact, it ate so much that its stomach ballooned. Oh my, poor Mister Snake! Now it's too fat, until it was choking from too much food. See how red it is, and how it twitched wildly to cough out the extra food!

The music switched to a brighter, more alarming note, and all five Mister Snakes jolted to the front, revealing their dark, hairy, very wrinkled but bloated scrotum to the view of the awestruck children. The penises continued to twitch wildly, partly because the wide-eyed adolescents couldn't stop touching and grasping the loose foreskin, the throbbing length and now, wonderful fluid-filled sacs brimming with virile, sweet liquid pressure.

Mister Snake continued to cry, this time from the indigestion in his tummy. Hurry, hurry, rub Mister Snake's tummy, before it grows too big and bursts like a balloon! Peck it, Ji Ji, peck at it too!

A-Xian watched with a rather forlorn look, from a bench at the side, at how the other boys excitedly massaged the adults' balls like rubbing bellies after a good meal, and some took the instructions to heart to jab their wee-wees at the large, chicken-egg sized testicles through the scrotal skin. From where he sat, he could hear some loud husky moans from the backstage, probably fuelled by wild imaginations of childrens' cocks raping an adult's balls. The eight-year old yawned.

Mister Snake is crying louder, see how much tears are leaking from the tip! Please make Mister Snake feel better, by kissing and hugging it like before.

By now, A-Xian understood the story and how that was reflected in the audience's actions. He predicted, and true enough, he watched with disinterest, at how increasingly agitated, uncomfortable and confused horny pre-pubescent boys humped, kissed, hugged, licked the men's hairy genitals on the stage center; some were experiencing perverseness that goes against the sect rules, some were having doubts from their immoral actions, and some were conflicted because it felt really, really good to love a hairy adult's penis. The background music spun to a happier, and faster tune, and that made A-Xian shake his head to the beat and tap his feet on the ground; the crowd's mood swung according to the same vibe too; it was too easy to manipulate with the children's emotions and thoughts, after all.

Mister Snake really liked how Ji Ji rubbed its tummy, and how it was loved by Ji Ji, so the snake finally got well again, and gave the brave rooster its happy milk!

The music rose and rose and finally hit its crescendo. Children shrieked and laughed with joy at the show's finale; even A-Xian was caught up in the mood and clapped his hands. Grand arches of hot smelly thick adult milk ejaculated and rained upon everyone on stage; some boys inadvertently swallowed a few globs, while others squealed when the warm streaks landed on their face and chests.

Suddenly...! The farmer returned from working at the farm, and he saw the snake! He chased the snake out of the village! What a bad farmer! He's a bad man! He fell on the floor after slipping on a banana peel, and his big bum-bum is facing the blue skies! Hurry, Ji Ji, punish the bad farmer! Peck him! Peck him hard!

All Uncle Bunnies suddenly flung away their costumes, revealing their hairy naked bodies - young, muscular youths and fat, old, bald, wrinkly ones too - and they lay on the ground with their asses pointed towards the boys. “Oh, I’m the farmer that chased Mister Snake away, and now I’ve fallen on my bum-bum! Hurry, hurry, boy, peck my bum-bum!” they cried while sensuously wiggle their huge glutes. The Lan boys were exceptionally obedient, and after a couple of hesitant tries, they got into the climactic epilogue act, and experienced a real adult’s sexual pleasures of fucking a warm wet tight hole between a man’s hairy legs. The children crowded around the former Uncle Bunnies, now re-imagined as farmers with spread asses, and spent the remaining time of the show huffing and puffing, fornicating the men and learned the first lessons in life about making babies between men’s buttocks. Many would experience their most powerful tingles and orgasms during this time, to the backdrop of cheerful children’s tunes.

.

Naked A-Xian trotted out of the circus tent with another yawn (remember, in this day and age, it is perfectly normal for kids, especially those from lower socioeconomic classes, to be running around stripped of any clothes); truthfully, he thought the show was generally a bore despite the interactive elements and lots of physical touches; but he kind of liked the musical arrangements. He was smaller in size compared to the other boys, so he hardly had the chance to stand out as an attractive and enthusiastic Ji Ji to the Tu Tus, to reach through the horde of other boys crowding around the lovable Mister Snakes, or squeeze between one another to have a go at pecking the bad farmers’ bum-bum. He spent a silver piece for the entrance ticket, which was dirt cheap compared to other more expensive sleazy entertainment in brothels that he used to hang out during his days wandering as an unwanted orphan, homeless, in the streets. With the show done, and before the men could gather the relaxed, giggling children and force them into a dark, dingy locked warehouse, he deftly scurried off to find his boyfriend.

Every child would be smitten by playing with domesticated, farm animals and their babies - hence the name 'Barnyard Babies'. However A-Xian was smarter than the average boy; he only needed to sneak to the back of the shoddy building, dash past a couple of small fenced pasture grounds - far enough for suspicious activities to remain hidden behind shrubbery, and for sounds to be swallowed by strong winds that blew through the hills and valleys -, to find where unsupervised children have been quietly herded with sweet promises of having special playtime with cute baby bunnies, little chicks, ducklings, kittens and puppies, plus free pony rides and the chance to feed grass to calves. Instead of seeing children having fun with youngling animals, he watched, rather disinterestedly, at how crying, gagged children were strapped onto tables and bales of straw, then had their bodies painted with buckets of smelly, pungent pheromones.

The carers - A-Xian recognized some of them as the merry band of bandits that often visited Uncle Wei's gloomy home - guffawed like clowns when they let loose the adult male livestock animals. Goats, stallions, bulls and large dogs (of the big fluffy breeds) eagerly sniffed around and licked the air, then climbed onto the tied children - the animals seemed to have been trained well. They immediately started rutting violently into sweet clenching tight boy-buttocks (A-Xian dared not peek at what happened to the girls, lest he catches the fabled cooties). The adolescents' clothes were shredded by the horny barn animals in mating season, and their bodies were badly bruised and scratched, streaked with creamy animal semen, with more gushing out of their gaping, angry-red, probably destroyed anuses and rectum (he couldn't imagine how a horse's wee-wee could fit into one of the smaller victims, when it was nearly as long as the child's height; his eyes bulged in a similar manner when he observed how a dog knotted with its unwilling mate).

A short distance away from where the wild beastiality parties took place, a few children were fastened to the ground, where peeping chicks, downy ducklings and furry baby bunnies mingled around the struggling figures' groins - the evil carers had poured and slathered their nipples, ticklish areas and private parts with food pastes. Boys laughed and cried randomly (and promptly had their faces and mouths smothered with ragcloth or even their forehead ribbons) when their sensitive bits were nibbled, pecked and prodded; those who had reached puberty had to endure painfully extracted orgasms when cats and dogs lapped their exposed meaty penises that stuck out like nails on a board, then graze the hypersensitive spongy pinkish glans with sharp fangs.

A-Xian squinted and tried to tip-toe to peer beyond the shrubs - and saw his boyfriend in the nude, secured to straw bedding with ropes. He had white puddles around his nipples and unsurprisingly his crotch dripped with milk poured by one of the cackling carers. Hungry goatlings bleated, ponies neighed and calves mooed happily, as they surrounded the frightened eight-year old and began to lick the milk off. Like babes vying for the prized swollen teat, his forcibly pleasured nipples and hairless wee-wee pointed up from the rest of his trembling body and became prime targets; the pony went straight for what it thought was its mother's udder and began sucking the boy's unprotected cock in earnest; the young goat lapped and bit energetically at the nipples, and the calf with the longest tongue yanked on milk-coated testicles, trying its best to caress and vacuum up every droplet on the quivering eggs. Little A-Ji tingled again and again, and even sprayed pee at one point out of pure terror and from drinking too much sweetened fruit juices from the market.

At long last, A-Ji managed to escape when one of the carers untied his bindings and was about to drag him into the shed for another round of sexual abuse, when the boy instinctively recalled how his wife (of sorts) performed a self-defensive maneuver of kicking a man between the legs - then promptly fled in great leaps and bounds over fences, leaving behind a cussing, curled up hardcore convict on the ground. Hot tears rolled down his cheeks as he tried his best to hold back the pain radiating all over his bitten and bruised body, from his awfully abused, saliva coated, drippy wee-wee, and from the frustration and sadness that at least twenty other children would spend several more hours in a dark, locked shed with twenty dirty, fat, wrinkled and bad-smelling rapists he knew too well.

A-Xian happily grabbed naked A-Ji's wrist once he was within range, and together, they escaped the terrifying Fun Fair. It would be a rather strange, but comical sight to see a feral wild boy shrieking insanely, and his partner, an equally naked but dreadfully embarrassed timid boy, streak across busy roads around the markets; but that was fine, because nobody in the Cloud Recesses would truly remember what actually happens on Sunday mornings, after all.

(A-Ji would be traumatized by cute baby animals for a while, in which A-Xian gleefully uses as a underhanded bullying tactic in the future, because occasionally, he would capture and hold a baby bunny from the common farms, then chase after his would-be husband, while little A-Ji wailed in terror from the sight of wriggling little four-legged furry things.

In the meantime, Uncle Wei successfully raped countless Lan boys, fathered many children and sold off the girls and their unborn babies with the help of the headmaster. He made enough money for a month's supply of Emperor Smiles, gotten himself a new part-time job at the Sunday fun fairs, but he quickly lost his ill-gotten gains in underground gambling dens, so he had to remain in his smelly, rickety dimly-lit house where he could pay visits to his favourite neighbouring rosebud every day at five o' clock in the morning.)

Notes for the Chapter:

Yay, the weekend is coming! Wow, we've reached the end of May and what a month, or a couple of months it has been since the pandemic struck where I live. The stark difference in mood and outlook has been like day and night for me. My dayjob is picking up in June, so there could be delays as life resumes to a new normality.

In the meantime, I'm still out of ideas so that main plot is plodding along slowly, though the smut seems to be doing better. Haha!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 114

It was an epic battle like no other, and one that screamed of cliched R-rated video games. Tian shijie crawled out of the portal atop the mountain of dead men, and appeared in her glorious Succubus Queen form - with her milk jug-like titties exposed like plump hanging watermelons. She was a giantess, nearly ten-feet in height, and bore enlarged horns, fangs, claws, wings and tail of the demon-kin. Everything about her was supersized, including the said titties - even the man couldn't tear his eyes away as he was aghast at the sight of twin bouncing flesh-coloured rolling watermelons, yet morbidly fascinated by how they could defy gravity and still point straight at him. She was armed to the teeth, literally, except for her bare chest and strategic gaps around her erogenous zones; her armour consisted of serrated spikes, knife-like protrusions, plenty of hard carapaces, and she held a sword with a dragon's head for a hilt.

She hovered above her landing pad of femurs and ribcages and started slashing her sword, sending forth destructive superheated blue flames into Lan Zhan's direction; there was no opportunity for parlay; Lan Zhan raised a sleeve and the robe's material absorbed the elemental attack flawlessly into a puff of smoke. He leapt up and levitated until he was at the same height as his former shijie, and hell broke loose inside the atrium of the Tian Mi Mi-esque base of the succubi-kin.

Lan Zhan promptly delivered a Nine Hundred And Ninety Nine Holy Buddha Lotus Needles attack, which the scantily-clad succubi giantess dodged without breaking a sweat, and she countered with a quick incantation to launch the Eternal Ninety Nine Nights Vampiric Laser Of The Dead; Bichen's Purity-class enabled magical surface reflected the black beam of light and it shot across the building, tearing holes as big as horse-wagons through walls and other obstacles. Tian shijie was faster, and she immediately cast her Royal Succubus Call Of Thousand-Soul Absorption to weaken her opponent, however Lan Zhan's defenses had been buffed up tremendously especially with the aid of a hidden, pulsating radio tower between his legs - so he did not lose any hitpoints, or rather, strength and energy.

Upset at the misstep, the succubus queen hissed and roared with fury, her melon-sized bust jiggled violently, and she launched herself at the man to begin a flurry of punches and kicks - the infamous Deathly Painful Poisoned Claws of Fearsome Femme Fatale move that shreds any living thing instantly - again, Lan Zhan narrowly avoided the sharp limbs and retreated a few steps in mid-air; he conjured his fabled magical guqin and used the distance between him and the demonness to his favour; he sent a twang ! of Universal Sound Of Million-Year Harmony And Merciful Compassionate Cleansing; the blue waves moved at terrifying speeds faster than sound, and landed squarely on Tian shijie 's humongous bosom - belatedly, Lan Zhan realized he had erred in his judgement, because the bobbing milk jugs could physically absorb and harmlessly bounce off any soundwaves.

The succubus queen cackled at the failed strike - however her voice was low, a little raspy, like a gruff old man's. Lan Zhan flinched with suspicion and withdrew further, putting more distance between them.

“...Tian shijie ?” he asked, hesitantly, Bichen raised to aim at the opponent's throat, and guqin ready to fire another salvo with a flick of fingertips.

“HA HA HA HA HA!” evidently not the shijie he knew, because the voice was definitely a man's. The succubus returned to the center of the mountain of corpses and roared with glee; her leathery wings spread out gloriously and half the ground beneath was shrouded in shadow, eclipsed by the impressive size and wingspan.

“I am, was, part of the Tian shijie that you know, did not know, and don’t know anymore. You are of mortal descent, therefore you cannot comprehend how the Tian family truly works. We are everywhere yet we are one. We are part of the fabric that weaves reality into being, a part of the empty space that does not, existing in harmony with the passage of Time, yet we can bend, twist and morph the past-present-future continuum according to our desires and whims. I, and we, and the rest of us, have absolute control of what has happened and what has not. You are below us, you are not worthy to even touch the ground upon which I and we stand on.”

At this point, Lan Zhan’s inner self went “Huh?” and scratched its imaginary head. Tian shijie - at least the owner of the voice - had ceased fighting for a while, and went into an illogical, but very cliched explanatory-mode, stereotypical of a ‘final boss’ in video games.

“You think we have created this playground and manifested into this space-time bubble as succubi, for the purpose of murdering and consuming all humans related to your kin - how narrow-minded and foolish can you be! We are larger than life! We are eternally present, in all forms and manner! In every universe, we are already and always there, and we consume what nature has bequeathed upon us, it is the natural cycle of destroying what is inherently in existence. In the last reincarnation, we lived as Gods, cultivating prayers, loyalty and worship from the livestock known as Men. In the present reality, we are monsters, non-humans, who have abandoned the practise of farming for our nourishment, and instead, we find it easier to simply devour and harvest the bounties that are plentiful in the universes. With each reincarnation, we evolve into greater beings!” the succubus queen swept her arms in great wide arcs, and she grinned to bare her poisonous fangs.

The raised eyebrow on Lan Zhan's face was clearly visible, and the man does not raise eyebrows for the sake of raising eyebrows. He started to connect the dots, particularly when a bit of the Tians' biology and species information was revealed in a chronologically logical order. He felt a ton of arrogance, malevolent intent and bad-assery in the voice.

“Your Kingdom continues to hunt us down, scouring new worlds, galaxies and universes, laying waste upon our homes, our people and our civilization... Alas, everything is done in vain! The more universes you discover, the more of us that you'll find, because we ARE part of the reality itself! Just as there is light and darkness, we choose to be with the latter, so no matter where you are, so long as there are shadows, so long as there is dark empty space, you will always find us! You can keep destroying and conquering us, but we are infinite! We are ever present! A mortal of a mere few decades old can never defeat the great Tian of trillions of years of life experiences! Ha Ha Ha Ha Ha!”

The purpose of the lecture peppered with veiled threats, superlatives and supernatural tidbits was grandiose, pompous, unnecessarily lengthy and windy, and lacked details and clarity, but Lan Zhan could understand where the voiceover came from and why. He also at least appreciated the artistic interpretation of light-dark as an analogy of yin-yang and good-evil; he is a scholar at heart, after all. However, he thought it was time to put a stop to this disgraceful and dangerous farce, once and for all.

“Tian dalaoye , yue fu , please do not embarrass your lineage and legacy any further, especially in this distasteful... feminine... form,” Lan Zhan's first words shocked the enemy into silence, and gestured his blade at the bountiful chest that poked out like twin Kunlun mountains in broad daylight. He promptly sheathed his sword, dispelled guqin, then bowed following traditional greeting protocol of his sect, and folded his hands at the front, despite facing possibly the most deadly opponent in recent times.

“Your foster son-in-law still holds respect for the elders, as this is one of the sacred pillars of the Qishan Lan teaching. However, if you continue to hurt my family and my kind, I will not be able to guarantee that our familial relationship can remain, as tattered and frayed as it may already be. This is your final warning,” he clearly spelled out his proposition, his steely gaze never leaving the succubi queen’s menacing face.

Tian shijie ’s body stilled for a second, then heaved and rocked with monstrous, ear-deafening laughter, “You? You still consider me as your yue fu ?! Preposterous! Ridiculous! Your idiocy knows no bounds, mortal! You’re stupider than a lowly worm! Ha Ha Ha Ha Ha!”

Lan Zhan lowered his arms and placed them in a ready-stance, to be able to draw Bichen in a heartbeat, “I already know the nature of the Tians, and I know how powerful your family is - I’ve learnt this much during the time I spent in your Heavenly Palace, from the last incarnation. I do not mind that our families wage wars against one another in ritualistic duels and melees, since you’ve grown bored of living such a long life, to the point where bloodshed, killing and consuming lives has become your new petty hobby. You know very well that my Kingdom, especially the forces led by my spouses and their descendents, prefer to co-exist peacefully with other sentient beings rather than mindless destruction, so they will never agree to your devious and cruel ways of existence. We’ll always be at odds with one another - especially if you continue to go down this path and hurt others of our kind.” His voice was calm and reasonable, although there is violence and malice promised should the situation escalate further. He hoped to get his points across and enlighten the other side to stand down from this needless encounter.

(“Stupider” is an age-inappropriate word in Lan Zhan’s dictionary, by the way. He is a scholar, after all.)

Tian shijie appeared vexed and roared again, sending deafening shockwaves throughout the atrium, leaving behind cracked pillars and more rubble tumbling down from the skylight. She rose higher when her wings flapped powerfully to gale-force winds, and her tail flicked in response, sending volleys of toxic shrapnel which Lan Zhan deftly deflected with his awesome pearl-white sleeves.

“Rubbish! Imbecile! You’re the biggest fool! How dare you mock me, why... I will... (hic)... I will smite you with my fists and... (hic)... and...”

The succubi queen suddenly twirled clumsily as she punched the air, her flight wavered, her face became rather stoned and stiff, stuck in mid-snarl, and her wings fluttered erratically like an injured butterfly; she spiraled downwards, hurtling down three storeys and crashed into the brittle, powdery pile of twitching dead bodies in an impressive cloud of broken bones and dehydrated flesh.

“Tian shijie !” Lan Zhan called out and reached out with a hand, however he couldn’t catch her in time.

Tian shijie 's limbs continued to move awkwardly, mechanically in repetitive motions - the arms that kept waving in a limited range of motions, the legs that continued to walk in empty air, like a broken robot toy. Her mouth stayed open but the lips stopped moving - although talking voices and background noises continued to be carried through lively vocal cords; there were some vague scratches and loud bumps, of something heavy clunking to the hard floor and spilling liquids in gurgles.

A female's voice, reminiscent of a loving grandma: "... dear, did you just drop your beer? Why are lying against the table and talking to the screen... oh my, is that voice... Oh! Oh! Wang Ji, is that really you? Oh heavens, it's been so long since we last talked! Our phone signals couldn't reach you from such depths in the multiverse layers! Your great grandfather-in-law became depressed after that last Universal Reincarnation, where he lost his bet for the first time and was kicked out of his physical manifestation, I'm sure you've read the news.... How are you? Are you eating well? Or... oh, don't tell me this grumpy old sod did something nasty to you?"

Lan Zhan maneuvered his body so that he floated downwards, then landed on the pile of corpses with grace, with neither a broken bone nor skin from the unfortunate victims that steadied his balance. He replied with an assuring, composed tone, "Mn. Wang Mu Niang Niang , yue mu , Wang Ji is doing well. We were just having a short talk since we haven't connected for a while. He's hurt some of my people, and we're about to have a battle in my world, although he's possessed my shijie 's body to do so..."

The next strings of screams and furious shouts were almost intolerable, ear-splittingly shrill enough for the man to wince painfully and nearly tumble off the peak of the mountain of corpses.

“WHAT?! How dare you!

You dare impersonate your eldest daughter to fight your son-in-law?! Now that I have my glasses on... Heavens forbid, why is our daughter topless on screen?! How shameless can you be, you pervert incestuous old man! Have you nothing else to do since you stopped becoming a Jade Emperor?!

You're supposed to have retired, you've promised not to get involved with matters of the Mortal Realm, especially your son-in-law and his family's! You've signed off the contract to relinquish all your rights and interests, or have you forgotten what you said when we left their universe to finally find our peace in a faraway new home?"

If you really have nothing else to do but to cause trouble to the young 'uns, then you better follow me to the kitchen and help me peel potatoes and chop vegetables for our dinner tonight!"

Lan Zhan thought he heard ears being twisted, and buttocks being slapped; and of the drunken old oaf moaning incoherently when the alcohol finally hit its high, of the grandpa being dragged around like a wet mop on the floor, and finally with a disgruntled groan, he was rudely shoved presumably to the said kitchen with angry footsteps and foot-kicks until the sounds died out when everything was out of range of the microphone. Lan Zhan stared at the twitching form of Tian shijie lying at the apex of the pile of dried husks, which he recognized as a first or second-generation clone of the real person - which was probably as close as he would ever get to contacting the long-lost xiongdì jiemei in this universe.

Shijie 's vocal cords emitted crackles and pops, and Lan Zhan guessed that the yue mu was busy picking up the headset that had dropped unceremoniously on the floor, while wiping the mess left by the spilled beer and some cleaning up - if he wasn't mistaken - the sounds of peanut shells, guazi shells, fruit seeds, and other leftovers of tasty snacks typical of Heavenly Court fare from the not-so-distant past.

“Wang Ji, I’m so sorry that we’ve troubled you again. We’ll clear this up soon, but I need to get the full story from this drunken old fart and sort it out with him. You’ve no idea how quiet our lives have become since we moved into a very deep universe, so as to avoid the attention of any intrusive journalists... I was a bit suspicious that your yue fu had spent an inordinate amount of time playing violent video games while drinking truckloads of Wangxian’s Emperor Smiles Premium Beer, and I had thought that the games looked and felt a bit too real - that man has been creating worlds and filling them up with his armies, then sending them around to cause chaos and ruin, hasn’t he?”

Poor yue mu , she sounded a little tired, haggard, probably from doing housework that she wasn’t used to for the entire day, while her husband and children were rather unhelpful and probably lazed around doing nothing productive at all. Her voice was a bit muted next, as she turned around and hollered angrily at a different direction.

“You’re a terrible husband, you useless, good-for-nothing! Can’t you even stand up on two legs... For goodness sake, go to the kitchen, now! I’m not called Queen Mother for no reason, and I will beat you back into shape with a feather duster as long as I can still breathe out fire!”

Lan Zhan winced. Deep down, he was infinitely grateful that his wife wasn't as fierce as his great grandmother-in-law.

.

One of the Kingdom's official mouthpiece, Wangxian New Times, published a highly-abbreviated account of one of the more tumultuous events ever recorded in history. The editor's opinions and clearly structured arguments were welcomed by the readers, half of it which consists of subscribers in alien worlds who are allies, trading partners, affiliations and acquaintances of the Kingdom (and innumerable anonymous beings in the far reaches of the universes who peruse the ubiquitous ErNet services for fruitful and free exchange of information), who depend on such news to understand and appreciate what actually went on in-between reports of mass genocides and live feed videos of lands, planets and galaxies ravaged by senseless wars:

After the last Universal Reincarnation, Tian dalaoye and his family were kicked out from their godly kingdom, stripped of all godly status, powers and rights, and lost their fortunes, livelihood and all known bets (they gambled that they'd win against the Wuji-based Wangxian company-cum-government - unfortunately for them). In a press statement dated around the summer of 2000 B.C., the Grand Patriarch of the Tian family accepted the defeat, and announced his retirement after having officially served trillions of years for the good of the universe, with a successor having been identified as the uprising cultivator superstar Mr. Lan Wang Ji of the newly-minted Qishan Lan Kingdom, who originally hails from the Gusu Lan sect in the Mortal Realm.

However, this did not bode well for some family members of Mr. Lan, who continued to hold key positions in the hierarchy, and expanded and diversified the Kingdom of Lan in their own diverging, selfish and sometimes greedy ways. Intra-family politics ensued, however Mr. Lan remained steadfast and morally upright in his position and principles that govern his family, businesses, government and Kingdom.

As for the Tian family, they have sought refuge in the deepest layer of universes, which was the family's original plans for post-retirement living in a secluded paradise. The eight official daughters of the Tian family became bored being cooped up at home all day, and began to fiddle with illegally procured ultra-modern technology and magics, with the malicious intent to incite violence and bring undue suffering to those affected by their actions. Such uncivilized behaviours typical of rebellious children are strongly frowned upon by the Kingdom, in statements endorsed by lawyers and certified child psychologists.

The Grand Patriarch of the Tian family, who was a ruthless war general and a brilliant strategist at heart and in origin, had gone into depression when his life became meaningless after retirement; he became a drunken bum, an online-shopping addict (particularly for cheap, tasty and high-quality liquor), and soon, found a lifeline by joining his princesses to learn the ropes of playing strangely realistic video games that cloned players into the target universe, and caused and mimicked the effects in real life (dubbed as one of the wonders of 31st-century technologies). The old man became obsessed with annoying the party whom he'd lost his bets to, and started to create endless universes and cloneable monstrous armies to cause chaos and unrest everywhere, thus, he kept trolling the Kingdom of Qishan Lan - to the delight of the drunken overage gamer-cum-loser.

The family members of Mr. Lan who were saddled with their own dissatisfaction at how happy, peaceful, perfect and virtuous the Kingdom was, took the opportunity upon the rise of the Tians to engage in inter-family feuds, mud-slinging and cat-fights to vent their frustrations and prove their points. The Tians, headed by their juvenile Grand Patriarch and whose armies are led by clones of the princesses, happily retaliated by dishing out even more cannon fodder to bait the increasingly agitated Lans, creating more battlegrounds out of spite just to wear them out and anger them - because in any fights, there were always collateral damages, such as the friendly people of the Middle Kingdom and the distant relatives-cum-residents of Yunmeng and Gusu, who were innocent bystanders gunned down in the heat of their countless spats.

Mr. Lan knew something was up when he couldn't reach the Tians for a diplomatic heart-to-heart talk, or call the Grand Patriarch and Matriarch of the family, when the wars between their families spiralled out of control and became endless rounds of tit-for-tats with skyrocketing numbers of body counts. It didn't help that his spouses, family members and those with close relations were caught up in the whirlwind of revenge, espionage, mind games, arms race, rumour-mongering, and lies and deceit. Soon, stories were shared about how the Tians were actually heartless, mindless monsters that decimated the living and turned everything to their favour, that they were actually a disease, a disgusting plague of undeads of pandemic proportions. At some point, even Mr. Lan himself was influenced and acted against the Tians from the subversive feedback gathered from the subjects of his Kingdom.

At the height of the conflict, a serendipitous twist occurred and Mr. Lan finally had the chance to connect to the Grand Patriarch of the Tians in the heart of an epic battle in his ancestral hometown. The arrival and intervention of the Grand Matriarch was certainly welcomed, and is expected to put a lid on the entire childish playground masterminded by the Tian dalaoye. The air should be clearer from now on, and editorial board of the Wangxian New Times wishes his majesty the Grand Patriarch Lan, First Father of Lan-kin, the much beloved and venerable Mr. Lan Wang Ji, many happy, fortuitous and prosperous times ahead.

(Wei Ying complained that the article was biased, omitted key figures, names and events, and painted an unfavourable picture of him and his Wei-kin. The husband “Hnn”s in feigned ignorance and downplayed the wife’s grouses, saying that Wei Ying shouldn’t read too much in-between the lines.)

(Rumours are rife about what kind of lifestyle did the Tian dalaoye enjoyed in his post-retirement, that led him to such a disastrous and humiliating ending. Some private investigators from anti-Tian factions claim that the seed was planted when earlier the year, he sent off his youngest daughter to pretend to be a certain Liang laoban’s own flesh and blood, in a covert mission to spy on the daily lives of the people in Yiling, close to the Kingdom’s historical origins. However, the laoban turned out to be not only a successful shrewd businessman, but also an inherent pedophile; given that investigators had later uncovered confidential medical examination reports that provided sufficient evidence of multiple sexual assaults and injuries that took place over the period of several months when she lived under the same roof as him. Some people speculated the sordid details that led from one thing to another, such as how frequent viewings of recorded video clips of those attacks eventually corrupted the then-Jade Emperor, and that he became obsessed with the sexist and depraved ideas of bondage, rape, and in all probability, female domination and male victimization too, amongst others - thus, the concept of using succubi to subjugate and destroy hated humankind enemies was born, apparently, though hard to be believed.

It is not known about the current health and status of the original Tian family members still living in imperfect harmony inside their locked-up paradise within the deepest layers of universes. Seedy gossips are abound about how all eight daughters had been impregnated by the dirty old man who had nothing to do all day after retirement except to be surrounded by nubile, precocious young females; that the girls were imprisoned inside basements and raped daily; and that those demonic acts happened right under the nose of his fierce, over controlling wife, who was either blissfully unaware or deliberately ignored the sexual assaults for personal reasons; such horrible occurrences are not uncommon, as they continue to happen even up to the 21st century, after all.)

.

Elsewhere, Wei Ying had to stop and admire a few magnificent statues in the temple that escaped vandalization. He understood that although gods and deities usually have fixed appearances and descriptions recorded in holy scriptures and other religious texts, the final imagery is usually subject to the interpretation of the artist, as agreed with the sponsors such as a temple requesting for the sculptures and carvings. The artistic licence handed to the sculptor is by no means unlimited, however one is free to use some creativity and leeway to beautify his work so that it becomes more desirable, more valuable and certainly more celebrated among the devoted.

When the man stood in front of a large, two-meter tall Laughing Buddha statue made from bronze, he didn't look quite impressed; there were plenty of other temples around the Middle Kingdom with grander versions and in more interesting, meaningful interpretations of the Lord himself or his venerable disciples. The statue depicted a carefree, charming visage, with cheerful eyes almost closed to a squint, sitting on the ground with one leg up (like a laoban !), dressed in loose signature robes that dropped off from rounded plump shoulders, revealing the famous rotund prosperous tummy, with a huge gold ingot in hand and a magical gourd in the other.

Wei Ying couldn't help but to rub the smooth, well-worn belly to wish for fortune and a happy ending to his woes. Then, he imagined Lan Zhan manifesting his physical appearance in the world as one such Laughing Buddha - and immediately choked and coughed into rude chuckles.

Lao gong, lao gong, what do you think? Can you smile and laugh for me everyday, so that I can rub your growing belly and wish for good luck? If you're this kind of Buddha with so much fluffy fat to hold on to, I could nom-nom your love handles every day! , he remarked using ErNet. He received an indignant snort in return. In a childish retaliation, Wei Ying stuck a finger into the statue's deep belly button, just for the fun of it.

Next, Wei Ying found a shrine for worshipping the Goddess of Mercy - apparently, in this world, people still believed that the compassionate god is in a female form. A life-sized statue was built in the center, and Wei Ying's eyes bulged a little at the depicted imagery - the goddess looked just like any other Goddess of Mercy statues in the Middle Kingdom - including having her hold the holy vase and a willow branch close to her body -, though the sculptor took plenty of liberties to make her robes loose and expose part of her ample chest. He quickly bowed and prayed three times in reverence and respect, then muttered a silent apology.

With no one around the abandoned temple, he tip-toed towards the statue and stared very hard - his eyes followed the sculpted lining of the falling robes that teasingly revealed part of a set of voluptuous breasts, partially covered by a thin garment that he imagined - nearly and really wanted to believe - that there were coin-sized nipples somewhere beneath the carved rock. The statue was delicately made, masterfully crafted, and the details were exquisite down to the last groove, the final folds, the curves, dips and mounds too. Wei Ying just had to - even if he were to be struck down by lightning the next moment for the desecration -, he just had to reach out and satisfy his intense and rather perverse curiosity.

The man deftly maneuvered his arms on the abundant chest, and grabbed the statue's breasts with both hands - perfectly plump as round grapefruits that comfortably fit the palms, though not as soft, unfortunately. His fingers groped and felt for the nipples beneath the layers of sandstone - alas, he could not find any.

Wei Ying... please, don't , the husband facepalmed in ErNet at the spouse's unflattering act.

Lao gong, lao gong, if you're this kind of God, or Goddess, of Mercy, can you grow titties like this and let me play with them? I can imagine how soft and plump they are, how the nipples tease and evade me, ah, I want to touch and suck on those tantalizing nipples... the spouse remarked though their telepathic connection.

Lan Zhan did not respond to that.

Notes for the Chapter:

I was getting a little stuck with the whole Tian thingy that was becoming too dark, gory and heavy, and thought to throw in a plot twist to help me out and lighten things up.

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 115

The succubus queen traded many blows with god-tiered Lan Zhan when she regained consciousness. The battle became a long string of attacks and defenses flavoured with superfluous names and descriptions, thrown at each other in perfectly logical sequences; the Seven-String Turbulent Waves Beneath The Mighty Long River was flung at the succubus, but her Dragon Sword's Three Circular Breaths Of Insidious Malaise nullified the powerful sound-based shocks. She countered with an infallible Five Restless Roars Of Underworld Blasphemous Screams, which Lan Zhan had to block with his sleeves, thus rendering him temporarily blinded and deaf, and by the time he shook off the effects, the succubus had her serpentine blade aimed at his throat. He flipped splendidly at the last second to narrowly avoid being nicked by poison-coated metal, then sent a flying Gusu's Three Level Waterfalls kick to the enemy's abdomen. As the shijie was thrown off-balance in mid-air, Lan Zhan took the opportunity to swipe his blade upwards to launch a combo move of Dustless Three-Way Slashes and Five-Way Cleansing Power Vacuum Strikes. However the succubus seemed to have anticipated such classic Gusu Lan sword fighting styles, that she easily dodged the rushing gusts of slicing winds, and prepared a magical Meteoric Fireball attack from her thick fat tail. They flew and spiralled around the atrium, wrecking massive destruction to the solid brick construction until nearly half the Tian Mi Mi-esque building that housed the succubi nest was torn down into rubble and ruins.

Lan Zhan scowled faintly when he realized that he wasn't making any progress; both of them fought using the foundations of classic Gusu Lan hand-to-hand and ranged combat techniques - which was pretty much standard martial arts protocol of throwing one powerful attack after another, and parrying when the enemy got too close. It didn't help that Tian shijie kept spouting threats and claims in between blows, that taunted him to fight harder, but not necessarily smarter.

“You are weak! Your blade cannot even touch me, how could you even call yourself a worthy Gusu Lan man?!”

“Hah! Did that hurt? My magical offensive power is unlimited, thanks to all the Lan boys that I’ve consumed over the past few months! Don’t slow down, otherwise you will be eaten as well!”

“It’s the end of the line for the Lans! Revenge is ours, once we get rid of you and your brother! There will be no more Gusu Lans left in existence!”

Lan Zhan remained silent at those provocative barbs, and slowly pieced together information. He postulated that the succubi aren’t as up-to-date as he would have thought - she still considered him more of a Gusu Lan rather than his newly-minted sect (which was technically still correct); the succubus queen wasn’t aware that at least a hundred Lan disciples had escaped to safety and thus, there is no immediate threat of extinction; her speech patterns didn’t quite match what he remembered as the kind, intelligent and patient shijie he knew from his past timeline - so he was sure that although the succubus that confronted him was physically derived from the person he once knew - a clone - however, tying back to the fact that 31st-century cloning technology had faults in replicating intelligence, abilities, emotion and behaviours - an inferior copy, taking Wei er ge as an example of being not as bright as the real Wei Wuxian despite being borned of the same drop of blood - Lan Zhan concluded that he had to think out of the box, step out of line, and take a page from his spouse in order to secure the checkmate in a wayward game of chess.

He flew away to put a safe distance between the two of them, and stood on the crumbling edge of a blasted balcony that used to face the central skylights.

“ Shijie , put down your weapons and stand back. I do not wish for more bloodshed. If the Tians withdraw, so will my brother and I. He waits for my signal on a mountain not far from here, to launch the greatest explosive device known to any sects. You have my word that if you sheathe your sword and leave this place, I will not send a signal flare to the blue skies that will destroy everything within the vicinity,” he announced clearly and allowed his voice to echo into the cavernous and nearly demolished chamber.

The succubus queen violently thrashed in mid-flight with boiling anger, “What?! You lie! Your brother fled Gusu’s borders before we erected the barriers. I know this because it was I who interrogated him the night before to demand a full list of Lan sect members and their whereabouts - which he vehemently denied having, despite being the Sect Leader! What a dishonorable coward; a Sect Leader who had signed the treaty with the Imperial forces, pledged his loyalty to the leaders from the Tian family, and yet he backed out at the last moment and feigned ignorance, incompetence and “I don’t know”s... I’ve lost count of how many times he said those words... it’s unbelievable, what a hopeless Sect Leader he was! However his treachery is for naught, because we can still trace everyone using other registry records found in towns, cities and villages!”

Lan Zhan’s lips twitched. He was glad that Director Nie, no matter how useless or crafty that fox was, managed to pass a few lessons to the rigid and morally upright Lans. He exhaled, and calmly responded, “Say what you will, I know my brother better than you do. In fact, even my uncle is prepared to back us up. He waits in faraway Dashan village to the west, directing many to farm enough food and train new disciples so that we grow in strength and shall strike back with tenfold the true ferocity of the Gusu Lans.”

Tian shijie - or at least her demonic clone - screeched like a banshee, “You... you’re lying! You’re confused, not me! The Imperial troops led by the Tians have laid waste to everything in the west other than the city of Yiling and its surroundings, where your branch-sect will surely be swallowed by the unstoppable forces of our formidable elites, and be extinguished once and for all!” then pointed a clawed forefinger at him (how disrespectful; Gusu Lan never taught their disciples, even former disciples, to point at people rudely).

“All your elders have fallen under our influence and have been consumed before the last full moon, except for one sickly old man who waits in his deathbed. He has caught a disease of coughing out dirty blood and has deteriorated over the months. I was personally guarding his bedroom and tried to end his life - but he tastes so bad and he spat blood at my naked body, that I have decided to grant him a little mercy, so that he may live until the time when his life force snuffs out on its own, and we can finally rid the last human from Caiyi Town,” she added haughtily and raised her bountiful boobs towards the skylight.

Lan Zhan had to close his eyes for a second to erase the cursed sight of abominable watermelons jiggling in mid-air, and he calmly responded, “No, shijie, I know my uncles better than you do. Also, there are more allies of the Gusu Lan sect in Caiyi Town and in other towns and cities in the province. Get your facts right, and do not embarrass yourself further. My closest disciples are in Caiyi, frequently visiting teahouses for drinks and now they hide until the time our sect’s signal flares light up brighter than the blue skies, and we will emerge to defeat you.”

It was only a matter of time; something probably triggered and snapped inside the emotionally-unstable succubus queen. She roared - an ugly howl more befitting of graveyard phantoms - then her tail lashed to the sides and grew tremendously in size until it could rise above her horned head from behind. The whiplashing forces were admirable and generated typhoon-strength winds at her opponent - Lan Zhan had to steady himself, lest he loses his footing at the edge of the ruined platform.

“How dare you! We have tracked down every known person in Gusu’s towns and cities, kept them in cages, and made sure to fill our bellies with their life force until nothing but skin and bones remain. There is no one left in Caiyi that were unaccounted for, however, your presence here tells us that you’re looking for survivors in Caihong, which we had suspected for some time due to the incomplete town registry records - and now I can report to the Grandfather Patriarch about this finding, and finally solve this mystery!”

The monstrous tail hissed and morphed into a sucker-like appendage that unsurprisingly looked like a vagina with serrated teeth, dripping with black, toxic saliva. Tentacles grew out of her watermelons and the uncovered bits between her legs - at that point, Lan Zhan visibly shuddered. “Enough of this futile banter! I will make sure to behead you and suck your life energies while your dying body slowly suffocates to death!” she screamed and lunged straight at the man with clawed limbs ready to grapple and slice everything within range; the tail swung from side to side like a snake that had been disturbed from its nest, and poised to strike.

Lan Zhan has had enough (the tentacle-y watermelons were frightening, after all), and convinced himself that it was time to promptly exit the stage. He silently thanked his older brother for sending the short, cryptic message full of hidden meanings to the ‘Mounds; by locating Tian shijie, he had a chance to gather enough information from the Tian’s top dog (or bitch) from the encounter, and be assured that Gusu can still be saved.

With that, he promptly muttered an apology and teleported himself out of the way; the cavalry has arrived.

The succubus queen screeched in surprise when her jaws knocked into a broken pillar and her claws struck cracked walls rather than a mortal's flesh. She yelped, then fell to the ground and landed atop her pile of dried corpses, dazed and head spinning from the impact.

There were crunches of giant boots on desiccated human bodies, groans and heavy panting, of belts and armours being shifted and unbuckled. Tian shijie moaned from the pulsing pain and the blinding light flooding from the skylight right above her. Her vision was pure-white - then, slowly, five, no, ten, no... more towering black masses loomed over her.

A crew of twelve-feet tall giant incubuses surrounded the female lying on her pedestal of corruption and death, and she was about to be devoured in the same way as her victims. Those incubi were fat, ugly, full of warts and phallic protrusions, covered with battle-scars and tattoos and they smelled bad from acrid body odour, smokes and alcohol. One by one, each undressed and unveiled fanged penis-headed tails, drug-laced claws, hairy bodies with multiple penis-shaped tentacles growing out from all angles, and horrors of horrors, giant turgid pendulums swung between their legs that looked more like snakes with many heads and fingers, and they hissed and salivated at their prey on the ground.

“Hello sweetie. I don't usually make a habit out of raping little girls like you, but you're so pretty that I might make an exception.”

“Play with us, sweetheart, my incubus body is totally ready for some hot lovin’! Your titties look so plump, you could be the right one for us! Come, come pull off those panties, don’t be shy...”

“Oooh, oooh, can I have a go? I’ve not tasted a queenie’s pussy before, but I might make her pregnant today if she’s delicious enough! I could blow a week’s load into that fat pussy of hers!”

“Ah ha ha! I’ve brought enough brown vials for our fun, boys! Special concoctions just for today’s party! Everyone grab one and pour it on her, she’ll do your bidding immediately!”

The merry band of mutated bandits licked their greasy lips in anticipation and uncorked their vials, while some had already started masturbating excitedly in front of the horrified succubus queen.

.

Wei Ying tried to think like an ordinary Gusu Lan man; in logical sequences, following the concept of cause-and-effect, and none of the usual bullshit of creating new spells from existing talismans, fashioning new gadgets out of spare parts, or sending forth an army of zombies equipped with futuristic technology.

“Hmm... if vampires and other denizens of the dead rise from the ground and attack people, one would surely run to the temple where there are protective amulets and barriers, spell-wielding chanting monks and holy statues to drive away evil.

And if the temple gates have been breached,” Wei Ying stared at the broken doors and his gaze led him to the interior of the temple grounds, through shrines and smaller annexes, “one would seek refuge along with the monks, and rely on their centuries-old wisdom to survive the holocaust.” He ran into the main temple complex, with a spacious courtyard in the center flanked by four pagodas each on every corner. The ground was a sea of skeletal remains of priests, defeated fierce corpses, broken furniture, pottery and burnt debris, bloodied tapestries, fallen effigies and toppled-over altars, fractured swords, shattered armour and shields, splintered quarter staffs and mace, and even pockmarked by a deluge of arrowhead imprints.

“If the fighting monks have fallen and the shrines are desecrated, the survivors would risk their lives to protect that most important treasures - first, the holy scriptures and tomes!” he told himself. Wei Ying explored the temple’s library pavilion, which had been ransacked and set on fire, and - he noted sourly - the shelves that held documents pertaining to births, marriages and other important daily life rituals that the temple oversees, and deaths, had been emptied. With nothing else of value other than dog-eared boring-looking history books, sutra chanting scripts and portraits of past temple councillors partly burnt to ashes, he quickly left.

“Hmm... where else would they go, if their source of wisdom, the library, has been destroyed? Ah, their source of belief! The last sacred bastion which is the patron saint or god to whom the temple is devoted to!” he gleefully solved his own puzzle and ran back into the temple complex. At the heart was a huge chamber with an impressive two-storey high statue carved from mountain granite, a robed figure seated in a lotus position with palms pressed together at the front. Unfortunately its head was sliced off with a large sword - he smelled the smoky metallic tang of a dragon-blade - and a pile of broken rock lay adjacent to the statue; he couldn't recognize the local god that was worshipped by the temple, unfortunately. Again, more bodies and corpses and their ruined equipment littered the holy but abandoned grounds.

Wei Ying scratched his head, "Ahh... if the source of belief is gone too, then... to their source of their spiritual beings?" He wasn't certain, and wished he'd paid more attention to classes about Gusu Lan religion and rituals during his younger days studying in the Cloud Recesses. He supposed that if the monks no longer have a legacy to pass down to future generations, if their worshipped god had been smashed right in front of their eyes, then they would feel broken and have had lost all hope - they would rather die fighting, or die with their teachers and mentors, rather than to surrender to the Dark, evil forces. Teachers and mentors might qualify as the source for their spiritual strength, he briefly thought.

He remembered that Si Zhi had brought a casket and received permission to store it in the temple. Putting one and one together, he wagered that he should visit the temple's mausoleum next, which was located a little further away from the main temple grounds and hidden behind a clump of tall trees. Remains of past Head Priests and other important historical figures are put to rest in crypts beneath such sturdy buildings, there was usually some food kept as prayer offerings, and enough bulky furniture and bronze statuettes to build barricades if needed, plus the walls of the building are thick to withstand the weather elements, and could resist devastating attacks; he knew that much based on the martial arts-themed graphic novels he'd read during his early days, which were tried and tested knowledge put into story books for consumption by the young, the adventurous, the easily awestruck, and the over imaginative, including himself, of course.

As soon as he approached the mausoleum which was a rectangular building with marble-tiled roofing decorated with sculptures of Underworld gods, he noticed that the main teakwood doors were slightly ajar.

.

Master Lan Qi Ren knew his time had come - he could feel it in his bones, his stomach, his hands and even the tips of his fingers. He had seen everything, overcome all of life's adversities from a childhood full of discipline and restrictions, a rough upbringing rising through the ranks of the sect, becoming a senior council member, a tough tutor, a wise mentor, even raising orphaned children to follow his steps toward a fulfilling, untroubled, peaceful life (and later, losing one such precious child to a yaoguai disguised as a charming but unrepentant upstart youngster)--

He had been lying on a stained, unwashed bed for months , sealing away all inputs and outputs from his body so that he stood next to death's doorstep. It was the ultimate Gusu Lan cultivation technique for extreme survival situations, and only practised by those whose cultivation levels were high enough. He nearly ceased breathing, stopped consuming everything except for the qi circulating in the atmosphere, and his body had metabolically shut down. Once in a while, his captive form was visited by the enemy - demons that created fierce corpses for their cruel amusement after sucking life energies off men, which was even worse than that said yaoguai - but they regarded him as unfit for consumption. One tried to sit on his crotch and straddle him, but she was awfully overweight, and his body immediately rejected the unholy touch - he vomited blood even while remaining unconscious, there was a screech-y scream, and he was not touched again after that. However, he had been ill for many years that robbed his fast-ebbing strength, even through the passing of seasons and the changes of Chief Cultivators, and he was afraid that he may not last while maintaining this near-death state with a fast-declining health.

He thought that finally, his weakened body had given up, his golden core had fizzled out its last spark, and that he found himself in a strange kind of heaven.

It was surreal to have that orphaned child he'd lost so long ago, now returned to his teenage years, massaging his creaky shoulders, while he lay on a fancy lounge chair lined with velvet and other plush materials. His bones rattled and loosened from a very nice vibrating grip from the young man, and he moaned, then tilted his neck to silently ask for more, more, a little more to the right, please; the wish was granted, to his delight.

On his stomach lay the fluffiest and most adorable pillow of sorts, and it looked like a giant fat two-feet long silkworm with a drool-coated mouth at one tapered end, and a slightly bloated tummy on the other. The pillow worm snuggled on his belly, weighed comfortably on his abdomen, and kept him warm - all old men like him loved to have their bellies warmed. Being a true blue Gusu Lan man, he couldn't resist the satiny white fur which resembles a rabbit's rump, and he kept running his fingers over it; in response, the living pillow coo'd and gurgled happily, gently rolled over and curled up higher against his chest; he learnt, over minutes and hours of playing with this endearing elongated ball of fluff, that the worm's belly was squishy and could be kneaded in circles, and if he reached to the other side - the back, he presumed, because he couldn't feel any backbones or any bones for that matter - he could scratch in an up-and-down motion, with added circles and claw-like grips, on the plump and very appealing baby-soft skin, and the pillow worm would seize and convulse cutely - like getting a tender electric shock -, accompanied with soul-cleansing crystalline tinkles of a baby's laughter. He thought that behaviour resembled Wang Ji's, because the boy also loved to have his back scratched when he was just a toddler, long, long ago.

Speak of the devil - of sorts -, the massage on his shoulders stopped briefly, and next, he heard some tableware clink, then he was served a sumptuous meal on a bamboo tray. The pillow worm politely moved aside to cuddle up around the man's left arm, while his right arm was free to pick up a spoon or a pair of chopsticks. The tray was meticulously placed on the master's warmed stomach, and he smiled at his third, maybe fourth, in-house fine dining in this slice of heaven tailored to his tastes - perfectly-heated chicken and tofu congee with freshly simmered summer leafy greens, a plate of boiled river fish with all the bones picked out and drizzled with sweetened soy sauce and spiced oils, a small plate of steamed minced pork patty mixed with pickled vegetables, a bowl of herbal soup with perfectly diced chunks of a variety of nutritious root vegetables, and a pot of pu'er tea, with all necessary cutlery and napkins lined up on the side in perfect sequential order.

“ Shu gong , please enjoy this banquet meal,” the teenager said with a clear voice to greet the elderly man to start his meal, and he bowed at such a perfect angle befitting Gusu Lan's dining etiquettes, that for a moment, Master Lan Qi Ren really thought that the boy was the Wang Ji he'd missed for too long - down to the white garments and silver-white hairpiece - except for the strange, slightly off-putting devilish black colour in his eyes where there should've been whites. The pillow worm in his left arm gently rubbed at his ribs to nudge the man to stop staring at the boy, and try the food. It started murmuring adoringly with a little girl's voice - in a repetitive, but not necessarily annoying way - “ gong gong, gong gong, gong gong (公公) ... ” as though it called him a ‘grandfather’.

A perfect meal dined strictly according to the sect's decorum is done in absolute silence, other than the tip-taps of chopsticks or the polite clinking of a porcelain spoon against a bowl, and Master Lan Qi Ren thoroughly enjoyed his tranquil time with the nourishing, mild and surprisingly very tasty food, on top of the ergonomically pleasant lounge chair.

As he took a sip of pu'er tea from the empty tray, he finally asked with calm, "Why do you keep calling me shu gong ? Is this not my afterlife where I deserve eternal peace living amongst my ancestors in a world filled with clouds, misted mountains and ever-flowing waterfalls? How would there be descendents in this place if I am not informed of their passing? Or have you already passed on too, Wang Ji?" The master continued to enjoy his tea but his eyes glanced to the side at the boy.

The Wang Ji with blackened eyes bowed again - such refined manners, indeed - and answered without hesitation, "As I've said before when you arrived in this special place," he gestured around them to show the elderly man a room with a single large curtained window showing a beautiful silvery portrait of a full-moon nightsky, a few stars and clouds, and trees in the horizon gently rustling to the breeze; the room resembled the inner chambers of the Jingshi, being sparsely decorated with a few choice but tasteful pieces of decor, comfortably lit by candle lamps reflecting off waxed rice paper and casting blurry shadows upon wooden screens, potted plants, and tables and chairs, "I am Ernie, and the white creature that your mind keeps calling 'pillow worm' is my sister Ni-er, and we're children of Lan Wang Ji and Wei Wuxian. It is only right that I call you shu gong , although my sister is too young to appreciate the nuances in Lan family formalities, so you're simply her favourite grandfather. I have taken the form of my father in his younger days, but I am not human - hence the devil-eyes that your heart speaks so fondly of - but rest assured, the two of us mean you no harm, and we want to treat you as our family member. You are safe in Qishan Lan's territory, founded by my parents, who are also well."

Master Lan Qi Ren sighed, and thought that even age had caught up with him in heaven. There were so many things right about what the boy said, and an equal number of things wrong too. He didn't want to argue, not while he's savouring the pleasures of his afterlife.

“Hn. It seems my nephew has even consummated his relationship with that yaoguai and sent their offsprings to rile me up,” he said, as he put away the cup of tea and waved his hand - Ernie dutifully collected the tray and walked away into the darkness beyond the wooden screens opposite the window. “But no matter, I shall not be bothered nor be provoked by anything that disturbs the beauty of this heaven. I’ve had enough of qi deviations while I was alive, so that’s that,” he announced with an air of finality and sank back into the soft cushions that came with in-built massaging functions.

Little Ni-er crawled back to her grandpa’s belly and curled up into a warm pastry roll of sorts, to the satisfaction of the old uncle. Ernie emerged again with a small senior-friendly anti-slip bowl filled with sliced apples and peaches, and handed it to the master. “Here, more fruits from Heaven’s summer orchards, as you desired from the bottom of your heart,” he said, and indulged in the unspoken secret requests from the finicky old man.

“Hn. As expected, of course, to be served only the best in this wonderful heaven,” Master Lan Qi Ren remarked and gladly took the bowl before he started to grab a tooth-picked fruit wedge. “In this world where my dreams finally come true, Wang Ji knows everything in my mind and heart without having me to say anything, and he obeys without question. Since you’re such a good boy, tell me more about this Qishan Lan, and what ridiculous stories you have about my nephew and that yaoguai of his, so that I may go to sleep again after such a nice meal and be woken up for another,” he added while munching on a juicy peach - it was against Lan family rules to talk while eating, but the Peaches of Immortality were so good - he didn’t know the name of the fruit, other than just plain ‘peaches’ that had ripened to perfection -, he could make an exception while thinking he’s gone to his own private corner of heaven. He thought that with each bite, he could feel his long standing illness melt away a little more, and his body a little stronger.

“Of course,” the boy replied with another perfect bow, before returning to his spot behind the lounge chair, and started to massage the back of the smiling old man, who had closed his eyes and looked every bit relaxed and happy to be in his very own paradise. “And in case if you’re wondering, yes, I will line up a rejuvenating body spa, a luxury manicure and pedicure service, three more types of full body massages with aromatic oils and heated stones, and a cucumber-flavoured exfoliating face mask to brighten up your skin, after you’re done with dessert,” he followed up without having to ask, which pleased the master almost too much.

At one point, Master Lan Qi Ren, already being lulled to sleep by long-winded fantastical accounts of the Qishan Lans and their First Fathers while enjoying a mix of Swedish and shiatsu massages, asked what was beyond the shadowy part of the room that lie opposite of the serene night sky peeking through the window, and Ernie coolly responded that the path lead to the outside world, “where a hundred or so Gusu Lan youngsters and more refugees from the war live and play noisily all day... there are markets and fun fairs packed with bustling crowds too... alternatively, you can decide to stay here a bit longer, if you want, shu gong .” At that point, Lan Qi Ren simply “Hn”s impassively and said no more; he wasn’t too keen to ruin his paradise yet. He snored after a few minutes.

Notes for the Chapter:

It's a little all over the place, but I'm wrapping up some of the key plots or characters.

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 116

“A-Xian... it’s... it’s wrong to steal...” little A-Ji whined, but the other boy would have none of the virtuous lectures typical of Gusu Lans. The naked eight-year old Lan boy stood shivering in a small clearing in the forests close to the Sunday markets, while he was lovingly tended to by another boy of the same age, albeit an adopted one from a different, more uncivilized and probably feral lineage. A-Xian grinned and continued to tie two pieces of giant lotus leaves plucked from someone’s garden - one at the front on A-Ji’s crotch, and the other to cover his springy cute buttocks -, using a vine as a makeshift belt to hold both pieces together, secured by a cute ribbon bow hanging from the waist. Little A-Ji looked like a topless girl with a flared-out skirt made of lotus leaf. The midday sun was a little strong, so A-Xian finished his masterpiece by taking another lotus leaf from the ground, cutting its stem, then placed the leaf face-down atop A-Ji’s head, like a hat.

“See? It feels good, right? Totally natural fabrics, and it’s very cooling too!” the boy with unruly hair grinned back.

The rambunctious boy and his timid partner had barely escaped the clutches of foreigner rapists, smugglers and an assortment of criminals masquerading as unassuming funfair operators and market vendors, and hid in the forests to catch their breaths. While A-Ji had nothing left on his body - not even a shred of loincloth -, he was at a loss of what to do next - because Gusu Lan education didn’t teach their children how to prepare themselves for crises such as being kidnapped and sexually attacked by such inhuman predators - A-Xian confidently strode into someone’s unoccupied backyard pool and bathed his boyfriend (future husband, really, once they’re of legal age) to wash away ‘Barnyard Babies’ animal saliva, seed, and all sorts of icky substances, while he scrubbed his own body to remove the last vestiges of body paints from the 'Friends in the Farm' show earlier.

There was a patch of lotus plants in the pool, so A-Xian nonchalantly sneaked that someone's kitchen from the back, swiped a small knife, a basket and some other tools of trade used by thieving street brats (he used to be one, after all), and went to work. He harvested a few goodies from that someone's garden including fruits and medicinal plants, and returned with a basket of lotus leaves to be fashioned as clothes so that embarrassed little A-Ji didn't have to shiver in the nude in broad daylight. Just then, the door creaked - the owner of the house had returned - and little A-Xian fled the scene of crime with his boyfriend. They found a nice forest glade not far into the bushes.

"M... Mn," the boy answered hesitantly with his signature single universal answer to everything, "but... I still think it's wrong to steal," as he fingered the skirt with a doubtful look in his eyes, "... and my... w-w-wee-wee feels a bit itchy and painful too, everytime it rubs on the lotus leaf," A-Ji added and his voice trailed off, clearly feeling humiliation for admitting something so shameful to his future-wife as his cheeks burned up into tomato-reds. All those nasty bites and suckles from the farm animals left their indelible marks on little A-Ji's tender underaged genitals; he fidgeted uncomfortably, and felt a little stinging pain each time his reddened wee-wee grazed against the leaf's surface.

Clever A-Xian had already predicted this would happen, so he gave a (stolen) fruit to his boyfriend to pacify his discomfort of a throbbing abused wee-wee, and said, "I'm your wife, and I say that it's perfectly alright for me to make better use of someone's backyard treasures that had been left unattended. And it's perfectly alright for you not to steal anything. Does that make sense?"

A-Ji stood still under the shade of a tree, and thought for a moment to process the logic - the husband who followed Gusu Lan's teaching to the last letter is not allowed to steal; but the wife who isn't subjected to the same Gusu Lan's teaching could. He could live with that logic, he thought, at least at this young age when he wasn't mature enough to form a counter-argument yet. As he ruminated on the topic, A-Xian who didn't think too deeply into the virtues of not stealing, crouched between A-Ji's legs and crawled under the front piece of the lotus leaf-skirt. A-Ji gasped in fear when he thought he saw a knife glint before it disappeared beneath the skirt.

"Shh, stand still. I grabbed some aloe vera plants from that garden just before we left the pool, and I remembered watching how some jiejie s in a brothel used it as a skin medicine during my younger days in the streets," A-Xian muttered beneath the skirt; A-Ji shivered when he felt hot breaths tickle his sensitive and slightly inflamed private parts. The braver of the two took a couple of strips of the succulent leaves from the basket, used his illegally-procured knife to remove the green outer layers, and sliced the cooling, soothing transparent gel into smaller cubes that he could easily rub into a mushy paste. Soon, with gel-coated palms, A-Xian slathered the healing substance all over little A-Ji's scratched wee-wee and bruised balls, and gave him a very, very nice, comforting handjob, with added loving rubs, like kneading dough-balls, on the pinkish glistening, increasingly excited cockhead. A-Ji started to have conflicting thoughts about the gel because although the sensations were very, very nice for a budding eight-year old's sexual organs, it also felt like chilled slimy baby food being smothered all over his crotch.

The eight-year old Lan boy stood under a large tree, a hat covering his sweaty and flushed face, his hips jerked rhythmically as his future-wife did fantastic things to his swollen but undeveloped genitals, with plenty of squishy and squelchy sounds of cooling pureed stuff massaged all over his turgid pinkie-length wee-wee and grape-sized balls, then fingers penetrated his stretched rosebud to apply more of that chilled gel into his violated rectum and rake his engorged preteen prostate repeatedly; the Lan boy's hips became a shuddering mess - he wanted to pull away because of the icky plant goo, yet it felt so good to fuck a fistful of that same slimy substance, however each time he pulled back, those fingers prodded and poked his bouncing prostate and he hnngh'd deliriously when sparks flew into his vision, then he remembered the abominable-looking plant goo invading his insides, so he thrust his hips forward instinctively in avoidance, and his overexcited wee-wee sparkled with more stars into his vision and burnt out his sexual meridians from the shocking slippery friction; soon, little A-Ji's pelvis did its own confused belly-dance in all directions, torn between ickiness and adult pleasures both front and back, however being ensnared by A-Xian's attentive touch meant little A-Ji had to endure many tingles in rapid pulsating succession from the loving therapy between his legs, and he couldn't hold back a few explosive squirts of mild-flavoured pure seedless boy-juice straight into A-Xian's waiting mouth.

.

“So, what happened?” A-Xian asked, as A-Ji hiccuped and handed a piece of silver to the wife (of sorts, in the future) while wiping off hot tears from his cheeks.

Both boys were a little hungry as lunchtime was approaching, and they only had a couple of stolen peaches so far. A-Xian raided a few more homes in the outskirts the Market district - the area was generally an enclosed fenced space with farmers and merchants lived on the fringes, and the largest central space was where stalls, tents and storefronts were put up every day, and particularly during the weekends; A-Xian managed to pull off an admirable heist for an eight-year old; he couldn't creep into the houses as families had returned to their homes to prepare their Sunday lunches, so he resorted to digging out radishes, unearthing vegetable patches, yanking off leftover potato plants, unripe carrots and entire lotus roots, climbing up orchard trees to pick more fruits, before being chased off by an old farmer waving a nasty-looking pitchfork. Little A-Ji was alarmed by then, although all he did was to hide behind a rock, and pleaded for them to return home.

“No, we can’t do that. That evil Uncle Wei found a part-time job at the markets and the funfair with his friends... I saw him talking to that group of bad guys at the kids’ corner. So that means he has eyes and ears everywhere up until the entrances of the district - at least until closing time, which is after lunch. We can’t have you go hungry until then, can we?” the wild boy explained with a charming, reassuring grin. A-Ji couldn’t argue with that reasoning.

A few green apples, budding loquats and unripe summerfruits wouldn’t stave off hunger, A-Xian thought, plus the vegetables were raw and uncooked, and didn’t look appetizing at all. So he had a brilliant idea to try and exchange them for something more edible and filling for a proper lunch. He took the basket and filled it with the loot, then put a few not-so-nice ones into another cloth bag, and gave the latter to A-Ji. He asked A-Ji to try and sell a bruised radish, two sprouted potatoes and three pitifully thin carrots for something, “at least a silver piece, if nothing else”, and that they’ll meet again at the forest glade in an hour’s time.

A-Xian had an adventurous time sneaking back into the market, although many vendors had started to wind down their businesses for the day. He deftly avoided the cheats and the grimy-looking sex offenders; he managed to find a couple of housewives in a desperate bid for last-minute grocery shopping, charmed them with his A wesome S elling S kills on the merits of going organic and supporting non-existent charitable organizations that send out children to sell greens (which elicited more than a few raised eyebrows, but A-Xian was such a smooth talker that people became convinced anyway), and earned a few silvers, but he knew he needed more.

So he brought his remaining inventory to a high-class restaurant and put on his best sales pitch; it was close to the end of the peak of lunch hour and the chefs didn't need more vegetables; however A-Xian was such a pleasant and cheerful salesboy who even sang advertising jingles, classic favourite folksongs and danced - to the patrons' delight - that the owner accepted the offering of odds and ends of unwashed leafy and root vegetables and an assortment of substandard fruits out of kindness, and filled the basket with bamboo boxes containing side dishes that would go to waste anyway.

Hence, A-Xian returned with rice and meat dumplings bought using the money from selling the vegetables, tasty side dishes from the five-star restaurant, and some sweet candies given by the diners of the restaurant as tips for his impromptu performance - "... and listen to this! I was on my way back when I saw a young man from this eatery by the roadside. He was packing up his stall, when his aging father nearly tripped over one of the buckets of water lying around. I ran as fast as I could to block the grandpa's fall. It was tough, as I nearly dropped to the ground and broke a bone, but luckily I remembered what Uncle Lan taught me about the Frog Legs cultivation move that can lift up anything heavier than my body," the boy spread his legs and made quick shadow-kick motions accompanied with pew-pew sound effects, "The frail old man was shaken but he's fine, and his son was so grateful, that he gave me the last piece of unsold meat from his stall!" A-Xian's million dollar grin became wider, as he unveiled the prized giant piece of meat (at least from a child's perspective) wrapped in oily paper - a whole roasted turkey leg!

By then, little A-Ji had stopped sniffing and hiccuping, and was captivated by A-Xian's colourful stories and how every piece of food brought back had an exciting background to it - events that happened just within the span of an hour. A-Xian flipped the silver coin - the only money they made, really -, and placed it into the basket - since they were still wearing lotus leaves that didn't come with any pockets, after all -, then brought out a bunch of herbal plants.

“I found these close to the glade, and they’re great for mosquito bites and swellings; I’ve learnt about these back when I was a street kid constantly getting into fights with the other boys and from spending nights under bridges. I’m going to mix them with the aloe vera gel and apply the medicine again on your wee-wee, before starting our lunch. Sounds good?” A-Xian said, as he arranged the basket of food carefully on a rocky platform to keep out the ants. Then he whipped out his knife and a few extra slices of the gel he’d kept beneath some bushes. So while A-Ji was lovingly tended to, he gave his side of the story on what had transpired in the last hour.

A-Ji was, as expected, too naive and not so fortunate. At such a young age, he didn’t know how to earn money to buy food, and didn’t know how to sell anything - it was always his da ge who sold the produce to the markets, not him. He meandered at the fringes of the markets, afraid of getting too close to strangers, and yet too shy to speak and grab any potential customers’ attention. He shuffled around and managed to stammer “Selling radish. Selling potatoes. Selling carrots,” a few times; a couple of housewives looked into his bag then turned up their noses in disgust, and walked off, uninterested in his offering that came with an even more unappealing advertising jingle.

Naturally, predators on the prowl spotted the eight-year old boy and made their move. One dirty-looking unclean man dressed in plain brown clothes offered two pieces of silver to little A-Ji without even looking into the bag. One piece would be given on the spot as a promise, the man said, and the second piece of silver would be paid when they go together “to the alley over there, where it’s a bit shady and cooler from the midday sun”, so that he could take a quick look at the purchase to confirm the quality of the goods. Little A-Ji held the first piece of silver tightly in his fist - probably the first money he’s ever earned in his entire eight years of life -, then gave the bag to the man, and followed him to the said dark, dank alley - because he thought that as a responsible seller, he really should see through the entire transaction - which was what the man explained anyway, with malicious intentions, of course.

Minutes later, two pieces of lotus leaves and the belt-like vine lay discarded on the floor. A-Ji was pressed against the wall with a knife pointing at his belly button, and his tiny preteen cock properly peeled before being violently shoved into the unshaven man's hungry, sweaty mouth. His tender cock was played with dirty fingers, licked by a liquor-smelling tongue and suckled by brutally greedy lips for the entire hour, and his child-testicles were fondled, caressed and massaged throughout the entire assault. The man remarked that there was a strange sticky substance all over his crotch, so he washed it off with water from a bucket he'd found near a stall selling grilled poultry meats, before attacking the boy's underaged genitals with such eager lust, that little A-Ji had to bite his lips to stifle tasty moans each time tingles ran through his spine and short-circuited his nerve-ends. He knew it was disgusting and wrong, though he couldn't help but to respond to the man's dirty touch - his hips trembled uncontrollably as he experienced an adult's full orgasm reflex because he had been trained to do so; he arched his back, his childish face locked into an ecstatic freeze of half-snarls, half-yawns and half-sneezes, and gratefully, gratefully penetrated, thrust and speared his over-excited quivering child-penis again and again into the welcoming warm, slimy, bad-breath mouth with hollowed cheeks, and spilled clear bodily fluids in thirty powerful youthful contractions that only little eight-year olds could ejaculate at such a tender young age.

With no passers-by from the increasingly deserted marketplace, the terrible rapist had all the time in the world to savour and rape the boy's genitals forcefully to the last droplet, and to his satisfaction. The man left when he had spent the full hour sexually abusing A-Ji's private parts and satisfied his perverse appetite, and left with the bag - without paying the second silver piece. A-Ji felt cheated, but there was nothing he could do, because he was just an eight-year old victim who didn't know how to protect himself in this cruel, harsh world. He retrieved his thankfully intact clothing, still had the piece of silver in his tiny fist, and he took the bucket of water anyway because there was nothing else in the alleyway. He walked away from the unfair transaction in tears, with a terribly irritated, engorged penis, swollen emptied testicles, bruising fingerprints on his pelvis, and at least two servings of smelly cum ejaculated into his rosebud against his will.

A-Xian laughed at A-Ji's misfortune, and the latter started to cry hot fat tears again. The cheerful boy clamped up immediately when he realized how rude his actions were - for Gusu Lan standards -, although truth to be told, for a boy who was raised in the streets and who had seen plenty of adolescents of both genders raped in broad daylight and forced to work in brothels at nights, it wasn't anything to be afraid or embarrassed of.

"Don't cry, don't cry, I'm sorry, A-Xian is wrong, it's my naughty mouth's fault," he said gently and slapped his own cheek to prove his sincerity, "here, here, A-Ji, punish my mouth so that I don't say bad things about you again?" and pouted his lips towards the other.

Little A-Ji could not bear to hurt his wife (really soon, he hoped), so he decided to kiss A-Xian on the lips as his brand of punishment. A-Xian giggled with joy, shrieked a couple of times like a man who had been proposed for marriage and went "Yahoooooo!". He proceeded to give sweet little A-Ji the best handjob with herbal aloe vera gel (and poor A-Ji had to tingle the nth time until his immature sexual organs were absolutely exhausted at that point), and later, feed his future husband with tiny tasty bites of their lunch; A-Xian forgot to return from his adventures with cutlery, so the children washed their hands with the bucket of water that A-Ji found, ate with their hands.

.

Brrrrrpppp.....!

Fwut.

Brrrrpppprrrrpppprrrrrruuurrrrrpppp-pp-pp-ppp!

Fwutt. Fwutt.

A-Xian let out his trademark string of loud, wet, gun-toting, honking fart, while A-Ji was much more polite, and chose for short, fleeting, light airy ones. He sat with hands on his belly, and closed his legs courteously, like a true gentleman sitting on a plush expensive cushion, whereas A-Xian simply spread his legs for comfort like taking a dump, without regard to exposing his tender young bits to the world peeking out from beneath lotus leaves, while chewing loudly on a blade of grass and letting another loud fart rip in full glory.

For eight-year olds who had too much good food to eat (which was hard-earned and well-deserved), exchanging pleasantries in the form of visceral, audible and odorous praises from the depths of their guts while enjoying people-watching under the shade of trees was a great way to bide their time until their great escape.

They watched from the top of a rocky outcrop on the fringes of the Market district, at how merchants and vendors pack up their stalls, shuttered their businesses, wrapped up unsold goods, loaded up carts and carriages, and slowly left through the gates. The bustling crowd had thinned to a few remaining workers tasked to clean the trash left behind and sweep away roadside rubbish with straw brooms.

The couple thought of making their move through the gates when the coast was clear, but they were surprised when armed Gusu guards rushed into the emptied compounds right after the last merchant's cart disappeared from the heavy wooden doors. They rounded up the remaining people and singled out the staff of the kids' corner who had gathered in their own groups to collect their wages before leaving for the day. Some ran helter skelter, a few more dirty unwashed men emerged from the alleyways with guards in hot pursuit, a handful tried to hide in urns and barrels, behind closed doors and storefronts, even attempted to scale up the walls that protected the enclave-like district, however their efforts were for naught as everyone was successfully captured and dragged to the middle of the fairgrounds.

“Look! Look! I see Uncle Wei, he's tied up in ropes and he's sitting on the floor! He looks very upset!” A-Xian cried out excitedly, and let A-Ji have a look at a levitating lens-like screen that projected detailed close-up moving images of the commotion. The boy was a little hesitant at first, because he was taught that magic could only be used under an adult's supervision, and he didn't know how to handle even a basic Eye spell. He grasped at the ethereal circular screen and it seemed to respond to his fingers - he learned to zoom in, then out, then pan to the left and right.

“A-Xian... it's... it's wrong to use magic...” he whined, as he squinted at one of the guards who seemed to be reading out from a parchment. Little A-Xian quickly interrupted, “I'm your wife, and it's perfectly alright for me to use such magic since I learnt about it by loitering around Uncle Lan's library of spellbooks and talismans when he wasn't looking. And it's perfectly alright for you not to cast any spells, alright?" then he twirled his fingers, and a giant disembodied ear appeared. A-Xian pinched the virtual earlobe, followed by a 'click!' sound, and the conversations taking place between the guards and their captives became audible to the two children.

A-Ji sighed and nodded without further protest. He knew his wife (he cautiously but with giddiness accepted this term, because A-Xian said it himself twice , despite not having signed any papers or performed any marriage rituals yet) was brilliant in some strange ways, and didn't question the logic behind their future marital relationship where one gets off scot-free for everything, while the other is bound to the laws that govern his family's sect.

The two children listened attentively at how the guards informed the prisoners that they had violated the immigration laws of Gusu, falsified their criminal records, flouted countless Lan sect rules during their illegal stay, engaged in various lecherous and illicit activities involving citizens of all ages, and had been sentenced to immediate deportation from the province. A-Xian, who was less educated and absolutely illiterate, had to ask A-Ji to translate those complicated terms into layman language more suitable for children.

"So... where will they be sent? I heard from Uncle Lan that there's nothing but wasteland outside of Gusu, although I don't believe him because I know I'm not from Gusu, and I don't remember being raised in a desert," A-Xian said, who clearly remembered wandering alone in the streets where people didn't care about orphans who played with trash that littered the ground, where brothels lit up the nights, and that he was picked up one rainy day by the man he would someday call 'daddy'.

“Hold on... the guard mentioned something about a better place outside of Gusu, and on the parchment I can read... Fre-fue-freq-q-quently asked questions... blue skies... bright mid-morning and sunny weather... endless supply of free food... there is no need to earn money to pay any bills... livestock animals, orchards and farms are always free for anyone to pick... living a free and carefree life, surrounded by comrades and bountiful food... choice of village, towns and cities... akin to heaven on earth... and... and it’s actually very, very close, just a step through a magic door that goes ‘fwip!’...” A-Ji had a difficult time reading out the easier and recognizable words amongst a page of full of fine prints, even through the Eye spell’s superior vision.

A-Xian had already left their people-watching spot and bounded towards the fairgrounds on his two nimble but very fast feet, while squealing “Free food! Free food!”. A-Ji sighed again and really wanted to return home, but he was conflicted at the thought of leaving his future wife - he finally came to a logical conclusion, grabbed their basket and ran after his beloved eight-year old darling with nothing on except a couple of lotus leaves that hung from his waist.

.

The air was musty and stagnant, and Wei Ying coughed a few times as he descended down several flights of spiralling stairs. There were urns, chests, effigies and small shrines dedicated to the Underworld gods and guardians nestled on alcoves along the walls of the stairwell, but he wasn’t sure if he should open and examine any of those - disturbing the offerings from others, especially those from holy men of the past to pray for peace of those who have departed, is an unforgivable sin, after all; he wasn’t a grave robber either, and had no immediate interest in gemstones, jewelry, ornaments or gold trinkets buried for use in the afterlife that no longer carried any value in this world, because there is no use for money anymore when everyone had been slaughtered by the Imperial forces.

The stairs eventually led into a vast network of catacombs filled with rows of dusty coffins that stretched as far as the eye could see using dim Fire and Light spells. There were more adjoining crypts - well adorned spaces containing impressive sarcophagi sculpted from rock and filled with shiny treasures, even expensive fabrics, bags of stale and dried food, and huge covered urns containing wines and water - for certain figures of historical significance; Wei Ying thought he read a few important names, including more than a few graves marked with the name of 'Lan An' - the progenitor and founder of the Lan sect - but it was hard to verify the authenticity of the carvings and scant records, as he didn't really pay attention to the history lessons during his younger days studying in the Cloud Recesses, and the fact that nearly all the deceased in the catacombs were surnamed Lan, as was the majority of the population in Gusu.

Wei Ying would love to explore such a thrilling labyrinth beneath the town of Caihong and go on a collecting spree to hoard as many treasures as he could, just so that he could boast to his husband how adept he was at picking up usable junk (and if he still had his old cave-home, the husband would surely be ticked off at the increase of trash in that former residence, Wei Ying chuckled); however he wasn't here as a tourist. He shouted Jing Yi's name a few times, and even Si Zhui's and Wen Ning's just to make sure that he covered all the bases - with plenty of prayers in-between to apologize to the dead for the noisy disturbance - but received echoey silence in return. He meandered about amongst the rows of coffins, and true to his nature as a naturally inquisitive creature, he ended up opening a few - and narrowly missed booby-traps that sprung upon contact - poison-tipped arrows that shot out from the walls, skeletal hands that grasped blindly from inside the coffin to drag down unsuspecting victims, fireballs that flew overhead and choked the already oxygen-deprived air.

“Hold on,” he told himself, as he dodged a spear whizzing by, “This isn’t right. I’m supposed to be looking for Jing Yi, who is looking for Si Zhui, who may be inside or has left clues in a casket that was recently carried into this place for storage. I need to be more logical about this,” he chastised himself. He scolded his inner child for acting so recklessly, and needlessly exposed everyone - including the dearly departed inside their coffins - to risk, injury and damage. He bowed several times to nearby crypts that held past reverent Head Priests in apology for his sacrilegious behaviour.

Wei Ying inhaled and exhaled a few times to discipline his thinking process. If he was a Lan, he wouldn’t even dare touch the coffins out of religious and hygiene purposes. In fact, he would keep his head down out of respect and - Wei Ying gasped when he saw fresh footprints on the dusty ground! They pointed towards a straight line and did not branch at forks or in-between coffins, or made any time-wasting circles, so they had to be a straightforward Lan’s - Jing Yi’s, he hoped. He dashed deeper into the catacombs until he came upon a particularly white casket, patterned with clouds, cranes and mountains reminiscent of the Cloud Recesses, where the footsteps ended.

“Ai-yo , Jing Yi-ah-Jing Yi,” the man grumbled, and promptly pushed the heavy marble lid aside, “I understand that you believe that you’ve known Si Zhui for so long, that you try to guess his steps,” and lo and behold - a terrified Jing Yi was trapped inside the coffin with a revolting decomposed female body holding tightly to him like a lover would; a skeletal arm must have appeared and yanked the surprised boy into the coffin, and the deceased owner was rolled to the side to embrace the presumed graverobber until the latter’s death inside the airlocked confines of the coffin; the skeletal arm remained around Jing Yi’s mouth, thus gagging the boy and prevented him from shouting for help; the stinky, rotting body that still had bristly hair, gristles, wrinkled lips and dried gums, semi-sticky flesh with the consistency of dried persimmons clung on bones that stuck out in odd directions, hugged the boy with impressive strength not seen after rigor mortis, indicating that talismans and spells were at work somewhere inside the deadly prison, thus robbing the boy of any ability to physically pull himself out to freedom.

“However, it doesn’t help that you hold on to your old beliefs and values in tumultuous times like this, such as thinking that Si Zhui would still travel around with such an expensive, bulky and beautifully-crafted casket, made of ivory and precious metals decorated with such glaring Gusu Lan crests and emblems!” Wei Ying grinned at the sobbing, frightened boy, who silently bawled out tears, had traces of vomit on his face, and unsurprisingly, a patch of yellow pee on his pants where the corpse’s legs lovingly wrapped around the horrified pale junior disciple’s lower limbs.

A quick Dispel magic, A quick wash with a Water spell, and a quick dry with a muted Fire spell later, still-trembling Jing Yi huddled into a corner, looking every bit violated and ill (for the moment), wiping drying tears from his cheeks, fairly cleaned up but not quite back to his usual self yet. Wei Ying crouched beside the boy, gently patted his back and rubbed soothing circles, then asked the boy, what would Si Zhui do, when he reached the temple, news broke out that same day that the town was locked down, and vampires or vampiric creatures invaded and slaughtered people up until the temple’s gates.

“What kind of casket would one measly donkey pull anyway?” Wei Ying wondered aloud.

“Um... um, maybe a small and light one, made of cheap wood? Donkeys are notoriously stubborn, irritable and lazy, and will not pull any heavy loads through bustling roads or even up the hills towards this temple,” Jing Yi slowly unravelled his own answer. It helped to calm down his hiccups while he was thinking, so Wei Ying thought they were on a good start to focus the boy towards recovery, and solving their mystery.

“Fair enough. Next, imagine that Si Zhui arrives at the chaotic scene of the temple that he was directed to, full of people fighting for their lives. He, like you, is easily driven into a state of fear and alarm, especially when he has a close brush with enemies who smelled like the dead and hunted the living. At the same time, he needed to safely hide the casket containing, presumably, Wen Ning who may be mistaken as a vampire - so I’m guessing that Si Zhui wasn’t in the mood to fight or defend the town, and rather, he just needed to hide for a while. What do you think? Should he have just charged into battle, call for help, or run away?” Wei Ying used his imagination to paint a vivid picture of what his precious baby may have faced, and asked the best friend to guess the next step.

“Um... um, I know Si Zhui stopped carrying sect signal flares for a while, so he wouldn’t have any means to call for help. All of us were trained to be brave and face evil when we’re in a team, but we haven’t really done that well in a lone-wolf situation, and wouldn’t dare to join the fray on our own, unlike the great and wonderful Han Guang Jun-- er, Patriarch. Si Zhui usually carries a messenger pigeon that knows how to fly to the Cloud Recesses and its surrounding areas - I was lucky enough to whistle a secret birdsong just when the pigeon was passing through the southern borders where the disciples fled off to, and retrieved his message. The strip of cloth was frayed and damaged by the elements of weather, which meant that the bird had probably tried to locate me for some time. Oh, if only I could’ve gotten to him sooner! He’s probably afraid and has been hiding away for so long,” the boy pounded a fist to the ground, clearly unhappy at his slow effort to rescue his best friend.

Wei Ying placed a reassuring arm on the boy’s shoulder, while murmuring, “there, there.”

“I think the monks did a good job to hold back the succubi and their fierce corpses, judging from the number of fallen men around the temple complexes, in the library, and in the main shrine. Si Zhui probably felt safe, even relieved, when he arrived at the temple grounds. He may even be given good care by the monks just like any other refugees from war. What would he have done next?” Wei Ying pressed on.

“Um... um, he wouldn't waste any time with such a heavy burden in tow, so I think he'd ask around for a proper place to unload his luggage, and he would be directed to the mausoleum. It's generally known that such buildings are tough and resilient, and can withstand bombardment from gunpowder and flaming arrows - just like how the graphic novels depict them to be!” Jing Yi nodded.

“The mausoleum's door was locked until you opened it, am I right? I didn't see any bodies lying around the stairs or in these catacombs, so I'm assuming that none of the succubi entered this place, and strangely, none of the monks or the other refugees either,” Wei Ying touched the chilled, gritty walls of the catacombs, and allowed his fingers to stray on some ornate carvings that spoke of ancient languages, as though he was trying to read the recent history off their intangible, invisible auras.

Jing Yi hesitated with an uncomfortable pause, “Um... um, when I reached the door, I sensed a Gusu Lan sect seal on it... you know, the one where only people of the Lan sect lineage could pass through, which is similar to the seal that was erected where you and Patriarch found and rescued me a while ago. I could break the seal since I still have my forehead ribbon... and you're right, there seems to be no one else around...” Jing Yi's voice trailed off as his gaze swept across the huge cavernous chamber filled with coffins that could have - should have - accommodated more living survivors

- if they had the chance to, that is.

Wei Ying didn't really want to dwell on that uncomfortable past, not when everything is up for speculation at that point. So, he simply muttered vaguely, "Oh? Hmm... it's hard to say what people may resort to in dire times... or maybe something else happened, which we're not sure of, right?"

The man clapped his hands to draw the boy's attention from his own worries before a frown permanently made its mark on his forehead, "Up, up, 'tis is no time for dawdling and having your buttocks go to bed! We need to locate Si Zhui first! Help me find coffins that look drab, cheap, made of light wood, preferably those located near the stairs. He couldn't have gone far, when he's such a small, thin boy even compared to you, to carry such a life-sized load. There may even be faded footprints, scratch marks, prayer talismans or other tell tale signs of recent funeral rites, so keep your eyes peeled!" Wei Ying slapped Jing Yi's back to get the boy moving rather than from drowning in his own thoughts, and he couldn't resist giving a spank to the boy's bouncy rump just for the fun of it.

Jing Yi yelped, and trotted back towards the stairs.

Notes for the Chapter:

I kinda like the two little boys and their rape-y shenanigans, so I might want to play with them a bit more.

Wheee! More mystery-solving with Wei Ying and Jing Yi! (and let's give Lan Zhan a break from his duties of emitting good vibes from the radio tower between his legs...! LOL)

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 117

As Lan Zhan strolled down one of the former main shopping streets of Caiyi Town, he felt like he was walking back in time. There was the inn where they ('they' being generalized) had stayed for a night, nearly two decades ago, before setting off with his elder brother and those who studied in the Cloud Recesses on rickety boats, in search of the then-infamous Water Ghouls. Over there, was where he remembered then-girlfriend (of the opposite gender) Wei Ying threw loquat fruits from behind just for the sake of annoying him (in hindsight, probably courting him), when the latter tailed him in the quest to unravel the mysteries of the Yin Metal.

Oh, and over there, right before the bridge over the river, were street peddlers that used to sell trinkets for daily use, flowers for offering to the temples, street snacks for those who needed a quick bite, and other little ornamental gifts for loved ones such as finely-crafted jade charms, bamboo figurines, hair accessories and combs. Everything looked nearly the same as what he'd remembered before, other than a few new buildings since about nineteen years have passed, the fact that the streets were quiet, devoid of life and filled with rubbish, rubble, ruins and signs of neglect, and the very prominent and towering three-storey high Tian Mi Mi-esque construction that had sprouted in the town center, just as in every other succubi-infested settlement within Gusu. Red lanterns hung from its windows and balcony, signalling that it was active and in operation, and grey fog seemed to hang around perpetually to cast a dark shadow over what used to be the lively heart of Caiyi, along with the stench of something dead and putrefying.

He had played a complete chord on his god-tiered magical guqin upon arrival at the town's entrance, which theoretically should have disintegrated its Dark inhabitants instantly - his spouse would never live it down and would have nagged endlessly at his ostentatious way of ridding vermin - however, logically speaking, that is the easiest, fastest and safest way to destroy the succubi and their fierce corpse army, despite facing the danger of attracting more of those abominable anti-Purity creatures. Lan Zhan had already calculated the risks, weighed the pros and cons, and taken into account the fact that the Dragon King - one of his clones and descendents, really - the Dragon King's armada had reached the port and currently waged war with the Imperial navy, while the Lord of Hell - again, another of his derivative - had effectively distorted the negative Dark, corrupted energy waves in the atmosphere that fuelled the Tians' interdimensional portals - therefore, effectively curbing their ability to warp in more troops from yonder -, the King of Gods and Men decided that it was perfectly safe and fine to indulge in a bit of relaxing guqin music while cleaning up the town, thus killing two birds with one stone.

He'd sent the two tentacle-kin to retrieve his uncle, because he'd foreseen how his presence would only infuriate the latter (since the disappointing days of the so-called failures during his tenure as Chief Cultivator), and the old man would probably appreciate a cleaner, more disciplined and younger version of himself, and something akin to a furry rabbit's rump might also tickle his interests and remind him of better times in Gusu. He weaved in and out of the lavish bedrooms and offices within the succubi's nest, but found nothing else of use; the enemy had been disintegrated into black powder that fell like ash to the floor. There weren't many corpses left in the center of the building, and he presumed those had been turned into fierce corpses and other denizens of the undead early into the conflict, before being sent off to the frontlines (and turned to dust by now, probably).

Lan Zhan found a number of skeletal remains of men who were of very advanced ages, still clothed in their detestable fraudulent Gusu Tian robes caked with blood and dried entrails from gaping chests and burst pelvic cavities; from their disfigured stiff half-grinning, half-yawning looks, he thought that perhaps these were elderly Lan council members who were happily tricked into signing off treaties with the Imperial forces, welcomed the Tians with open arms and even wider opened doors (who knew, perhaps even opened money pouches to accept a few gold ingots under the table, or an opened fly when succubi seductively winked and wiggled their hips at those old men too), then for some reason they were brought to Caiyi Town - whether for purposes for work meetings or for recreation, he would never know - while the masses that were left behind, forsaken, trapped within the sealed gates of the Cloud Recesses were massacred like doomed lambs in grand banquets and feasts that probably lasted for many days. Lan Zhan no longer harboured any grudge, hatred or forlorn sadness for such desiccated husks of treacherous old men who no longer wore their forehead ribbons and Gusu Lan robes; they were merely body counts, numbers to be added to official statistics, macabre images of murdered victims clothed and covered in white that one normally sees on the television, but thinks no further nor shed any tears for.

Still, the man bowed at the pile of corpses as a general prayer to offer respect and peace for the departed; he hoped that their spirits would find appeasement in the afterlife, and never need to return to the cruel, harsh Mortal Realm ever; ever since Lan Zhan was appointed the King of Gods, he'd instructed his steward of the Underworld to revamp the entire death-rebirth process and cycle; the Lord of Hell no longer allowed spirits of dead Men to be judged and be reborned, since the Mortal Realm was destined to be populated by the citizens of the Kingdom of Qishan Lan anyway; those that had lingered in the Underworld since the end of summer (in the last Universal Reincarnation) were simply rounded up and processed according to the new policies governing Mortal reincarnations, and the backlogs were fortunately quickly cleared; thus, people simply died and move on either to reappear in other Realms to serve the Kingdom as lower lifeforms (even lower than beast-kin), be converted into energy or other form of valuable but meaningless, unusually inanimate existence (twisty crystals come to mind), or simply be digitized into 0s and 1s and relegated into the massive archives within the Kingdom's family cloud drive for posterity, for study by anthropologists in the far, far future, or simply be stored and left to gather dust, 'just in case'.

With nothing else of interest around, Lan Zhan “Mn”’s one final time to verbally sign off Caiyi Town from the map, and winked out in a flash of blinding white light.

.

He stood in front of the sacred gates that carved out the mythical town of the Cloud Recesses from the rest of the world. Thanks to his teleportation ability, he didn’t need to climb up windy thousand stone steps that led up to the plateau lined by towering natural cliffside rocks and huge vertical drops from jagged peaks of the misty mountains located in the east-side heart of Gusu. He took a deep breath to appreciate the freshness of slightly damp, earthy mid-morning air unpolluted by any smells and sounds civilization, gazed at the surrounding - lush century-old trees and dew-covered shrubbery lined the clean stairway that withstood the test of time since the town’s founding nearly a millennium ago, mossy cracks and weathered edges that blended perfectly into the tranquil rustic scenery framed by ancient wooden gate pillars carved with signages that welcome visitors, and yet remind them to maintain their vigil to observe the Lan sect’s rules.

He touched the blood-red translucent membrane-like barrier that covered the gate like a tarpaulin, and felt a twinge; there was enough evil qi running through the thin, shimmering blockade to stun people and knock anyone out; at the doorstep to the gateway, there were plenty of footprints and indentations resembling fingernail scratches digging into the hard, well-traversed earth; it wouldn’t be far-fetched to imagine that many young men had tried to escape like baby chicks locked up in a coop with multiple foxes rampaging inside until every single one had been gobbled up; Lan Zhan noted an abundance of evidence of struggle, blackened bloodstains and bits of skin and bones on the cold unforgiving moist ground, and wished he could banish his morbid fascination of how succubi pursued their prey until the gates, which expectedly shocked and stunned the helpless men unconscious, then those heinous demonesses cackled and either stripped off the unmoving men from their useless Gusu Tian robes and devoured them messily on the spot, or for those with better dining etiquettes, carried them over their shoulders (succubi are physically stronger than humans) to polish off their meals in peace, behind closed doors.

Lan Zhan didn't want to dwell too long on grotesque thoughts lest his qi becomes disturbed, so he whispered some god-tiered mythical words which instantly shattered the previously indestructible barrier, and he ambled into a nostalgic walkway he'd not seen for nearly two years. He still remembered the night he left - it had been quiet, low-key, where few people saw him off, mostly close relatives and those who still believed he was the best, even revolutionary, Chief Cultivator then; even Master Lan Qi Ren refused to spare him a glance due to his so-called shameful, botched-up performance that scored poorly on all public relations fronts. The skies were gloomy, foggy and cast a gray tone to everything in sight; there were no blue skies to be seen, despite what was touted especially at the very place where former Lans signed the catastrophic treaty that promised sunny bright weather that instead, became their downfall.

The Wall of Discipline greeted him in its Corrupted glory, to the consternation of the Lan man. The over-4000 rules were still in place, however, someone had left many more scratches into the rock - probably succubus, since they have clawed fingers, not Men - and inserted additional clauses and statements that perverted the sacred rules and twisted them into the Tians' favour. One example: No running in hallways - in which Wei Ying would have included something about the dangers of banana peels - with the added condition that everyone had to always wear their Tian robes whenever they were out and about; failing which, any Gusu Lan robe-wearing transgressor who refused to comply would be punished by senior disciples with ten strikes using sharp, bladed canes until their robes were torn into shreds, after which, the guilty man would be sent to a Tian officer's quarters and be confined to receive proper re-education for at least three days (by then, that Tian officer would have been well fed with a meal delivered to her doorstep, really). Following that, the man would be sent out for a 'study trip' that would last for an indeterminate amount time (because the corpse had to be disposed of or revived as a fierce corpse, so that 'study trip' was a one-way ticket out of town, really).

Lan Zhan walked through empty verandahs and hallways littered with broken tiles, splintered wood and cracked pottery; visited former halls, classrooms, living rooms, dormitories and indoor cultivation practice rooms that looked rather abandoned and neglected, their fixtures and furniture relatively untouched, though the air was heavy with vengeful aura and the acrid taste of terror; tried his hand at fixing some of the scattered black-white zen rock gardens that had been kicked out of place by fleeing disciples (and he found many anthills and weeds thriving on them, surprisingly - nature must have taken back what it had lost from Men); glimpsed into the dark, unlit interior of the blood-splattered watch towers, where he conjectured that probably powerful, terrifying creatures and evil spirits were summoned by the succubi due to the lingering boiling grudge he felt upon opening the doors - such towers were particularly rich in atmospheric qi that could be harvested and facilitate the summoning process, including opening portals to other Dark-infested netherworlds.

He also enjoyed the sights and serenity of unattended bamboo groves and overgrown patches of greenery close to the springs that flowed down from the mountains, accompanied by birdsongs and insect chirps singing brazenly in broad daylight without interruption from the former owners of the land. The springwaters were chilled, very clean, and no longer carried the scent and colour of blood as before - he knew this much based on the footage captured when the entire province was digitized, reverse-engineered and analyzed, before selected assets and ideal characteristics were replicated into the copy built in Heaven, next to the supermarket just down the road from the Heavenly Palace.

Lan Zhan also tried to enter the Library Pavilion, however he stopped in his tracks when he pushed open cloud-patterned doors - which creaked loudly to indicate that a significant amount of time had passed since anyone walked through -, and was hit by the putrid stench of rotting flesh. He had to cover his nose with his sleeve and carefully picked his way through piles of garbage - some covered with flies, others leaking leachate to the stained wooden floor. There were half-burnt bookshelves and cabinets filled with ashes and cinder - signs that the succubi worked hard to eradicate the legacy of the Lan sect and set it ablaze -, decomposing bodies that had been sucked dry and left to rot strewn all over, piles of torn and burnt remains of soot-covered Gusu Lan robes and even more heaps of excess Gusu Tian robes arranged haphazardly; the library had been turned into a warehouse and common dumpster of sorts, and Lan Zhan guessed the reason being that hardly anyone visited the building - even on normal days, there were strict conditions for any disciple to gain access through the guarded lock-and-key doorway, which included getting signed approvals from their seniors. There were signs that the succubi tried to set the entire building on fire to remove evidence of their terrible deeds, although the glut of their sins probably couldn't be contained and therefore spilled over, that not even the purifying flames could erase them from existence. Thus, when Lan Zhan nearly stepped into a puddle of half-fermented, half-cooked, half-melted skin from someone's half-broken arm, he dry-heaved, and quickly left before he lost his lunch (or breakfast; he'd lost track of time in this time-stopped world).

He stumbled across some courtyards and finally reached his beloved Jingshi. He crept through walls of grass and untrimmed bushes and stood on a wooden platform before the main door; his thoughts were filled with memories of the place, of spending dark and stormy nights, clear and sunny days, of kneeling in snow (waiting for his mother, waiting to receive a cane punishment, and waiting for so many other things during his brief over-thirty years of life), of having supper and tea with his older brother outside during warm summer nights, of practising guqin, calligraphy and meditation inside especially during the day when he wasn't called out for errands. Family members had walked through those doors, even Wei Ying too, and left their indelible marks, whether tangible or not; the historical decades-old building witnessed how the Lan er gongzi grew from a child to an orphaned but respectable young man, from the turbulent teenage student days until the time when the Cloud Recesses was burnt down by the terrible Wens, from the time when its owner had to lie on a bed for several years with bloodied whip-marks on his back during the reconstruction of the town using funds donated by the Jins, it also accommodated Wei Ying when the man returned from the abyss and slept on its beds, recognized him as the spouse - particularly when the troubling days of Jin Guangyao's treachery were finally over, and the spouse spent more and more time accompanying its owner within the building, and of course, beneath its owner even before the couple officially tied the knot; thus, some secrets were always kept within Jingshi's walls till that day.

Jingshi was, for all accounts and purposes, an abandoned, derelict building after Lan Zhan left about a couple of years ago. The barren interior was cobwebbed all over, the paint had peeled off in sections, the wooden beams supporting the roof had deteriorated; the servants had emptied out every last bit of furniture and fixture and put them to better use elsewhere, and no one had swept the dusty floors for ages, so there were some bits of rubbish in the corners, and scraps of discarded cloth and paper here and there. Lan Zhan could see that his shoes made rather deep footprints on the ground like walking on brown powdery snow.

However, one last piece of furnishing remained - the elaborately decorated knee-high teakwood study desk gifted from the Jins as a reward for getting rid of Mengyao from their complex intra-family political battlegrounds. It was probably too heavy for anyone to carry the desk, and Lans generally disliked anything related to the Jins so there were probably no takers. Lan Zhan let a finger slide along its marble surface - there was a layer of dust too - and thought that perhaps he should ask his servants to pack it up and have it delivered to the 'Mounds instead. Jin Ling might appreciate owning the last known relic from his former sect, and he could either use it for studying for his citizenship examinations, or as a bed if he wanted to, just like what his da jiu did a couple of years back. He chuckled when he was reminded that both he and Wei Ying had lots of pre-marital fun frolicking atop the desk's surface when times were a little dull, and hoped that Jin Ling would never learn about that. Lan Zhan also opened its drawers to inspect if anything was left behind - there were some writing instruments, dog-eared blank notebooks and parchments meant for writing poems and reports, old editions of Cultivation Times magazines that somehow survived even after the publishing company had shuttered for good, and interestingly, the ugly porcelain tortoise too - probably no takers as well.

He sent a telepathic note to his servants in Heaven to instruct them about the delivery, and in return, was informed that he should wrap up his trip soon; the (inferior) Lan clones stationed around the Cloud Recesses, and in Caihong as well, had been standing guard for a little too long with their pants down and masturbating their radio towers between their legs to buy extra time for their Grand Patriarch, and had ejaculated too many times in rapid succession from the wonderful orgasmic sensations, that the strength and quality of good vibes had started to run thin. The succubi and their fierce corpses were slowly awakening from their drugged state, Lan Zhan was told. The Lan-kin clones had collapsed from exhaustion and from the pleasant emptiness in their loins, and were scheduled to be teleported out to safety in a few minutes' time.

Lan Zhan "Mn"s in acknowledgement, and he walked out of the Jingshi after bidding it a final farewell. The Cloud Recesses will be checked off the map soon.

.

Once they've nailed the right strategy to locate Si Zhui's casket, finding the body was easy-peasy. Wei Ying and Jing Yi spread out their structured search in a grid-like manner, and limited their range to close to the stairways; within the hour, Jing Yi - battered by logs that swung from the ceilings, singed by flamethrowers from the walls, with a couple of arrows stuck to his buttocks (they were eventually pulled out and healed) and sported a gangrenous-looking patch on his forearm from a snakebite (which is on its way to recovery after Wei Ying weaved a few nice high-level Detoxify spells) -, who had sprung more traps than he'd ever done in his young two-decade-old life, was sobbing on the floor with his best friend looking deathly pale, blue on the lips and fingernails, and as stiff as a real corpse, in his arms. The boy was prepared to leave his friend in the casket and give him proper funeral rites, but Wei Ying was adamant to get everyone out, including the dead.

Wei Ying voiced his concern that they better get out of the catacombs and out of the building, because “the body probably needs to be aired out in the open, after being stuck in that narrow smelly coffin for too long”, and that if trouble brewed in the form of approaching enemies, they would be able to detect their presence much earlier, and escape into the open space. He made Jing Yi piggyback Si Zhui's motionless body up the stairs, because Jing Yi was more youthful - whatever that reason meant.

“But... but... Matriarch... Si Zhui isn't breathing at all! Wuuu... wuuu... There's no pulse, and he's as cold as a corpse! Wuuu... wuuu... he's so white... isn't he already dead? Why are you disrespecting his body like this even after he's suffered so much?” Jing Yi's ugly keening wails echoed all the way up the stairwell until they returned above ground, and parked themselves in a small garden next to the mausoleum's entrance.

Wei Ying didn't immediately answer, as he was already busy throwing stacks of talismans from his satchel and started activating them into circular formations of glowing red mystical writings.

“Hurry, Jing Yi! I know how to bring him back, since I’m the greatest Dark Arts master ever, and know the inside-out of the art of resurrection!” he yelled. The skies darkened further, when a raincloud hovered above them and turned the area into near-dusk. A couple of lightning struck in broad daylight followed by ominous, bone-rattling thunderclaps to emphasize his point.

Jing Yi was stunned at his Matriarch’s suggestion, then realization hit him like a brick, and he degenerated into a mess of hiccups, hot fat tears, snot hanging from the nostrils, and hopeful but really ugly snivelling crooked grins - the boy was so used to the peace and tranquil of the Lan sect teachings, that when he experience such emotional upheavals within a heartbeat, his face didn’t know how to react. Regardless of that, he nodded and obeyed earnestly, buoyed by the near-impossible prospect of seeing his best friend alive and well again despite using probably very illegal means. He helped to lay Si Zhui in the center of the magic circle dyed in blood-reds, and littered the ground with talismans taken from Wei Ying’s satchel. Wei Ying began to chant something incomprehensible (with lots of “om mani padme hum”s mixed with “om nom numa-numa nom”s which is gibberish given that Wei Ying isn’t a religious man and doesn’t know how to use mantras in the correct context), and the low droning noises raised goosebumps all over Jing Yi’s body as the latter observed and participated in what he thought to be a once-in-a-lifetime ritual of bringing back the dead ala Wei Wuxian, former Yiling Patriarch style.

“We need something moist and living, like bodily fluids, to be fed into Si Zhui’s mouth, so as to jumpstart his heart and blood circulation!

We also need a cold black thing that absorbs the curse of Falling Dead from his body, right on his chest!

And finally, we need something warm, fluffy and pure that gives him life-sustaining Revival Qi energy, exactly on his belly button!”

Jing Yi looked around in alarm, because he couldn’t find any of the items needed for the ritual, and he panicked.

“Boy, use your head! Argh, Lan people can be so dim-witted sometimes! Do you remember Ernie, the black slimy thing that helped to clear the trash at the campsite? And little Ni-er who made the furry robes for you? Did I not say that the tassels hanging from your belt are their blessings to you and all Lan people? Use them, for goodness sake, and don’t make me repeat myself!” Wei Ying shouted in mock anger above the din; a storm was blowing in, sending whistling winds roaring through the graveyard behind the temple and debris flying all over the place. Jing Yi desperately tried to keep the white-coloured talismans within the tight magical circle and tucked as many as he could into the nooks and crannies on Si Zhui’s neat, unwrinkled but cold Gusu Lan robes; Si Zhui appeared to be a clothed figure lying on his back with pieces of paper stuck out in all directions from his body like a snow-white birthday cake with its icing gone wild.

Jing Yi could only nod and he placed the black-red tassel on the body’s chest, and the white tassel on the stomach, as instructed.

“Matriarch! I... I... I don’t know where to find bodily fluids to be fed to his mouth!” he cried when he was at his wit’s end.

“Argh! You sure make a lot of noise when you speak, and yet, did you not see your saliva spewing out? You’ve got plenty in you, so come on! Put your lips onto Si Zhui’s, and share some of your life-giving liquid to him, won’t you? We have no time to waste! The Tians are drawing near, I can sense their movements upon the temple grounds, and the window of opportunity to revive Si Zhui is nearly closed now that he’s above ground! Hurry! Hurry!” Wei Ying kept pressuring the boy, which led the latter to a state of absolute flurried panic.

Jing Yi muttered a few stuttered “but, but...”s that he was scolded again, so he threw caution to the rising stormy winds and leaned his face against his best friend’s - dead bodies be damned, and he could always wash his mouth afterwards! Wei Ying kept barking out instructions, “More, more, press the lips harder! It’s got to be watertight! Do you not know what watertight means? We can’t let any precious liquids go to waste!

Where is the saliva boy? It’s not going to work if none is passed to your friend!

Use your tongue, for heavens’ sake! Yes, shove that useless meaty tongue of yours into the mouth! No buts! The resurrection ritual will fail badly if you don’t slide your tongue in there and send in your saliva! If it fails then it’ll all be over, there is NO second chance!

Closer! Closer! Tilt your face to the side if you have to! Deeper! Deeper! Keep those lips watertight!”

Wei Ying crouched beside the red-faced, suffocating, terribly confused and conflicted, and very, very distressed, shaking Jing Yi, who was nearly flat on the ground, arms wrapped desperately around Si Zhui's neck to try and tilt the latter's chin for the best angle of tongue-penetration, slobbering his mouth all over the friend to completely cover each other's faces, his face flushed with falling tears and snot and probably wetting Si Zhui's too in the process - and the Matriarch gleefully raised his holo-phone to record the entire travesty of reviving a man who wasn't really dead.

A few minutes later, the stormy winds died down although the weather remained overcast. With a soft, nearly inaudible fwip!, the Patriarch warped in to where the trio was since Wei Ying had texted the precise location earlier.

Lan Zhan's eyes widened into saucers at the spectacle of Jing Yi french-kissing Si Zhui on the ground, a holo-phone levitating beside the two boys with blinking red recording lights, while Wei Ying rolled on the grass cackling like a madman.

Si Zhui finally stirred - a white tassel bounced off his belly and a black-red one followed suit from chest - and he groaned with a rather parched, raspy sound - then realized something wet, slippery and warm squirmed and wormed its way inside his mouth, also enveloped from the outside - there were hands and legs all over him, pressing him down - the hot breaths against his cheeks were way, way too close for comfort, and they sounded like panting, brimming full of desire - it felt violative, disgusting perhaps, but there was gentleness and familiar voices in the tune of rather desperate pleading moans - a prickle of mild tastes and a whiff sandalwood - he choked when a fleshy spongy organ, a tongue, he guessed, slid in too deep and probably too passionately in its mission to entwine with his own - then he coughed, realized that he had been forcibly kissed, smothered by another man's saliva - his eyes flew open, and saw his best friend with eyes closed - the face was way, way too close it was almost too hard to breathe - his friend's cheeks was two hundred percent flushed, was it done in a state of intoxication, or for enjoyment? - then remembered the slimy kiss - joining of lips and tongues - but he wasn't married yet - he's still a virgin, isn't he? - his friend groaned and moaned into the kiss - he couldn't calculate why, couldn't fathom, couldn't comprehend --

(lansizhui.exe has stopped working)

Lan Zhan sighed when the two boys screamed at each other for whatever reason - Jing Yi, for realizing that he was absolutely exchanging spit with a cadaver that suddenly sat up with a scream like his; Si Zhui, for being horrified and surprised with being rudely woken up by something so uncouth, dirty, icky, but that's from his friend, at the wet sensations on his mouth, he was too confused and could only open his mouth and heard terrible ugly scratchy noises from the throat (because lansizhui.exe did malfunction again and again); while the two youngsters embraced on the grassy ground, and prankster Wei Ying rolled all the way to the other side of the mausoleum with endless insane laughter that echoed into the woods and beyond.

.

It was safe to camp under a magnolia tree within the temple grounds for the time being, to catch one's breath and recollect one's bewildered thoughts, since Lan Zhan had wiped out all succubi and their fierce corpses in the perimeter for at least several miles away. He massaged his forehead and stared at the two traumatized boys, who had lost their kissing virginities due to Wei Ying's unsavoury joke, and who knelt on the ground in askance for forgiveness (but there is no one to judge their sin, really), side by side, clearly looking away from each other with flushed cheeks.

The Patriarch and - after pulling the Matriarch's ears and walking three circles around the mausoleum so as to punish the man for his un-funny ways in full view of the two pale-looking, shocked boys - the Matriarch eventually revealed the hoax, while sharing a large pot of pu'er tea and plates of sweet and savoury dumplings, cut summer fruits and toasted mixed nuts (that were magically brought out from Lan Zhan's satchel, to Si Zhui's amazement) under the said magnolia tree - in which Si Zhui was grateful to slake his thirst and sate a little of his hunger, after being put into a protective hibernation state that lasted for several weeks, even months.

Wei Ying explained in all seriousness, with timely nods from the husband by the side, that Si Zhui was found in a similar state as Master Lan Qi Ren - the boys were glad to know that the elder was doing fine -, which was a near-death state that Gusu Lans can achieve with mastery of ancient cultivation techniques. That state helped to remove his presence and appeal from the Tians' qi-seeking radar, which explained why the succubi did not raid the graveyards and the mausoleum to sniff him out, when the first waves of attack struck Caihong. The air inside the coffin was stale when Jing Yi first opened the casket, Wei Ying remarked, and that sent alarms ringing that the boy needed to inhale fresh air and fresh qi before his weakening body was truly starved to real death. The tassels were conduits for the two extraordinary beings - Ernie was remotely commanded to channel some Gusu Lan healing magic, including dispelling the near-death state, casting recuperative magics and qi-awakening spells; while Ni-er played her role by warming up the body, and released truckloads of qi to strengthen and boost Si Zhui's wakefulness.

"I, Wei Wuxian, hereby kowtow to you in full apology for my unbecoming behaviour as one of the leaders of our new family," Wei Ying announced and acted true to his words by bowing before the two shell-shocked boys. There wasn't really a need for Jing Yi to kiss his Princess Snow-White to wake her (him) up - that part wasn't in the books, and was orchestrated purely for an adult's childish entertainment (plus, he killed several small shrubs when he rolled over them in his playful mirth).

Si Zhui blinked - he was extremely composed and had tons of questions, but still, he reacted first to his senior's anguish -, he reached out to Wei Ying and muttered a rather modest string of "It's alright, Wei qianbei ", "I wasn't hurt, so it's okay", and even "That was my first time, I wouldn't really know"s. He looked calm and reassuring when he talked, although still a little shaken physically, but otherwise he was fine. He still had his hairpiece, his forehead ribbon and Gusu Lan robes, and looked just about the same as the last time the couple had met him earlier that year around springtime (both he and Wen Ning visited the couple in the 'Mounds occasionally, and they enjoyed Lan Zhan's cooking too).

Jing Yi felt bad for keeping silent, and that Si Zhui had to carry the brunt of the conversation despite the latter having just woken up from hibernation and deserved to rest a bit more. "I... I'll take responsibility too! I'm just so glad that Si Zhui is up and well again so I'm not blaming anyone for what happened," he glanced at his bestest friend with an awkward grin, "So, please let Si Zhui settle down in his awakened state, and let me do more. I promise take good care of him too, since the two of you are so busy saving our sect," he blurted without thinking - and realized belatedly that it sounded quite wrong , though he couldn't actually tell because he really wanted to care for Si Zhui as a fellow disciple - and maybe more.

Wei Ying laughed at that and fortunately did not press further to double the junior disciple's embarrassing misery (because Lan Zhan had a thumb and forefinger curled into a claw behind Wei Ying's back, ready to pinch the younger man's buttocks at a moment's notice if he had acted insensitively and went out of line). Truthfully, Jing Yi was very grateful that his new parents (of sorts) had agreed, and succeeded in bringing Si Zhui back into his arms (literally), and he really looked forward to escape the shattered world, and start a new life with the rest of the survivors of the Gusu Lan sect waiting for him in Qishan.

“Well, you’ve said it so don’t take back your words, Jing Yi. Take responsibility, and here,” Wei Ying shrugged, handed his holo-phone to the boy (Si Zhui’s eyes widened at the gadget, but said nothing), then rummaged out a fresh set of Qishan Lan robes and twin-set tassels from his satchel and presented them, “Get our newest baby here up to speed with what’s happening, finish up the tea and snacks for us, while I take my husband for a walk over there to discuss the next steps for Qishan Lan.” Wei Ying scooted to the back and dragged Lan Zhan off the picnic grounds (Si Zhui kept glancing back and forth, clearly confused, but still, he remained silent). After a few steps away, Wei Ying hissed loudly to his partner, “Lao gong ! Don’t pinch my buttocks anymore! I said the right things in the end, didn’t I? Why are your fingernails so sharp? Remind me to trim them for you tonight, okay?” and whined on and on until they were out of hearing range.

Si Zhui looked rather dazed at the first conversation he’s had with the couple since nearly half a year ago (questions, questions, so many questions!), then patiently, adjusted himself to a comfortable cross-legged sitting position on the straw mat (which also magically appeared from Lan Zhan’s satchel - another question he probably has in his long list of sorts), then turned to the side and stared at Jing Yi expectantly.

Jing Yi was unfazed at the laser-sharp gaze, and instead beamed his million dollar smile. He held the other boy’s hand and placed the holo-phone on it. “What... what is this? It feels so light, it glows and there are lots of lights and images on it?” Si Zhui asked in wonder, as he wiggled his fingers at a floating device made of luminescence and other 51st-century ultra-modern zero-matter material; ninety-nine percent of the questions he had in mind probably flew out the window at that point, like a boy who forgot everything when given a fantastic new toy to play with.

“Here, let me show and tell you,” Jing Yi replied with his most confident toothy grin that day.

Beneath the magnolia tree somewhere in the peaceful Caihong temple gardens, two Lan boys enjoyed a picnic beneath mid-morning skies that had started to clear after an earlier scare from passing-by rainclouds (and a rainbow - a caihong - appeared after all in the background!). One boy talked on and on animatedly, gestured all over to tell the other about the history of the Kingdom of Qishan Lan, the First Fathers, the state of their world, the products of Wangxian Co. Ltd. he’d read up shortly from ErNet - and showed his sole captive audience how to use the mobile device to browse for information and entertainment - and he was so charming, convincing and persuasive, that for a moment, Lan Si Zhui was enraptured by a new side of his best friend he’d never seen before, thought that Lan Jing Yi had certainly matured and bloomed in the last few days, weeks or months, and believed every word Jing Yi said, then promised that he too, would like to serve his friend’s - their - new cause for their sect; Jing Yi is certainly an up-and-coming salesman who clinched his first deal, the biggest breakthrough, and earned himself a confidant for a lifetime.

.

The couple sat on a rock to deliberate on what they’ve learnt, and shared their thoughts.

“So... Si Zhui said that both he and Wen Ning were indeed at the temple grounds along with the other refugees who barricaded themselves inside the various buildings of the complex, when they realized they had been surrounded by waves of enemies marching through Caihong’s town gates. During the chaos, they witnessed firsthand how the succubi and their fierce corpse escorts attacked and devoured their victims; Wen Ning suggested that they honed in on their living prey like bloodhounds, and used qi as scent markers, which was what he did when he was in his feral state; Si Zhui had studied in depth about Corrupted Dark creatures since he started living with Wen Ning, so he knew quite a bit about succubi and of course, the fierce corpses.

He’s such a smart boy, and took a page from your uncle’s book to work out a strategy for escape. He sealed his life energies and went into the hibernation, near-death state so that he couldn’t be detected, then exchanged his place inside the casket. He’d given Wen Ning a few ready-to-use Gusu Lan sealing magic talismans; in case their plan failed, Wen Ning could quickly activate the talismans, seal and hide the casket containing Si Zhui, for the latter’s safety. Wen Ning is a fierce corpse with a living soul, but he is virtually indistinguishable from the Tian’s undead army especially from the eyes of the lower ranking monsters. Si Zhui thought Wen Ning would be able to push through the barricades and escape undetected into Caihong Town and out into the wilderness, but something must have happened.

What do you think, lao gong ?” the spouse reached behind innocently and started nipping the husband’s pants with his fingers - payback for what the latter did earlier. The husband flinched, nnnh’ed, but did not fight back. He remained calm.

“Mn. We cannot be sure unless we ask Wen Ning. However, it is probable that something went wrong, and Wen Ning had to hide the casket in the mausoleum which is the safest place within the temple grounds, then used the sealing magic talismans on the building’s entrance. That is why you couldn’t find any other survivors inside the catacombs.

What Wen Ning did was unforgivable from a human's moralistic view, but he is no longer human too - remember that. His remaining life is about cherishing loved ones - the Wens that he left behind, long ago.”

“(sniffle, sniffle)... uuuu... I’m so touched, I can’t even fault Wen Ning for acting this way, and I’m not even his master anymore! Uuuu... uuuu... why did you make me cry, lao gong ...! You never sugar-coat your words for your wife, you incorrigible man!” the spouse started to wipe his face and pinched the husband’s buttocks in full force, in revenge for his self-inflicted misery.

“Mn... aah... uunh... Lao po , we’re not in front of the kids, it is alright to cry. So please stop attacking my... hnnh...” the husband scooted sideways to avoid the vicious pecking attacks, but the wife was relentless and followed his every move.

“This is such a tragic story, lao gong !” the spouse cried and kept jabbing the husband’s springy buttocks and hips with pincers. “Wen Ning should be able to escape unharmed from this town, or even the whole of Gusu. He is adept at leaping over trees and cliffs, and he is much stronger than any man. I do not think the barriers at the borders will block any undead from passing by, since fierce corpses are regularly sent out to invade the rest of the Middle Kingdom anyway. If he is smart and if he values his life, he would have left Gusu while there is still a chance. But if that happened, my poor baby A-Yuan is all alone in this space-time bubble...! Uuuu... uuuu...”

Lan Zhan tried his best to pacify the distressed spouse by embracing him. Wei Ying sobbed into the husband’s caring touch, with one hand groping the latter’s buttocks and kept pinching the glutes out of spite. The biting pain is real, but Lan Zhan was able to rein in his responses after getting used to the uncalled-for abuse. The husband pondered about his older brother too, and perhaps, in some mysterious twists of fates, thought if both Wen Ning and the venerable Zewu Jun had really fled Gusu long ago.

From afar, Jing Yi stole glances at his Patriarch and Matriarch sitting on a rock, and thought how budding leaders should mimic their mentors in a traditional ‘lead by example’ setting in which the Gusu Lans are strong proponents for. He could do the act of brotherly embracing - just as how xiongdi s often hug among themselves in times of happiness and sadness. He leaned back a bit and his eyes darted downwards to study the pleasant curves of his best friends rear; Si Zhuo was too immersed in the wonderful world of surfing ErNet using the holo-phone to notice. Jing Yi’s fingers twitched (and itched) out of pure, unadulterated innocent curiosity - would it be firm? Or flabby? Or both? -, and thought, that perhaps he could man up someday and reach that next milestone in life, soon.

.

“Shugong , let me run through the process again. After you walk out of these doors, you will exit this underground chamber which served as your recovery room, and need to climb up several steps to reach a trapdoor - it’s actually a disguised floor mat. Open it, climb out and you’ll be on your way to the Immigration Processing Centre of the Kingdom of Qishan Lan. You will need to walk through tunnels - just follow the signages written in all known major dialects of the Middle Kingdom - before reaching the counter. There, you need to present your identification information to the attending officer, and be interviewed for--” Ernie droned on and on about the proceedings and protocols for clearing immigration right until attaining one’s shiny new war-refugee status, and he was promptly interrupted.

“No,” Master Lan Qi Ren simply butted in with one word. He wore his new set of silky soft Qishan Lan robes (since the old one was stained and smelled after months of neglect), fiddled with his new set of tassels on his new fancy belt, a pouch and a satchel filled with goodies to start a new life, and his sword in its scabbard - oiled, cleaned and sharpened by Ernie too. He whipped out his state-issued holo-phone (he declined a Weiphone after learning that in his advanced age and status, he is eligible for the newer, more senior-friendly holo-phone that does not strain the eyes, and even comes with more intelligent, flexible functions to serve those with stiff and aching arthritic joints), commanded it to launch a Mirror app so that he could see his reflection and groom himself - his complexion certainly looked much better after partaking in plates of Heaven’s fruits of Immortality (he insisted for extra servings, because he could, and because older men are allowed to enjoy better, more nutritious food, according to many rules that govern the Kingdom’s healthy aging policies).

Ernie cocked his head in bewilderment - a classic gesture that the Lan master could recognize anywhere as being derived from the loved-hated child Lan Wang Ji. “But... But...,” the teenage Wang Ji with blackened eyes stammered, a hand gripped tightly and ready to pull open a doorknob at the end of the dark passage located opposite the bedroom, the lounge chair, and the large window that portrayed a serene midnight scene all day.

Master Lan Qi Ren sighed. He may be from the prehistoric era and is notorious for stubbornly holding onto outdated principles of rejecting evolution and progress for the sake of protecting the present; however, once his interest is tickled and coaxed out of hiding from a deep, unknown treasure chest locked inside his mind and heart, he was an entirely different beast - just as how he managed to climb up the ranks of thousand-strong elite members of the sect to reach his goal as a senior councillor with such tenacity, that his past mentors and rivals had nothing but praise, endorsement and recommendations for him in the form of gilded scrolls, framed certificates and very good word-of-mouth passed around teahouses and council meeting rooms - for very good reasons.

“Wang Ji-- er... Ernie, don't play me for a fool. I will not simply walk out of this paradise to be handcuffed and be treated as a measly refugee with no rights, riches and privileges. You're a clever boy, and you're half Lan, so you should know what I mean, and what I desire. Get me a better deal, won't you?”

The Lan master picked up his new pet of sorts, fondly called the ‘pillow worm’, snuggling between the front folds of his robes, right on the bosom, and he started to stroke her back to the tune of her adoring gong-gong, gong-gong, gong-gong calling out for his attention. “Don't try to outsmart me, I know my nephew inside out, and I know at least half of how you function and what you're capable of. For example, this,” he pulled on a hair at a particular spot on Ni-er's underbelly, and immediately, she started to cry in burning pain. “Or this,” the man muttered, and tickled one particular spot near her poophole, in which poor Ni-er was struck by a terrible itch all over her nervous system, and she started to twist and writhe violently and whined pitifully in distress. “And this,” he made some elaborate movements using his fingertips and palms on the worm's furry lower half, and she started laughing, shrieking, sighing, then her body seized and relaxed, erratically, even randomly - soft crystalline tinkles rose in volume into peals of uncontrolled laughter, until the pitch skyrocketed into horrible screeches of nails scratching blackboards. She couldn't breathe and was thoroughly confused, as she was unable to separate the intense, insanely powerful sensations of heavenly pure back-massage and back-scratches, alternating with having her insides kneaded, forcing peristaltic movements to ripple throughout her body until the point of ejection, but nothing came out, and she was laughing again from nice feelings radiating from the gong gong 's hands, wrecked by the desperate need to pee, poop and become constipated all over.

“I don’t need to show you what I can do to you, do I?” the master gave a crooked, knowing smile, and released Ni-er from the torture. Something must have short-circuited, because Ni-er didn’t recognize or remember the torment and the discomfort from a few seconds ago, and she still thought of the grandpa as a very loving person, so she resumed gong-gong -ing again and stayed in his arms. “Bear in mind, it doesn’t have to be... physical , Ernie,” the cunning man added - the word was pronounced with such an insidious tone, that even the teenager shivered a little.

Ernie stilled. He hadn’t seen such behaviours before, couldn’t measure what kind of danger and risk he faced even after running zillions of probability calculations using his mega-artificial intelligence, and he didn’t know such delicate spots existed on his meimei 's furred worm-y body; let alone his, if the threat was indeed real. His straightforward butler-like protocols collapsed on the spot, warning messages blared within his massive computer servers because he was dividing things by zeros, but he couldn’t work out what needed to be done, what needed to be planned, what else he should be thinking, who was the real friend or foe here, who would win and be set free, who would lose and be harmed.

“That’s... a tall order, shu gong ,” Ernie cautiously ventured, “I.. need to know first that both Ni-er and I are not placed in a disadvantageous or even dangerous position by your wishes. At least, please do not hurt my sister, shu gong .” There was an underlying plea in that impassive voice - he needed to make sure he had the money in hand before placing his bets on the table, because conservative, risk-averse and Perfectionist thinking had taught him as such.

Master Lan Qi Ren clicked his tongue in annoyance, “You’re so predictable, Ernie, that I have to spell out the answer to you: No, the two of you will not be harmed nor suffer in any way for helping me out. That’s the yaoguai mother-side of you that I detested, and can fully use to my benefit. I wasn’t there when Jiang Yanli was killed, but I’ve seen enough of the aftershocks to know that the yaoguai prioritized the love for his family and siblings, especially the sister, over many other things in life - just like how you’re behaving right now, boy.

So, listen to me clearly one last time - I don’t hurt you or your sister, and you help me out. It’s in line with Rule Number Three, and you can still swear your allegiance to your Qishan Lan kingdom anyway. Do we have a deal?” the bearded and moustached man leaned forward with a raised open palm.

Ernie hesitated - he was nowhere close to finishing computing the possibilities, the decisions and the consequences of this pivotal moment -, but he had to respond when the man raised his eyebrows and sent invisible waves of pressuring gazes, psychologically stressing the teenager to give an affirmative and mutually agreeable answer. He took the master’s welcoming right palm and gave a firm handshake.

“Deal.”

Notes for the Chapter:

Mmm... intriguing, I hope? :-)

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 118

Lan Si Zhui, birth name Wen Yuan, and fondly called ‘baby’ or baobei by the family of four (of sorts), turned out to be remarkably the most adult, the most responsible, and the most mature of them all - second only to the father figure, occasionally.

He gets along well with Jing Yi despite the two of them suffering setbacks from their respective ‘story book effect’; the baobei’s calm, kind, thoughtful, and uplifting demeanor forms a meaningful counterbalance to Jing Yi’s more unsteady emotional mood swings between being a youthful, aspiring, go-getter Mr. Positive Sunshine and an insecure stressed young man who has just started discovering his hidden talents and strengths, and is a few years shy from reaching full maturity in psychological terms.

The boy is exceptionally smart too, and having experienced - forgotten, then remembered - his volatile beginnings, so is his infallible inner strength and open-mindedness. He absorbed his new norm, his new reality and the wonders of futuristic technology and mind-bending magic lore like a sponge with little or no resistance and skepticism. He started calling Wei Wuxian his Matriarch, and the great and wonderful Han Guang Jun as his Patriarch within the hour; dutifully read up all necessary historical texts, literature on science, culture and over-4000 family rules (which he already knew by heart anyway), electronic brochures on space travel, time travel and interdimensional doors, and did his homework about immigration procedures to the Kingdom of Qishan Lan by the next mealtime - without going through any meltdowns, brain cramps, and headaches unlike his best friend); mastered the basics of using mobile devices and standard Qishan Lan equipment, talked to Jin Ling using videoconferencing, and waved at his fellow former Gusu Lan xiongdi on the other side of the country using mass-holographic technology, before bedtime.

At the same time, he is very helpful especially every time the couple faced new dilemmas in their quest to cover as much ground as possible before leaving the province for good. The Matriarch and the junior disciple make a successful hunting and foraging team, while the Patriarch and their new baobei prefer to stay in and help with cooking, laundry, and cleaning. Si Zhui always offered to lend a hand without being asked, and Lan Zhan is secretly pleased to have an eager assistant to ease the burdens of unending house chores.

.

With the succubus queen defeated in Caihong, another one easily emerged and took over (thus negating any gains from having that Tian shijie 's clone gangraped and brutally killed by about twenty giant incubi), and cast a terrible spell to warp the space around the vicinity of the town - similarly to the previous case near the borders, where without a certain (red) talisman or special tokens, the quartet could never walk out of this seemingly impenetrable bubble surrounding the Cai district. They've gone on foot towards an easterly direction for days - probably, it's hard to tell the time when the sun is always at an angle during mid-morning - but the landscape didn't seem to change, the mountainous forests in the horizon didn't move any closer, and the sea - the Great Eastern Coast that Lan Zhan wanted to visit - remained out of bounds. The couple could probably teleport within a heartbeat, but their babies weren't able to. Thus, Wei Ying and Lan Zhan endeavoured to keep their adopted sons safe until they can figure out a way to get past the space-warping spell, and enjoy their days together as a closely-knit family while doing that.

"Aim for the heart, Jing Yi! Don't be tempted by her illusions!" Si Zhui yelled, just as he sliced off a fierce corpse's hand.

Jing Yi nodded and tried his best to shake off her seductive calls - the low-ranking succubus's skimpy clothing left very little to the imagination, she kept emitting pheromones and wiggled her erogenous areas sensuously to distract her would-be attacker. He remembered what Matriarch said, and kept his thoughts focused on his best friend; he kept telling himself how handsome Si Zhui was compared to the overweight witch shaking her ass in front of him, and how much better Si Zhui's mild sweat smelled in the bath compared to the overwhelmingly floral stench that made breathing nearly unbearable - and it worked to some extent. He launched himself and propelled his sword to the demoness' chest. Si Zhui remained as the loyal trusty wingman, flanking his friend and fended off approaching undead monsters by hacking them up with his sword like how he helped the Patriarch to fillet river fish for lunch earlier.

In the end, Jing Yi whooped with joy at his third succubus kill, while Si Zhui bulldozed through nearly five fierce corpses, four vampires, two ghosts, and one tough vicious yaoguai in the form of a fox with nine tails. Just when Si Zhui wiped rotten black blood off some bushes and sheathed his sword, Jing Yi came bounding over and bear-hugged his bestie while thanking him again and again. The two made a terrific monster-busting force to be reckoned with, particularly with Si Zhui taking the heat off the battle by clearing away the bulk, so that Jing Yi could focus on the evil big boss.

.

Just a stone's throw away, Wei Ying and Lan Zhan were trying their best to make up for time for lost nookies (or what the spouse calls as 'baby-making sessions'). Due to the increased efforts to track down those who downed one of the Tians' finest succubi queens, the squad's chances of encountering wandering patrols had increased tenfold, and the couple faced increased disruptions to their Everyday especially with two restless younglings in tow.

They had set up camp in someone's abandoned cabin just outside another town named with a prefix of 'Cai'. Without their mobile home and Big Apple, and with Ernie and Ni-er seemingly temporarily unreachable using ErNet or other communication means (Ernie seemed to have put up his psychic barriers again - what an emo kid, Wei Ying thought sourly - and Ni-er was in an unresponsive, sleep-like state, for unknown reasons), the quartet was forced to make do with available resources and tools to make their lives comfortable, including putting up in deserted homes so that they could at least have a roof above their heads and access to washing, bathing and kitchen facilities.

The spouse was adamant in making the best use of the two additions to their family of sorts; he'd sent off Jing Yi to hunt for wild game and fish, and forage for wild vegetables, fruits, edible weeds and anything of value - especially if there were farms left behind by their former owners nearby -, accompanied by Si Zhui. They needed to learn how to survive in the outbacks with evil marauding the lands, he reasoned, while the couple could take a step back, and use the time to prepare a nice living space to spend the night (or day).

As soon as the two were out of hearing range, Wei Ying quickly stood at a window and leaned out with his ass raised towards the interior of the cabin, while keeping an eye at the disappearing twin silhouettes. Then he discreetly rolled up his robes, pulled down his pants and loincloth, and hissed at the husband, "Lao gong ! Hurry!" In a blink of an eye, Lan Zhan was already behind the figure bent over the windowsill. To the husband who pumped out enormous amounts of sexual qi into his radio tower between the legs with no actual outlets, he couldn't resist resting and sliding the massive tent in his pants between the spouse's butt crack. Wei Ying licked his lips and waited for the starting pistol to go off, but his hands already reached down between his own spread thighs and behind to start cupping and caressing his favourite pair of succulent seed-rich hairy eggs.

Lan Zhan moaned helplessly and dry-humped eagerly against the spouse, more so when Wei Ying stooped further and allowed the husband to rub against his well-prepped lubricated rosebud. "Wei Ying, lao po , unnh... aahn, aahn, mmnh, oouhn... please, please," he chanted - groaned - uncharacteristically with a pleading voice. He pulled down the robe's collar to expose the lean and tasty-looking pale skin, and couldn't help peppering kisses, nips and bitemarks on Wei Ying's nape and bared shoulders; he bit on the shoulder blades, nibbled the sweaty skin, silently coaxing the spouse to let him in, let him fucking in, as his bulging cockhead oozed more pre-cum and soiled his loincloth pressed perfectly into its target, separated only by thin layers of fabrics. He hnngh'd each time fingertips grazed his sensitive, plump testicles, which were brimming full of babymakers waiting to shoot out to fulfil their destinies, to where they belong deep inside lovely Wei Ying.

The moment the two boys were out of sight, Wei Ying wiggled his ass and screeched, "Now!", and Lan Zhan immediately disrobed - the husband was less inclined to want to get his clothes dirtied with his semen. Then, in one smooth deep thrust, he penetrated his one and only beloved rosebud and experienced the warmest, tightest, soul-sucking squeeze - and one-two'd immediately.

"Ah, ah, lao gong , you're such a dirty man, making love to your sexy wife in broad daylight the moment the kids aren't around... nnnh, stop groping my chest, otherwise my boobs will grow and squirt out breastmilk! Do you fantasize your wife to leak out milk from her chest? Ah, you rotten man, you want to steal our baby's milk even before it's borned, what are you, a baby calf or a bull with a big penis?

Unnh, unnh, not so hard, you undisciplined stallion! It's just been a few hours since the last time, and yet you're so impatient to breed your wife again! She will surely grow a fat baby inside this fertile belly if you continue to spray your virile seed inside her so many times like a garden hose... maybe there'll be twins, or triplets... how many cute babies do you want to plant inside my pussy today, lao gong ? Ah, why are you getting bigger inside me?! Bad boy!

Gently, gently, lao gong , you're going to suffer an arthritic back if you continue fucking so hard and fast, and your wife will have to walk bow-legged for the rest of her life, if you keep pounding like this! Do you worry that your kids will come back and walk into the sight of their parents having sex? Do you think they'll be horrified by watching how they were conceived inside their Mama's belly? Or, do you think they'll be happy to witness the moment their newest xiao didi is made inside the womb?

Ahhnnh! That's too deep! Stop drilling into my womb like a lustful virgin! You barbarian, rapist, sex offender, I ought to spank your buttocks and punish you for pawing my pussy like a dog in heat, and I don't even like dogs-- oh my goodness, are you cumming already? You prematurely ejaculating asshole! Oiii, that's twitch number five, do you have more? Oh, oh, I feel two, no three more twitches, ah, it's so warm inside my belly, my rosebud is getting a fever! What? There's even more? Give it to me, give it to your greedy wife's sweet tunnel of love, yes, yes... oh, I can feel that one, you're really trying to fertilize my garden with your wildest seeds, aren't you? Aiiee... it's flooding... it's flooding... I can feel it dripping out...!"

Wei Ying had received three servings of extremely thick and rich seed inside his still-throbbing rectum (and a bruised, pulsating beaten-up prostate gland too) and was taking a break by having his dick sucked off by the obedient husband, when the two boys returned from their harrowing trip.

“Ah...! My-my-my good children Jing Yi and Si Zhui b-b-baobei ! What... w-what good timing! I s-s-see you’re covered with bits of the undead and flesh from a succubus...” Wei Ying gasped, panting and fully flushed at the windowsill with his back turned to the boys; he closed his thighs and sandwiched the husband’s face with a ‘mmmfl!’, locking Lan Zhan in mid-swallow to warn him not to do anything rash.

Jing Yi waved as he approached, and dutifully narrated to his Matriarch a brief account of what happened - he’d caught a pig that had escaped its pen, a free-range fowl and a few fishes from someone’s farm using a hunting net, and on their way back, they bumped into a nasty patrol. Si Zhui nodded and added some details, such as how they stole fruits and vegetables from someone’s orchard - and held up a filled sack gleefully for his Matriarch to see, but Wei Ying could only turn to the side because his wonderfully convulsing hairy penis was tightly locked down into the husband’s massaging throat -, how Jing Yi bravely stabbed the heart of a succubus, and how he single-handedly took down the rest of the enemy’s escorts - he even cutely showed the number of kills with his hands up in the air.

Before the boys got too close to the sinful sight of their nervous-looking Matriarch getting a blowjob from their Patriarch, Wei Ying diverted their attention, “O-Oh... good job, children! T-Then... hnngh... Jing Yi, clean up your catch by the river o-o-over there, and Si Zhui... aahn... make sure the two of you wash up while you're... nnhn... t-t-there! Scrub every l-l-last inch of skin on your bodies, otherwise you'll get... mmmh... s-s-skin disease from the undead!" he stammered before curling up into a ball and disappeared from the boys' view.

Jing Yi stared quizzically at the Matriarch's strange behavior, but Si Zhui took no notice and bowed with his hands folded at the front. "Enn! Matriarch, do you need any help? You seem to be struggling with something inside the cabin, and you look a little feverish," Jing Yi braved a question and stepped forward closer to the windowsill.

A sweaty hand jutted out from the open window and shook violently with a clear 'No' sign. "I... We're fine! We're fine! We've been trying to prepare the cabin for our s-s-stay... aahn... it's hot in here... and we got bitten by bedbugs or fleas or mosquitoes or something... hieeee!... while cleaning the straw beds... so don't come any closer! Wait for us at the river... nnnhn!... we'll join the two of you soon for a quick r-r-rinse!" said the hand that twitched again and again.

Jing Yi was a little squeamish by biting creepy crawlies, so he bowed at the waving hand, and quickly dragged his best friend away. "Let's go! I don't want us to be bitten and be left with marks all over my body. It seems every building or countryside home we come across in this district is full of such bugs, since both Wei Wuxian and Han Guang Jun have always sported such painful itchy-looking spots on their necks, hands and legs whenever they prepare our accommodation!" he said and hurried off towards the waterways. Si Zhui gazed back with concern for his parents of sorts, but thought that the couple could manage their task independently, so he "Enn"s and trailed the best friend.

Back in the cabin, Lan Zhan vigorously made love to - attacked would be a better word, really - Wei Ying's ballsacks and perineum with his lips and forced the spouse to dry-orgasm from his nicely swollen testicles and shuddering prostate. Wei Ying's toes curled, his back arched and bowed repeatedly at the scorching-hot sensations running from one nerve-end to another, before he was deep-throated again the moment the boys bid their good-byes. The husband's heavily engorged, and very excited (again) cock stood out into the air from its nest of pubic curls as he squatted between the spouse's legs, and his jaw was beginning to tire a bit from servicing the latter. He received a pinch on his earlobes - and nnnghed in mid-blowjob - sending delicious vibrating tendrils of pleasure straight into the spouse's pelvis - and he slowed down when his earlobes were pulled until he had to rise up and break away from the tasty twitchy wife-dick.

"You horrible husband! I was talking to our children, and yet you cannot stop eating my eggs! What are you planning to do?!" Wei Ying hissed, kept a firm grip on the abused earlobe and used his other hand to reach behind and spank the husband's springy tight buttocks. Each spank elicited another grunt, and the husband started to sputter droplets of ejaculate to the floor, uselessly, as he one-two'd from the delicious stinging pain - such a masochist!

"Are you trying to encourage my testicles to make more baby eggs? Are you trying to make me even more fertile? Oh you nasty boy, you want your whore wife to bear many eggs like a frog would on a rainy day, so that you can spew your billions of naughty babymakers into them and make lots of babies inside me! You're going to rape me until death, no, your sperms are going to rape my baby eggs until every single one of them is properly inseminated! You greedy man! Asshole! Rapist! Come over here, to the bed, I'll spread my legs properly so that you can fuck me like a real husband! Come on, come on, lao gong, your wife's pussy is waiting to be impregnated... make tens, hundreds, thousands of fat chubby babies inside this loving hole..."

Lan Zhan groaned and nearly howled like an animal because he couldn't tolerate his spouse's dirty talk, that left him extremely turned on. He shoved a cackling Wei Ying onto a recently-cleaned bed with nicely-fitted bedsheets - there were no bugs, really - nearly dislocated the latter's hips when he pulled the younger man's smooth thighs open with such sexy savagery and ravenous glints in the eyes, and promptly rammed his dying-to-orgasm-burst-explode arousal into the sweet tight clenching flooded heated tunnel, as instructed.

.

A family that pees together, stays together, the Matriarch declared his mantra, as all four took out their limp dicks (the Patriarch's looked a bit less flattering, a little more worn out than usual, and flopped uselessly like an uncut six-inch worm between the legs). Wei Ying wanted everyone to pee, let the river's waterflow wash down their wastes, including Jing Yi's bloody mess of gutting a medium-sized pig and fishes, and plucking a chicken's feathers, before they take a nice soak and afterwards, dinner (technically).

Si Zhui's bulging eyes did not go unnoticed; he couldn't remember if he'd seen his Matriarch's superbly bushy hairy cock in an earlier stage in life, otherwise little A-Yuan would have been scarred for life - in fact, being naked, his Matriarch is the hairiest of them all ranging from the back, the chest, the treasure trail below the navel all the way to the dense jungle upon the pelvis; his Patriarch has the most impressive fleshy snake he'd ever seen, with a lighter set of curls; Jing Yi was pretty much ordinary in terms of body build and hair density as any average Middle Kingdom-er; while he is the smoothest, silkiest and shiniest of the four - truly the babe of the quartet.

Wei Ying brazenly gripped the husband's cock and made sure his aim was Perfect into the stream, while he held his own too. Both were relatively unresponsive, as Wei Ying had cummed enough times to satisfy his demonic lusts, while the husband's penis had died sometime during the intense, savage sexual intercourse that lasted many, many rounds and gone to its own heaven to rest in peace.

“No need to be shy, boys, because we're all one big happy family,” the spouse grinned at his younglings, “When I studied at the Cloud Recesses about two decades ago, we were told, implicitly, that we're forbidden to touch other men's private areas. It was such a clear and wisely-made rule for students who came from different sects and families attending the same classes, because that meant that students of different sects were forbidden to touch each other, so that everyone could focus on their studies.

Which also meant, at least in my honest and very brilliant opinion, that students from the same sect could touch each other, because - in reverse - it also meant that same-sect touchy-feely students would excel in their studies, strengthen their relationships, and later, succeed in life.”

The two bewildered boys stared at their Matriarch at the twisted revelation, and even more so at how embarrassed the Patriarch looked, with rosy cheeks and reddened earlobes, as the latter looked away and started to relieve himself in gentle tinkles of a perfect mild-yellow stream blending into the clear river water. Wei Ying chuckled and squeezed his bladder, causing arches of pee to rudely dribble into the air wildly, the surrounding grass, splattering the dirt, and only a little bit actually went into the intended water by the riverbank.

A few seconds of stunned silence later, Si Zhui had an A-ha moment and grabbed Jing Yi's cock. The boy yelped, ripened into seven shades of tomato-reds instantly, and tried to squirm away. Si Zhui would have none of such behaviours unbefitting of exemplary Lan disciples, and reached out to grab Jing Yi's hand to grip onto his own limp cock - so that Jing Yi was effectively ensnared upon Si Zhui's body. Si Zhui was rather excited at his enlightenment and gave the other boy's cock a few very, very unintended nice strokes.

“Jing Yi! Our Matriarch is trying to teach us a valuable life lesson! We're all in a single sect, a single family, so it's okay to touch each other like what he's doing to our Patriarch! In fact, the touching helps to reinforce our familial bond and makes us smarter in some inexplicable ways!” Si Zhui smiled sweetly (and almost too innocently) at the other boy.

Jing Yi was a flustered confused mess of conflicts - he felt squeamish at touching other boys' penises, but he couldn't refuse his best friend's, because he's had some obsessive dreams about touching Si Zhui, and now he was actually touching the latter - his mouth watered, he swallowed hard, his eyes kept darting between Si Zhui's cheerful grin and at his trembling hand on his best friend's still-limp cock - oh god, why won't his grasp let go?! - but Si Zhui's cock is so warm, so soft, so delicate, so cute, looked tasty and sexy, he wondered if it smelled pungent or tasted sweet, or would it look nicer bouncing on his abdomen when the boy rode him while moaning-- ah banish the thought! -, but his heart raced and he started to sweat in alarm because his own stroked dick was starting to react at sudden very illegal imagery that insidiously burrowed into his mind and its pent-up desires, the same way as he reacted when he had his obsessive dreams while asleep, and he-- stammered while his hand unconsciously moved up and down - Jing Yi's unexceptional erection's foreskin had a nice texture, not too veiny, looked lightly muscled, not too thick in girth, makes for a nice grasping meatstick, the first droplet of pre-cum oozed out - further causing pleasurable miseries unto the unfortunate junior disciple.

“Ah, Jing Yi, why... why are you getting h-h-hard...? We're supposed to pee... but how will you pee in this state...?” innocent doe-eyed Si Zhui

Wei Ying giggled and quickly finished up his task and the husband's. They quickly washed their hands and Wei Ying shoved the husband away from the scene, while cackling, "We're done, so the two of you better figure out how to get yours done too. See you at the pond upstream, we'll have a family bath over there!" The couple hurried off to let the two awkward, confused boys to solve their biggest coming-of-age dilemma in life.

Wei Ying made some obscene pistoning movements of pumping a closed fist suggestively into the air before walking uphill with the terribly unsettled husband (after having shown his disciples how he peed, who wouldn't?); Si Zhui still couldn't fathom what to do next; Jing Yi lowered his head and started stuttering something, and unknowingly let out a husky moan.

.

Much later, the four would gather at the cabin's long-emptied dining hall to have a humble dinner made of authentic Gusu Lan cuisine - boiled fish, steamed chicken with garlic and onion sauce, plain stir-fried mixed seasonal vegetables with mushrooms and a platter of cut fruits for dessert. For starters, however, the Patriarch made lotus root pork rib soup, and announced that he wanted everyone to try his latest iteration of the dish.

Si Zhui cried - he wasn't sure why, but the taste was nostalgic, and reminded him of homely feelings lost long ago; he couldn't remember why, because the memories of his youngest days were still blurred; but he blurted out Wen Ning's name for, again, unknown reasons. Jing Yi, who already suffered enough from getting a royal handjob from his best friend - now, probably a lover-in-waiting - felt an instant urge to comfort Si Zhui, so he embraced the latter and gripped a wrist tightly, silently sending visceral - not necessarily verbal - messages, even promises, that no matter what Si Zhui had to endure, he was always there for him, by his side.

Lan Zhan simply patted their youngest baby's hair, and calmly said that he'll teach Si Zhui how to make the soup. Wei Ying followed suit with a soothing rub on the boy's back, and said, with slightly teary eyes, that Si Zhui must remember the recipe, "so that once you've reached Qishan, remember to cook the soup using ingredients bought from the Yunmeng's Yummies section of Jiang Patriarch's supermarkets, and make sure to give a bowl to Jin Ling." Wei Ying also promised that they'll continue to look for Wen Ning, assuming that the undead man had travelled outside of Gusu, and send him to "his, no, their new but not really new home sweet home." Si Zhui bowed many times and thanked the couple; he felt cherished by the three most important men in his life at that point in time - missing his uncle, but that mystery would be resolved soon, he hoped.

.

Sometime during the meal, Wei Ying sneaked a bag of Wangxian's Wild Wild Premium Range's grilled wild boar meat that he had personally teleported - imported - through his Bag of Holding; the food was actually a little too bland for his tastes other than the soup, so he needed to add something chewy and chunky for that extra zing - with a packet of plum sauce, of course. Lan Zhan was (un)fortunately busy fussing over Si Zhui by teaching the very attentive boy the perfect dining etiquette according to the Qishan Lan's standards (there were subtle differences from Gusu Lan's, but nobody other than those two would be interested to know); Jing Yi spotted the Matriarch mmmh-ing at juicy meaty chunks that reminded him of sirloin steak cut into sizable bites, and politely asked for some. Wei Ying said, "Sure," then dipped it into plum sauce to make the morsel appetizing to anyone's tastebuds - especially the boy who loved chicken wings and generally meats - and offered it to him. Jing Yi ended up sharing half of the bag of gamey meat with the Matriarch - he didn't really know, nor asked, what kind of meat that was, because it was so tasty - while Wei Ying conveniently forgot to check if Jing Yi was as pure-blooded, pure-bred and pure-hearted as Lan Wang Ji before consuming such dangerous, qi - deviating foods.

Notes for the Chapter:

Pretty much a comical filler of sorts, with some relationship building and expansion of the world a little bit.

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 119

In the following days, the couple set out to put their boys in the most challenging, compromising, sometimes embarrassing, sometimes terrifying, sometimes exhilarating positions. They taught the boys the basics of survival, living skills and the secrets of living together. It helped that they decided to stay quite a while in one of the villages close to the borders of the Cai district while waiting for the space-warp barrier to be torn down by the forces of the Kingdom, so they have the opportunity to observe, and guide the boys towards the right path, according to the Qishan Lan's family rules.

Jing Yi no longer felt flustered waking up spooning Si Zhui with wet patches on the front of his pants and right on top of the latter's clothed buttocks. The first few dawns of terror subsided into more manageable "Oh I see" episodes, when Wei Ying explained the root of his uncontrollable lusts for the youngest baby in the fold; the spouse only needed to pull down the no-nonsense husband's pants (followed by frightened squeals from the boys), and with the seriousness of a professor giving a lecture, pointed out the anatomy and functions of the radio tower between Lan Zhan's legs. "Your Patriarch has been working very hard all day, without any rest, to keep this up and running so that we don't become succubi food, so you better appreciate what he's done," he said, followed by correctly predicting that the good-vibes effects spill over to the rest of the quartet.

Everyone has a role to play to help their Patriarch succeed in their common interest to survive in this impossible space-time bubble, the Matriarch decreed. Wei Ying admitted in the open that he has sex with the husband whenever the boys were away gathering food, fighting off drugged enemy forces or while asleep, "so that your beloved Han Guang Jun's sexual qi remains at its healthy peak, and will never run low enough to awaken the full devastating power of the Tians, which would wipe out the last memories of Gusu from the face of the Middle Kingdom, forever.” Si Zhui was so touched by the powerful revelation, that he swore to devote his life to support the couple’s cause to protect their weak - like themselves -, and to make sure they succeed in their mission to rid the world of evil threatening their existence.

“I do not expect the two of you to instantly bond like how your Patriarch and I do, physically, emotionally and spiritually, but that is the condition which you must eventually achieve before we get the two of you out of Gusu safely, before the grand reboot,” Wei Ying further added. Si Zhui was shaken, Jing Yi was flabbergasted, when they learned that the youngest baby suffered a fate worse than Jin Ling - Si Zhui is by blood and lineage, a Wen. “He may have been raised as a true Gusu Lan, however, the system in which everyone’s ancestry is dictated and therefore destined, states that my baby A-Yuan,” Wei Ying glanced at his precious, teary-eyed baobei with a forlorn look, “is not qualified to be entered into the registries of our Kingdom. Jin Ling is technically half Jiang, with that half coming from my shijie , so he only needed to pass some exams to eventually join the ranks of his other surviving comrades from Yunmeng. However--”

Jing Yi had to rudely cut off the Patriarch by crying out, “What about Si Zhui?!” in alarm. To the boy, it almost sounded as though Si Zhui had been given a death sentence, cast out from his kind with no way of return.

At that point, the Patriarch stepped into the cosy family gathering at the dining table after a classic Gusu-style breakfast of congee, fried dough sticks, hard-boiled eggs, soy milk, toasted nuts and fruits, and sternly, not necessarily intimidating but certainly warranted everyone’s utmost attention to the gravity of the situation, stated, “The only way for Si Zhui to be inducted as a potential candidate citizen to our Kingdom is to be married into the sect through one of its members.” Lan Zhan stared straight into Jing Yi’s eyes - into his soul , even -, and the boy shook with something deeper than the fear of the enemy, the fear of having wet dreams, the fear of walking into the jaws of death.

For the boy who hadn't yet reached the legal age of marriage, it felt like being forced to make a decision before his time and especially one that concerned his best friend - his immediate response would've been to reject, to ask for more time, to consider how he or the other party felt; he was still skittish on the topic of romance, let alone full-blown love and getting hitched - however, any signs of refusal would spell the doom of his friend-soon-lover, and would be lost forever in the grand reboot of Gusu, scheduled to start not too far away - and yet, he couldn't just say "Yes, I do" and produce a ring or whatever the symbol may be to signify his acceptance, his declaration that he would leap off the cliff, cross the line, take the plunge, and commit himself to a lifetime of marital bliss - at worst, disaster.

Wei Ying hugged the trembling Si Zhui, who was heartbroken to learn of his fate, while murmuring, "It's okay baby, it's okay." He told the boy that the entire scenario mirrored an arranged marriage of the yesteryears, but it was done with the best intention in heart, and because he wanted Si Zhui to join them when they all return home to Qishan. "Jing Yi's the only one among the survivors from Gusu that is suitable for you, and that's what your Patriarch and I have decided long ago. Please, Si Zhui baobei, say that you'll try your best to make it work, and we understand if it takes time to get to know him, and by god's grace, to develop feelings for him in the right way. I would never, ever, want you to feel hurt or disrespected by the whole situation," Wei Ying pleaded to his baby boy.

With the cat out of the bag, the two boys faced a new reality that forced them to mature into adults and to come to terms with their own feelings, and each other's. The couple left the two to mull over their relationship and talk things through; Lan Zhan went to wash the dishes, Wei Ying went to hang washed robes and clothes on the clothesline.

Fortunately, the two boys agreed to give it a go; Jing Yi would start playing his role as the loving boyfriend, and being a little awkward with expressing true feelings and thoughts (because he's such a people-pleaser salesperson who kept spinning white lies to sugar-coat everything without revealing what he really feels), he asked for Si Zhui's understanding that he would use actions more than words "not to seduce, but to make you feel loved and secure, and share my insecurities with you so that you know I'm not the perfect man, that I need your support too to overcome this, and that I want us to face our troubles together as one." Si Zhui, being the more scholarly of the two and who appreciated words more than actions, was smitten at once at such a frank outpouring of strength and fragility, that he nodded instantly (and Wei Ying did a little jig outside while holding the boys' freshly washed loincloths).

The boys would take over most of the daily activities - in the mornings, the parental patriarchs would already be up and about since five, and they'd be greeted an hour later by the two budding lovebirds with hands all over each other, giggling from flirty tickles and teasing, exchanging timid kisses and loving gazes - on the sofa, no less - before breakfast. The two would spend most of the day outside hunting, foraging and gathering food, then return to help out with cooking, washing, practise cultivation sessions performed as a pair, and basically spend as much time as possible with each other. Wei Ying was curious to see how their relationship developed, to count how many times Jing Yi hugged the other boy from behind, to sneakily eye their kissing techniques, to keep track of the love poems and whispers of loving words that tug the heartstrings - but Lan Zhan was always around to pull the errant spouse away by the ear, because eavesdropping, especially on other people's private lives, was against one of their family's rules.

Thus, by the end of a week - a bit more or less, it was hard to keep track of time -, it was perfectly fine for Jing Yi to wake up spooning his boyfriend with his dick shoved into the other's butt crack and ejaculated several times during the night - such distasteful behaviour was perfectly explained by the effects of their Patriarch's effective anti-Tian radio tower - and Si Zhui felt perfectly comfortable in his arms - Jing Yi nicely warmed his back too, doesn't smell, and doesn't really have bad breaths -, including that wet sticky cooling puddle on his rear - a totally natural physiological reaction, really. It didn't really feel like a forced marriage and relationship, not when they've received blessings from their parents (of sorts) and their deepening bond with one another grew naturally amidst the ticking time bomb of the day when their departure from Gusu would be announced.

.

“Lan Zhan, how did we get from that ,” Wei Ying pointed at the two naked boys frolicking in the pond waters, “to where we are today?”

Something must've happened beneath the rippling surface, because Jing Yi grinned, then brazenly floated in front of Si Zhui, and soon, both of them started to pant and blush. A few seconds later, Si Zhui broke into gasping laughter and turned away. It didn't take long for Wei Ying to figure out that the offender made a grab and frothed the two of them, but the shy squeamish baobei couldn't stand the sensations - especially with such a determined-looking boyfriend in front of him with puffed-up reddened cheeks - and escaped to the bank.

The husband leaned into the tree behind him and stretched his legs on the grassy ground - his thighs were a little numb after the spouse rode him reverse-cowgirl style that deliciously milked out everything from his loins

(and recharged his radio tower). “We didn’t start from there . You cannot compare them to us, apple to apple,” he said, then groaned, because he was about to orgasm sweetly into Wei Ying’s hot tight pistoning rosebud for the nth time that hour - he’d lost count after three.

Wei Ying scrunched his eyebrows as he squinted into the distance from where he was - making sweet love with the incredibly fortunate husband beneath the shade of trees -, while pursuing his new pastime of spying on their two boys with voyeuristic intentions. The younger man remembered that his relationship with Lan Zhan had been rocky at first, then platonic next, and suddenly, he was raped in the bushes, had plenty of steamy rape-y sex, and not long after, he asked Lan Zhan for his hand in marriage in one of the Grand Cultivation Council’s meeting halls. His expression soured when he told himself that he really didn’t want the boys to start their loving relationship with rape - so far, he knew the two had progressed from tentative kisses, kind touches, timid handjobs, unexpected wet dreams and the occasional adventurous frottage and once, intercrural sex when Jing Yi couldn’t hold back from being a horny animal - thanks to the radio tower that sent strong signals everywhere. Si Zhui, on the other hand, was calmer and preferred to suppress his desires by keeping himself busy (like sweeping with a straw broom) than to humiliate his dignity using such salacious ways.

The husband growled out the spouse’s name as a warning sign, and wrapped his hands around the latter’s waist from behind. Wei Ying sighed and stopped squat-bouncing on the tasty rigid pole that made more squelchy sounds over time (because he was absolutely flooded inside and stuff started to leak out like foamy white suds; he sat and fully placed his weight onto the husband’s tired thighs, until the said pole was fully sheathed and twitched excitedly at the prospect of another soul-draining climax, started to grind in circles, squares and stars. Lan Zhan lolled his head from side to side, moaning again and again, as he spewed another thirty creamy ejaculations deep into lovely Wei Ying, though the latter wasn’t really paying any attention - he watched how Si Zhui retrieved his clothes after that skinny dipping session inside the pond, and poor Jing Yi was conflicted between emerging from the dark waters with a terribly humiliating raging hard-on or losing a chance to run after his boyfriend into the woods.

Wei Ying gnawed at his lips in apprehension, and started forming ideas inside his twisted mind of how to get the two boys together and (for fuck's sake) get on with the show. He worried that if their 'falling in love' process took too long, it may plateau into a frustrating platonic relationship (which Wei Ying didn't quite enjoy, because it was dragged out, with no closure, direction nor excitement); or if Jing Yi bit the bullet and got down and dirty with doing the deed without considering preparedness (physically, mentally and emotionally) and without having a strategic but tender approach (it'd take more than bouquets of flowers or expensive dinners to woo one's hearts - even for Wei Ying), it may scar delicate baby Si Zhui due to the excessive force used, or the perception of being pressured to do and accept something - a true rape, and being in an intimate relationship does not justify having sex against one's will; Wei Ying would never forgive himself if Si Zhui cried in pain after getting his cherry popped.

As the younger man ruminated on his thoughts, and even considered locking them inside a room to speed things up without necessarily evoking aggressive acts, Lan Zhan pleaded the spouse to get off his thighs, because the more Wei Ying spiralled into his bottomless pit of gutter brainstorming, the faster his hips undulated and moved - which wasn't a bad thing, but too much of a good thing is really too much - and the poor husband's body started jerking and went into epileptic fits, because his cock was kneaded and massaged by such wonderful fleshy folds inside the drenched tunnel of hot tight love, that he started squirting unwillingly - he was sweating, feverish, his cock was melting, his pelvis was shaking endlessly from the short-circuits that threatened to burn out his sexual meridians; it looked as though Lan Zhan was the victim of an overzealous rape by his spouse, who continued to ride him until the radio tower sparked, glowed, rocked itself by explosions and finally sent good vibrations surging deep into interstellar space.

.

The family of four was left in another quandary, when the Patriarch received a late-night (technically) call and was asked to return to the Heavenly Court due to an urgent matter. Initially, Lan Zhan was filled with trepidation when he explained, not really forthcoming with details, but left enough hints to let the spouse know that it was related to the reason why their journey had stalled at the borders of the Cai district, and it involved his uncle. Wei Ying raised his eyebrows at the last point, because he really didn't like that bearded man - an in-law - that has nothing rosy to say about his relationship with the said man's nephew.

“My uncle... struck a deal with Ernie, which got Ni-er dragged into the whole issue too, by exploiting a legal loophole in the Kingdom's system for immigration,” Lan Zhan explained calmly over a lit candle and a cup of steaming pu'er tea on the table, while their two boys were fast asleep. Wei Ying grumbled about the emo teenager who must've grown a spine and acted on his own foolishly.

“Mn. It's a bit hard to explain, but suffice to say, rather than accepting the status as a refugee under the Kingdom's protection, my uncle engaged Ernie as his private lawyer to argue for his case and manipulated the prerogative granted by Rule Number Three to twist his status to something more... troubling.”

“Eh? Wasn't Ernie instructed to take care of your uncle's health until he is fully recovered and deemed healthy enough to enter the immigration processing centre? This isn't right, lao gong , he must've been tricked or swayed to deviate from his mission!"

Wei Ying placed a reassuring hand over the husband's, nudging the latter to go on. He also dutifully refilled the husband's cup of tea, because he knew inside his heart that the husband was a man of a few words, who preferred to keep his secrets within, away from nosy outsiders, so much so that the burden of built-up stress could eventually overwhelm his well-being. Tea was a great way to keep the man going in a conversation that could take a whole night.

Master Lan Qi Ren, Lan Zhan narrated just as how his officials had explained over the holo-phone, demanded for better and more respectable living conditions. He didn't want to end up as someone whose rights were precariously tethered to the leash held by the Kingdom's immigration and public security officers, and got Ernie to cite the tremendously powerful Rule to the administrators. The matter was debated at length amongst various levels of officers - many of whom held respect for seniority, since they were run by Lan-kin -, and was escalated to the Heavenly Court; officials were quick to try and pacify the insistent old man with monetary and valuable gifts - but Lan Qi Ren knew how to play his cards well; he realized early on that he was likely the 'eldest' (in a statutory, legal, not necessarily biological or chronological sense) in the Kingdom, and hence should be granted only the best. He toed the line very well, respected the Kingdom's authority and the limitations of what could be offered, while keeping to an acceptable balance between maintaining socio-economic justice and maximizing his personal gains without spilling over into criminal behaviours - which was why the matter was not brought to the Grand Patriarch's attention until it was too late.

Once the Realms of the Gods were involved, Lan Qi Ren learned what was available in those whole new worlds (literally) and he started to cherry-pick the best aspects. The master of Gusu Lan culture and rituals loved to live in a place as though nothing had changed, and with the Cloud Recesses at its original, clean and most pristine state; thus, the copy of the Cloud Recesses - in fact, the best assets of Gusu that had been rebuilt using reverse-engineering technology - in Heaven, had been swiped by the sly old fox and placed the under his name under a land ownership transfer agreement that he didn't need to pay even a silverpiece for.

Wei Ying choked at a spicy dried plum - his odd midnight snack - at that statement, "Pfft! That means the territory next to the Heavenly Court literally belongs to your uncle now! He's your new neighbour in your castle in the sky!"

Lan Zhan responded indignantly at that, "Hn. I suppose I could take less walks and spend more time indoors whenever I'm there."

However, Master Lan Qi Ren didn't stop at there; Ernie revealed more information about the realms, and using Rule Number Three, the Master eventually became a landowner across the realms; he owned at least a territory in each - and Ernie deviously used Lan Zhan's name to persuade the overlords to relinquish some property to the Master, because nobody would dare to deny the Grand Patriarch's uncle a simple request as either a piece of prime real estate in the Underworld filled with infinite spirits waiting to be reincarnated as servants to do his bidding; an oil, gas and mineral-rich patch under the Dragon King's seas that could literally fuel a metropolis for countless years; a mountain under the purview of the God of Prosperity that functions to generate gold ingots, precious metals and gemstones upon receiving orders; or a strip of land that births Earth Gods that could be sent to manage and prosper homes and townships and create new lands, Kitchen Gods that could be used to report on people's lives and spy on the unfaithful, and all other kinds of lesser gods, amongst others.

Wei Ying sighed, “You know, I received a message from my siblings a few days back, something about enacting a change of laws and by-laws to segregate the governance of the Mortal Realm and the Realms of the Gods from the rest of the Kingdom. I was too busy watching the boys to notice and read the message in full, but I guess this is somehow related...” and he whipped out his holo-phone to look for that message, buried under gazillions of other updates; Wei Ying hardly checked his emails since he’d given the responsibility of running the Kingdom and their company to his siblings; he preferred to spend time with his family on the Mortal Realm, go fishing or hunting jungle fowls, than be reading boring news or urgent documents that needed his signature (in which, Wei da ge could take over and sign on his behalf, anyway).

Lan Zhan continued his story, now on his third cup of tea, “Mn. Your siblings were wise to make sure that my uncle’s... selfish acts... were restricted to these two realms. He wouldn’t be interested in taking over anything modern or 51st-century outside of these realms, anyway.”

Master Lan Qi Ren hadn’t broken any laws, or upset any communities with his actions, truthfully speaking, so there was no reason to refuse his requests on technical grounds. Lan Zhan had immediately sent word to his administrators, particularly the Lan-kin, to watch the uncle very closely in every realm where he now has a presence, to make sure that the elderly man does not do anything untoward the Kingdom or the company, whether intentional or not.

“Hmm... how about this world, lao gong ? Where has he staked his claim and started to grow roots?” Wei Ying asked, as he read the found message in full on his phone.

“... My uncle has bought the parcel of land next to our home in the ‘Mounds. You know, the one that has a very beautiful scenery of rolling hills and valleys, with a lake surrounded by rivers, and fruit and vegetable gardens in-between,” the husband replied with downcast eyes and stared at his cup. A single crooked tea stalk floated in the middle while pointing diagonally - it wasn’t an auspicious sign at all.

“You’re kidding?! That’s the most productive part of the ‘Mounds! Plus, I won’t be able to get a good night’s sleep knowing that your naggy old uncle could be watching us anytime!” Wei Ying flicked off his holo-phone after having read enough and pouted at the husband. He nearly banged the table with his wife-y frustrations, but stopped himself just in time - the boys shouldn’t be woken up, after all.

Lan Zhan remained quiet.

The spouse leaned closer against the table and rested his chin on a palm, “So? What else is going wrong? How is your uncle adding to the misery of our unexpectedly prolonged stay in Gusu?”

The husband had to take a deep breath to continue another side of the story. Upon moving into his new home in the Heavens - a large mansion built atop misty mountains and ever-flowing waterfalls, flanked with excellent views of the recreated paradise of the Cloud Recesses, Caiyi Town and further choice locations from Gusu, Master Lan Qi Ren took interest in the supermarket just down the road from the Heavenly Palace. The supermarket was actually located at the entrance to the Master’s territory and served as a stop area for all visitors to sign-in or to shop for souvenirs and daily necessities.

The crafty old man appointed himself as the new owner of the supermarket because it was a great way for him to spend his eternal life after having enjoyed the Peaches of Immortality (at that point, Wei Ying grumbled about the exclusivity of the fruits, but he really shouldn't complain and be a busybody, especially when it involved one particularly troublesome in-law; he really needed to stay out of the limelight and as far away from Lan Qi Ren as possible); as the supermarket owner, he could earn a good living, enjoy good food and some classic luxury, comforts and conveniences from the supermarket's stocks, get to know his neighbours - and pry into his nephew's affairs by befriending visiting customers from the Heavenly Court - and most insidious of all, he could control the traffic going in and out of his newfound territory in the Heavens.

“ Lao po , you already know the military secret that my dreams can be weaponized. The incubus army that our Kingdom has been sending to Gusu were created and bred from my dreams, then sent to the Mortal Realm via the Heavens, under the watchful eyes of my faithful Lan-kin servants,” the husband slowly tried to explain the complicated topic of realizing one's dreams, though not in a very aspiring way.

Wei Ying took another nibble at his plum and sucked air through his teeth at the spiciness - he'd bit a chilli flake -, “You mean that free-to-air channel featuring A-Ji and A-Xian? Yeah, I saw recaps from WeiTube how those twenty merry bandits came to earth and defeated the clone of Tian shijie a while ago. But that channel's been down for days... have you been dreaming elsewhere? Not that I really care, since you have plenty of dirty dreams all night, and I sleep like a log anyway so I didn't follow the series anyway.” The spouse stole a sip from Lan Zhan's cup, which was fine for the latter.

It was Lan Zhan's turn to sigh this time. He'd blame it on his uncle, but ultimately, he could only blame himself for his lax oversight, and for inheriting an uncle who wasn't receptive to new ideas.

Lan Zhan's dreams created armies of terrifying human convicts that could be transformed into incubi, and shipped out in truck convoys - however, the portal that led out from his dreams connected to the territory that his uncle had just procured using legal means. The trucks were stopped at the road leading up to the supermarket by its new owner - Master Lan Qi Ren - because the old man was livid at such terrifying alien machines on four wheels that carried even more terrifying monsters through his sacred land. Officers from the Heavenly Court tried to negotiate with the owner to let the trucks through, and even explained the reasons for shipping the monsters through the Heavens as transit, and onward to the Mortal Realm for noble causes, but the man steadfastly refused - because he believed that such monsters should not be released at all, let alone roam anywhere on the Mortal Realm - or any realms - and be allowed to attack the living; Master Lan Qi Ren failed to understand the concept of Dark and Corruption magic, space-time bubble and the fate of his former home - he still believed that Gusu's state was unaffected and remained as a typical wartorn province. He rejected the idea of using incubi to prey on succubi - a perfectly safe biological pest control solution, but the Master didn't understand this -, saying that using such repulsive creatures was akin to playing with fire - another frustratingly outdated thinking.

“Therefore, since the last few days, there hasn't been any new incubus army deployed into Gusu and all existing incubi on the ground have their hands full trying to quell the current succubi population. Until more incubi arrive, the succubus numbers will eventually rise from infrequent but worrying Dark portals that managed to open from the Tians' deep-universes, and the bubble that traps us in Cai district cannot be broken,” Lan Zhan concluded with a shrug.

Wei Ying took a full minute to digest the news, and swallow the remaining portion of his spicy plum. He coughed.

“So... you need to go up there to sort out the matter with your uncle, to resume the shipments of incubi, right?” the spouse asked.

The husband nodded.

“And I should stay down here with the two kids to make sure they’re safe and continue to bond with each other, right?” another question, tinged with a little unhappiness at the prospect of being left alone.

Lan Zhan nodded again.

“ Lao gong , you do know that a day in Heaven is a century down here. Your work in your office in the skies could mean leaving behind your wife and the two brats for years, decades, even centuries...” Wei Ying sounded hurt and rather despondent.

The husband remained quiet.

.

Far, far away, Wei da ge called for an emergency meeting among the siblings in his continent-wide camouflaged mothership orbiting planet Earth - the Mortal Realm. His huge monitor became populated with the faces of his beloved siblings and countless smaller other assistants, officials and supporters who serve the Kingdom and the company.

He ordered the er ge to work on strategies to re-delineate the ‘Mounds, and to check on their assets, inventories and properties in the two affected realms - the Mortal Realm and the Realms of the Gods -, taking into account of First Father Wei’s latest grouses and their own personal interests. Wei er ge blurted out an easy arrangement for the first part of the request - the Mounds could be divided up into a total of ten pieces: the center piece for the First Fathers, followed by one each for: Jiang Cheng and Jin Ling; Yunmeng Jiang’s last hundred survivors; Master Lan Qi Ren (who unfortunately takes the choicest cut); Jing Yi and Si Zhui; Gusu Lan’s last hundred survivors; Wei-kin; Lan-kin; master/beast-kin; Ernie and Ni-er; and the ownership for the final piece at the fringes to be left undetermined until at a later time point - probably Tian dalaoye , his wife and their children (in-laws are the most troublesome, after all, yet their needs and well-being cannot be ignored), should they turn over to a new leaf and decide to ally with them. Wei da ge hnnn’d, unimpressed, and instructed the er ge to reconsider his choices and come up with better proposals.

The da ge asked the san ge to dig out master root programming codes for Ernie and Ni-er, with the consent of their First Father Wei. The teenager was also instructed to download the full text of their over-4000 family rules; the da ge will personally see that the rules are investigated, reviewed and clarified, because “their seemingly innocuous treachery cannot go unnoticed, and the crimes of the stolen and misused Peaches of Immortality, the breach of confidentiality of secrets of our Kingdom and the Wangxian company, and the random gifting of lands by abusing the name and power of our Grand Patriarch’s ancestry, serve as prime examples of how our family's rules had been twisted for the selfish gains of a few without breaking any existing limits." Disgruntled followers of the Kingdom rejoiced at the da ge 's call for justice, and public opinion polls tipped to his favour.

The youngest didi was told to tighten the security of their Kingdom's and company's resources and "see what you can do to improve the current situation to our favour, without agitating that old fox that we all hate so much with our guts." The nine-year old boy could only "Enn" in vague agreement, because he was too young to understand what needed to be done - so he simply dove into his secret 91st-century playbook of sorts to find out more, unknown to the others.

Notes for the Chapter:

Another twist in the plot, and the story goes on! I've added a new tag to Jing Yi and Si Zhui's relationship. Also, the uncle from hell is back... or is he?

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 120

Lan Jing Yi and Lan Si Zhui are the quintessential twink models on a gay magazine cover--

Nah, scrap that, Wei Ying berated himself, even as he lounged on a mild slope while chewing on a blade of grass, watching his two topless boys digging the hard earth to plant some seedlings - their sweaty, lean, well-toned bodies glistened in the mid-morning sunlight (as compared to his slight flabby paunch), and they worked hard with shovels and rakes to put food on their table (again, as compared to the lazy pig that he was, who instinctively preferred to doze all day under the cooling shade of trees). The man told himself that he shouldn't whittle his precious time with fantasies while the husband was away on an extended business trip.

Wei Ying cleared his throat and nearly swallowed his chewed piece of grass.

Let's start again - Lan Jing Yi and Lan Si Zhui are the quintessential Lan disciples who exemplify noble virtues of the Lan sect, confidants of each other, bonded by a common goal to lead virtuous but humble lives as persons of clean moral values and clear conscience.

Wei Ying sighed, spit out the thoroughly gnashed grass and reached for his shallow clay cup of fruit wine; while the boys made sure they lived their days in relative peace, comfort and with full bellies, he had time to experiment making liquor from surplus fruits harvested from abandoned orchards. He took a sip, inhaled, to fully let the sweet, slightly sour and bitter taste spread throughout his palate, mixed with the aromas of blooming springtime flowers buzzing with honeybees, a pot of bubbling herbal chicken soup that needed to simmer for hours until lunchtime, and a nearby lotus pond that splashed heartily with fish, shrimp and sometimes, freshwater shellfish.

“Jing Yi! When you’re done with planting the cabbage, don’t forget to feed the birds, and take the goats out to graze! Si Zhui! After checking the root vegetables for pests and weeds, grab the tools from the shed and I’ll teach you how to repair the chicken coop and clean the barn! We’ve no time to lose! You still need to practise your cultivation at least five times a day, have three proper meals daily, and meditate at least once, otherwise your Patriarch will be disappointed when he calls later to check in on our progress!” Wei Ying shouted and took a swig from his cup.

It has been a while since Lan Zhan disappeared one fine night (in relative terms) and left behind his wife with the two boys. Jing Yi and Si Zhui were heartbroken at first, and were at a total loss of how to continue their lives without their guiding star. However after a while, especially with the Patriarch calling back at least once a day (in relative terms again) with a meticulously prepared schedule in hand to keep everyone hardworking, the two eventually got used to their new routines. Wei Ying was tasked to make sure the boys followed the schedules to the dot so that they were kept occupied - and kept their minds off unsavoury and unproductive thoughts - from five in the morning until nine at night. Jing Yi and Si Zhui did everything the couple had done during their earlier cave-home days to eke out a living from the bountiful lands, thus, as Wei Ying calls it, “following the holy footsteps of the First Fathers,” which thrilled the boys who hold infinite respect and religious zeal towards the couple.

The trio lived in a homestead with thriving farmlands, barns, pastures, and fish ponds either built from scratch or salvaged from nearby villages and towns. With their hands full of household chores and farm work, the two boys spent their fulfilling days living like a brand new (and shy) couple striking out on their own in frontier lands, under the mentorship of a man who seemingly loafed nearly all the time and tinkered with useless or unimportant ideas but carried the sacred timetable handed down from the Patriarch. Wei Ying barked out orders all day, taught the boys how to knead and bake Yunmeng-style bread or season their foods the way 'it should be', then waited by the table for his meals to be cooked and served; showcased his Handyman Of The House skills to impress the boys when the roof leaked or if they needed a new bench (amongst other DIY work); made wine for his own consumption; chased crickets, hunted jungle fowls or simply pick on ants that dared to venture into his slice of heaven to steal his liquor; and loitered around, daydreaming when he has nothing else to do.

(Of course, that wasn't the full truth, because whenever the boys were away, Wei Ying would send Paperman-imbued trash to scour the enclosed Cai district for marauding bands of succubi and their fierce armies; whenever he spots any, he would make good use of his Dark Arts to properly disintegrate them into ashes to be blown away into the wind and into nothingness; he'd leave one or two low-level undead to find their way to the boys, which become good target practice for Jing Yi's beginner-level swordplay and Si Zhui's nascent guqin attack-techniques; it is uncommon knowledge, even amongst the ranks of the Kingdom, that Wei Ying is many times more powerful than Lan Zhan when it comes to spellcasting, except that Wei Ying does not boast his skills unless provoked, but he hasn't quite reached that extreme state since returning to the world, nearly three years ago.)

With the humongous radio tower gone, Jing Yi and Si Zhui were no longer affected by strange obsessive dreams or unpleasant sexual urges, so they behaved more like normal, calm Lan disciples that Wei Ying knew all too well - at least closer to the 'storybook effect' than horny animals perpetually in heat. There were no longer hot lip-bruising kisses, burning lustful gazes, greedy groping or giving handjobs to each other with excuses such as 'to satisfy a perfectly natural physiological desire'; Jing Yi was perfectly happy with holding hands with Si Zhui when they walked together to round up their goats from the pastures, to pull on bundles of freshly chopped firewood, or to just cuddle up with a book in bed when the chill sets in (when rain clouds pass by overhead, not necessarily at nights, which never happened in this time-stopped world).

The setback in their romantic relationship wasn't necessarily a bad thing, Wei Ying realized, as the boys now had a chance to mend their bond and build upon a more natural, normal and more wholesome foundation. Their earlier forced escapades were full of humiliating and shocking moments that reeked with misunderstanding and confusion, which didn't bode well for the sustainability of their love affair anyway; it was like an explosive fire burning through its kindling way too fast, and risked getting burnt out earlier than expected; love between Lan men should be unhurried, gentle, patient, akin to sipping from a cup of steaming pu'er tea and to take the time to savour the tingling pleasures of the complex, fragrant tastes, smells, and textures of the liquid gold, literally.

It was a gratifying, almost soul-cleansing sight to watch adorable, pure-hearted Si Zhui crouch side by side with his boyfriend, trading shy glances as they pluck away errant weeds around growing tomato and chilli plants; Jing Yi found a small daisy-like flower and stuck it into the other boy's hair, then playfully laughed and said something about looking very pretty while being covered in mud; Si Zhui pouted, grabbed a fistful of loose soil and threw at the boyfriend - but he kept that flower on his hair nevertheless; later, they hooked their arms together as they walked along a narrow grassy path while herding a flock of noisy chickens, ducks and geese to the pond; Si Zhui naturally drifted closer to the charming, talkative boyfriend who ranted on and on about how their future lives could look like, until his head was resting comfortably on Jing Yi's shoulder, and Jing Yi quietened down considerably with a rosy glow on his cheeks, so that the animals could finally take over with their clucks, quacks and honks at the lakeside; and a third sweet occurrence happened when Jing Yi ran up to their neighbour's abandoned gardens, waded through neglected meadows to pick a few fruits;

later, both boys shared a ripened apple, and Jing Yi gingerly told Si Zhui to pause for a bit because there's "something near the lips", in which he slowly, slowly, tenderly moved closer, eyes looking downwards because he would probably lose his marbles if he'd stared into Si Zhui's bright brown eyes and thick eyelashes, and licked off a droplet of sugary sweet apple juice that threatened to spill and roll off, then touched the half-open lips with his own - a chaste kiss for the boy he swore to care for his life, to take in as his marriage partner when the time is right, to cherish as a soulmate when the other finally accepts his proposal for their wedded bliss in holy matrimony.

Wei Ying wondered if he was the one growing in line with the boys, especially with learning how to fall in love again. Would this be how a man surnamed Wei raise his two gay Lan sons?

.

Elsewhere, far, far above, Master Lan Qi Ren was on the verge of breaking a vein on his temples as he shook his fists in rage at an annoying negotiator team standing by the front gates to his property, which to him, felt like another barrage of door-to-door salesmen visits. He started pointing and waving a straw broom dangerously at them, with murderous intent in his eyes. The straw broom broke when he accidentally knocked its head at a tree, which jolted the officials in fear and surprise.

"No, I will not open the road next to the supermarket to let such despicable monsters through! You can kiss their asses good-bye!

I have full authority, by the grace of my land title, religious texts and holy scriptures, to declare that these four-wheeled metallic beasts and the demonic contents in their bellies are absolutely prohibited from passing through these gates and onward to other destinations to cause bloodshed, violence and manslaughter!

Absolutely not! I will not open these gates to let anything in and do anything in this territory! I don't care if these monsters are yours, legal schmeagal my ass! I will ask my staff to send them back to where they came from, and that's that!

This is my private property, don't you guys get it?! Shoo! Shoo! Go away! I'll report all of you to the police for harassing a virtuous, kind-hearted old man like me!

How many times have I said this before, you are trespassing on my land! Step away from that gate and get your filthy hands off the locks! Get out, all of you!"

At the parking lot adjacent to the supermarket, where an empty plot of land had been marked solely for horse-wagons and pull-carts, a convoy of modern-day trucks lined up in perfectly straight rows. Drivers and their co-drivers idle inside, periodically stepping out to stretch their legs, or run into the supermarket to buy snacks, drinks and alcohol to keep their captive incubi relatively contented. The Master was fine in allowing the human operators (in a very broad sense) to linger at the parking lot, and to help him earn a few more pieces of gold, but he was adamant that the monsters dressed in loincloths, armed with demonic horns, poisonous fangs, blackened claws, leathery wings and reptilian tails, remain in their canvas-lined cages, like detained criminals, inside the bellies of the alien four-wheeled transportation beasts.

While supermarket workers tried their best to persuade the drivers to return with their cargos for the time being, because their new boss was fuming with no room for discussion - to no avail, because the drivers did not receive any instructions from their employers to turn around -, the more senior ones stood guard at the closed gates to prevent anymore tense stand-offs between Heaven's officials and the sole business establishment standing in the way of an urgent mission to rescue the First Fathers. A "no entry" sign was hung at the gates to keep away visitors from outside the enclave, although the supermarket was still operational and received few customers from the Cloud Recesses and its surrounding copy of Gusu's finer towns and villages with the said enclave.

Master Lan Qi Ren huffed in frustration at yet another disturbance on the inaugural day of re-opening of his supermarket in his Cloud Recesses. He'd made a slew of successful acquisitions (using legal means) earlier that day across many realms, bought a mansion to settle down, and while waiting for the movers to furnish his new home atop misty mountains and ever-flowing waterfalls, he decided to pop by the supermarket during opening hours. As the new owner, he wanted to observe and talk to customers, inspect the staff and monitor how they arranged the goods on the shelves, and check the business' records and Wangxian-branded inventories (he didn't like the brand, but he didn't have a say in what kind of products to sell because Wangxian monopolized the entire economy) - before the string of interruptions started, and monstrous beings crowded at the parking lot. Having directed his staff to do the necessary, he finally settled down in the manager's office to have a cup of tea, like a real laoban , finally.

Right after the first sip, there was a knock on the door. The Master clicked his tongue in irritation. A worker escorted Ernie and Ni-er into the opulent, luxuriously furnished room with tasteful classic Middle Kingdom-esque decor and with a visible dearth of apparatus and equipment from futuristic ages; a large abacus and thick stacks of notebooks made of rice paper lay neatly atop the table.

“Oh ho ho, my favourite grand-nephew and grand-niece! Thanks to your efforts, we can all enjoy the continued prosperity and culture of the Gusu Lan at its peak of civilization,” he welcomed the two with a tight, but polite smile.

“ Shu gong , spare us the pep talk,” Ernie in his Dark Wang Ji form said with his canines bared - a little unsettling, particularly when paired with blackened eyes -, while cradling his pillow-worm meimei against his chest like a drowsy limbless furry pet rabbit - he managed to snag his beloved sister back after one of the many successful transactions, when the terrifying shu gong whooped gleefully upon receiving yet another sparkling gold-framed land title certificate and accidentally released Ni-er from his grasp; Ernie hasn’t let go of his sister since then, and she remained snug against his body. “We’re here to discuss a graceful exit to our informal win-win partnership, and to amicably part ways so that my sister and I can get on with our lives.”

“Oh?” the Master raised an eyebrow and put down his cup of tea.

Behind closed doors, Ernie politely and courteously put forward his points: during the brief stint as the Master’s lawyer and advisor, he had helped the old man achieve more than what he had dreamt of. In return, Ni-er’s safety was guaranteed, as promised, and she was currently dozing peacefully (sedately, perhaps) in her brother’s arms after a very, very nice session of back-massages and back-scratches on her furred elongated body; she had been physiologically drugged by her shugong 's expert arts of bodily relaxation and reflexology. They also hadn't broken any rules or committed any unsavoury crimes towards their communities, so the two tentacle-kins' did not face any risk of being investigated and becoming stripped of their rights as citizens of the Kingdom.

“All's well that ends well, didn't it? So why would you want to leave? You could stay here, with free board and meals, and continue to enjoy the privileges of serving the Grand Patriarch's uncle , mind you. People of this foolish Kingdom of my nephew will bow before you - remember how the godly overlords of the other realms handed us their lands, sacred texts and historical artifacts without even questioning why?” Master Lan Qi Ren leaned back into his plush leather chair and stared at the teenage boy, unconvinced.

Ernie gave plenty of vague excuses - he had his fun pretending to work in an adult's profession, he had learned enough about the Realms of the Gods, he wanted to explore something else more adventurous and exciting (which immediately drew a look of disdain from the elderly man) -, but they were well-articulated and expressed with such deference to the shu gong 's senior status, and his behaviour, bows and hand gestures were impeccable, that the Master could not refuse. The old man pinned the whole reason down to Ernie's teenage emo-ness, and that the boy probably got bored quickly - like his yaoguai mother would could never sit still in one place at any given amount of time; while Lan Qi Ren briefly thought that he was being discarded after having been 'used' by the boy - he looked at the allegorical man in the mirror and realized that he too, exploited Ernie and his sister, and their usefulness had probably run out after he had completed his spate of land grabs; for all accounts and purposes, Master Lan Qi Ren owned enough to be a king in his own right.

The bearded man reached for a drawer and took out a pouch of gold ingots, as payment for the exceptional services rendered - however, Ernie simply bowed with his meimei clinging tightly to his sparse bosom, and respectfully declined; he preferred their transactions to remain verbal, where one can never trace any evidence or records to him and his sister, except for figments of one's memories, or perhaps, assumed imaginations and hearsays. Such brilliant thinking, such cunning styles, such admirable virtues, the Master thought, and he finally agreed - verbally - to let the two tentacle-kin off the leash, and to wander on their own in the Heavens, and wherever else that may pique their interests; the world is their oyster, after all. He still has his standard state-issued two-piece tassel hanging from his belt, so he could always keep in touch with them, as needed.

(In hindsight, Ernie gained more from the transaction than the other; with Master Lan Qi Ren by his side, he was able to travel to all the realms within the collective known as Realms of the Gods, which fall under his Grand Patriarch's jurisdiction, and areas that were off-limits to tentacle-kin - because his First Father Lan said so. Hence, while they hopped through every realm, he had the chance to visit the godly leaders and overlords, peer deeply into their lands, spread his virulent particles and gain access to vast amounts of maps, magics, technological secrets and resources - enough data to reverse-engineer the entire Realms of the Gods for his own personal use, really. He had also collected and sequenced his shugong's genetic makeup - just as what he'd done with the hundreds of survivors of disciples from Gusu Lan and Yunmeng Jiang -, so that he could produce unlimited numbers of clones and useful variants, if he wished to. The parcel of first-class land in the 'Mounds was his way of thanking his shugong for letting him invade and conquer the Realms of the Gods in a subtle, subversive manner.

Of course, little Ni-er gurgled happily throughout the journey, and looked every bit as innocent and unaware as she should be at such a young age. She kept a diary filled with records from her senses - which continued to function normally even during her downtime, because she was created by such an amazing mother and gifted with her father's awesome abilities and intelligence - and uploaded everything because she had been taught to do so, including a copy of Ernie's painstakingly processed data, into the family's cloud drive.)

Master Lan Qi Ren sighed and stared longingly at the door after the tentacle-kin had left - he felt a little unsettled for being ditched after a few hours (or had it been days? He couldn't tell after suffering the effects of travelling through numerous realms consecutively). He took another sip of his cooled tea and scrunched up his face at the bitter taste of the liquid that had been steeped for too long.

Another knock on the door. The Master made an audible 'hmp' to illustrate his displeasure, and thought that perhaps, life as a laoban wasn't as rosy as he thought.

"What is it?" he asked, now without batting an eyelid at the closed door.

"Laoban , err... y-your nephew, no, the G-G-Grand Patriarch has just teleported into the office, and h-he wants to have a w-w-word with you," a muted voice replied.

Master Lan Qi Ren rolled his eyes and cursed his luck - he was hoping a lawyer could represent him in any tough conversations, but he didn't have any.

Being in the same room with someone he'd usually turned up his nose against, made the atmosphere claustrophobic and rather suffocating, however thankfully the nephew brought a pack of expensive Yunnan tea leaves that, when made into a new pot of steaming tea, seemed to fill the chamber with mild, calming fragrances better than sandalwood.

Lan Zhan, on the other hand, remained absolutely, perfectly, immersed in the art of tea appreciation as a prelude to a civilized, serious discussion; his downcast eyes were always aimed indistinctly at the table's surface - a sign of non-confrontation and courtesy -, his movements and gestures minimal and purposeful, with neither a word nor any sounds uttered that may indicate unspoken discomfort or heightened emotions. Master Lan Qi Ren could match with his nephew in Gusu Lan's admirably rigid decorum for enjoying a pot of tea, only because both were suitably qualified masters of their sects.

"This tea is good."

"Mn. Both Wei Ying and I passed through the southern provinces close to Yunnan before reaching Gusu. It is said to be one of Yunnan's most famous teas, with mild flavours that please and soothe the palate, and a complex blend of scents that teases out the full spectrum of one's senses. We hope it would suit your tastes. "

Truly a cultured response; Lan Zhan skirted around the topic of the Master's arch-nemesis by putting the limelight on what could be the latter's new favourite brew, and tagged the said nemesis to it.

“Oh? The taste is rather exquisite, and something that I’ve never had before,” Lan Qi Ren replied, before taking another languid sip, “So... how is... he? It’s been about a couple of years since I saw... him.”

Lan Zhan relaxed his shoulders; he’d passed the first hurdle.

Over a cup of Yunnan’s famous tea, uncle and nephew talked and reconnected under the restraints of age-old traditions, intra-family practices and old habits that never really died; the elderly man commented on (more like, ranted) what he’d learnt from Ernie about the Kingdom and the First Fathers’ history, his brief tour across the Realms of the Gods, and asked questions in curt, few words that felt more like a cold interrogation than a heartwarming catch-up between relatives. Lan Zhan gave clear, sincere, unequivocal answers and spared the details unless he was asked not to.

Thus, the old man was allowed to paint a skewed picture of the reality that he lived in - that the whole Kingdom, the company, the people, heavens forbid, even the marriage of two men registered in Yiling (Lan Zhan even showed him the marriage certificates when accusations started flying across the table), and the childbirth of two monstrous children (he believed that the yaoguai actually gave birth to those two, probably via C-section surgery since he couldn’t fathom the usage of one’s lower orifices for such purpose) - everything he’d heard and seen was one big major absurd farce that mocked the very core of being a decent, respectable Lan - and Lan Zhan simply “Mn”s to let the uncle have his ways, so that the vexed elderly man can work out his own frustrations and come to his own conclusions.

“ Shushu , I’ve heard from the grapevine and from my subordinates, that you’ve amassed an impressive list of properties, with the help of some... insiders.”

“Hah! Don’t underestimate me, child, because age speaks to my wisdom than none other. I outsmarted everyone, planned everything from the get go, and made the decisions on my own. I was the one who negotiated with your people to donate a fraction of their riches to this old man, so the transactions were done out of goodwill, if you care to check. I’m more capable than what you think of, Wang Ji.”

Lan Zhan shivered a little at how his name was used in a rather threatening way, but there was also a hint of rushed defensiveness.

“What about... Ernie?”

A silent roll of eyes, a scowl, and a smattering of disappointment flashed across the uncle’s creased face. “If you’re referring to the butler that was assigned to me, he merely accompanied me as a tour guide, an interpreter and a translator, nothing more. There is no evidence of insiders amongst your organization, if that’s what you’re looking for. He left with that pillow worm of his shortly before you came. If you’re looking for him, you could run along now and probably still catch up to him - ask my staff, they’ll direct you.”

Master Lan Qi Ren was trying to remove his nephew from the office, but Lan Zhan stayed put. In all honesty, the uncle was right because there was hardly any paper trail and everything that needed to be signed and documented, were done under the uncle's name. For the time being, Lan Zhan decided not to pursue the matter of illegal land grabs using legal instruments, since he could not foresee anything harmful in letting his uncle - his blood-related family member, really - own a bit more fortune and property; however he had ordered his servants to keep a close watch to the uncle, and would have no qualms about dealing with any law-breakers severely in accordance to the Kingdom's rules - which he's sure the uncle is very well-versed in.

With the issue of the Master Lan Qi Ren's dubious rise to become a rich, elite laoban in the Kingdom reasonably laid to rest, Lan Zhan moved to the topic of his next concern - the fate of about a hundred incubi that had been transformed from mere dreams into flesh and blood, awaiting deployment to rid Gusu of its succubi infestation.

.

There were six trucks in total - five of them each carrying twenty incubi locked in cages and resembled more like hardcore criminals rounded up from a massive jailbreak, and the sixth carried crates of miscellaneous cargo, including clothes, weapons, armours and some common household items such as soaps, shampoos, towels, bedsheets and kitchenware intended for the incubi's move to their new homes.

A-Xian and A-Ji hid inside the sixth crate during the bumpy journey that lasted a few hours. The towels were soiled since the boys couldn't hold in their pee, the cutlery became dirty and sticky because the boys snacked on fruits they'd brought along in their basket, but A-Xian made their stay a little more bearable by turning some adult tunics into children-sized ones using knives and scissors found onboard, so that the two didn't have to rely on wearing plant materials anymore. A-Ji was so impressed at A-Xian's skills that his eyes sparkled every time the boy said something, pointed at someone, or came up with bright but wild ideas.

A ladle was destroyed when it was used as a crowbar to pry open their crate; A-Xian insisted that they monitored their surroundings first before making any moves from the truck.

“Look, A-Ji! I see armed robed men climbing down from their wheeled beasts, then walk into that building, and a few minutes later, they return with bags of snacks and drinks! They’ve done this a couple of times now... this must be the Free Food that the guards mentioned at the market before we sneaked in!”

“Mn,” A-Ji muttered, as he watched intently how bags of chips, candies and fruits were torn open, and bottles of fruit juice and other colourful liquids were uncapped before being handed into the bellies of the other wheeled beasts. He noted a number of clawed hands impatiently reaching out to snatch the handouts, so he knew that those hardcore criminals rounded up at the market and fun fair had been somehow turned into inhuman creatures, and they were as hungry as caged predators.

Soon, two shadows scurried off the truck and disappeared to the back of the supermarket. They deftly avoided the line of sight of the remaining trucks and the captive incubi because they were afraid of being eaten or ratted out - however, one particularly monstrous humanoid specimen growled dangerously when his keen sense of smell detected the familiar - and favourite - scent of an eight-year old boy he'd grown accustomed to, obsessed with, and had slept with many times every day and night.

The incubus surnamed Wei roared in anger and threw his duty-free jar of Emperor Smiles (with a small red sticker that states ‘Not to be sold to minors and Gusu Lan members’) to the ground, shattering the porcelain vessel into pieces - and thus, the dose of drug required to keep him docile and sedated. Other incubi in the same cage became irritated, restless, even snarled ferociously and started throwing punches and kicks at one another; the smell of blood and incensed screeches rattled more nerves from prisoners in the other trucks, drove up primal bloodlust and aggravated everyone’s emotions to uncontrollable levels; clawed limbs grappled at the cages to bang and shake the metal until the iron-clad prisons started to bend and twist - it became a bloody arena of mad dogs fighting to get out and bite someone’s head off.

Truck drivers started to climb down to check what was causing the racket, and as soon as one canvas was lifted, a lock broke with a spectacular clang from sheer brute force (because incubus can be very strong when provoked) - and all hell broke loose in the supermarket’s parking lot.

Notes for the Chapter:

More plot, not so much smut, sorry about that...

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 121

It was one of the more unpleasant discussions he's had in recent days, despite having a good start with the Yunnan tea. Lan Zhan's uncle, as expected, refused to budge from his stance of not letting the convoy of captured incubi through, and not letting in anyone from outside his Cloud Recesses, including officials from the Heavenly Court, into the supermarket's compounds. The nephew kept asking again and again, in-between long, unmoving sips of tea, in short questions, backed by technically sound and life-saving reasons; he'd even mentioned Jing Yi and Si Zhui and pleaded for the uncle to at least listen to his conscience to rescue the two young babes of the Gusu Lan sect.

Master Lan Qi Ren continued to dismiss each and every argument thrown at him, and counterattacked using common moralistic sense and quotes from Gusu Lan sect rules.

“Shushu , it is imperative to let the convoy through, so that the incubi army can be delivered to weaken the succubi defenses, and save the two disciples.”

“Rubbish! For the sake of two, you're willing to release enough evil to destroy cities? I'm baffled by your twisted way of thinking, Wang Ji.”

“But... shushu , the cities are no longer habitable, save for patrols of succubi and their fierce corpses...”

“Banish the thought, Wang Ji. It’s stated in the first hundred of the sect rules - it is sinful enough to even entertain the idea of toying with evil, let alone acting on one. There will always be unintended consequences that you may not have thought of, so one must always err on the side of caution. It’s engraved in the principles of the Gusu Lan sect rules, and I’m sure the same applies to your family’s rules too,” the comeback was snappy and to the point.

With that, Lan Zhan pursed his lips and back at the cup of cooling tea in silence. He’d been sitting in front of a low desk specially set up for discussions between the laoban and his clients, and he was starting to feel pins and needles on his legs and thighs. He adjusted his cross-legged sitting position several times over a couple of heaven-hours (perhaps longer; heaven-hours stretch much longer than normal earth-hours and cannot be measured by standard mortal timepieces), and desperately hoped to conclude the negotiation so that his spouse wouldn’t have to wait too long for his return.

It didn’t help that they were interrupted frequently when, one by one, workers shuffled in to request the Master to sign some purchase orders, to make quick decisions on which products to put on sale, to approve the hiring of temporary employees, and at times, Master Lan Qi Ren had to excuse himself briefly to check on goods that had just arrived, to hear out a customer’s complaints, and even to greet one of his suppliers that had popped by for a visit. The shushu clearly had a problem with delegating responsibilities, and Lan Zhan was likely at the bottom of his list of concerns to be addressed for the day.

Seeing that the pot of tea had been emptied and plates of snacks cleared from the desk, Lan Zhan sighed in defeat and was prepared to take leave. He stood and brushed off his robes, checked that Bichen and his equipment were secured to his body, and waited for his uncle to return from yet another interference - they were becoming increasingly worrying issues; a sign that the establishment's workers tried their best to manage problems on their own (which wasn't the best way to solve such issues) until it was too late and demanded the laoban's intervention - an invoice had not been paid and started raking up interests, and a red warning notice had been served in the postal mail; a restaurant owner demanded explanations for why the supermarket hadn't delivered bags of rice in the past week, which therefore caused monetary loss to that owner because he couldn't cook rice dishes for his patrons; and finally, the last straw-- “Laoban ... I'm very sorry to disturb you again, but we have a situation in one of the aisles in the main store,” a worker timidly voiced out when he cracked open the creaky door.

The Master had just returned and wanted to at least hug his nephew before saying good-bye - after all, they hadn't seen each other the last couple of years -, so he was visibly irked and rolled his eyes with a huff.

“What is it?” the uncle was terse, upset, however, his frustrations were kept in check. Lan Zhan was about to walk off even without the hug, with a word that he'll come by another time.

“There... we found two looters at the snacks and beverage section. They're breaking open the packages and consuming them on the spot...”

“Such irredeemable vermins! Why can't you apprehend the thieves and call the local enforcement? Can't you do anything by yourselves?” the old man was infuriated by the incompetence of his workers and the bad luck of being robbed on the day of the supermarket's re-launch. Lan Zhan raised an eyebrow and listened closely.

“But... they're little children. We... we've not had any shoplifting or burglary cases before, because according to Heaven's laws, such crimes are punished by having the criminals' hands chopped off... so...”

That certainly gave pause to Master Lan Qi Ren's running anger. Both men left the office immediately with the worker trotting ahead to lead the way to the crime scene.

.

The Wonderful World Of Wangxian's Modern-Day Snacks and Beverage Section is a mouthful to call and remember by, but it is usually crowded with shoppers from the Heavenly Court and other, rightfully, modern-day visitors from outside of Master Lan Qi Ren's territory. The aisle is located at a particular corner of the supermarket where modern-day goods are displayed under ambient air-conditioning, clean floors, neat shelving and the racks boast a mind-boggling variety of comfort and convenient goodies, luxuries, perishables and non-perishables. The corner, however, is cordoned off from the normal, and more open, accessible sections of the supermarket, so that shoppers from the Cloud Recesses side do not inadvertently wander into the space and be exposed to time-inappropriate (possibly culture-inappropriate) products (and hazards, conservatively speaking).

Since the supermarket's gates have been closed off to the outside world, hence the entire aisle and its surrounding areas had been left deserted since that morning - there were literally no customers who walked through that aisle to buy anything, anyway. Moreover, no one was manning the closed circuit televisions too since the Master had not set up the duty roster for security guards; such staff were sent to the gates to keep out modern-day intruders.

So it came as a surprise when Ernie, who wanted to spend some quiet time browsing the supermarket's wares and stock up on modern-day necessities - especially snacks that he and his sister would like for their next road trip -, chanced upon two small children dressed in rags, sitting on the floor, with pieces of torn packages, half-eaten bread, confectionary, candy bars, and puddles of spilled juices, soda and other liquids all over the floor around them.

"No, no, you can't tear it with your teeth. Here, I saw how the men opened the bag, you just need to pull at the nick here..." one child, a slightly taller, thinner and more presentable-looking one said, and demonstrated how to delicately, but perfectly open a pack of Oreos sandwich cookies. The other child, with messy unruly hair, smaller in stature but looked as every bit wild and dangerous as a feral animal on two legs could be, growled in exasperation, shook and spit out the half-munched, thoroughly savaged, unopened bag of pulverized potato crisps, and instead, grabbed a colourful plastic bottle of sour plum juice off the rack. He chewed on its cap futilely until it was coated with saliva and bite marks.

"No, no, you only have to turn the bottle cap like this..." the boy easily uncapped another bottle of fizzy soda, in which his partner in crime squealed in delight at the bubbly sight, and snatched it away. The smaller boy gulped down the treat greedily to slake his thirst - there were at least ten emptied packs of salty, sour and sweet foods on the spot where he sat.

Ernie was alarmed because he couldn't figure out the two children - there was nothing in his database to identify the two, so he couldn't pull out any information from his archives; he tried to scan their bodies and sample particles within and surrounding them using ultra-modern, unseen ways - but came up with nothing. It was as though the two children were mere holographic projections, devoid of matter and energy, and yet they could interact with the real world - as seen by the carnage left on the floor of the aisle. When Ni-er started to squirm and wake up from her sleep while swaddled against his back - because she detected something that made her restless, anxious, needy - she started to make soft warbling noises - Ernie in his Dark Wang Ji form tightened his grip on his half-filled shopping basket and ran off to alert a staff; it would be immoral to let the damage continue, which could score him demerits in the Realms of the Gods that pride themselves with a strict, point-based system to determine a citizen's social standing; plus, he was unnerved by the existence of such strange, unexplainable creatures that threatened to drive his logic-thinking system into overdrive if he tried to solve the mystery on his own.

.

It was a remarkable sight to see Master Lan Qi Ren confront a pair of juvenile troublemakers by waving a straw broom at two little children who wouldn't look out of place in grade school. He stood at a safe distance, flanked by workers who blocked both exits of the aisle, just in case. The anger on his face was replaced with shock, then apprehension, when he recognized the taller boy - in a state of disbelief, even utterly wordless at first - and returned to blood-boiling rage when the smaller boy brazenly tore another bag of sugar-laden food right in front of his eyes with oily, grimy fingernails, and dug in without showing any signs of fear or panic at the sudden appearance of gruffy men around them.

“You rascals, what do you think you’re doing?” the uncle yelled with a low raspy voice, straw broom swaying dangerously close at the two rats that ransacked his store.

Lan Zhan placed a palm over his face and stood in a dark corner - for him, things just became grim, and it would take a turn for the worse. Ernie remained as still as a mouse next to his Grand Patriarch - he was ordered by a senior staff to stay put while the threat was being dealt with, and he still held his basket of unpaid purchases. Ni-er gurgled happily, crawled from her gege’s back and plopped herself into her daddy’s waiting arms. Stroking Ni-er’s fur - something Lan Zhan had missed for a long, long time - was very calming, and a good distraction from the escalating worries and anxieties, so he did that as the pillow worm curled herself up inside a nest of strong muscled hands - and to her delight, a softer, paunchier belly than she remembered.

Meanwhile, on the other side, a quarrel was brewing.

“Eh? Who are you, old man? Are you here for the free food too? Oh no, you can’t have any, they’re ours! Go away, gramps!” the smaller boy squeaked, challenging the Master until one could see how his face turned red with fury.

“You brat! What free food? What the hell are you talking about? Put that away! Stop opening those bags and bottles! You’re stealing from my supermarket!” followed by rude sounds of packages being taken away from the floor, and heavens forbid, wrestled from the children too. Lan Zhan glanced away, clearly uncomfortable to imagine, and watch, how his younger self could have behaved, and heavens forbid again, how his hard-headed spouse’s younger self would argue, with the stubborn shushu .

The smaller boy hissed repeatedly like an agitated cat and fought hard to seize a few wrapped pastries back from the bearded man, while shouting, “You’re a bad guy! Stealing from children! Those are mine! I saw them first! Hands off, gramps!”

“But... but... how can it be stealing if it’s free?” the taller boy - innocent, slow to react, too bewildered to make sense of the angry conversation - murmured with a finger full of cotton candy in his mouth, in the midst of snacks being grabbed and tossed back and forth.

Master Lan Qi Ren’s eyes bulged at that question, “I never said all of these are free! You have to pay to buy them! You rat, stop eating those biscuits or I’ll call the police!” he snarled at the little boy who scoffed down two pieces of chocolate digestives in one go, and wiped his greasy chocolate-y fingers all over the threatening old man’s sleeves in retaliation. Master Lan Qi Ren yelped in terror, flailed his arms at the sight of blasphemous dirtied sleeves, and accidentally smeared some onto his hair and face.

“I... I have a silver piece that I earned from selling vegetables at the market today. Is this enough? Please, don’t call the police...” the taller boy pleaded and fished out the said piece of silver from a pocket. Master Lan Qi Ren was on the cusp of having a heart attack in trying to handle the two boys, and the atmosphere was becoming a little too noisy, too messed-up for comfort.

“Don’t give it to that bad laodaye ! (老大爷; old man grandpa) That’s your precious silver piece... the first one you’ve ever earned in your life!” the smaller boy squeaked at his partner, visibly antagonized by the grandpa’s presence. He threw a cream puff, which had been stepped on and therefore squashed into a shapeless pile of buttery mush, at the old man and it hit him straight in the face.

“A-A-Anyway, we’re hungry! And thirsty! We were told by strange guards at the market that if we followed the wheeled beasts, then we can get free food! That’s the truth!” the shouts were becoming wilder, increasingly desperate, and handfuls of M&Ms started to fly across the air and rained on Master Lan Qi Ren. The taller boy tried to pacify the other by holding out tiny hands to block the projectiles, only to be caught in the cross-fire.

The old man staggered to the back, his face a mess of yellow cream, chocolate, pieces of baked bread, and colourful candies. Several of his flustered workers ran to his side with towels and napkins to wipe him down.

“Leave us alone, gramps! We don’t even know where we are, other than that we’ve been brought here by those wheeled beasts after following some strange men! If you’re not here to help us, then scram! Go away and let us eat in peace!” the smaller boy started to sniffle and wiped snot off his nose; emotions were flying high and that made him tremble and quake in anger and frustration.

Master Lan Qi Ren stilled when realization finally sank in on what the children had told him. “You mean, you were brought here, by strange men, along with those other wheeled monsters and those terrible creatures in their bellies?” he asked, after calming down a little, but in record time.

The taller boy stood in-between the two and nodded energetically. He raised his hand again to show the store owner his precious earnings - a very sincere, vulnerable gesture.

“I only had a silver piece from selling ugly vegetables, we were hungry, and we didn’t even have anything to wear either. A-Xian was smart enough to pick some fruits from someone’s garden, and make these clothes for me from someone else’s in a crate carried by a wheeled beast... it was a bit cold while travelling here, laodaye . A-Xian, he--”

Master Lan Qi Ren’s ears pricked at the name. He’d heard it long ago, back when he was younger, and often visited neighbouring sects and their families - one of them being the late Jiang Grand Patriarch. He’d always had his two boys and a daughter running around, especially when the wife wasn’t around. The eldest was a ball of energy and mischief, had chubby cheeks, was a late bloomer who grew taller and leaner when he reached puberty, probably. He remembered that boy, and the more he thought, the clearer those dusty old stored pictures inside his memories, and then, with a hitch in breath, goosebumps running up his forearms, a sudden lightning strike of clarity struck that evaporated away clouds and doubts from his mind - he was one hundred percent sure he knew that boy.

“A-Xian...?” he murmured, his turn to be bewildered. He turned to the taller boy, and those anxious, nostalgic, loving, hating, confused, mixed feelings welled up finally since he wasn’t fighting with the kids anymore over snacks and beverages that littered on the ground, because this - This - meant so much more to him, he really needed to hear -, so at last, he crouched in front of the taller boy and stared at him at eye level, and asked in a quivering voice, “Then... what’s your name, boy, and how old are you?”

The adolescent stood up straight, one arm at the front, and the other at the back - a true hallmark of a well-raised and respectable Gusu Lan -, “I am A-Ji. I am eight years old this year.”

Master Lan Qi Ren hugged A-Ji with tears in his eyes, sobbing words stuck inside his throat, and his creased brows scrunched together even further in distress; the boy was stunned at the sudden intimate embrace, and A-Xian stopped attacking the the Master because he was also surprised at the turn of events.

Lan Zhan’s blood ran cold when his uncle turned around and gazed at him with a bloodshot stare, mouthing out raspy, trembling mumbles, “Wang Ji... why... why are you... this boy... same person... and this madness... are you involved... in a child trafficking ring? With sex-driven beasts such as incubi... such evil monsters... how could you...?” It was all muddled, but Lan Zhan could hear the words as clear as day, and he knew his uncle was at his limit in accepting that his new reality - his new home - isn’t as divinely as what he’d thought. He wished that his uncle had been deported to the immigration processing centre so that his mind - and his understanding of the crazy, twisted world - would be conditioned first. Lan Zhan turned to the side and gave an accusing stare; Ernie looked away sheepishly, clearly not admitting his guilt; Ni-er whined at the sudden coldness in the heavy atmosphere.

Suddenly, one of the senior staff who had been guarding the supermarket’s entrance shouted, “Everyone! Run! The prisoners in the trucks are revolting and have broken out of their cages! Their handlers have lost control of the situation and even our workers are beaten up! Those monsters are everywhere in the parking lot, and some are headed... this way!"

.

It was Master Lan Qi Ren's turn for his "storybook effect" to be cracked. He didn't immediately collapse into a meltdown like Jing Yi, whose restraints came off spectacularly when that boy first witnessed, right in his face, a huge flying object that shattered his own rose-tinted reality eyepiece; the old man's shell was resilient, tougher and could withstand learning, even exploiting new information and resources that was availed to him, because his persona was locked into the mode that reflected his state of mind right when the space-time bubble was drawn up around Gusu - greedy to fight for favours and rights among the Gusu Lan and Tian council members; scheming for ways to hoard influence and power to survive getting lambasted by then-newfound Gusu Tian elders; staying extremely loyal to the old ways and refusing to change anything, for the fear that the last shreds of his ancestry, his culture, his people would be completely wiped off from the face of the earth especially since the Wall of Discipline had been defaced, and new perverted rules enacted by the enemy.

It would've been futile to ram the message home because of his stubborn nature, so when the decisive blows came from different, unexpected angles that attacked the core of his values and shattered his illusions - the young and weak being hurt and abused; the Master would never ever tolerate children being tricked into torture and slavery -, his stead of sorts implicated in crimes; a massive betrayal of trust -, his hard-earned property and happiness being ruined right in front of his eyes; it felt almost too similar to the time when the succubi took away everyone's Gusu Lan robes and switched them to the powerless Gusu Tian version, and one by one, his friends, his family, the teenagers and the little boys that used to run along the hallways, one by one devoured by monsters -, and the use of sex as a weapon; because the Master has sworn to abstain from sex for life, because the acts of procreation is sacred, holy; to be corrupted into a tool to forcibly control others, is absolutely horrifying to that man - thus, when his illusions were shattered and ripped from their pedestals, it was his turn to face the dark, harsh music of his twisted paradise in heaven.

Outside, chaos ensued as truck drivers and their assistants had their cattle prods (of sort) wrenched from their hands and knocked to the ground by towering, well-muscled and very inhumanly strong magically-enhanced incubi. Finally freed of their cramped living conditions, some individuals immediately fled in the direction of the Cloud Recesses, some wanted to loot and burn down the supermarket for booze before taking off, and some lost control of their mind and emotions and started wrecking the trucks out of spite.

Master Lan Qi Ren ran out of his supermarket for safety reasons, and he immediately caught glimpses of incubi crowding the parking lot among burning tyres, twisted vehicles and workers with bleeding heads and limbs, some screams at the fringes of the town - the sexual assaults have begun, beginning with panicking children and their young mothers, to the old man's horror -, and closer to home, the grating clamour of storerooms being forced open by claws stronger than iron crowbars, stocks being vandalized, raided and thrown to the ground, of bottles and jars of alcohol being smashed, and foodstuff being stolen. Some of the pillaging incubi began to cast magical spells, including fireballs and inferno projectiles while fighting over leftover goodies that had become free-for-all inside the building, and soon, everything was set ablaze.

He screamed and screeched like a madman, running around trying to gain control of the situation; the straw brooms were useless against laughing drunken incubi, who easily pushed the Master to the ground with either a punch or a swipe of clawed feet; he grabbed the collars of the dazed workers still milling about, waiting to be attacked and eaten by the escaped beasts, and kept yelling at them to Do Something, Do Something, but everyone was dumb, too stupid to save their own asses, and stood around doing nothing to help their owner; he ran to the front gates and screamed until his voice became hoarse, Is There Anyone, Anyone Out There, calling out to those hated people from the Heavenly Court to save his burning, looted, slaughtered business and its employees, and the town he had claimed as his own as more and more people lay in puddles of blood - because incubi are bisexual -, more mass gangrapes happened at each passing minute, the screams for help by the weak and unarmed go unheeded - but No One, No One from the Heavenly Court or any outsiders heard him, because he had chased them away with his broken straw broom long, long ago. It was unsightly to see a harried old bearded man in tears, his hair out of place since his topknot was knocked off, distraught with the helplessness for not being able to save what he prided in, his clothes became smudged and dirtied by mud, torn by mocking incubi convicts, kicked around and finally, Master Lan Qi Ren crumbled because physically he is exhausted, in pain, his chest burned so hot, writhing in agony, and psychologically, he was destroyed when his whole world turned upside down like a whirlwind of flames.

Fortunately for Lan Zhan and Ernie (and little Ni-er), they had decided to remain inside the supermarket and not having to brave the reality of a paradise going up in smoke outside. Lan Zhan collected little A-Ji with one hand, who seemed extremely captivated by a two-foot long furry white giant cat's tail in the man's other hand; Ernie easily slobbered then covered A-Xian with very frightening means with his cold black slime, which instantly gagged the struggling boy and held him in place using gooey but very strong, elastic tentacle-like limbs, so that the boy could be easily packaged up into a bundle of feisty, biting, scratching, growling ball of an eight-year old feral rebel - together, they teleported out of the scene of carnage with a soundly fwip! , including the shopping basket of unpaid snacks and beverages for modern-day consumption.

.

Wei Ying watched with a doleful look, at how two boys could sit on a picnic bench facing each other, smiling with little hearts popping above their heads, playing footsie under the table with socked feet and sharing a plate of chow mein - a classic copycat from a famous scene in a movie featuring 101 animals that the man hated most; except that the more masculine boy had sported a budding moustache and a goatee, and the other baby-smooth babe could not resist reaching out to tickle his boyfriend's chin and play with the small patch of manly facial hair, while slurping on noodles together.

The man who is slightly older than the boys, at least from a biological perspective measured with his current body, rubbed his own unshaven rugged and unruly beard - it had been a while, and he didn't see the need to shave to maintain a clean, presentable look when the object of his affection wasn't around - parenting two boys meant that he could be a slob and he'd still be respected as the Matriarch anyway - plus, he gets the kisses on the cheeks whenever they have their main meals; because the boys had been taught that the eldest in the family (at that point in time) must be greeted and called to start a meal, and to place a loving smooch on that said eldest family member's cheeks as a way to give thanks for a wonderful meal.

Wei Ying should be more than happy with two pecks on his cheeks from his adopted sons, three times a day, but as the days wore on, faced with such sweet, mushy displays of romance between the boys, he began to feel a tiny pinch of something else - he wished he could see his lao gong's face besides using the holo-phone, he missed their Everydays and dirty talk (despite having already stocked up on countless rounds of sex since winter started, enough to last for a year or more for his demonic appetite), he wanted to cuddle up in the husband's arms once again rather than to sleep on a cold bare creaky bed (while in the other bedroom, the sons probably engage in very tasty, risqué bedtime acts that wouldn't bear any propagative benefits, at least according to his overactive imagination), he wouldn't mind playing footsie either because his hands itched to give his lao gong a nice reflexology and foot massage session; he'd learnt long ago that by giving love, he would receive tenfold in return.

The man groaned in frustration and stood up from beneath a tree. He had been hanging around the front yard and amongst orchard trees without doing much the whole day (and for many days in succession); even making and savouring fruit wines had become a chore after he had experimented fermenting every known local fruit and drunk immeasurable numbers of jars of each. He prayed again silently inside his heart for his lao gong's return - he wasn't sure how much longer they needed to stay in the Cai district, and how much more the man could bear to stay in one place - because wanderlust and leading a nomadic life is in his blood these days, especially since their home has blossomed into a comfortable cottage in the woods, with thriving gardens and ponds around, impeccably maintained by a crew of first-class Gusu Lan who had learned the ropes of home improvement projects, gardening and farming.

His ears pricked.

“Oiiiiii! Enough of looking at each other, you two! Someday your eyes are going to fall off!” he laughed hollowly, then shouted, “A succubi and five fierce corpses are on their way through the pond, can you take care of that? Oh, and please harvest a large fish and lotus plants, so that we can have grilled fish later, stir-fried lotus roots with mixed garden vegetables, and lotus seeds as snacks, okay?”

The two boys “Enn” together (so cute!) and quickly finished their noodles (they missed going for a kiss with stringy bits of noodles, but there will always be other opportunities in the future), and grabbed their gear. The two walked away while holding hands to defend their home turf - which had become routine, and so becomes part of their daily cultivation practice.

Wei Ying rubbed his beard again in annoyance - there is that familiar slight burn and twinge of envy and jealousy of seeing someone else’s happiness while his own is barren. He thought he should find a razor somewhere inside the cottage and trim it off, and hopefully, shear away those increasingly disturbing and restless feelings simmering from the bottom of his heart.

Notes for the Chapter:

Kinda going through some doldrums, so I'm letting the plot grow on its own at its own sweet pace. Maybe it's good to tone down the smut after overdoing it earlier :-D

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 122

“How do you feel, watching your grand-uncle kneeling on the ground in tears with his values, properties and everything burnt to ash and gone up in smoke? And why?”

Lan Zhan did not mince his words, but he did not cross his arms to show his displeasure or indicate if any stern punishment was to be dished out. He needed to set things straight, and he was doing it by standing beside his younger Dark version with blackened eyes, with his gaze fixed onto the teenage boy. Ernie avoided the laser-sharp stare, tried to turn to the side, to the back, gave an uncomfortable laugh, ran fingers through his own set of long lush hair - but that all stopped when Lan Zhan gripped the boy's wrist to wordlessly signal that it was a serious conversation.

“Ernie.”

The boy stilled, and that had an impact to the surrounding heavy, foreboding atmosphere - they were standing beneath the shade of trees just a few paces away from a thoroughly razed supermarket building - everything inside had turned to piles of smoking rubble, twisted metal, broken pillars and wood turned charcoal, the goods were ruined by the fire, the office rooms had been destroyed - the parking lot literally became a junkyard of wrecked trucks and their parts, including opened and smashed cages, demolished crates, engines ripped apart, vehicle doors, tyres and chassis flung in all directions - a few remaining senior supermarket staff tended to the wounded, the bandaged, and those who suffered from profusely bleeding abdomens, cracked ribs, dislocated shoulders and probably concussions, and started carting them to the nearest hospital through the front gates and into the Heavenly Court where 51st-century medical facilities are available; the rest had been put on indefinite leave.

In the background, the entire town of Cloud Recesses that belonged to the supermarket owner was going up in flames and in utter mayhem; freed incubi had grown up to twelve-feet, even twenty-feet tall monsters, and continued to mutate into more abominable versions of themselves; someone's huge dragon tail made a sweep and obliterated three rows of houses in a single stroke, causing residents to flee in disarray and panic, while groups of incubi surround the scene of destruction and easily gorged themselves with tasty-looking Gusu Lan morsels off the ground; some had grown multiple limbs and appendages, like spiders, scorpions and more, and they didn't just politely suck off life energies to leave behind empty husks - they swallowed people whole because they had evolved monstrous jaws; columns of smoke permeate the air, clouds of ash and dust shrouded the town, screams echoed in nearly every street and alleyway, as children and young individuals were herded into corners and attacked, adults were picked off like ants, and those who fought back and stayed alive longer - armed town guards, spellcasting cultivators, elderly grandmasters of martial arts - became mere desserts at the end of the bloody feast.

“Ernie. I will not repeat my question.”

The teenage Wang Ji raised his hackles and growled in contempt, but the grip on the wrist went up to clutch his forearm - and a forewarning if he did not obey.

“... It's not my problem. It's his own fault because he was weak, got greedy, and fell into his own trap. I'm not feeling anything for that gramps. Or his stupid supermarket. Or this stupid town,” the teenager drawled lazily, with absolutely appallingly uncaring behaviour.

“You led him to this state. You fed him lies, made him do things he shouldn’t have, and you took advantage of him. I have evidence; your sister uploaded everything she’s seen and heard into our family cloud drive since she’s hooked up to the ‘Net,” Lan Zhan’s eyes drilled holes into the teenager, who refused to look back at him and continued to be in a state of denial.

Ernie shot his sister a dirty look, but little Ni-er was blissfully unaware, being cuddled, squashed, sat on, rolled around and straddled by two eight-year old boys on the grass like a giant soft toy. She giggled the sounds of wind chimes and crystalline bells.

“I’m not remorseful. You know that. I’m superior to Mankind, so if men are prone to being cheated and used, then that’s what they get for being born as an inferior species. I can always take advantage of people for my benefit, and I’m not going to change that. It’s encoded in my core programming,” Ernie sneered straight back at his Grand Patriarch, after letting out a rude huff at his oblivious sister - he would never ever hurt his meimei , and would take his emotions, his grudge, his negativity out on others not of his kin.

“He’s your grand-uncle,” Lan Zhan asserted his point.

“So what?!” another ugly snort from the cold black thing, defiant.

“He’s your father’s uncle.” The Grand Patriarch did not back off.

“What does that have to do with me?!” the teenager was beginning to lose his cool, and started shaking off the strong bruising grasp on his forearm, until black veiny lines started to develop on the surface of his skin. The Grand Patriarch did not relent and kept his grip.

“Master Lan Qi Ren is family. You are also my family. I don’t have to spell out what I do - and what you should do - if one of our family members has been hurt and disrespected.” This time, Lan Zhan stared straight into the teenager’s eyes with such ferocity, and his voice lowered with a rare tone of anger - that Ernie visibly trembled in alarm.

A couple of minutes passed - maybe longer - because Ernie lost count of time when he breathed hard, his brain went into overdrive to crunch possibilities, what-ifs and what-did-I-dos, consequences and binary zeros and ones that could never answer such a simple, organic, familial question. Cold hard logic cracked somewhere inside his programming code - again - forcing another influx of incomprehensible calculations that went beyond coding language and numerical figures to well up within the teenager and overwhelm his entire being like a gasoline thrown into a firestorm.

.

Master Lan Qi Ren was absolutely devastated. He looked extremely shaken, disoriented, surrounded by the pandemonium of roaring flames, faraway screams, people nearby barking out orders to lift and carry the injured away, and inside his mind was a madness of self-inflicted insanity of how he, or even his nephew, or any respectable Gusu Lan, could even be involved in child abuse and trafficking, smuggling of weaponized creatures, usage of rape for the purpose of terrorism - and another cry erupted from his town, of another young man or woman that had fallen prey to incubus attack, and of lives lost in very unpleasant, disturbing ways. His hands felt grimy and gritty after scratching the sandy dirt, he gripped his hair and nearly pulled out strands from his scalp, his appearance was an utter mess, splattered with blood and sin - he started scratching his fingers and tried to pull out his fingernails, because he thought he smelled, tasted, the metallic iron tang of blood in his hands - because at the end of the day, he brought it upon himself, he kept the monsters in and then jailbreak happened, he happily indulged in collecting land titles that were now useless, unrecognizable pieces of burnt paper in his hands because his safe had been pried open and everything inside was fireballed; while turning a blind eye to the fact that he could have - should have - visited worlds where there were children who ran in the streets without food, without clothes, lured by strangers with sweet promises of free food, to far, far away so that they could be sold off - it was utterly despicable, totally un-Gusu Lan, he is inhuman to have even ventured down that path, even while he had the capability to refute, refuse, yet he was captivated, attracted, seduced by voices telling him he could earn money, power, influence--

“... Shu gong , I... I’m sorry,” a cracked voice loomed from above, but the Master wasn’t looking. He stared as his hands - smeared with dirt, bloody patches from people whose ribcages were smashed at the parking lot, even the remnants of yellow custard cream from puffs sold in his now-gone business.

“... Shu gong , we may not have a written contract in place, but as your responsible butler and temporary assigned guardian, I... I need you to come with me. We’ll go to a better place. One that puts everything into the right context, according to the rules of the Kingdom of Qishan Lan.” The voice was firm, unwavering, but youthful. The Master looked up, and he flinched at the true appearance of the ugly black thing that opened the doors to hell for him. Ernie looked absolutely not like the younger version of his nephew; he was entirely black, slimy, like an octopus left out to rot in the sun for too long - rightly so, because his hands and legs were just multitudes of black shiny tentacles spewing out of a bloated white robe; he was a shapeless mass, really, and the head was nearly indistinguishable from the body other than a fake silver hairpiece hanging somewhere at the top of a bulging protrusion with no face, no eyes, but full of rows of serrated teeth.

“Who... What are you?! You’re a yaoguai from hell! You’re worse than those incubi! Get away!” the old man clumsily scrambled to his feet but fell on his rump; he kicked sand and stones, trying to put some distance between him and the monster that called him grand-uncle.

A tentacle lunged from what used to be a sleeve, and it wrapped around the man’s arm. Master Lan Qi Ren cried in terror and immediately thought he was being eaten by a monster for his sins, and struggled to free himself.

“... Shu gong , let’s go. You need to be processed properly, down in earth. We’re taking you in,” the creature said, but it sounded like a bristly frothy snarl, and less of a human. The Master was mortified and believed he was getting a one-way ticket to hell, away from his heavenly paradise, and started yelling, cussing in fourteen different dialects, and yanking his arm against the death-grip of the tentacle.

“No! You monster! Let go of me! Let go of me! NOOOOO!”

With a resounding fwip !, Ernie and the Master teleported out of the scene of apocalyptic carnage in a blinding flash of white light. Little Ni-er didn’t want to be separated from her gege , so she followed suit, and took along the two eight-year old boys that hugged and squeezed her fluffy wormy body, in a single go.

.

Lan Zhan, the Grand Patriarch of the Kingdom, stood in the middle of the deserted but wartorn parking lot, wondering if he should simply reboot the entire territory formerly owned by his uncle. The damage was widespread - especially when the escaped prisoners grew tremendously in size and scale, started to uproot trees, set the misty mountains afire, and demolished the ever-flowing waterfalls; the Cloud Recesses was being flattened, and outlying idyllic towns and rustic villages, hitherto choice locations preserved for posterity for future generations, were beginning to be annihilated from the map, and its townspeople becoming fodder for the burgeoning monsters.

He had sealed the front gates of the supermarket after the last workers of the supermarket - rightfully citizens of the Kingdom, and not of the faux Cloud Recesses built in Heaven - fled into the neighbouring Heavenly Court for safety, embedded the locks with amazing godly magic, thus preventing anyone from getting out of the enclave, but at the same time, his Heavenly Court armies couldn't get in to secure and contain the situation; heavens forbid, if the incubi should invade and strike the heart of his Palace in the skies. He didn't want to play the god-tiered hero to hunt down every last incubus - even if he had to, he wouldn't know where to start because they had started spreading in all directions like a plague; plus, he was torn between chasing down the monsters versus rescuing any lives amongst the burning rubble and debris.

Then, help came in the form of a ringing holo-phone in his pocket.

.

In a grand twist of Fate, an alarming failure faced by the refugees of the war between the surviving sects and the Imperial forces, became a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to redeem themselves and gain citizenship under the Kingdom.

As expected, all hundred or so surviving disciples from the Yunmeng Jiang sect - mere teens who have not been exposed to the harsh reality nor taught advanced fighting techniques - failed one of the written exams, which is a prerequisite to obtaining a citizenship certificate. They did quite well in language, science, mathematics, literature, arts, calligraphy, music, poetry, history, geography and other typical subjects taught in school, however, all scored spectacular zeroes in the tests for reciting the over-4000 rules of the Kingdom.

At the same time, all hundred or so surviving disciples from the Gusu Lan sect - young adults who are better equipped in living a new life fraught with mind-bending new magics, technologies that require a different set of progressive thinking approaches, critical thinking and analytical skills, and massive paradigm shifts in understanding that the only constant in their new world is the much-maligned word called 'change' - too, scored As in every subject except the tests on interpreting the over-4000 rules of the Kingdom; a change of mindset was at its infancy amongst the disciples, so they still couldn't break the mould and kept to old habits, old understandings and old ways of thinking - and interpreted the Kingdom's rules using outdated Gusu Lan comprehension; for example, one must not recklessly run in the hallways not because such detestful behaviours could annoy others, but because of unseen dangers that may lurk and attract danger, such as an innocuous banana peel placed on the floor by someone with malicious intent. (True enough, many Gusu Lan disciples had sprained ankles and bruised knees because their cheeky Wei-kin wards always left banana peels on the floor - and yet, none of them realized that this was really an exam tip; how unfortunate for the ignorant Lans!)

One way of redeeming failures from the exam - and to avoid being kicked out into the dusty void outside of the Kingdom - was to “repent, and display bravado and undying loyalty to serve the Kingdom, so that the Grand Patriarch may personally pardon the blunder of duty and status, and grant the wish of the applicant”; in other words, at the behest of the Grand Patriarch, he may request the disciples to carry out a specific military or community service, evaluate their performance, and turn around the results for their exams at his judgement.

It took an awkward phonecall, a heart-to-heart conversation between a (former) sect leader to another, and a reasonable, non-confrontational request from the brother-in-law, to ask Lan Zhan if there is anything - anything at all - that the said brother-in-law could offer as service to the Kingdom; because poor Jiang Cheng was a little miffed, a little ashamed, a little tight-lipped, and very uncomfortable, when he held his exam results report with a large ‘FAILED’ print in his hands.

“I... I don’t usually do this, ge fu , but I’m... a little desperate. Your help... would surely, really, absolutely, totally, be repaid with interests and multitudes. If you have anything that I can do...” Jiang Cheng’s voice trailed off over the phone, a little raspy and cracked, probably choked with emotions or held-back tears of embarrassment - surely, how would anyone even believe that a mighty Sect Leader had failed a written exam meant for highschool students!

Lan Zhan was, of course, more than elated (without an ounce of expression of his face, as usual) when he was addressed by his brother-in-law in such a polite and respectful way, that it didn't take too long to decide - especially when a fireball exploded from his uncle's former mansion, and five twenty-foot incubus with twisted grins and snarls, marched brazenly across his line of sight and into the mountainous forests at the fringes of town.

Upon the Grand Patriarch's orders, airships will bring one hundred Yunmeng Jiang disciples along with their fully armed and magically enhanced fierce corpse guardians, and one hundred Gusu Lan disciples who have been taught how to cast powerful spells and summon their own guardians from their tassels, to the former parking lot of the destroyed supermarket.

“Jiang Cheng, I need to be honest with you; as a senior manager of our businesses in Yiling with probationary employment status, the Kingdom demands services that commensurates with your future standing in our society.

You will be tasked to lead a united team of two hundred disciples and their helpers and equipment, armed with magical golden nets provided by the Kingdom's armoury, to conduct a massive night-hunt to track and capture all escaped prisoners in this territory. This territory will be placed under a special administration status, such that mortals like yourselves can enter and move around normally, just like in any location in the Mortal Realm.

A manifest and regular updates will be sent to your phone, so that you have the complete list of monsters to catch - I'm sure you've seen the news in ErNet, this includes the incubi and an increasing number of new servants they have created using whatever they could find in these bountiful divinely lands, including undead creatures, golems and summoned vengeful spirits.

The longer you take to complete this task, the more you will have to hunt, so you need to manage this properly and finish as soon as possible.

A large flying transport in the shape of a mythical legendary gourd will arrive shortly after you arrive, and park itself where I'm standing right now. You'll only need to deposit the captured monsters into the vessel, which is strong enough to hold any kind of Dark Corrupted evil, and which will become the prisoners' new jail. When you're done, send me a text message and I'll have officials from the Heavenly Court to pick up the vessel and send the prisoners to their next destination. If you come across people who need help, then you are required to rescue them and get them to safety, which is the vessel as well."

There was a minute of silence as Jiang Sect Leader considered the well-explained, but rather challenging proposal - mankind versus incubi-kind sounded quite one-sided, really. "... So I just need to sweep up the dirt in the Cloud Recesses and the vicinity, bag up the trash in the nets, and dump them into a garbage truck, right?"

(In other words, Gotta Catch 'Em All, if parallels are drawn with a certain famous 21st-century game.)

The Grand Patriarch had to suppress a chuckle, because he didn't want to come off as rude, "You have a wicked sense of humour, but yes, that is what it is. Consider it as a valuable community service for the Kingdom, during this summer camp."

Jiang Cheng laughed audibly at the other end of the line, “Alright, I accept and thank you, ge fu , for giving me and these disciples another chance. I probably went overboard with forcing the kids to memorize more than 4000 rules overnight, and everyone had suffered enough with that subject, so you have my word that we will do anything to avoid having to sit for another written exam!”

This time, Lan Zhan snorted.

.

It was very heartwarming to watch Jing Yi and Si Zhui reunite with their didi of sorts, Jin Ling, in a three-way noisy teary hug circle the moment the youngest stepped out of a tiny single-passenger airship which looked more like a 21st-century scooter with a glass bubble around it (and it puffed out cute clouds trailing behind with put-put sounds when it revs up its rather mediocre-looking engines). It was the only WeiEx e-hailing driverless ride he could afford with his meagre savings, Jin Ling said, garbed in his new white Qishan Lan robes specially made for him for this assignment, and a large rucksack hanging off his shoulder plus two wheeled luggage bags by his side, while his face was red with tears and given loving bear hugs by the other two.

Much time had elapsed, and all Tian-powered portals had been finally closed, thus cutting off all reinforcements and supply lines for the evil forces still roaming around and festering within Gusu in the Mortal Realm. However, the local gang leader - the succubi queen who made a nest in Caihong Town after the clone of Tian shijie was defeated - and the population of Imperial Tian monsters in the province continued to persist.

“Jin gongzi ! You could’ve let us know that you were coming! We didn’t talk on the phone for a few days since you were having your exams. I heard you worked part-time with Jiang Sect Leader as an assistant at day time, while studying at nights! How hardworking and diligent you are!” (cue a two-million dollar smile that rivals Wei Ying’s.)

“Don’t mind him. Jing Yi is a little jealous because he hasn’t started on the textbooks since we’re both stuck here. But he has been taking online classes through WeiTube and other platforms. We missed you so much, Jin gongzi , and I’m so glad to see you doing all right.”

“Y... Yeah! I studied very hard, and earned a bit of pocket money too! Although I haven’t worked before, my jiu jiu said I have the potential to be a star employee! Isn’t that great? And... and... don’t tell anyone, but the exams were really hard, even for me! I can’t believe that the Lans have so many rules! I passed the other papers with flying colours... well... except... err, except that one subject about rules. But that’s why I’m here! I’m going to pass this test no matter what it takes!”

Wei Ying snickered at how his princess nephew hadn’t changed much since they last met. Jin Ling was dogged in his determination to succeed in his new life, despite being marked as an illegal immigrant and therefore, could not hold any respectable job other than to be a personal assistant to his jiu jiu .He earn some money doing menial tasks such as sorting out mail, sweeping the uncle’s office floor, serving tea, photocopying documents, delivering goods, stocking up shelves and so on - with some one-on-ones in cultivation lessons in-between. He slowly climbed up from the bottom rung of the ladder, made some friends among the workers at his uncle’s stores, and nearly hit the next milestone when the exam results came out. Similar to others of his kind, he failed to memorize and recite the Qishan Lan’s over-4000 family rules, and he was offered a final shot - because the Matriarch was adamant to have his nephew succeed, and nagged at the husband over the phone in their daily catch-ups (with threats of someone sleeping on the couch if the special request was not complied), until the Grand Patriarch relented.

Jin Ling, who had no privileges and was about to have his crappy status revoked, and even had to pay for his own ride because there was no government subsidy for non-citizens, was given an ultimatum - he would have to work extra hard compared to the rest, to be able to stay in the Kingdom. Thus, he was assigned to support Jing Yi and Si Zhui to clean-up Cai district, and when the barrier around it is destroyed after the defeat of the local succubi queen, the trio would have to work together and follow through with the rest of Gusu province with little or no support from the rest of the Kingdom; the Kingdom needed to withdraw its troops from Gusu so that they could be deployed elsewhere in the war-ravaged Middle Kingdom, such as the capital city of Chang'an. Jing Yi and Si Zhui had not passed through the immigration centre, so, technically, they weren't in the Kingdom's records; any victories such as the liberation of Cai district or later, Gusu, would be solely credited to Jin Ling - so that the boy could leapfrog through the Kingdom's hierarchy and become a decent, respectable and fully-acknowledged citizen.

With this, Wei Ying, Grand Matriarch of the Kingdom, and his husband, the Grand Patriarch, could finally take a break from taking care of the children, and go for a honeymoon in Gusu - at least that was the plan, initially.

Wei Ying called out to the three boys once the scooter-like transport left (it automatically returns to its depot after the fare is paid). "Okay, okay, the hugs and kisses can continue later! Si Zhui, go start on dinner! Jing Yi, take Jin Ling to his room to drop his luggage, and show him around!" he said and rose up from the picnic bench where he'd been sunbathing the whole mid-morning while snacking on spicy buns, dried plums, potato crisps and some unhealthy junk food.

“Enn, Matriarch! Do you want to join us?” Si Zhui asked, because he is sensitive to everyone’s feelings, and thought that the da jiu would surely want to spend time reconnecting with his nephew.

Wei Ying nodded, “Yes, and I will have a talk with Jin Ling later. For now, I’ll cut some lotus roots from the pond and you get some spare ribs out of the underground pantry. You know what we’ll have tonight.” And a wink.

The two Gusu Lan boys beamed with happy smiles and Si Zhui started to tear up a little - Jin Ling, who hadn’t yet settled down from his long, back-breaking journey on a scooter, looked a little confused at the slight change in his welcome reception.

Notes for the Chapter:

Bringing the three children back together, and Uncle Jiang whips up a storm in the skies! :-D

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 123

Jing Yi gnawed on a crispy fried doughstick dipped in warmed soymilk, and watched with interest at a projected screen from Jin Ling's holo-phone, which was sponsored by his jiu jiu (because the nineteen-year old boy was too poor to own any mobile device). The two Gusu Lan disciples only had physical Weiphones that couldn't project holographic stuff unlike the more modern holo-phone, so Jing Yi - who often studied online - tended to hog the youngest's device for various reasons.

“Woah! Look at how Jiang Patriarch straddles the giant incubus' neck and wrapped Zidian around it! It's cooler than riding a horse! Twenty disciples from both sects try to hold it to the ground with ropes as thick as a man's arms! Another twenty had to fly on swords to drop the golden net from above, and that net looks really heavy! I'm so glad we weren't sent there to deal with those humongous monsters; I'd be flung far into the mountains before I could get close to any of 'em!” Jing Yi cried excitedly and kicked his feet against the picnic bench out of (increasingly) bad habit.

Si Zhui walked out from the kitchen with a platter of cut fruits and placed it on the picnic table outside their cottage; he immediately noticed a rogue drop of soymilk on Jing Yi's chin, and quickly dabbed it away with a washcloth.

“That was yesterday's livestream, Jing Yi, and Jiang Sect Leader's third catch. You missed it while attending the tutorial on 51st-century spaceships on Weibook. Jiang Sect Leader's already working on his fourth catch today,” the boy said calmly, and offered a watermelon cube skewered by a toothpick, at his fiance. Si Zhui was light-years ahead of Jing Yi in terms of wisdom and intelligence, and dutifully kept abreast with the latest news every morning, unlike Jing Yi who preferred to study and watch his shows while eating, exercising or any other form of (disruptive) multi-tasking.

Like a pampered gongzi, Jing Yi's eyes were glued to the screen when he nom-noms the proffered juicy sweet morsel that actually goes well to wash down oily food, and pairs perfectly with soymilk (which ends up tasting like a pleasant smoothie). For Jing Yi, videos that showed action and violence were right up his alley, compared to his fiancée's favourites of family dramas, sitcoms and soap operas - so he didn't even flinch when Si Zhui leaned closer to give a sweet peck at the future-husband's cheeks, because he was absorbed in watching how a giant humanoid winged monster was bagged up and imprisoned into a magical gourd.

"Eeeh, don't do that in front of me, I might lose my breakfast!" Jin Ling teased the two lovebirds by sticking out a tongue, while oiling Suihua on the picnic bench. The youngest boy had taken his morning meal earlier, courtesy of Si Zhui's undying loyalty to feed the poor boy only the best - after the inaugural emotional breakdown when Jin Ling tasted a bowl of lotus root pork ribs soup and was told the story behind the recipe, Si Zhui had sworn to himself that he would always cook for the boy, for himself, and probably for all orphaned boys out there in this cruel, harsh world, who never had the chance to taste their mother's cooking.

Jing Yi was more upbeat than the composed Si Zhui, and started flirting with the youngest, "Babe, you gotta get used to us doing this, and see things in a more positive light! Si Zhui's going to be my wife so that he can be accepted into the Kingdom, and you know... I could put in a few good words for you too, raise your status in society, if you join my harem. We could start a branch of family within the Qishan Lan, grow our numbers, and become a powerful unit within the hierarchy!" Jing Yi sniggered at his own joke, and earned a toothpick-stab on the back of his hand from his fiancée.

“Hush, Jing Yi. Three does not make a harem; you’re daydreaming again. And please finish the fruits by yourself, you’ve watched too many non-educational shows today,” Si Zhui petulantly remarked and dished out his brand of gentle tender loving punishment, then picked up a grape, reached across the fiance and fed it to Jin Ling’s open-ready mouth; the youngest boy started liking getting hand-fed by the mama of their team, and hasn’t really stopped since then. Jing Yi pouted at the temporary time-out of food-based love, and knew he probably overstepped his boundaries, so he hit the ‘pause’ button and focused on his harem - no, probably his threesome.

Jing Yi spread his arms and grabbed each boy from the side, and brought them together so that he sat between them - like a real laoban , or in his daydreams, a harem master of sorts. Si Zhui blushed immediately, while Jin Ling yelped in (unnecessary) embarrassment, so the two continued to busy themselves by finishing a few more pieces of fruits, fed from Si Zhui’s hands straight into Jin Ling’s mouth.

“I... I... I might consider what you said,” Jin Ling stammered in-between chews of loquats and honeydew, after mulling over what had been offered - to enjoy the good food made by Si Zhui’s loving hands, and to enjoy the privileges that true Lan members will have. “... But... but you have to promise to tell only the good things to my jiu jiu ! If... if you say anything funny, or... if I end up back in the illegal immigrants’ detention centre, I’ll... I’ll... I’ll never, ever forgive you!” he added, and sounded arrogant, mixed with a little bit of desperation. He looked up straight into Jing Yi’s eyes and gave him an angry, determined stare. Si Zhui felt a little alarmed at the outburst, so he reached out and held one of the youngest boy’s hands to soothe any of his anxieties.

Jing Yi beamed his two-million dollar smile, charming and confident. “We’ve been pals for so long, we could be sleepin’ on the same bed and no one would even question us! Leave it to me, and I guarantee that you’ll succeed if you stick with me,” he said and puffed out his chest with pride. He looked back at Si Zhui and then at Jin Ling, then slyly announced, “Let’s seal this pact with a kiss, because it’s going to involve getting the two of you into marital arrangements with me anyway.”

Si Zhui and Jin Ling hesitated a little, but there was no one else in the courtyard of the cottage, next to the vegetable gardens and lotus ponds, hence, both boys eventually agreed and gave a sweet, timid kiss on each side of Jing Yi’s cheeks. Jing Yi’s masculinity grew tenfold at that point, with two future-wives in his arms, on that bright sunny mid-morning with blue skies.

.

Wei Ying sighed and shrugged to himself, “Kids these days... have no respect for boundaries and virtues!” He watched with mild disinterest at how the three disciples frolicked on the picnic bench, hugging, touching and smooching each other like adolescents experimenting with vanilla-flavoured puppy love. Ever since Jin Ling was shipped to their cottage using WeiEx’s excellent and affordable delivery service, the two Lan boys had spent much time catching up with the youngest of the trio - they hadn’t met since the end of summer, when invasion by the Tian-led Imperial forces blocked all roads and cordoned off every surviving sect -, and had gotten very close as more than mere best buddies.

The boys didn’t have time to rest on their laurels even after fending off a small patrol of fierce corpses during dinnertime with the youngest’s first bowl of lotus root pork rib soup - they were immediately put to hard work by the Matriarch in the days that came after; they were given strict regimen drawn up by the Grand Patriarch in heaven, which included farming, household chores, studying, cultivating and practising fighting techniques by pitting them against increasingly larger and more powerful enemies. The Kingdom began to withdraw their troops from a relatively stabilized Gusu, thus leaving the three boys to clean up after the disappearing 51st-century soldiers prominently from Wei da ge 's armies. It was a great opportunity for the two Lan boys to take their youngest didi to visit landmarks and scenic places in Gusu, in which the latter promised that he would do the same when they go to Yiling.

“Jing Yi! Si Zhui! Jin Ling! You’ve got another half an hour to rest and check your gear! We’re going after the succubus queen in Caihong Town after this, then go for a scavenging hunt there, before stopping by Caiyi Town for lunch!” Wei Ying called out at the top of his voice, from the front door of their cottage.

“I eat succubus queens for breakfast!” Jing Yi replied back with a shout, followed by snickers. His swordplay is fairly admirable at that stage, and he could slay many monsters of lower strength and ferocity.

“Hush, Jing Yi. Don’t get so cocky,” Si Zhui started to wipe down the picnic table - particularly the soymilk spills because that cocky brat couldn’t eat his doughsticks properly -, and started to fuss around to prepare their backpacks, swords, magical equipments and to check that their robes were in good order. Si Zhui acted as the group’s healer and ranged guqin attacks, and is quick good with his sword too, thus providing all the required support for a successful night-hunt from behind.

“Eh? Isn’t it the other way around? Succubus eat people, right? Does succubus meat really taste good?” Jin Ling wondered aloud, having finished polishing Suihua - which he would never use and risk any scratches, to preserve the memory of his late father; because his bow and arrows are awesome enough, when imbued with Paperman magic.

Si Zhui shot Jin Ling an incredulous look - because evidently, Jin Ling needed to brush up on his bestiary knowledge -, while Jing Yi barked out another laughter and slapped the youngest boy’s buttocks.

Wei Ying rolled his eyes at those playful youths, and returned into the cottage.

.

The moment he entered the master bedroom, Wei Ying took a sidestep and narrowly avoided a wet kiss from the husband. Lan Zhan, who had hidden behind the door with the intention to sweetly ambush his spouse with a “I’m back” smooch, tumbled clumsily after missing his target, tripped over the spouse’s outstretched shin and fell flat into the bed; his puckered lips left a visible dent in the pillows.

“Naughty lao gong , I could smell you from a mile away. Don’t forget, I’m part incubus, so I know when there’s a horny man like you within my arm’s reach,” Wei Ying chuckled, and joined the prone husband on their bed. Soon, they lay face to face on the bed, pillowed by blankets and cushions in a nest that surprisingly smelled of the two of them, despite the husband’s earlier promises that he would only return when his mission in the Heavens was done; evidence of just how many, and how frequent his trips back to the Mortal Realm were.

“Pants off,” the spouse ordered nonchalantly as the robes slid off from the husband’s hands, and the latter obeyed without a word. Wei Ying rummaged through the drawers of the bedside table and found their favourite massage oil. He began to oil his hands and warm them up; while doing so, he engaged in a light banter with the other man, who wordlessly pulled up his remaining undershirt until he was naked waist-down on their not-so-creaky high quality double king size bed.

“So? What kind of excuses do you have this time for playing hooky? Don’t you dare leave my little brother up there among inhuman rapists, you hear me?” Wei Ying said wryly, and started making out with the pent-up husband - Lan Zhan would never voice out his wants, but Wei Ying could hear him out clear and loud. Wei Ying peppered light kisses on the husband’s face and neck, his hands roamed the broad expanse of the muscular back, leaving light fingernail marks that doubled as a very, very welcoming back-scratches, before moving to the front to tweak manly brown-pink nipples until they puffed up - the husband nnnhs in unbridled delight at the stinging pain that sent electric shocks all over.

“Jiang Cheng is chasing his fourth target. With two hundred disciples rallying behind him, he should be fine in taking down the next few incubi, albeit a little slower than I had expected,” the husband replied in a muffled voice when he lay closer to Wei Ying’s chest to listen to his favourite heartbeat. Wei Ying was relentless in seducing the husband during the conversation, as though he, too, was greedy for pleasure, and to give pleasure to his soulmate. The younger man reached down, and the husband invitingly parted his thighs, so that Wei Ying was allowed to grab, stroke and gently play with the husband’s hardening penis, to messily twirl and braid the pubic curls out of spite - the husband nnnghs in annoyance at the hair-pulling sensations on his pelvis -, not to forget, cupping and caressing the ballsacks in a bid to coax the built-up pressure to start pumping out their thick hot milk like an oil well - twin pockets brimming full of rich fertile seed, jiggled and lightly squeezed with tender love.

“Since there’s not much left for me to do other than to observe from a far distance... my officials requested that I get some kingly duties done in the meantime... I have a live interview next, to discuss the future of the Kingdom on Channel 897 during prime time... and a few speeches in front of my subjects in the Palace, to boost their morale and present awards... then, my assistants have scheduled a string of important videoconferences with delegates from the Andromeda galaxy, but I... I haven’t really mastered their culture and language yet... and... and...” Lan Zhan struggled to explain; he was distracted, hesitant.

Wei Ying sneaked a hand around the back of the husband’s waist, splayed it between twin muscled springy glutes, and began to knead them like dough. Within seconds, the spouse had three fingers into the husband’s buttocks, and he immediately worked his lube-coated digits to exercise the latter’s g-spot.

“And your tummy hurts, and your bladder’s full, correct?”

Lan Zhan nnnghs at the sweet burning sensations filling up his prostate, being delectably assaulted not even five minutes into his secret meeting with the spouse.

“Did you just sneak out for a toilet break to meet me, so that you’re not found out by your servants?”

No response, although reddening earlobes told otherwise. Wei Ying hummed in acknowledgement; the husband probably ran to the gents to escape an army of assistants, servants and workers demanding his attention. He knew Lan Zhan would not skirt around his responsibilities, so he wouldn’t stay more than a few minutes in the loo - which translated to a few good hours in the Mortal Realm.

“I know you’re a little stressed from work. Tell me how you’re feeling, air everything out, you’ll feel better, lao gong,” Wei Ying cooed in-between sweet kisses on the husband’s cheeks and jaws, while his hands continued their pleasurable magic on the husband’s increasingly excited body. Lan Zhan continued to narrate, in short, awkward sentences, what he had to face in the past few hours in heaven-time, especially the distressing encounter with his insane uncle, his errant and bullying son, the lack of time spent with his favourite daughter, the two escapee children from his pervy dreams, and the long list of activities and tasks that await him in the Heavenly Palace - nearly all of which included high-pressure meetings and public speaking events that put him in a very uncomfortable spotlight.

The tirade of succinctly-worded complaints and whining was much needed to relieve the burgeoning pressure inside the husband’s mind - talking about his own insecurities helped the man to calm down and to see things in a more positive light, especially when counselled by his own always-sunshine spouse - so much so that fully-flushed and sweaty Lan Zhan barely paused when he erupted during mid-conversation into a gentle orgasm straight into Wei Ying’s expert hands, before turning over to wordlessly demand for an ear-cleaning using his favourite worn-out bamboo earpick, another back-scratch, a foot massage, a scalp massage and so many more creature comforts. Wei Ying wanted to coddle and indulge in the husband’s childish

- but very endearing - requests, but alas, the spouse's half-hour passed nearly too fast.

Wei Ying decided that he simply should use his awesome magic to create more of himself for the husband to love.

“ Lao gong , I need to leave soon. Let's get you a takeaway. How many? Original or spicy? Any special flavours?” Wei Ying asked and looked at the clock on the wall, when drowsy, pleasantly emptied Lan Zhan paused a bit to catch his breath, his head cradled in his beloved's arms. In a world of their two, it was perfectly fine to regress into infancy and to be loved unconditionally - Lan Zhan could grunt and nnngh all he wanted in the bedroom, latch his lips onto the spouse's nipples and have his back patted like a baby, while listening to Wei Ying's lovely, soothing voices as the latter hummed an old Gusu lullaby and rocked their bodies along in a gentle timeless rhythm. The husband didn't even need to say anything - Wei Ying read his mind perfectly well.

“Naughty baby, you're always so greedy for your wife's love, especially when you're in a needy state like this,” Wei Ying giggled, and started to wiggle his fingers to weave an awesome spell that only the four walls of their bedroom could witness, “... coming right up, ten Wei Yings, ages from twelve to twenty-one, all of them are originals save for one spicy demon, and everyone's equipped with those 51st-century artificial wombs that you so desperately love, and one of them is a true female, because I know how addicted you are to vaginas but you never really say it out loud.”

(Lan Zhan loves Wei Ying in all shapes and sizes, and forms. They had debated, as husband and wife who respect each other, the merits and evils of having sex with a female form, and whether that would contradict the core of their homosexual relationship - and agreed, that Wei Ying is perfectly fine to stick to his one and only husband, while Lan Zhan has a penchant to explore the delightful variations that the spouse could offer - just because Wei Ying is such an awesome spellcaster. Lan Zhan made it clear that he would never become hard for another woman, let alone another man, unless that individual is Wei Ying. However, the couple learnt since summer that Lan Zhan secretly enjoyed the pleasures of the female flesh - because the concept clicked to his compulsive behaviour of putting things 'to where it belongs' - but as long as it is Wei Ying's - which made it clearly impossible in the natural world, however nothing is ever natural for Wei Ying; Wei Ying is overjoyed, because the entire sexperimentation proved that Lan Zhan only has eyes for the man named Wei Wuxian across all boundaries and iterations.)

Wei Ying gave a sweet peck at Lan Zhan's lips, in which the latter responded in an insulted and indignant nnngh, because the spouse could unravel every last thread of the man's deeply buried secrets too easily. A second later, ten Wei Yings fwip! -ed and warped themselves into the increasingly stuffy bedroom.

Lan Zhan licked his lips, and spread his legs in anticipation.

.

Thirty minutes were up, and it was time for Wei Ying to join the trio young disciples into their journey to liberate the Cai district, and later, Gusu.

“I’ll probably return later today, and by then you’ll be back in Heaven. Don’t forget to clock-out as soon as the space-bubble around Cai district pops open. We still have a date to the eastern beaches to visit the Scripture Rock and the remains of the Imperial warships!” he called out as he walked out of the bedroom while buttoning his shirt and tying his robes properly.

Lucky Lan Zhan was totally engrossed in his harem of ten; it didn’t matter if he was an all fours, growling and salivating like a starving beast in heat, mounting repeatedly three or more Wei Yings at the same time, of different ages and genders, whether human or demon, as long as he was making sweet love to one Wei Ying or another. He climaxed for the nth time due to the powerful demonic pheromones in the room that kept him as hard as an iron rod, and he had savoured the tightness and wetness, and deflowered ten Wei Yings lined up on his bed with their asses raised, within the span of less than a minute, tasting each individual before selecting who goes where for his sexual pleasures - it didn’t matter if he was royally fucking into someone’s hot tight womb - as long as it’s Wei Ying’s - it didn’t matter if while fucking, someone fondled his balls and added extra caresses to his genitals that sent him skyrocketing into another orgasm, because two, maybe three lovely fingers or tongues invaded his stretched-open anus and molested his prostate until that little factory of sweet fluids quivered and pumped out ejaculate endlessly to fuel his loins and burning desires - it didn’t matter if someone was giving him back-scratches, back-masages, ear-cleaning, foot massages and scalp massages simultaneously while he was busy breeding probably a nubile preteen Wei Ying underneath him, or worse (better), the much sought-after female version because he would explode immediately as soon as he was sheathed inside the clenching folds of tunnel-y flesh - wonderful penile contractions ran up and down his burgeoning, leaky arousal, his eyes rolled back, his back bent and bowed desperately to claim more thrusts, more friction, more tasty fucks, his lungs were out of breath, but it was so hard to inhale a room full of Wei Ying-scented air, because sweet someone, a Wei Ying, french-kissed him so deeply and sparred with tongues, that he was drowning in pleasure from head to toe, from mouths of both ends on his body, then a twinge of infinite excitement, his emptied balls tightened, his prostate shuddered, his tightly-encased swollen shaft grew a bit more, a wave of sweet sweet pulses started their launch sequence from base to tip, the twitches grow wilder and wilder but he was entrapped, imprisoned in Wei Ying's sweet, sweet womb, sensuously undulating, squeezing, coaxing every single last glob to shoot out into waiting jaws inside the scabbard for his impossibly hard sword, every single last drop to ooze into demonic tongues waiting to pull apart his cockslit to vacuum air out from his balls, every single last squirt to spray into the waiting Dark, Corrupted womb with millions of tentacles, mouths, lips and tongues waiting to devour his spilling essence of wriggling babymakers.

Wei Ying hummed another folk tune as he closed the bedroom door, not really caring if the husband answered or not - he'd check the holo-phone later - and walked out of the cottage.

Lan Zhan would be left to enjoy his harem of ten Wei Yings for the day, having nine humans and one demon, nine virile young males and one fertile female, surround and pleasure him for hours on end, touching and molesting his body, playing with his nipples and stroking his growing paunch in loving circles, wherever he walked around the deserted rooms and hallways, while he loitered around the unoccupied cottage. At every opportunity, Lan Zhan indulged in his favourite pastime of tasting each Wei Ying in every imaginable sex positions in every imaginable corner of the humble abode, bent over furniture, on the floor, on the kitchen countertops, amongst vegetable gardens and farms, as long his happy penis was kept in perpetual excited, turgid state, drilling into every Wei Ying who continue to frolick and dance around him, spreading their rosebuds (and one pussy) for him to spear, penetrate and make sweet love endlessly, having naughty fingers play with his genitals until his desires rise up, relax, rise up again, relax, then rise up, up until hitting mind-blowing orgasms, but then his cockhead was lovingly peeled and foreskin pulled back, thousands of tongues licked and suckled at the hypersensitive tip until he could only moan incoherently, spewing pee and seed like volcanoes blowing off erratically, losing control of his rational thought and consciousness, before his tired and dying penis was guided by gentle hands to enjoy the pleasures the flesh between taut thighs, someone grasped and stroked his cock until it woke up and gently, gently dipped his meatstick into someone's hole, it didn't matter what the hole looked like, dipping, dipping, deeper, dirty words whispered into his ears by ten different dirty Wei Yings and their ten sexy perverse stories, until he couldn't bear it anymore, he was shuddering, ejaculating again uncontrollably, ten shots in one lovely twelve-year old wife, another ten in another fifteen-year old wife, and he was almost in nirvana at the last ten in yet another twenty-one year old wife's pussy-rosebud, he was certain that all the Wei Yings had been properly inseminated, and that his loins had shrivelled pleasantly, numbed into emptiness and nothingness, that he was dried up as raisins and had nothing else to give except for sweet clear fluids that only men of his age can produce when he had cummed too much, too hard, too fast - before returning from his heavenly toilet break to brave the swarm of assistants, servants and workers demanding for his attention at work.

Notes for the Chapter:

Ho-hum... just cruisin' through with a bit of plot and smex.

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 124

Wei Ying tailed behind as the boys marched through forests and rolling hills towards their destination. Sure enough, he eavesdropped the hell out of the boys' mundane conversations for his personal amusement and secretly sent voice clips to the husband whom he'd rendezvous every now and then for a tasty tryst behind closed doors, and sometimes, behind wild bushes. Knowing that the Patriarch has a lot on his plate as the holy trinity of Jade Emperor - Lord Buddha - God of Mercy, like a model conscientious Matriarch, Wei Ying continued to keep tabs on the boys and made sure to inform the husband of their developments - with a generous dose of his own sarcastic opinions (or plainly put, gossiping).

“Err... Si Zhui, can we talk just for a minute?” the youngest poked Si Zhui at the shoulder blades and whispered loudly to get his attention, while their gang leader had jogged ahead, play-swinging his sword like a proud warrior about to score his first major kill.

“Sure, what is it, Jin gongzi ?” Si Zhui asked and slowed down, before turning around with an expectant look.

Jin Ling eventually settled to the pace of a brisk walk, then looked around suspiciously to make sure that nobody was listening - Wei Ying was more than an earshot away, and whistled innocently at passing-by birds (with Ear spells fully activated, of course). The boy huddled closer and blushed a little as he stuttered, “It's... it's about what we talked about earlier today over breakfast. I'm... I'm seriously considering what Jing Yi said about taking on a Lan surname, if it leads to a better life in the future. It's... it's not that I have any major objections to taking another family's name, really! B-B-Because I really don't want to go back to the detention centre, it's the pits over there! I've survived it, and can tell you how unpleasant it was being locked up in a room, all alone, with four white walls! A-A-Also, the Jin family line is already lost, anyway, since the destruction of my ancestral lands... but I'm not worried! I'm a big boy now, so it's fine that I could sever ties from the old and hang on to what's really important to start a new beginning, just like what my jiu jiu said..." The boy's voice lowered into unintelligible murmurs, obviously too distraught to continue despite the older disciple's calm and reassuring demeanour.

Si Zhui's stride finally ground to a halt, ignoring the fact that their leader had disappeared ahead. He placed a hand on Jin Ling's shoulder, a little uncertain, but for kind reasons nevertheless, "Ummm... so, if you're fine to sign on the same marriage certificate as us, and you believe you have good reasons for doing so, what is the biggest fear that's holding you back?" Si Zhui's gaze was gentle and concerned, and he did not mind being rooted on the spot with the younger boy until the latter talked through his anxieties and found his peace of mind; Jin Ling had a penchant for being an impatient worrywart, and often showed signs of insecurity although he usually masked them with unnecessary arrogance, grandiose boasting, and eventually confusing self-contradictions.

Si Zhui continued to smile softly at Jin Ling, unfazed at the boy's ranting; he didn't need to say more - the crinkling of his eyes wordlessly told the latter that Jin Ling didn't need to explain himself too much, and to just answer the question. "Jin Ling, please say what's in your heart. What is your fear?" he nudged the boy again.

Jin Ling looked down and started to fidget with his fingers, and scratched behind his head - clearly uncomfortable with his own truth, "Um... um... I'm afraid that you... you..." again, his voice trailed off.

“Me?”

“... Don’t laugh, because I’m really, really sensitive about this... I’m afraid that... you might treat me badly as... as...” Jin Ling’s attempt was miserable, but Si Zhui was infinitely patient.

“Such as?”

A full minute probably went by as the boy tried to grasp the right words without sounding utterly silly.

“Errmm... err... the second wife! The concubine! The mistress! O-o-or, even a slave!” he blurted, then, “Auuugh! This is so humiliating!” and he looked as though he wanted to dig up a hole and bury himself into it. He crouched at Si Zhui’s legs and kept his head down into his arms. He let out another muffled, exasperated “Auuugh!”

A smile. A sigh. Si Zhui squatted so that he was at the same level as the other boy. He placed a hand lightly on Jin Ling’s forearm.

“Jin Ling, I promised to take care of the both of you - especially you. After seeing you enjoy my cooking so much, I’m tempted to stay with you and always make delicious food for you. Anyway, Jing Yi did clarify that the whole arrangement is just done on paper - once we’re proper, rightful citizens of the Kingdom, he would talk to the administrators to annul the whole thing. He wouldn’t hold out on us about what awaits in the next chapters of our lives. We can decide to break off and go our own separate ways, or we can stick together just like his daydreams to form a little gang of our own, and carve out our own niche within the Kingdom.

So, although we merely need to act our roles to avoid being seen as deceptive in the eyes of the civil registry officials, I would never treat you badly at any point in time, Jin gongzi, even if you're second in line in this theatrical play on marital relationships, or later, a free man."

Jin Ling's eyes brimmed with uncried tears when he heard those precious words, and he hurriedly grabbed Si Zhui's hands in a gesture of pinky promises - all ten fingers, in fact. "R... Really? You're not lying?" he asked several times, desperate.

"Mmm. You have my word, Jin gongzi," Si Zhui allayed the boy's concerns with his gentle voice, "So, from now onwards, you must treat Jing Yi as our up-and-coming Patriarch, with full kindness, faith, loyalty and bend to his whims, no matter how crazy his requests are. Let's make sure that for those who have their eyes trained on us, will be convinced that both us are truly deserving Lan citizens."

Jin Ling was relieved and overjoyed at how his troubles transformed in the end to a lifelong promise of friendship and companionship, of a grand mission beyond shameful servitude, to achieve his Happy Ever After.

"And you need to step up your role as the youngest, at least through your actions, and give me the love and respect that would paint all three of us as a happy family fit to settle down in the Kingdom," Si Zhui added, then pointed at his cheek with a cheeky wink. Jin Ling hesitated for a second, before gingerly leaning forward, squeezed his eyes shut, and finally gave a sweet peck to the older boy's face. It was such an adorable moment between the two.

Wei Ying couldn't stand like a rock forever and he was already losing sight of Jing Yi after loitering around the other two reconciling boys for a bit too long - plus he felt giddy from a sugar overdose after watching the irredeemably saccharine display of affection - so he deliberately stepped on a dried twig and rudely cleared his throat; the noise startled them to rise up and hurry off to their future husband's side; it was a subtle way of ingraining discipline into the kids to follow the footsteps of the First Fathers, after all; Wei Ying sometimes wondered if he would ever get the chance to witness the true birth of a new harem in their family.

Birdsongs followed the quartet, including foreboding crows cawing too - Wei Ying did not recognize those crows and thought that perhaps they were from the native wildlife - or maybe not.

.

Lan Zhan had just completed a series of exhausting photoshoots in a studio set up in his Heavenly throne room - he'd tried out tens of regal, over-the-top and very luxurious, colourful vibrant, and sassy robed garments that his designers hoped would make it for next year's Spring Collection -, before he was shuttled away to preside over a bodhi tree-planting ceremony at the Palace's courtyard; his servants thought it would be a wonderful idea to have their Emperor featured on the covers of periodicals and magazines, along with environment-friendly and holy messages in large print.

He was already nodding off a little (his nether regions had gone to sleep earlier), while standing stiffly with a classic metal watering can next to a bunch of planted seedlings, when the crowd - mostly servants from the Palace dressed in uniforms and wealthy-looking clothes - applauded politely and everyone sported picture-perfect smiles in front of the press.

Then, unexpectedly, there was a series of bangs and clangs, followed by a rush of footsteps and angry shouts of palace guards running across the nearby thriving royal vegetable patches.

“Stop them! They’re getting away!”

“How did they get out?! There’s no way the barrier was dispelled, or that the watch towers did not spot the intruders, unless the leader is a very powerful magician!”

“Oh no! They’re heading towards the back of the Palace! Quick, call the head of security to close off all palace doors and gates!”

“Look at the way they’re running, it’s as though they know where to go and how to avoid the guards! What... what’s at the back of the Palace? No one hardly goes there since it’s a scrapyard full of trash and debris from the previous administration.”

“Oh my goodness, the Well! The Well that leads to the Mortal Realm is over there, and there isn’t anyone patrolling that area right now!”

His Majesty, the Great Emperor Lan, was shocked at what he heard and immediately dropped the meaningless watering can to the dirt ground. He was about to sprint to the source of the commotion when more servants appeared from the side and called for his attention.

“Your Majesty! Please, to the grand front doors, and let these guards deal with the perpetrators at the back of the palace! We urgently need your presence at the main front halls - strange, ethereal doppelgangers have appeared, and they demand to see their family members which they think are imprisoned in some kind of dungeon here!” the celestial servant pleaded with a kow-tow, extremely afraid that he may have offended the Emperor and would have his head severed within a second.

“... Explain,” Lan Zhan felt frazzled and harassed, but he needed to keep his composure especially in the eyes of zillions of viewers who were watching the disrupted tree-planting ceremony via ErNet.

The servant bowed even lower than before, until his forehead touched the freshly tilled earth, “Your Majesty, a man who looks like you and claims to be the true Gusu Lan Master, the true Grandmaster of the Qishan Lan, and Ruler of all Realms... seeks an audience with you, and beside him is... is... your highness’ brother, Great Master Lan Xi Chen in his teenage years! This lookalike says that his adopted son has gone missing a few days ago, and he has followed the trail until here. Great Master Lan Xi Chen testifies that he knows through ineffable means that his younger brother has gone the same way too. We tried to interrogate them for more information, but their origins elude us, and they refuse to divulge anything else.

We... we really don't know what to do! They look quite imposing and scary in the main halls, and demand to talk to the master of the palace. Our scanners could not identify them, let alone detect their presence... it's as though they're... incorporeal... like... the air or the wind, having even infinitely lesser energies or material than ghosts and spirits! We're really at our wits' end, because they're walking through walls looking for you, and all palace servants are panicking while trying to chase them down!" the servant cried as he curled into a tighter ball, expecting a hefty punishment, the Emperor's wrath, in the form of a missing limb or a blade on the neck.

A few beads of sweat rolled down Lan Zhan's temples. He truly wanted to place a palm on his face, but he really shouldn't. The scores of reporters and the media's cameras continue to record and livestream the extraordinary turn of events from the sunny palace grounds.

.

"This... this is strange!" Jing Yi cried as he ran across overgrown farmlands with a standard issue Compass of Evil in his hand. The needle spun wildly in circles, but pointed to nothing in particular. Si Zhui and Jin Ling too, stumbled around the uneven ground - Jin Ling's clothes were splattered in mud when he tripped over some mounds and pulpy unearthed soil, while Si Zhui's boots were covered in mud when he stepped into weed-covered half-dug holes filled with brown muck; apparently the farmers that lived on the fringes of town were devoured so quickly, that the farm work was left half-done.

"But my compass points that way," Si Zhui calmly announced, while facing the opposite of Jing Yi.

“That’s not right... look at mine! It’s telling me to go that direction!” a confused and irritated Jin Ling pointed at a vague mountain that lay somewhere between the two older boys’ orientations.

Wei Ying hissed as another crow swooped down and made a grab for his hair, “Why do these birds keep attacking me?! Is it because of my Dark aura? Auuugh! Let go!” he yelled as a swarm of noisy caws descended upon him and pecked at his robes. He ran helter skelter in the direction opposite of Jin Ling as the annoying crows drove him further away from the boys. “This is not good! You need to retreat and regroup! Help your Matriarch get rid of these birds first!” Wei Ying yelped as claws scratched at his cheeks and hands.

The trio did not seem too concerned, because the crows looked absolutely normal and did not emit any evil presence.

“You could’ve disturbed them while on the way to Caihong, that’s why they dislike you so much. There aren’t many of them, and they’re probably from the same family,” Si Zhui shouted back above the din; he did witness the Matriarch climbing up trees to search for unguarded bird nests when the trio took frequent breaks, and even took a few shots at the crows that followed them, by throwing pebbles (a big no-no, Si Zhui had advised the man, because being cruel to animals usually brings back bad karma).

“Yeah! Our compasses are literally vibrating and warning us to be prepared! We’ve no time to spare for bird-hunting, and we have to be on our toes right now!” Jing Yi took a ready-stance and drew his sword, because his compass informed its owner that great danger lay ahead.

Jin Ling was torn in a conflict - on one hand, he felt he should help his da jiu , however he was deathly afraid that if he turned around, something lurking in the surrounding hillside bushes could ambush from behind and drag him to an unsavoury end. “ Da jiu ! Please look after yourself, since the crows are harmless and are from the woods anyway! Each of us need to deal with an evil presence greater than mere scavenger birds!”

“Don’t you get it?! You’re being separated, and that’s not normal succubus queen behaviour unless there’s several of them working together as a pack! You’re not ready to take on such insurmountable odds despite what the leaderboard says! Don’t bite more than you can chew!” Wei Ying berated as much as he could before being silenced by feathers from dive-bombing birds stuffing themselves into his mouth; he tumbled unceremoniously to the ground when the foul fowls flapped at his legs, and he coughed and choked simultaneously at an increasing sense of restlessness in the foggy air, filled with vengeful feelings, and vicious winds that whipped up clothes and hair into a mess.

“Well, I’m ahead of everyone else with at least thirty succubus kills under my belt, so what’s a few more? Please, just sit back and watch how we handle them, Matriarch! You’ll be so proud of us later!” Jing Yi shouted back confidently back from a far distance with uncharacteristic haughtiness, and at that point, Wei Ying felt an unusual dread run along his spine. The Matriarch was royally pissed off at how ignorant the kids were at their dire situation - and the fact that they’ve left him to deal with the crows by himself -, and for a brief moment, he growled out in exasperation, wanted to find a way to deflate Jing Yi’s ballooning ego and knock back some sense into him. Jing Yi thought he was undefeatable - a fallacy of youth - and that vibe seemed to resonate well with the other boys.

The skies outside the town of Caihong turned murky instantly, followed by flashes of lightning and thunder crashing, hurricane-like winds lashed at the landscape with surprising ferocity - it looked as though a huge rainstorm had formed overhead, churning the air around until bits of dirt and grass flew everywhere, fuelling a ominous sensation of wickedness, hatred, noxious with murderous intent. It was a scene that was all too familiar for the man who rules the roost for Dark Corruptive magic.

Suddenly, a string of fwip ! sounds made their way into the farmland that they were in. Wei Ying nearly gulped down smelly jet-black plumage when he found himself staring at a pair of painful-looking high heels adorned with dragon claws and golden scales. The crows flew off, upset at being denied the chance to inflict further insult onto their target, but continued to circle above and croak their ugly song of ear-grating cawing and rattling. He looked up, covered with dirt smudges, and his eyes narrowed instinctively.

“You... I don’t want to fight with you,” Wei Ying rumbled, as he cautiously backed away and rose to an upright position. One of his hands reached for his golden flute, ready to pull out that world-shattering instrument at a moment’s notice.

Tian da jie - the original sinful female that he knew too well, standing at eight feet tall -, garbed in her finest Far, Far West costume and armed to the teeth with strange, twisted foreign ornaments, armour and weapons including the real Heavenly Dragon Sword, stood before him with her arms akimbo. She wasn’t in her succubus form, therefore without horns, fangs, claws, wings and tail - which made her even more frightening to look at in the eyes of one who knew very well what billions -year old females could do without the pizzazz and bling-blings.

“Hello, my foster didi . It’s been a while,” she said, her voice low and cold, terrifyingly calm and calculated - with a hint of hisses and snarls that resonated with the serpentine language of the Dark kind, “We got bored being locked out of our little virtual playground when the portals were closed by your husband’s men. So we’ve come to pay a little visit to our dearest youngest brother, who is having a blast in what used to be our turf. I hope you don’t mind.”

Tian Second Sister emerged from behind some trees - her dress oozed of snakes and reptilian themes, and her forked tongue was unmistakably unforgettable, along with her humongous milk jugs. “Bratty boy,” she greeted him, “You really should come back to our nest to visit your foster great-grandparents once in a while, even just to drop by and say ‘Hi’. Because if you don’t, we’ll take you home if we have to.” Her threat was real, and her gloved hands wiggled with excitement and immense crackling of electric energy between the fingers.

Wei Ying stumbled away to try and put some distance in between - and found himself swallowed up into a warm pocket of body fat and warm bounciness. Two large hands encircled his waist and imprisoned him tightly against Tian Third Sister’s abdomen, who came out of nowhere - her bosom was huge, and she was exceedingly curvy and voluptuous that for a moment, Wei Ying thought he’d walked into a giant wall of spongy fluffy clouds. He meep’ed and didn’t dare to look up at the looming woman’s visage from above. “Oh, my sweetie didi , have you been eating well? You seem to have a bit of a belly down here, but the rest of you is still skin and bones! Let this jie jie take care of you, alright?” the gentle words, described in a sweet, melodious voice, sounded silly coming out from a witch of gigantic proportions, but he couldn’t find a trace of humour when inch-long fingernails rubbed his tummy slowly, but roughly like kneading a lump of tough dough, and it didn’t feel so good.

Elsewhere, Jing Yi, Si Zhui and Jin Ling faced the remaining five Tian sisters, but they did not know who they were up against. Jing Yi snorted arrogantly and declared that the new arrivals looked more human than anything else, with the lack of monstrous body parts and magical aura - he assumed they were fighting some kind of female human soldiers or watered-down versions of evil -, and so, they wouldn't have problems dealing with the enemy.

“Si Zhui, Jin Ling! I'm taking down three kids over there... they look like children and teenagers to me! Each of you take one of the remaining two adults, they look like capable soldiers but I'm sure you can fight them on your own! Make sure you grab their equipment when you beat them up, because those nice weapons and armours look really exotic and could fetch a high price at the smithy!” he barked out his battle formation and divided the spoils of war even before the skirmish began.

Si Zhui obeyed without question, and whipped out his guqin. He sent several powerful blue sonic waves as he pursued his target into the forests that surround the farmlands. Jin Ling was a little unlucky, as he tripped over a stone and fell on his rump. The Tian female who looked slightly older than him, licked her lips and screeched with delight at the sight of such a cute babyfaced boy trembling with fear. The boy squeaked, lost his courage, and ran for the hills in a high-speed chase.

Jing Yi, unrepented and foolishly brave enough to take on a seven-year old and her two adolescent older sisters, alone, swung his blade menacingly at the girls. He gave a crooked smile meant to intimidate them, and loudly announced, “You're not succubus queens or even princesses, so you don't scare me! Little girls like you should stay at home and not be out and about playing naughty with a gege like me... so drop those weapons and put your hands above your heads!”

Tian Sixth, Seventh and Eighth sisters eagerly dropped their fake throwing knives, daggers and homemade slings - to Jing Yi's triumphant glee, because he believed he'd bagged three victories without breaking a sweat, what more child soldiers that he could easily pummel to the ground if he needed to. However, the three girls wiped the grin off his face when they started casting never-seen-before spells and their clothes magically disappeared right before his bulging eyes.

Notes for the Chapter:

Bringing in the big guns...! And I'm out of idea again even though every character has made their appearance in one way or another.

In case there is another hiatus, I'll switch the fic to 'Completed' status and put some comments below to give y'all a heads up. This arc is becoming very lengthy, twisty and labourious due to many breaks in-between, so I plan to stuff everything in and see what pops up later. I want to say that the end is nigh, but I'm still so far away from doing anything worthwhile with Wangxian...

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 125

Lan Zhan was in a terrible bind - his tightly-packed schedule was in disarray because of one additional unexpected meeting; his servants, including his best clones, were dismal in their performance to take care of matters during his absence, to his dismay; his holo-phone buzzed nonstop and he knew the spouse would give him an ass whooping if he didn't answer the calls immediately; he was overtly concerned that something had happened to his spouse and their three boys - and yet, he had to remain composed in front of two guests - one who looked exactly like him, but much better, more masculine, more godly and more handsome in every aspect; the other was his older brother in his teenage years, which made his head spin in utter confusion of how messed-up the situation was.

In a spur of the moment and probably due to a lapse of judgement, he told his servants to clear his schedule, call off further kingly duties, and cancel any other engagements for the next few heaven-hours - to the bewilderment of his officials, because no Emperor should abscond from his throne and responsibilities with such immediacy - and he knew he would drown in remorse or be forced to sleep on the couch for this - he switched off his holo-phone because he could not tolerate its distracting buzzing while facing what could be the encounter of his life .

A lowly servant hastily set up a sparse but tastefully decorated private meeting room with a low table in the center, and some ornamental plants and expensive pottery in the corners. Atop the table, a tea set was prepared, and several plates of snacks were arranged meticulously according to size, colour and shapes. As soon as the servant left, Lan Zhan took a moment to size up the visitors from another world - an alternate Lan Wang Ji dressed in white Gusu Lan robes embroidered with slightly different cloud patterns, and a younger version of Lan Xi Chen, who looked the same as he remembered around the time he lost his mother, long, long ago. Apparently, this Lan Xi Chen does not recognize Lan Zhan, because he kept glancing back and forth between the two men with confusion starkly visible on his face.

The other Gusu Lan master turned to the side, and politely placed a hand on the teenager's shoulder, "This is a discussion between adults. Go and wait outside."

The boy did not question the order - such an exemplary Lan disciple, indeed -, and he bowed with folded hands at the front, "Enn. Shi fu (师父; master), please help to find my younger brother soon."

A couple of palace guards barged in, seemingly summoned by psychic means, and escorted the teenager out of the room. A few moments after he left, there was a loud bang, then a fwip ! sound, followed by an empty whoosh of air.

The Gusu Lan master sighed, and shook his head in disappointment. He sat down on a cushion by the table and made a graceful, but restrained, sweep of a hand; his hair and sleeves floated, buoyed by invisible breezes surrounding his figure. The teapot levitated, swirled the brew within, and tipped over a little - enough to pour a precise stream to fill two cups to the perfect amount without splashing any drops.

"Your mind is not at peace, and you are making rash decisions. Was it right to send him to a detention centre? Locked up in the same room as your uncle who has been labelled as a deranged man?"

Lan Zhan was taken aback by the Gusu Lan master's words - which were his, not only because they sounded like him, but also because that was the order wordlessly given to the guards, and that the order was made while he hadn't completely come to a satisfactory decision.

Your brother believes he's in a lucid dream, and he is too young to control what he feels and does while in slumber; so he will simply obey what he hears. That boy is innocent in our conflict, knows nothing else other than that he fell asleep during my tutorial, was informed that his younger sibling had run off somewhere, and that he walked with me in this dream-like state to locate that missing sibling.

Down there in the Mortal Realm, Lan Xi Chen would remain in his caged room out of respect for an old man seemingly suffering from dementia, however, there will come a point where he is unable to bear the man's ramblings, and escape undetected just as what has happened to my A-Xian and his A-Ji. Even Ernie and Ni-er cannot locate them; I know this, because we are Dream-kin - we do not exist, we are purely ethereal, we cannot be captured, we cannot be chained, we are free, yet we walk the same grounds as you, we eat the same food, we speak the same language, we live lively lives, just like you.

Lan Zhan sat stiffly opposite the Gusu Lan master and crossed his legs upon a purple cushion, as his mind reeled from hearing his own voice talking to him through psychic means. The master was conversing with him silently - a brilliant move, given that some reporters who attended the tree-planting ceremony milled about the halls, perhaps listening through walls or waiting for the perfect opportunity to jump and clinch a great interview. The man cannot be taken lightly, his instincts told him, because he seems to know the inside outs of the palace, or even the Kingdom.

While he tried to decipher the new term he heard - “Dream-kin” - and processed the logic behind the conundrum of how characters from dreams, or dream-folk (was there really such a term?), can be physical and real - even sitting in front of him, magically serving two cups of tea -, he politely replied, then asked, “Your keen sense of the current situation is admirable. You speak of my anxieties. You know what I have not revealed. Who are you?”

The master gestured with an open palm to invite Lan Zhan to partake the steaming cup of tea, and said, “I am you, and you, I. We are the same, one mirror image staring at the other.”

-- except that I'm merely a figment of your imagination, part of your dreams and undoubtedly, your nightmares as well. I know your present needs and wants, your deepest secrets buried beneath those layers of past memories, your bright wishes for the future. Where we diverge is that I know, I can - while you do not, can not.

The master smiled - something that Lan Zhan knew he should reciprocate out of courtesy, but he couldn't, since it wasn't his habit. Instead, he focused on taking a delicate sip. His brows furrowed; the tea tasted like orange juice, and it was refreshingly chilled... and he thought he bit into some juicy orange pulp when there was only clear golden-brown liquid and a few tea stalks inside the cup.

Lan Zhan had to attribute the strange sensory experience to magic, but he couldn't put a finger to it. “Explain,” was what he could manage with another sip.

You see me as an apparition, intangible in this reality; untouchable, unreachable, made from thoughts, feelings and deep-seated hopes and fears. If there are tears, I am that agonizing sadness. If there is laughter, I am that fleeting happiness. If there is confidence, I am the reason that voices out from within one's brave heart. If there is fright, I am the imaginary unseen shadow lurking at the back of the mind. If there is calm, I am that sense of satisfaction and fulfillment that encompasses your well-being. If there is uncertainty, I am the one who holds your answers, and I am the light at the end of the tunnel. If something is missing, I am waiting for you in the next room, with the item that you desire, right in my hands.

Therefore, I know.

I am an individual from your dreams, living in a world that, you thought, resides in your slumber. On the flipside, I am my own and your reality is merely a dream for me, until the farthest corners of the universe, the last thread, the final particle or droplet of matter and energy. Everything in this realm, this universe, can be moulded and shaped according to my whims and desires, just like how one can play in his playground made of dreams. The implications are probably beyond a god's comprehension, let alone a mortal.

Therefore, I can.

“Suffice to say, we are supreme leaders of our own worlds, rulers of our own countries, heirs to our legacies, and rightful leaders for our people,” the master clearly laid out his position. Lan Zhan, on the other hand, was a little shaken - he found himself sitting upside down on the ceiling, along with the table and the served beverage. The rest of the room and decor remained upright, dreadfully far below him because the room did have a high ceiling.

A blink of an eye later, he was back to where he was - gratefully, on the solid, cushioned floor.

Lan Zhan frowned to ward off an oncoming headache. He needed to deal with this quickly and return to his other, more immediate, tangible predicaments. “Then what brings you here, and what do you expect of me and my Kingdom’s subjects?” he asked, straight to the point.

Just as you desperately want to return to your present concerns and family, so do I. In my world, a wonderful magical Happy Ending is in the making. I would like to retrieve my beloved family members, so that we may wake up in our beds, on a bright, beautiful Sunday morning, and forget this nightmare of having my wife and my children endure separation from each other, has ever happened. Hence, --

“-- I am seeking the permission of the owner of this world, to conduct a search and to reclaim my kin - two missing children who passed this place not too long ago, along with another one who truly knows this realm, such as the existence of the Well that connects two worlds. You know who I mean, and I hope you don’t mind.” The Gusu Lan master daintily picked up a dried plum from the plate, and at the first bite on the chewy, wrinkled, and sweet-sour exterior, the bite-sized morsel blossomed and plumped up into a fresh ripened plum fruit. Lan Zhan’s breath hitched.

You are wondering what are the ramifications if you outright deny this request - the answer is simple: I will simply take what I want, then reboot your entire Kingdom using my own Universal Reincarnation spell. I will become you, and you will dissipate like the last traces of sleepiness at five o’ clock at dawn. Your world is plainly a dream to me, and I can recreate it any time between the hours of sleep and wakefulness. Having said that, having Xi Chen imprisoned in the immigration processing centre is no deterrent to us, when we can etherealize ourselves, move through your world unhindered, and make it into a playground of our own dreams.

Lan Zhan was at a loss for words; he could not really fathom how to even get out of this insanely powerful man's grasp, other than to agree to the demands - which seemed rather reasonable when weighed against the consequences. "I thank you for your respectful act to request my permission. It truly speaks the dignity of one leader to another. By my grace, it is granted," he calmly responded with a slight bow, and plucked a piece of dried plum from a pile on the plate. When he bit into the rubbery flesh, he winced - it was very sour inside, and coated with pure white sugar on the outside. He quickly washed it down with the orange-flavoured tea.

Lan Zhan was about to rise from his seat to invite his twin of sorts to a diplomatic tour around the palace grounds, since the earlier chasing and running between and through walls shouldn't constitute as a formal welcome to the leader of a new species, at least in the eyes and ears of the snooping media - however, he found that his legs wouldn't move. A plate of guazi on the table emitted puffs of smoke for a few seconds - to the alarm of the emperor, because he thought the food was on purposely set on fire and heavens forbid, that he may lose his castle in the sky due to attempted arson - but miraculously, when the smoke cleared, Lan Zhan was surprised again when a plate of tasty honey roasted sunflower seeds made its debut in place of the classic snack.

"There is another request, one which touches upon confidential topics such as commerce, politics..." the plate was gently nudged towards Lan Zhan, an invitation to give it a try.

A handful of roasted seeds later - which tasted absolutely heavenly, because Lan Zhan's distinguished palate could identify more than seven types of flavourful nuts perfectly matched with each other in every crunch, despite the homogenous appearance -, realizing that he had to see to the end of the conversation since he was trapped sitting on the purple cushion anyway, he curtly said, "Speak."

"For too long, our world - the stuff that makes your dreams - has been the subject of your people's intrigue, fascination, entertainment, even ridicule, to some extent," the master remarked, and was very careful to mention only what needed to be heard by outsiders, but kept the details silent, except for Lan Zhan.

-- especially when viewed with voyeuristic intentions through the pornographic and adults-only television channels that you have so generously set up to rack up your view counts in ErNet. We have access to that Net using our own means, so we know what is going on beyond our world. We've put on very good shows for you and your people across countless channels, did you enjoy them so far?

The master cleared his throat innocuously, and took another polite sip from his teacup. His expressions did not indicate any surprising flavours in his brew.

"Moreover, your Kingdom exploited our natural resources by regularly taking our people away, particularly those that fell through the cracks of society... well, like a colony should, anyway," Using powerful magics, you realize them into material entities, to physically manifest in your reality with some modifications and controls in place. Then, you turn them into expendable battle slaves and manual labourers to drive your Kingdom's incessant expansion and war machineries. We know what goes on for each of our own citizens and their fates, even beyond our world; to date, five individuals currently in your Kingdom have not been affected this way - myself, Xi Chen whom, regrettably, you've teleported to an immigration detention complex without my consent, my adorable A-Xian and his sweet A-Ji who have escaped their prison in Yiling and have gone missing even as we speak... and, finally the kids' stepmother.

“... Wei Ying?” Lan Zhan whispered and was rudely cut off by a hiss from the other man. Lan Zhan quickly pursed his lips so that he would not rouse suspicion from anyone, not even the servants who waited just outside the doors to refill the food and drinks.

There was a barely felt rumble, then the room tilted slightly and every piece of furniture began to slide to the side. Poor Lan Zhan was still stuck to the cushion and despite his best efforts, his buttocks remained glued to the sloping surface; a few toasted nuts and sweet candies rolled off the plate and into his robes; a puddle of spilled tea trickled dangerously close to the table's edge, threatening to gush straight into his pants. The master, however, remained unaffected - even his hair, his denser facial hair and clothes were firmly rooted to his strangely unmoving center of gravity. It seemed emotions that affected the master could cause their reality to physically warp and bend around itself, Lan Zhan thought.

That would be the loathsome Uncle Wei, who cleverly turned into his incubus form before he was shipped here along with the rest of the slaves you've harvested from our world. He evaded the transmutation spells and remains as powerful and uncontrollable as he has ever been in his original form. Now he roams free somewhere in the Mortal Realm below, soaring through the skies with the escaped ones, and I can imagine they're wrecking havoc with their sins and their inherent capabilities to brainwash, charm and persuade people of your Kingdom to serve their evil cause.

Another blink of an eye later, the room returned to its original position. Lan Zhan breathed a sigh of relief when the spilled orange-flavoured tea did not manage to careen off the table.

Lan Zhan gave a thoughtful pause, cautious in maneuvering the fine line between vocalizing his intention without giving too much away to anyone who might be eavesdropping the meeting room. “It is troublesome, indeed, and I cannot deny what you’ve claimed of our Kingdom’s wrongdoings to have contributed to such detestable modern-day slavery and human trafficking. I do not condone such behaviours and will endeavour to right what is wrong. Please, let me hear your second request,” he replied, and was eager to get to the crux of the issue.

The master smiled at yet another sip - Lan Zhan realized belatedly that the twin had not refilled his ceramic vessel although he himself had done so twice; the master’s cup seemed unusually everflowing -, and clearly announced, “To recognize my world as a sovereign nation of free-willed men and women, and to acknowledge that my family and my people as an entirely different, liberated species related to yours. We will continue to have ties that bind us to a common past, a shared origin, and a mutually beneficial future for both our kinds.”

Lan Zhan couldn’t yet accept the proposition - his empire had always conquered others and subjugated, then absorbed the losing side so that it could grow in size, fortune and prosperity; there had been very few cases where the empire partners or co-exists with another. “What if the Kingdom perceives this as a threat?” he asked.

I can easily possess you, take over what is yours, and be the next ruler of your Kingdom. I can weave your realms like pieces of colourful fabric into any garment to suit my tastes; simply because we're the same person, and your world is merely a drop in an ocean of dreams for me. Even if you mount a counterattack, my people outnumber yours, because any living being in the Kingdom that is sentient, thinks, has feelings and emotions - and dreams - has its mirror image in my nation, each creating his or her own world, and multiple complex layers of worlds, encapsulated within my rule.

However, in this particular dream where you and I are talking over a cup of tea in your palace, I am a humble leader of the people for my genteel nation, and wish to co-exist peacefully in an ecosystem of wonderful creatures, worlds, cultures and societies under the virtuous kindness and love that your Kingdom shall offer.

“There is no threat at all, unless I become your greatest nightmare. Am I right?” the master stated - not really asking for an opinion - and raised his cup in a toast, before downing the same cup that mysteriously refused to empty.

Lan Zhan looked at the tabletop, hoping that the other man did not see the flash of apprehension on his face - and realized that half of the plates of snacks had been emptied from the earlier reality-bending act. Another blink of an eye, and the plates were replaced by silver platters of seasonal and expensive imported fruits. He was, ironically, a gracious host that was served by the whims of his inscrutable guest, so he had no choice but to pick a red-orange cherry, and popped it into his mouth without the stem. Shockingly, it tasted like sweet, milky chocolate and had no pit. He sighed, and understanding dawned upon him that he would hardly have any normal food with the master around, because the latter kept twisting his senses and the reality around him like a predator toying with its prey. He was resigned to the demands of the master, and remarked, “You have made your point. I will talk to my administrators and generals to do the necessary. Are there any issues that require my immediate attention and action, because such negotiations and legal processes will take time?”

The master put his cup down, and leaned a bit to the back in relaxation, with a knowing smile that he had captured victories in a single meeting with the most powerful man in the Kingdom of Qishan Lan. He raised a hand and began counting his fingers, “I ask for free and improved access to ErNet. You know how awful the bandwidth is in the backwaters of your Kingdom, such as my nation.”

-- and a royalty fee for viewing our private lives, and as payment for any damages, grief and humiliation forced upon my people in the past. As soon as I have my entire family safe in my arms, those free-to-air channels will go live once again and you may continue watching our shenanigans and theatrics, for the sake of your amusement if nothing else.

Lan Zhan decided not to try any more of the food served on the table; his stomach felt queasy due to the conflicting information he was getting through his senses. “Mn. Agreed. I will make sure an ErNet sales representative will get in touch with you soon to discuss the rates and other contractual matters,” he drank his orange tea, and wondered distantly how to break the news to his subjects - that soon, people have to be taxed to pay for their nightly bedtime dreams. He could probably ask his chief accountants to think of creative ways to solve the problem.

A second finger went up, “In recognition of the harmonious relationship of our kinds, I will agree to send men to aid your cause, but only through politically and culturally acceptable manners that do not violate any basic universal rights and that fairly compensates our sacrifices.”

Lan Zhan heaved a sigh of relief, because he was worried that he’d lose an important source of endless cannon fodder, human replacement parts and cheap labour. The Kingdom had more than enough funds to buy entire worlds and their inhabitants, anyway. “Mn. That can be done. I will ask the administrators in the Heavenly Palace to contact your town councillors to discuss and formalize migrant working arrangements, draw up proper labour laws and establish committees and labour unions to facilitate the process,” he promised.

“Is there anything else?” he asked, and wiggled his toes beneath the table; he still couldn’t pluck himself off the cushion; somehow, the emperor was immobilized by his twin in the room.

“About A-Chen...” the master started, and raised three fingers.

Lan Zhan sighed and seemed to gain some confidence when it concerned the other person that he knew very well, “He will be teleported back here in an instant, once our meeting is concluded. As much as I regretted my actions, I cannot have a minor hanging around the palace halls while official functions are in progress.”

The master held up a hand, and Lan Zhan raised an eyebrow.

“There is no need to let him in here. I will visit Yiling myself, and see to A-Chen’s needs in a short while. While, I’m there, I could also meet his roommate; your uncle may be pacified if he hears a few apologetic, logical and meaningful words from my mouth, because I’m a certified psychologist, believe it or not,” the man offered as a friendly tribute to the emperor, although his verbose telepathic words said much more.

-- and because I know you will simply clam up from the ingrained discipline of never talking back to an elder, let alone one who constantly rambles and swears at you; which is something that I can overcome but not you, since I am your superior self - admit it, Wang Ji.

I will find a place to stay together with my family once I’ve taken A-Chen out of detention and rounded up the rest of my family. We will probably stay in the ‘Mounds if the rental is too expensive in the city. Be prepared that I will convince your uncle to relinquish his ill-gotten gains and properties to my name. Just so you know, that beautiful patch of land with misty mountains, clear blue lakes and lush valleys filled with blooming flowers, farms and orchards, looks eye catching enough for me. Consider this as a payback for the inconveniences that I have faced, and a lesson for you to be careful of what you dream of, and wish for, in the future.”

Lan Zhan didn’t want to come to a stalemate by refusing to give up a tiny percentage of his fortunes to his newfound, unnervingly cunning twin of sorts, so he agreed with a final “Mn”.

With no impasse or risks of stalled negotiations in sight, the master stood up, gestured with a respectful bow with folded hands at the front, and wished the emperor well, “I thank you for welcoming my people and I into your Kingdom, your highness. I am sure that my family, once I catch ‘em all, will have a memorable vacation in the Mortal Realm soon.”

Lan Zhan was about to let the superior twin leave the meeting room, when he caught a glimpse of sunlight filtering through some window panes; he remembered distinctly that he arrived in Heaven early in the day, and the shadows were beginning to slant a little - he hadn’t kept watch of the time due to his busy schedule, and he was briefly worried about the things that happened elsewhere besides Heaven.

“Do not worry, as long as I’m around,” the master gave a knowing look while maintaining a respectful bow. Lan Zhan wasn’t sure what he meant - but the master added anyway, “Because I know ... and I can .” There was a tone of conviction bordering egotism, and it made Lan Zhan a little uncomfortable.

The master discreetly teleported out of the room with a barely-felt fwip ! - a hallmark of elegant mastery of phase-shifting magic, unlike the crude and loud lightning and thunder and the annoyingly bright blinding flashes of light that the emperor or his spouse had to resort to.

Lan Zhan was left in a bit of a lurch after that last mysterious bit of the conversation; he had a feeling that the implications were beyond mere words, though he shouldn’t mull over them aimlessly. He sat by the table for a few more minutes to collect his thoughts after such an eventful encounter, and finished his tea - the effect of ever-flowing liquid ceased once the master left. He had to haul up his ass with much effort, because his legs needed time to recover from the powerful immobilization spell, and when he left the meeting room, he was seen limping away by alarmed guards; the gaudy purple plush cushion stubbornly stuck to his clothed buttocks and needed a team of servants perform a spectacular human tug-of-war to rip it off his gold-embroidered pants - only to find that the cushion glued itself to the back of the next pair of pants that the emperor chose. Palace wizards ascertained the nature of the spell - it is the Curse of the Wicked Cushion, and there was no cure for it until the effects wear off on its own.

The Jade Emperor, also Lord Buddha and God of Mercy, would have to go pantless for a while inside the confines of the Heavenly Palace, while being stalked by a terrifying, animated purple plush cushion that had been afflicted by the curse.

.

Excerpts from the day's primetime news from a certain channel in a certain universe, in a certain world:

According to the official press release from the Emperor's office, a delegation from a previously unidentified world arrived during the much celebrated bodhi tree-planting ceremony. That world is one of the countless colonies under the Kingdom's rule, headed by a Lan-kin (although no further information was made available as to which world, or colony, in particular). Royal astrologers declared that the visit was auspicious and coincided with fortuitous alignment of the stars and the birth of a new generation of blessed holy trees.

Several incidents were rumoured to happen during the time of the visit, such as individuals from that world - including an adult and two children, possibly more - had been smuggled along with a shipment of incubus troopers (whose source remain untraceable) that met an untimely accident, and those individuals went missing; that the delegation encountered some technical security issues (the nature of the issues remain unknown, as palace servants remained tight-lipped about the meeting); and that the delegation included not only the Lan head in question - said to be an eminent clone who could easily pass off as the original First Father -, but also a boy that resembled the Grand Patriarch's older brother for some inexplicable reason; the latter was mistakenly sent to Yiling's immigration centre, where it is believed that others from the world had also been held up in there for valid reasons.

Regardless of the lack of details, the meeting went ahead successfully and forged a new alliance between the Kingdom and the now-former colony. The Kingdom is delighted to have found that the colony had developed, evolved and matured in its world, in a very broad sense, into a fully-fledged species, civilization and culture that biologically, politically and economically differentiated itself from the rest of the Kingdom.

By the grace of the Grand Patriarch, the new species shall identify themselves as Dream-kin, a species that now holds equal status and rights as the other kins within the hierarchy of the Kingdom. In response to being welcomed into the folds of the great big family under the Kingdom's umbrella, the head of Dream-kin promised to step-up efforts to clear cases and known sensitivities concerning human trafficking from his world to the larger Kingdom, as well as establish a notable presence close to heart of the empire, which is the city of Yiling in the Mortal Realm.

On to the next news... medical professionals have raised their doubts on the handling of the latest addition to the mental rehabilitation facility in Yiling, who is reported to be an uncle of the Grand Patriarch, and is diagnosed as being in advanced stages of dementia and other mental illnesses. The man is awaiting trial for the unlawful ownership of several parcels of lands and high-profile collusions with...

(While the news was presented by a newscaster, a picture was shown depicting the Emperor shortly after the meeting with the new leader of Dream-kins. Although photographers and reporters were not able to catch sight of the fabled new brethren of the Kingdom, palace officials assured the mass media that the venerable man looked just like the Emperor anyway, since he is reported to be of Lan-kin. The Emperor was seen standing at the balcony of the palace as he waved to a crowd of his royal subjects and onlookers, thus assuring his people that everything went well. Strangely, some sharp-sighted observers commented on a jarring discovery in the pictures, considering that the balcony was made of pristine-white marble and granite stones - in every take, an ugly purple cushion was seen standing upright at the far corner of the balcony.

.

Lan Zhan was the husband whose wife with three kids tried to call, then left countless messages with desperate pleas for help that devolved into screen-long expletives and threats of getting divorced, and hours later - for the poor husband who had been caught in meetings after meetings at work - the said husband rushed to where the wife's last location was stated on his Weichat right before he switched off his phone aeons ago - because the wife had stopped calling back, did not respond to "where are you"s even after he switched his phone back on, and the entire situation turned out to be far, far worse than just a mere silent treatment that the wife usually dishes out when unfairly ignored by the terribly, terribly busy husband.

When Lan Zhan finally arrived at the outskirts of Caihong, he found few signs of struggles, still visible despite having been eroded by the elements of weather over time; however, there were no traces of the persons who left those clues - fossilized footprints and fireball craters in the hardened mud, scratches left on scarred tree barks, frayed, torn robes hanging on branches and underneath layers of sediment, scattered empty pouches and satchels recklessly discarded amongst the bushes, the odd shoe hidden between overgrown weeds, and so on. It was difficult to estimate how much time had passed since time in the Heavens moved differently from the Mortal Realm, and even more so within the confines of the space-time bubble around Gusu.

He called out Wei Ying's name a few times, only to hear rustling leaves and faint birdsongs in reply. He realized, after running aimlessly around orange-tinged woods, that the sun was dipping towards the horizon instead of being persistently stuck at mid-morning - which immediately told him that much had changed in Gusu since the last time he set foot on his ancestral homeland.

Like clockwork, lightning struck, thunder roared and in a blinding flash of light, the amber skies were swallowed by a new presence - a huge UFO not unlike the one that had taken a hundred Gusu Lan disciples not too long ago. Four figures emerged from the shadows in the forests beneath the floating flying transport. It didn't take long for him to recognize them - his Wei Yings.

"We've been waiting for you... for way too long! You've tested our patience again and again with your failures in dealing with matters of importance and urgency, your constant procrastination in getting things done, and those perpetual silly excuses about work! For goodness sake, abdicate your throne when there are conflicting priorities, forget about the eternally unending matters in Heaven, and focus on your family on Earth!

Your wives need you! Your children need you! You need to set yourself straight!” broad-shouldered, regal-looking, war general extraordinaire, and very masculine (and hairy, body pockmarked with battle scars) Wei da ge ’s voice boomed across the hills, and the man did not hesitate to launch a tirade of angry complaints at first sight. He did not mince his words either, and Lan Zhan actually cowered a bit in fright at the imposing figure that was an alternate version of his spouse.

Eighteen-year old Wei er ge was gentler in his approach, and tried to placate the older sibling, by rubbing soothing circles at the latter’s back. Still, he shot an accusing look at Lan Zhan, “Grand Patriarch, my da ge is right. We had to hold off many official duties to keep watch on this spot until your return. You are only one, but there are others around you who can pick up the slack in Heaven when you’re not around. You shouldn’t have to do everything on your own and sacrifice your family’s happiness.”

Something inside Lan Zhan cracked when he heard - and remembered - that there were others who rely on him, and yet he didn’t trust his feelings enough to reciprocate and share his burdens with those who were concerned. Guilt was written all over his face; perhaps logic dictated that as the head of the family, he could be a superhero and therefore he would run ahead and take matters into his own hands, alone - however, surely gut instincts would have, more than several times, told him to run away and seek help from others - a sound advice that had fallen on deaf ears too many times.

Fifteen-year old Wei san ge hopped excitedly, mowing through undergrowth and weeds at the same time with his energetic leaps, cried out from a short distance, “I’ve even created a virtual command centre while waiting for you, so that anyone of us can easily log in and view the latest status of everything that goes on in our Kingdom. See? Just install this special app in your holo-phone and you can pull up the news and available information not just from ErNet, but from the rest of your family with or without psychic barriers pulled up! You can issue decrees, orders, requests, anything and anytime! The key thing is - don't ever switch off your phone, just like what you did the last time to your spouse!" The teenager waved his modified and overpowered holo-phone, then hurriedly projected moving images out into the open, and ran animated demonstration videos for everyone to see how that app worked. He was very proud of his latest creation using 51st-century artificial intelligence technologies, and he made it specially for his beloved Grand Patriarch.

The youngest boy scurried from behind, a little late into the game, because his legs were the shortest. "Enn! Although I'm only nine years old and haven't finished grade school yet, I run the biggest distribution network in the whole Kingdom, and my gege s help to delegate the work equally among my own universes and the people of my extended family. So, the Kingdom's supply chain always runs smoothly and no one ever goes hungry. I learned early on that I can depend on my gege s to figure out some of my problems because I'm too young to know everything."

When all four Wei siblings stood in front of him in a beautiful hillside farmland scenery with a backdrop of a fiery setting sun, Wei didi cutely shoved his hands to the front, "Umm... I only have two hands, and I cannot do everything by myself with these," he wiggled his fingers, "... but, if I hold my brothers' hands too," and he did, each tiny arm grasping at a sibling's - until they form a kind of semi-circle of entwined hands, "... all of us can do so much more, together!" the boy cried out in a happy finale - Wei da ge reached for Lan Zhan's right hand, and the san ge ended up reaching for his left hand, with the remaining two Wei siblings in-between the formation. The circle was completed.

At that point, Lan Zhan had to hold back a sob, because he knew too well how that felt. He wasn't a walking dictionary or the Wei-kipedia of all ages

- he was truly, a simply mortal man blessed with too much, in a too short span of time. His breath left him in ragged, hoarse wheezes, when he wrestled with his newfound enlightenment of sorts and the bundle of complex emotions that came with it.

Still, the question remained - “Wei Ying... your Grand Matriarch... where is he?” Lan Zhan asked with a slightly quivering voice, as though he was afraid to hear the answer.

There were several fwip ! sounds, and ten shadows emerged. He was reluctant to admit it, but he recognized them in an instant because he’d shared bodies with them earlier - the ten Wei Yings that his spouse had left with him in the cottage, when the latter took the boys out to defeat a succubus queen. He recalled the many hours spent making sweet love to each of them - nine male and one female, nine human and one demon-incubus, aged from twelve to twenty-one - the details were blurred because he drowned and nearly died in the greatest ecstasy of the flesh at that time, but his feelings towards them did not lie - they were precious Wei Yings whom he had bedded multiple times, cuddled in the aftermaths, inseminated with enough servings to make their bellies bulge a little, even impregnated, for that one lucky deflowered female whom he’d fathered a child, twins, even triplets, inside that unforgettably sweet, sweet tight cavernous womb. (In actual fact, the males carried artificial uterus, so in theory, he’d planted many more babies than he had anticipated.)

Wei da ge waved his hand to signal everyone to sit down - they were going to have a family moment, so a picnic dinner was in order. Lan Zhan was left confused at a flurry of activity, of foods and beverages being conjured, of picnic mats laid out and torches lit up, of tents set up around him and a nice bonfire crackling heartily in the middle with a roast pheasant on the spit. Then, the da ge raised his hands like an unholy priest about to start a sermon, “These ten of our kins sacrificed a lot for the Great Matriarch during his hour of greatest need - they fought beside him while you were away, protecting him, bearing the brunt of hurt, and left with bandaged wounds, splints and crutches that took many months to recover - while you were being dolled up for pretty photoshoots and tree-planting ceremonies, and when you hosted hour-long meetings in Heaven that spanned weeks, months even years down here. The least you could do is to greet and thank them, Grand Patriarch.”

Guilt-ridden, Lan Zhan wanted to ask again about Wei Ying - his spouse -, without offending the rest. However, the moment he opened his mouth, someone shoved him down; he found himself sitting cross-legged on the floor - and that loathsome purple cushion zipped out of nowhere to appear beneath his rump, admittedly, to make his seat so much more comfortable than plain woven straw. The captivating twelve-year old female version of Wei Ying delightfully sat on his lap, hooked her arms around his neck, and she snuggled comfortably against her lover - and the father of the child in her belly (because natural pregnancy actually takes nine months, whilst the others who had been bred artificially had already given birth within days using awesome 51st century reproductive technologies). Lan Zhan froze and sweated at the gesture, partly because he didn't really know how to handle females who take their own initiatives - let alone heavily pregnant females -, and because he realized that at least more than half a year must have passed since then; but something didn't quite compute correctly inside his baffled mind. The rest of the Wei Yings surrounded him - he did not cringe when clawed fingers of the twenty-one year old incubus reached from behind in an embrace and rested loosely just above his navel -, and everyone wished the Grand Patriarch a ‘Welcome back’.

As the party of Wei Yings settled in for a mega-group hug, each lining up to give their Grand Patriarch a kiss on the cheeks - probably a Wei-kin's version of a One Big Happy Family - and started dishing out food, drinks and some chatter - Lan Zhan was treated like a harem master surrounded by his lovers, and he only had to open his mouth to be served his fill of grilled pheasant, braised pork, seasoned boiled fish, fried rice and noodles, roasted potatoes, vegetable and seafood fritters, salads and freshly cut fruits, and plenty of finger foods such as fried chicken nuggets, barbecued honey sausages and mini vegetarian spring rolls.

“Um... where is Wei--” a straw went into his mouth and he had to gulp down a mouthful of orange juice, and he was again busy chewing food that ten pairs of hands lovingly serviced him. It wasn’t long before he found himself naked - his clothes were stolen and the purple pillow naughtily moulded itself to give him the best lumbar support ever. Then, ten pairs of hands started to molest and stir his erogenous zones. His words were stuck in his throat, when some Wei Yings began to share candied snacks using kisses; inserted fingers into his mouth to caress his tongue; then those same saliva-coated fingers drifted downward to tweak and flick his nipples; still, more tongues and lips ghosted over his ticklish, paunchy abdomen, worshipping that prosperous-looking layer of belly fat that spasmed and fluttered in flattering squirms when nibbled by naughty Wei Yings; and as expected, he found himself spread-eagled on the floor with many Wei Yings clambering for space to engage with titillating play with their Patriarch’s defenceless body; at any time, at least four lips suckled and nursed his cock to full hardness, four sets of fingers played with his pubic hair and stroked his inner thighs, and four hands jiggled and kneaded his balls to coax sperm cells to wake up and perform their timeless duties.

Lan Zhan moaned loudly at the relentless assault from all directions, his want for the one and only spouse flew out of the window when nectary passion pooled in his loins and began to bubble and rise in spasmodic waves; his body flushed nine shades of reds, became covered with a sheen of sweat, and he was a mess of confused actions and needs both physically and sexually. He struggled to juggle ten Wei Yings that piled upon him; he tried to eat and swallow down food, but was brutally kissed with bruising lust-stricken madness - and those kisses peppered from head to toe until he was quite sure he’d been covered with lovebites; he grasped at the picnic mat for traction, but found himself drowning in a sea of flesh - everywhere he touched, he felt warm limbs, sliding heated skin and desirable hairy genitals skimmed across his view that he direly wanted to ravage, but alas, he was held back by the weight of ten lovely Wei Yings; he wanted to sit up for a breath of fresh air from a swarm of Wei Ying-scented huffs and puffs, but found himself playing a naughty game of sexual musical chairs when each Wei Ying took their turns to ride him once his member was steel-hard, twenty squelchy thrusts each - and the man hnngh'd when he was lovingly squeezed and milked by a variety of depth, speed, tightness, warmth and wetness; his penis tasted the flavours and textures of each loving rosebud as much as he wanted - and he stayed inside some longer than the rest, so that he could thrust and grind deeply to his utmost joy, relishing in the fact that he truly enjoys his Wei Yings from the inside-out - and one-two'd at least once for each Wei Ying that happily fucked themselves with his exceedingly excited meatstick.

His hips trembled as he edged around his climax again and again; each Wei Ying wiggling his hips sensuously as they tried their best to draw hot molten liquid pressure out of his lively penis and prized clenched balls with the strength of vacuum pumps; every Wei Ying endeavoured to pleasure their Patriarch, and those who waited patiently for their turns serviced him by massaging his limbs or whisper very dirty things into his ears before licking those reddened earlobes with evil delight, interspersed with tender coos and kisses; in return, Lan Zhan's sight was filled with plump glorious breasts and sparse bosoms, pale and very enticing hips, bobbing hairy penises and other hairy body parts that he knew belonged to the objects of his lust and affection, sometimes grinding ass cheeks that he reached out to pinch and caress, before spanking them and watched the fatty mounds jiggle amusingly; with an uncharacteristic drunken smile on his sexually-flushed face - he'd totally forgotten his mission for his spouse, and wanted nothing more than to drown deeper into his ocean of lust.

He lost control of his loins when the sole pregnant Wei Ying - who looked as stunning as the original spouse he'd married to, but much younger, underaged, nubile and fertile despite carrying a belly that looked too big for her thin and smaller body - gorgeous pregnant female Wei Ying took her chance to sit on his about-to-erupt cock and performed a set of heavenly Kegel's exercises - blessed with the sweetest undulations, massaging tightness, slick friction, fleshy folds, and lovely bumps his penis could fall in love and stay inside forever, especially when those mind-blowing motions were accompanied by dirty stories of fucking a pregnant pussy that belonged to his male spouse - technically speaking -, and he couldn't resist letting his very happy, extremely and excitedly twitching penis say 'hello' to his baby peeking from behind the cervix, nestled comfortably inside a bloated pillowy womb filled with its parents' love.

Naughty young teenager Wei Ying straddled the older man, and allowed him to stare at how his towering penis was lovingly sheathed into the perfect underaged wet tight glove, lots of juicy schlicky sounds with each slam of hips, hidden from view by the lovely, lovely baby bump that descended to rest upon his paunchy six-packs, and when his cockhead hit a bump at its tip, he nnnh'd while the sex-kitten started drawing circles, squares and stars with hearty grinds, skin slapping against one another, inviting the man's incredibly excited penis to be stroked and pulled in all directions by strong, perversely sexy pussy suction, to kiss the entrance of the bulging womb again and again - Lan Zhan one-two'd several times straight into the baby's warm, moist cradle when he couldn't hold back his excitement of wishing his child the good mornings and good nights he'd missed -, before the female Wei Ying squealed and lifted away her pelvis - Lan Zhan mourned the loss of drippy, sliding, baby-juice coated heat - until just the tip of his angry-purple dick remained trapped within the blossomed rosebud, and she resumed the delectable curvy, spiralling descent once again, and again, to repeat the cycle of lovemaking at its best. The man grunted continuously when he took his sweet time to plunder that exquisitely textured recently virginal tunnel, shaping the canal to his phallic desires with each glorious thrust, enjoyed engaging in repeated sexual intercourse with a female that was barely a third of his age, recklessly depositing virile globs of accidentally sputtered semen when he became too excited and too horny for his own good, whilst spending his time inside a youthfully elastic and tight pussy that felt too divine for words.

Soon, he crested his limit after being deliciously ridden for what seemed to be minutes or hours, his pleasure skyrocketed to unbelievable altitudes, and he howled incoherent hnnghs, nnnghs and nngaahhs, his accomplished sputtering babymaker painting thirty spurts of rich creamy seed inside the soul-crushingly tight, engorged tunnel of love, and he imagined some spilled into the baby's snug home; truly a very welcoming greeting by its father since the day it was conceived - and that pedophilic father was rewarded with a face full of plump, leaking breasts from the young teen, which he savoured with excited suckles and swallows, because he knew only his beloved Wei Ying could make such tasty distinctively mild-flavoured sweet milk meant for their baby - and that he was stealing some in broad daylight, and drank the mother's milk to his heart's content as his penis ejaculated again and again, magnificently, to flood the fertilized womb of the mother of his healthy, fat unborn child. He instinctively reached out to hungrily rub the ripe pregnant belly with one hand, praying that the baby would recognize the father - the horny groans, the pounding rhythm, the taste and smell of semen that should permeate its nine-month old cradle -, while his other hand continued to knead the twelve-year old's milk jugs, teasing the bulbous areolae to squirt more, more for the one who owned the body - the father of the baby.

As soon as the man completed his thirty-ejaculation circuit, and wanted to take a break and slumber away - because every last fibre of muscle in him had clenched, contracted, expelled the last volley, and now, wonderfully, dreamily relaxed -, it was time for the next Wei Ying's turn. At thirteen-years old, with doe-like eyes and expressions, an underaged and immature body that had started to develop some sexual characteristics, the boy clumsily but innocently masturbated in front of the Grand Patriarch and begged to be taken, because he wanted the man to cum very, very hard inside him, and he felt very hot, very itchy, very hungry for his master's 'happy milk', then seductively spread his buttohole to show how well-lubricated and prepared he was for this auspicious pedophilic fuck - Lan Zhan couldn't say 'no', and his penis never softened after the last eruption - it twitched, nodded, and jerked multiple times to say that yes, it wanted to taste s'more Wei Yings, please. Lan Zhan arched his back and was grateful for the purple cushion to hold his hips at the perfect angle of penetration, and proceeded to fuck the precocious tasty thirteen-year old boy from the bottom. He would continue to work diligently hard to sweetly ravage each Wei Ying's queueing up for their master-daddy's love, until only heaps of pleasantly tired bodies, unintelligible moans and grunts, heavy panting, quivering groins, and spasming penises (and one lucky semen-drenched pregnant pussy) lay haphazardly around him.

While the Grand Patriarch was totally absorbed in sowing his wildest seeds in each of his harem members, Wei da ge snorted and remarked crudely that the despite his obsession for just one individual - his spouse -, it didn't take much to turn him into a sex-crazed master of a mass orgy. "Lan men are such wild ravenous beasts when it comes to sex," he remarked as he took another greedy bite off a chicken drumstick, "You're a terrible example - you're easily tempted, you become snobbish and forget others who served you, you're selfish and want to hoard every single one of us for your pleasures. Whereas Wei-kin are more level-headed and cooperative to rally others to a common cause, to work together as a team, to bring you down to your senses, when needed."

"Oh, da ge , stop whining like a woman and be more useful!" Wei san ge chirped brazenly for a good reason - he held up his holo-phone and projected some highly condensed graphical information above Lan Zhan, though it was unclear if that man was able to pay any attention given the lust-hazed state that he was in, surrounded by at least ten individuals vying for a slice of the lovemaking pie. "Here, let me show you how things have fared since you were caught up with the events at the Heavenly Palace. Swipe here, tap on this, and walla - dashboards, charts, maps, visuals, tables and statistics you can always use, in any circumstances, right at your fingertips!"

Wei er ge was at the teenager's side, and clapped his hands, "Oh, you're so smart, san ge ! Let me have a look and try to summarize the updates for our Grand Patriarch, since he probably can't see much from where he is lying on the picnic mat... hmm... right now, we've conquered and colonized the whole of the Middle Kingdom except for the capital city of Chang'an.

Jiang Cheng's on his tenth catch, and two hundred disciples have so far teamed up very well in a slow, but steady progress to rid the Heavens of the remaining forty escaped incubi. The other fifty incubi are still at large, mostly at the opposite side of the globe where the Well from the vegetable gardens behind the Heavenly Palace led to. There's even a list of names and photos for each individual, how useful!" said the young adult who wasn't as bright as the rest of the Wei siblings. (No one knew that Uncle Wei wasn't in that list, since he didn't go through the transmutation process - ineffective red tape and bureaucracy be damned.) The er ge bit into a hot dog bun, and fed a chunk into Wei didi 's waiting mouth; the nine-year old was having a blast with a dinner party of his favourite foods, and his cheeks were stuffed to the point that he couldn't talk at all other than to make happy squealing noises like a piglet.

Some blurred pictures of the Gusu Lan master emerged, and images of newspaper clippings scrolled across their sight. "We read the news about the emergence of the new Dream-kin, and I admit, I wasn't too keen on following the news about them, since they looked like Lan-kin to me anyway. Our forces were a little skeptical at first, because we couldn't detect them with our scanners and machines, and they seem to walk through walls with ease. However, after monitoring closely for a period of time, we have decided that they pose no threat to us, since all they do is to sign up for menial work with the Kingdom, and linger around the Market Streets in Yiling looking for someone, or somewhere to stay," Wei da ge commented since he had firsthand information on what the new kids on the block were doing.

“I heard their leader is looking for some missing people, and he even travelled to the other side of the planet to do that. At least that was what one of my suppliers from that part of the world told me, when he delivered goods to my warehouses,” Wei didi finally had the chance to swallow and say something - before grabbing a handful of yummy fritters next.

Wei san ge scrolled down further to pick out some news that was closer to home for their Grand Patriarch, “Your uncle is still in rehab, but the prognosis has improved a lot since a mysterious visitor dropped by, stayed for a few days and disappeared without a trace. We were told that it was a Lan-kin, or maybe a Dream-kin. I guess it takes a Lan to heal another Lan, right? None of us dared to delve into the matter, because truthfully, we’re a bit scared of that crazy old man who throws plates and cutlery at every passing-by Wei-kin!”

Poor Lan Zhan was in the throes of his third orgasm in rapid succession, as the ten Wei Yings continued to pleasure the dying-reviving man, and mount and ride him with energetic glee. He croaked another time - “Wei... nnngh!... Wei Ying... Where is he... aahnn!... the three boys... Jing Yi... Si Zhui... Jin Ling... hhahhnn!” He started to push some Wei Yings away in a desperate bid for freedom from the exhilarating sexual slavery that his body knew too well, but failed spectacularly when the twenty-one year old incubus in his harem released pheromones to sedate the struggling man and brainwash his sexual meridians into docile submission. Lan Zhan roared in response to the sudden surge of lust and an explosion of sexual qi, that he flipped his third, maybe fourth lover onto the picnic mat - with the cushion still glued to his buttocks to provide a cover for any indecency - and started to fuck any Wei Yings in sight, missionary style.

Lan Zhan copulated very hard with another squealing teenage boy, ravaged the sweet young morsel trapped beneath him, but continued to murmur Wei Ying’s name, like chanting the most special two words in his vocabulary to keep the last thread of sanity in check, despite having his body burned up by sexual desires and arousal long ago. He nnngh'd loudly, signalling the fourth climax to short-circuit his nerves and logical thinking process; another countdown began in the form of waves of pleasurable penile convulses and contractions, of hips shaking uncontrollably before stilling for the inevitable launch, veins bulged, skin and muscle tightened, the perineum and the base of the cock began to tremble in anticipation of another thirty fertile shots into one Wei Ying's welcoming wide-open rosebud. Two Wei Yings crouched behind Lan Zhan, and began to pepper licks and sweet nibbles on his darkened, reddened swollen testicles, persuading the twin eggs to produce more seed for their brethren pinned to the ground with the almighty rapid-firing penis.

Wei da ge finally responded after much hesitation because he was bound by Rule Number Three, but not before chastising the man again. "You have four of us... ten of them... fourteen Wei Yings in total here with you, with at least one naturally-conceived child in the making with a handful more from your previous trysts, and yet you want another Wei Ying? You have two hundred boy-disciples who greet your portraits every morning, sing national anthems in your name, and work hard to rid your home of the pests in Heaven - and yet you call out for those particular three? Your greed and selfishness know no bounds!"

"... Wei Ying..." another groan from somewhere within an orgy of moving, pumping, squirming and shuddering flesh.

This time, it was Wei da ge who finally lost his patience and snapped back, "Alright! I'll tell you! But don't you dare regret this!" The other three Wei siblings politely put away their half-eaten food and knelt in silence.

Lan Zhan learned from post-mortem investigations that on that fateful mid-morning, the eight original Tian sisters were reported to have broken out of their home tucked within a paradise buried under multiple layers of universers, allegedly due to “juvenile reasons, such as not being able to tolerate strict, totalitarian discipline and abusive treatment from their parents”; shortly thereafter, Tian dalaoye and his wife lodged a police report about their missing children.

The scheduled showdown between Wei Ying and the three boys with the local succubus queen of Caihong Town never occurred; because the Tian sisters found their way there first, for unknown reasons, whether by coincidence or by intention. Consequently, Wei Ying and the boys had a rough time because logically, there was no way they could survive the onslaught of the awesome powers of billions-year old former goddesses. There was no recorded footage, since the Tian sisters overridden the Kingdom’s surveillance systems and blocked all feeds. Ten clones of Wei Ying rushed to the scene to defend their First Father, but they were badly battered and wounded, and had to activate emergency escape procedures to teleport out literally with tails between their legs - however, they lived to tell the short tale of their encounter, and provided a rather patchy account of what happened.

During the battle, the space-warp bubble around Cai district popped due to the tremendous magical firepower wielded by both sides. Immediately, the Kingdom’s forces moved in to salvage the situation - however, they were too late. The Tian sisters left while cackling like witches and even took down the space-time bubble that encased Gusu because it wasn’t needed anymore; they had achieved their goal of robbing Lan Zhan’s precious family members - perhaps as revenge for losing their pride, power and wealth as gods in the past.

“... What has been lost? What happened?” Lan Zhan asked in alarm, having barely sexually conquered and enjoyed a meal made of ten Wei Yings from his harem, who now lay boneless on the picnic mat, with seed trickling between their legs and staining the ground; all lovely Wei Yings were smiling, satisfied and snoring, fast asleep. He began to put on his robes and adjusted his appearance, though he couldn’t fit his pants due to the stubborn clinging cushion, so he had to remain pantless.

All four Wei siblings quietened down and stared at their Grand Patriarch; Lan Zhan looked every bit ravished and violated - his hairpiece was out of place, his skin glowed from drying sweat, his cheeks were rosy, his spirits were invigorated, he had enjoyed a sumptuous bonanza buffet of sorts, sporting a full rotund belly at the top and emptied ballsacks lower down covered by crusted cum and sexual juices.

“Wei Ying,” the increasingly distressed Grand Patriarch did not define which, in particular, “Tell me.”

.

As the story goes: Wei Ying was pinned down by eight Tian former-goddess sisters, had his golden core painfully gouged out, his magical powers stripped, his meridians torn apart, and his tendons and ligaments broken - a cruel death sentence for any cultivator. Without any qi circulating in his body, the Kingdom could not recognize his identity and deemed him to be an outsider; even his Qishan Lan robes, pouch, satchel and other standard issue equipment consciously flew away to avoid him. Thus, the man lost everything he had in connection to the Qishan Lan and his family members in the sect.

The three boys suffered critical injuries and were left with debilitating effects from god-tiered magical attacks and curses. Their belongings were stolen and destroyed, amongst many other losses - including losing their virginities to those crazed females in more ways than one; they were abused and traumatized by the terrible Tians until they shrivelled up, curled up, wailed in insanity, became detached from the real world, as lifeless as broken toys, unresponsive and tormented by recurring nightmares. Emotionally and spiritually scarred, the boys became depressed, sometimes suicidal, and were bedridden for weeks.

“We took them to the Cloud Recesses where we hoped the calming and safe environment would heal them in time, but there is only so much we can do for outsiders. Our family rules forbid us to intervene in matters beyond the Kingdom, especially for First Father Wei. Ernie and Ni-er, as minors, aren’t too affected by the rules, so they hung around to keep them company. That’s why, Grand Patriarch, you need to start looking elsewhere... look at your new harem... look at us and your true people - the subjects of your wonderful Kingdom -, because there is so much more waiting for you within the Kingdom than whatever that remains in the Cloud Recesses,” Wei er ge pleaded to their Patriarch.

“If you want a Wei Ying, there are so many here to choose from! If you want more boys, there are many species, many individuals, many disciples, available within your grasp - why go for broken ones when there are plenty of good specimens serving you, at your beck and call?” hard-headed Wei da ge chimed in with his brand of questionable anger and calculative logic.

“Grand Patriarch, please, all of us missed you and want your attention too. Between your work and family, which is more important? Between fourteen and so many more Wei Yings on this side, and that one over there, why choose the lesser of the two?” innocent Wei didi whined and inched closer to Lan Zhan on his knees.

“Frankly speaking, First Father Wei’s ratings have nosedived ever since he logged out of ErNet permanently. Nobody in the Kingdom really cares about his disappearance, because we - your wives - and all the brilliant and amazing Wei-kin are still around to make sure that life goes on as usual. So please, Patriarch, return with us to Yiling and let’s have a reunion party filled with good food, good company and lots of celebrations!” Wei san ge weaved several screens from his holo-phone into everyone’s view to prove his points - official polls, company press releases, government gazettes, WeiTube feeds, snapshots of newspapers, videoclips of interviews and so on - no one bothered to mention First Father Wei or the Grand Matriarch in recent times.

Lan Zhan tightened his hands into fists and stood up anyway - pantless be damned - and he was barely holding back his seething anger.

“No. It must be Wei Ying, and no one else. And I will never abandon Jing Yi, Si Zhui and Jin Ling.”

Notes for the Chapter:

Starting a new arc, unbelievable! :-D

So we have a new species (plus a butt-blocking cushion), we have a great new dilemma rocking the core of Lan Zhan, poor Wei Ying lost everything, the boys are broken... and we have a cliffhanger!

It took quite an effort to push this out, because of various reasons... not gonna lie, work, real life, family, the improving situation with the pandemic and all that stuff has taken me further and further away from the fandom. I'm starting a new job soon, and I want to have a clean slate in my outlook in life, post-CQL / The Untamed / MDZS, and leave all the stuff behind... it's time to move on. I plan to stop trawling websites or check regularly in social media and forums for fan stuff, so that I can clear my mind and get it out of the gutter :-)

So I'm putting this on Hiatus, and if I get some inspiration, I might come back to put in more chapters. So this fic will be left in a 'Completed' state, since this is where it may end anyway. Thanks for staying with Wangxian so far, and may the couple have their Happy Ever (Everyday) Afters!!!

Please leave comments in the Comments Box - they help to feed the muse :-)

Chapter 126

Wei Wuxian has always been, will always be, a misbehaving gremlin wherever he goes. Even when supposedly teetering at brink of death, he would brazenly stick out his tongue in front of the guards serving the Lord of Hell, shamelessly wiggle his ass, and spank his own buttocks for a good measure (an extremely rude display, at least to the Underworld's cultural norms and standards) to irk the seething foes, and make a dash for freedom. Although such escapades are recorded in the annals of the Book of Judgement, however these are mere passing mentions of unnamed individuals demonstrating detestful behaviour, which are frowned upon by societies dominated by Lan-kin - now including the orderly Underworld -; thus, the cases are quickly labelled as such, categorized as juvenile in nature and irrelevant in impact, warranted absolutely no attention from the higher-ups, and swept under the carpet to be forgotten - just as how one can sweep the courtyard with a straw broom, and whilst no one is looking, push the dirt and bits of trash into the bushes lining the sides, and be done with it - without the culprit ever being caught and the crime would never see the light of day (which is technically impossible, since day does not exist in the eternal nightlife that defines the Underworld).

Wei Ying refused to follow the long lines of human spirits who queued along narrow, windy paths that passed through ten vast ancient stonewalled complexes, connected to the dark-misted Mountains of Final Judgement and the Cliffs of Mysterious Bottomless Depths - he had been there, done that, two to three decades ago, but couldn't stomach standing still in the same spot for long periods of time while waiting for the next person to jump off to whatever reincarnation that had been preordained. So, he ran away when the two perennial guards, the frightening Mister Ox-Head and Mister Horse-Face, who patrolled the area to make sure people shuffled along a bright white line painted on the path - in which Wei Ying refused to toe that stupid-looking line, because walking on white lines is simply too dull and too, well, stupid, for the lack of a better word in his vocabulary - he ran as far as he could when he pretended to trip over a rock, and was called out by those two observant guards.

The spirit of Wei Ying wore only a plain white linen robe that is usually draped on the deceased during funeral rites, and he really hated that garment - partly because it was scratchy to his skin, itchy to the touch, smelled like old hay, and looked too clean, too plain, and too white for his tastes. It is the standard basic attire for spirits whose bodies have yet to expire, because the Underworld society abhors having the dead to emerge into their world without clothing; once the body dies, and especially after the funeral rites are performed (which includes lots of open-air burning according to traditional Middle Kingdom rituals for the dead), the spirit receives its material wealth incinerated from the land of the living which usually includes nice garments his relatives would like him to wear in the afterlife, stuffed to the brim with valuable joss paper and hell money in the pockets and accompanying treasure chests, sometimes delivered with paper servants, houses, Weiphones and luxury cars too. The dead are blessed with memory-wiping spells by the Underworld officials (which are paid in part by hell money burned and delivered by the deceased's relatives; a form of bribe, which is common during that day and age), so that they can sever all lingering attachments to the land of the living, forget their loved ones and unresolved miseries. These lucky ones are allowed to enjoy their lavish afterlife fortunes in a relatively stress-free, pleasant environment made by the Underworld for them (again, already paid in advance in hell's currency in enormous denominations), without any disturbance from the Underworld officials (bribes, bribes, bribes), for a predetermined time as written in the Book of Judgement, before being picked up one fine night after a particularly enjoyable drunken session in an unnamed restaurant or pub, and quietly sent to the queues for reincarnation.

For those who died without a funeral or without being attended to by their relatives - such as getting murdered and then buried without a trace - they become 'lost spirits' or wanderers, clad in the bloodied clothes and are with whatever little belongings they had on their body upon death, and are simply sent straight to the queues to avoid being a nuisance to the Underworld society (also, because there is no illegal profit to be earned from such vagrants, so the less work and involvement needed by the Underworld officials, the better). Such lost spirits, who retain their personalities and some memories that still evoke powerful emotions (alas, there is no memory-wiping spell, and no modern-day comforts for these poor souls), never received any closures to their pains and regrets in life, eventually accumulate envy, dissatisfaction, hurt, hatred and vengeful feelings at themselves and their better-off comrades; if not reincarnated in time, they will devolve into heinous 'hungry ghosts' that roam the plains of the Underworld, sometimes seep into the land of the living, being very violent in nature, and cause various injury, curses, sickness, and troubles to everyone. Thus, the Underworld made sure to scan every new arrival and route the individuals to the respective afterlives as efficiently as possible - in Wei Ying's case, being a poor spirit with nary a piece of hell bank notes on him, nor any respectable garments on his body, he was deemed equivalent to a 'lost spirit' and was immediately sheperded into the queues.

Wei Ying wanted to peel off the smelly linen robe and streak across hills and plains in a world that was as monotonous as a moonless night, as still as a sterile library in Gusu, and as uninteresting as cobwebs, dried corpses, dirty skeletal remains that litter the ground and the chittering creepy crawlies that wriggle underneath such distasteful decor in the Underworld. He would, actually, but decided to shelve the idea because his garments were the only proof he was still alive somewhere else, and that it wasn't his time yet to take the final bow, before cartwheeling, spinning and flipping spectacularly in an acrobatic act to take the leap of faith off the Cliffs as his swansong.

The man, in his spiritual form, ran in the opposite direction of the long, windy queues, and saw firsthand how others who had met their finales and ended up in this horrible world look like; they were mostly faded spirits with listless expressions, some crying softly with regret in their teary eyes, while others looking hesitant and reluctant to leave their loved ones permanently; they wore an assortment of clothes that reflected their dressed state at the time of death and in the short, but well-enjoyed afterlife. At some points in the queues, there were quite a number of those garbed with greyed and torn Gusu Tian robes, and Wei Ying had to shake his head helplessly - those poor souls did not receive a proper funeral after death, and had to line up with their dirtied, frayed clothes; there were men with ruptured lower abdomens and pelvises with yawning bloodied holes in what used to be their groins, women with sagging breasts, punctured bellies with ripped umbilical cords and severed blood vessels still dripping, hanging lifelessly out of the blood-soaked cavities, and unsightly distended birth canals; then there were also children who looked unusually bony, thin and malnourished, and in particular, little boys with gaping black holes in their private parts too. Wei Ying silently cursed the Tians even in this afterlife.

“Come back here! You’ve checked-in your entry and need to complete the procedure, through the Ten Courts to test your virtues and your character, then up the Mountains to be judged, and finally jump off the Cliff just like everyone else! There’s no other way, you cheeky rascal!” the gigantic, twelve-feet tall Mister Ox-Head bellowed out with moos. Each footstep pounded the ground and shook the earth due to its hefty weight; Wei Ying could imagine what might happen if the demi-god caught him and pinned him down on his back.

“Be a good boy and let us escort you to your afterlife and your next life! You can’t run away from your destiny! You need to reincarnate just like the other spirits who have passed on!” the slimmer but equally humongous Mister Horse-Face neighed and trotted alarmingly close behind; this particular demi-god is blessed with the features of a fleet-footed equine, and could outrun Wei Ying if it wanted to - however, it is bound by a Qishan Lan family rule of not to run around recklessly, including hallways and the outdoors - for the unreasonable fear of slipping on banana peels -, thus the two demi-god beasts could only walk briskly to try and make a grab for the tiny fleeing human spirit. The man easily dodged their greedy clawed hands and skipped two steps ahead when things got hairy and too close for comfort.

Wei Ying shouted at the top of his lungs as he ran past the last few persons in line of spirits that obediently queued up, near the foot of the hills where the windy path began - and thought he caught a glimpse of someone familiar - before turning his attention back to running for his dear departed life, “Don’t you know who I am? Why do you chase me with such fervour? I’ve been here several times during which I’ve met the two of you - aren’t we, well, acquaintances? Stop charging at me like a bull or a stallion in heat, it’s scary!” He squealed like a pig being sent to slaughter, and his high-pitched panicky voice did not go unnoticed - several spirits turned around to see what was causing the commotion, which slowed the entire queue - other lesser guards started barking out orders and poking pitchforks at the busybodies - which caused some individuals to tumble out of their positions or worse, hopped out of line to get a better look out of curiosity - and caused even more uproar than ever before, to the annoyance of the Underworld officials.

“No, we don’t know who you are! You’re a peasant with no special status, strengths, abilities or magical powers... that’s why you’re in this part of the Underworld, the lowest-rated economy class for departures for the commoner! Our databases do not lie, and there is nothing extraordinary about you! You’re not even a cultivator or a man granted with special blessings from your society or the gods that govern your petty life, so get your dead ass back here and get back in line!” Mister Ox-Head roared terrifyingly as they approached some dim cityscape - there were some lights and buildings up ahead.

There was no time to digest the revelation, although he had some ideas why he was considered a nobody; Wei Ying sped towards civilization in the hopes of shaking off the guards. “No! I won’t hand my ass to you! That’s beastiality, and I don't like to have sex with smelly farm animals like you! And I'm not dead yet either!" he retorted with a mocking tone. The last point was logically correct, as far as his knowledge of the dead goes - he surmised that his real body was hanging by a thread and was about to expire, so he was technically in a limbo of sorts - he wasn't dead yet, and the Underworld guards were adamant to keep things simple by putting him into a long queue that takes some time to clear; so that when he really dies - as a plain commoner with nothing to shout about -, it would save everyone the logistical efforts to locate and haul his ass up the Mountains and off the Cliffs. It wasn't fair at all, but life was never really fair to him anyway.

"Blasphemy! Nonsense! Liar!" Mister Horse-Face screeched at the horrid thought of bestial Underworld demi-gods fornicating with tiny human spirits, "You're about to die anyway, so be a good non-Kingdom citizen mortal and spare everyone the trouble of hunting you down when it's time for you to reincarnate! Come back here, you impudent fool!"

The bizarre chase that started from the foot of the hills eventually weaved its way into the city slums of the Underworld, where Wei Ying nimbly squeezed between tightly packed crowds of typical citizens of that realm - zombies, walking corpses, inhuman spirits, ghosts, vampires and so on - and ducked into alleys and like a street rat, where he recognized some dingy-looking short-cuts, pipelines, vent holes, back entrances of buildings, and twisting metal stairways that led into the sewers - he'd been in this realm many times before, unbeknownst to his pursuers, because he finally understood why.

.

It was a tale that is all too common in the streets of vibrant cities whose lights in the night tend to outshine patches of dark littered alleys, behind the dumpsters at the fringes of markets and posh residential areas, and beneath dirty, moss-covered bridges where the forgotten and the underprivileged try to survive through poverty, starvation and disease. During the times of war and unrest, and when epidemics and famine struck, the very old and the very young were the first to find themselves out in the streets without family, food and money.

Little Wei Ying was no exception, because he was just like any unfortunate child at that time, when he lost his parents at a very young age and was left to fend for himself for a few years before someone finally picked him up. During those turbulent years - most of which he would not remember because he was often weak and feverish from cold, sickness or hunger - he would find himself dangling precariously between life and death whether while sleeping in a cardboard box on a cold wintry day, or when he couldn't find enough to eat for days and was left buried under the snow when no one would offer the orphaned child a place to shelter.

There's always a first, and it is rarely a pleasant experience - Wei Ying had been there, done that too. He made multiple visits to the slums of the Underworld, because his worthless life and status condemned his spirit to remain in the poorest parts of the city while officials busied themselves with more important things to do, such as delivering the verdict on recently-deceased adults who had accumulated a substantial amounts of karma and deeds - both good and bad - during their lives, escorting rich old men who died and were blessed with great afterlife fortunes offered by their living relatives, or guiding the spirits of celebrated holy monks to a higher state of existence, and showing the way to the deepest levels of Hell for bandits, murderers, rapists and cheats. Perhaps luck always shone upon him, because by the time the officials actually got to his case, the boy was nowhere to be found; he never followed the bright white line on the path at the foot of the hills, he never wanted to remain quiet and queue up, and he was always lured by the boisterous sounds and liveliness - to some extent - of the nightlife in the slums. The officials were easily bribed by others to take care of more important human spirits than one unruly, undisciplined street brat, so Wei Ying was left to wander on his own, spend some days and weeks making new friends, and making a living in the dreadful part of the city, before something jolted his real body back to life in the Mortal Realm - a bucket of cold water poured over him to get the dirty boy off someone's doorsteps, a dog's bark from afar, or rarely, a good Samaritan who carried him to a clinic for the poor -, and he was rudely spirited away back to the land of the living.

Thus, little Wei Ying lived part of his early childhood in the slums of the Underworld and surprisingly, he liked it - despite not having sunrise and sunsets, and that the air was always stale, he never had to suffer the physical pains, the hunger pangs, and the shivers during cold wintry days. For a child at such a young, tender and innocent age, having not received proper education as a human being, having not learnt the difference between life and death, of good versus evil - it was always a happy occasion when he suffered the most during his life - because he would return to the Underworld slums and live in relative comfort and abundance of not lacking and suffering. (One would argue that the image of an orphan left in the streets, dressed in rags too thin to protect him from the weather elements, happily playing with straw dolls and eating fruit peels near dumpsters, is a heart-breaking one; however, if one would actually ask little Wei Ying, the answer may have been different.)

The only thing that little Wei Ying didn't like about his back-and-forth living arrangement, was that every time he returned to the land of the living, he would forget a lot of his experiences from the Underworld. It didn't help that the spirits, whether lost or not, that he befriended would have been sent off for reincarnation by the next time he returned, and the locals didn't really have much brain capacity (or any brains at all) to remember his name - so it was always a fresh start whenever he found himself lying on the dirty muddy streets of the dank Underground slums. It was an annoying trade-off, but for the child who had nothing else to his name until the day he was snared by a piece of juicy melon and adopted by Jiang Fengmian, not remembering some things was better than not having lived the life he was given at birth, after all.

That was nearly three decades ago; times have changed since then - Wei Ying grew up to be a fearless and reckless young man who dared to defy all odds, and had inappropriate relationships with the Dark Arts because he was instinctively drawn to such terrible taboo subjects without understanding why; memories his forgotten childhood never really surfaced at the right time, but the mysterious fascination on all things dark, corrupted, deathly, hellish and unnatural, was always there. Grand events transpired during his teenage years, in which he stopped visiting the Underworld and truly enjoyed what life really was - until his untimely death after the fall from the edge of the Nightless City. That resulted in an unwanted admittance to the Underworld, but one that was markedly more depressing, violent, marred with Darkness and Corruption that left his spirit in tatters until he curled up in a dark hole somewhere in the outskirts of the ever-night realm and refused to come out of hiding, until a decade and a half later.

Modern-age lifestyles and conveniences came knocking on the doors of the realm only recently, and everything was upgraded to 51st-century living standards, which was then torn down in a scorching reboot, and everything was rebuilt from scratch to mimic what had been lost whilst preserving the rich, unique heritage and culture of a world as old as the Mortal Realm, and whose citizens are predominantly occupied with matters of the dead, the undead, the inhuman, and the life-death-rebirth cycles that now serve the Kingdom's cause. Hence, to Wei Ying, the Underworld looked quite familiar although he couldn't really pinpoint why, with an eclectic mix of Middle Kingdom-esque brick, tile-and-mortar architecture, oriental and dragon-phoenix-bunny motifs, and signs of modern-day comforts, such as electrical street lights, internet connection, neon signages and the odd mechanical public maintenance services robot mowing curbside lawns and sweeping the roads like good ol' Dustless Broom units.

Another interesting point of note, is that the slums are segregated from the rest of the Underworld with few crossings in-between especially since the Lan-kin took over the helm to run the realm. The officials, including dignitaries from other realms of the Kingdom - which wouldn't preclude the Grand Patriarch himself - had mostly kept to the nicer parts of the city, including the grand, luxurious fortress of the Lord of Hell, the well-maintained buildings, shopping malls, office towers, boulevards and highways - including their own Mountain and Cliff meant for spirits of greater ranks and statuses. It is said that the Grand Patriarch has not once set foot into the slums, and therefore had not seen what the slumside Mountain and Cliff looked like, let alone its large, but mostly empty, dilapidated set of Ten Courts.

Due to the recent seismic re-alignment of the composition of the population of the Mortal Realm, all remaining humans were considered as outsiders, that is, non-citizen of the Kingdom - therefore could only afford a reincarnation through the slum-side of the Underworld - that is, a one-way ticket to be reborn as cheap but valuable commodity for the Kingdom, such as a piece of furniture carved from treewood, a block of concrete in someone's garden wall, a vegetable plant, a tuft of weed or grass, or at best, as a piece of twisty crystal that would brilliantly be sacrificed as fuel for daily household use. Citizens of the Kingdom who had populated the Middle Kingdom and died recently, would be shuttled through express lanes in the nicer parts of the Underworld city, and be quickly reincarnated as themselves again, or to someone else of equal power and stature, sometimes more, sometimes less, depending on what has been judged upon them.

.

Wei Ying learned that his face was no longer recognized by the citizens of the Kingdom in the Underworld; here, looks don't matter anyway, because databases, qi signature, and ErNet account information are now some of the universally-accepted ways to identify oneself. He sat behind a trash bin by the curb after the exhausting wild goose chase by the two guards and succeeded to shake them off, and engaged in his favourite pastime - people-watching. He counted more individuals with terribly disfigured faces or worse, without heads, than he could with his hands and toes in a short span of time - which made sense of why looks were irrelevant in the 51st-century Kingdom.

In the slums, people walked about hurriedly to conduct their businesses, whether running errands, getting a quick take-out at a small eatery, or going for a quick fix at an illegal joint hidden inside someone's store - he knew the physical signs of those who take illegal drugs, brown vials or not, or smoke illicit substances. There were few individuals who were lost spirits like he - those who escaped the queues from the foot of the hills but ended up on the streets, or those who have passed on due to unforeseen circumstances and therefore not bequeathed any money in the afterlife, doomed to live a tormented existence and to turn into feral hungry ghosts if their fates did not change soon. Residents feared for their safety from such violent transformations and sometimes, species-selective gang violence that usually wreaked havoc between neighbourhood blocks - because both sides do not have the capacity nor courtesy for diplomacy (vampires versus werebeasts is one such example) -, and following that, the local white-clothed police would arrive and brutalized everyone in sight - including innocent bystanders - and wipe them out of existence with anti-matter guns; apparently, slum-side locals and lost spirits are of little worth to the Kingdom, after all.

The sounds of hunting horns and trumpets - equivalents of police sirens of the 21st century - echoed throughout the cityscape, and that filled Wei Ying with enough unease to force him to slink back into the shadows when he had gotten his bearings.

He fiddled with some talismans stuck on his clothes, and learned from the mythical writings that they were intended to protect him from being whisked away like a dried leaf blown by the wind; a vengeful spirit or a decomposing zombie may pass by and accidentally knock into him, thus tearing the delicate membrane of his spirit, or shove his consciousness out of his body, which would cause him exhaust the paltry amount of living energy he has left inside him, and he would cease to exist within seconds. He was like a raw egg without its shell, figuratively speaking. In addition, by encasing his body in the enchanted but awfully plain-looking funeral robes, his spirit would not dissipate into nothingness from extended exposure to the ill effects and malaise caused by breathing the stagnant and toxic Underworld air - thus, the more reasons why he needed to keep this garment on despite looking absolutely out of place in the slums.

Wei Ying considered himself as a fragile lost spirit - who could be annihilated with a single blow or two from a more powerful creature -, so he made the wise decision to stick to well-lit back alleys, away from the crowds but not too close to danger. It was easy to lose the two guards, but he wasn't quite sure what to do next. He looked up to a lightless, starless cavernous ceiling with a reluctant sigh; he acquiesced to whatever cruel Fate had given to him, because he already knew the state of his body in the Mortal Realm - or what remained of it, with its missing golden core, qi meridians, physical musculature and worse of all, his identity as a deserving, even venerable citizen of the Kingdom - probably being stomped on by multiple bullying Tian sisters and squashed by their deadly high heels somewhere close to Caihong - and that he could either choose to give up that broken Mortal body to become a pitiful, bitter and resentful hungry ghost and seek permanent residence in the Underworld as an undocumented outcast of society, or, he could try to find a way back to the Mortal Realm with the risk of immediate death due to the highly deteriorated condition of his body, and therefore deportation, back to the Underworld's daunting Cliff with the two beastly guards this time ready with handcuffs - he really, really didn't want to end up reincarnating as an inanimate object or someone's expensive fuel for the kitchen stove, really. At the same time, the thought of leaving his husband - his source of comfort, love, kindness, mercy, compassion and everything nice in his world - would shatter his sanity and rip out whatever feelings and humanity that was left in him.

With so many conflicting thoughts and faced with such grim prospects, anyone would crumble in an instant, but not Wei Ying - his spirits remained resilient, at least for the moment, despite being physically as brittle as a piece of rice paper. He couldn't dwell too long on mulling over his next steps or spiral his thoughts in indecision - he had to walk around, go somewhere, get some fresh air (technically none), clear his mind, see new possibilities where there really aren't any. He had nothing but his gift of gab and his street-savvy skills from his younger days; so, armed with these two tools of his trade, he went off in search of something useful.

.

Wei Ying started out at the bottom rung of the society in the slums, the lowest of the low, with no magic, supernatural abilities or even a coin in his purse; he began by sweet-talking fellow lost spirits, beggars and some undead street vendors to find his way around. He helped out a few individuals, especially those who said that they'd "probably seen him somewhere before" and thus, were easier to be acquainted with; also, because maybe he did share a past or a kind of loose kinship with certain long-time residents of the slums that he'd forgotten during his childhood days, when he frequently visited the Underworld poor and cheered people up with his boyish charms, cheerful laughter and adorable smiles. However, deep down, he also knew that friendships never lasted long in the Underworld slums - everyone was out to get the other, climb atop one another, for a bigger slice of the cake, a bit more money, to step on others like scums in the sprawling and complex hierarchy of slum-life.

He knocked on people's doors, begged for menial jobs such as helping out with household chores, carried baskets of produce for a granny to the market, lifted sacks of rice for a shrewd grocery store owner, cut the grass and trim the hedges on someone's garden, ferried buckets of human wastes as fertilizer for someone's farm, foraged for edibles at that farm when the owner wasn't looking, and scavenged useful things from other people's trash bins, then cleaned, crafted and re-purposed them to sellable quality, and peddled them on the streets - he'd done it before in Yiling as an enthusiastic and very flexible job seeker, doing all sorts of odd jobs to earn a bit of living. Still, it was back-breaking work and he was shoo'd away more often than the number of times he bagged a job, because people generally frowned upon those wearing linen funeral robes which spelled bad luck and were treated as pests, although his predicament improved a bit when he found an old dark hoodie discarded in a pile of rags outside a closed boutique.

Food wasn't a concern, since one doesn't go hungry in the Underworld; however, having a candy or two, or a rare jar of cheap wine, did wonders to his spirits and to replenish his dwindling energy. Accommodation in the form of sleeping under bridges or in someone's backyard was fine too, since he had a long history with such practices, as long as he can talk his way out if he bumped into nasty homeowners and patrolling policemen who didn't mind closing one eye in exchange for a cigarette. He admired his first few pieces of well-earned hell bank notes - his husband's portrait appeared on the back (as the Jade Emperor), along with the Lord of Hell and other councillors and governors of the Underworld. He dreamed of the husband whom he missed so dearly every time he slept, and was tormented by the anguish of probably, in all likelihood, that he'd never see his beloved darling again - but always reined himself before became a ball of broken hearts, heaves and pitiful sobs, because he knew that the more he thought about what he might have lost, the more he wished he didn't lose, the higher he got his hopes up that he could probably not lose, and he'd be setting himself up for a lifetime of remorse, sorrow and disappointment - so he simply slept with at a piece of hell bank note (with the husband's portrait) as his pillow of sorts, and told himself that that was enough.

Time passed, perhaps hours, days or weeks, but there was no sun nor moon to keep track of a calendar, if there was ever one; similar to the case of Heaven, the Underworld moved with a different pace of time passage from the Mortal Realm. He was surprised that he remained in his increasingly grimy, unwashed linen robes beneath the brown-grey sweatshirt - a sign that he hadn't expired, otherwise he would've found himself garbed with bloodied clothes pockmarked with punctures made by Tian-branded stilettos; at least that was how he imagined his end to be - so perhaps he had been rescued, or magically put into stasis so that his body wouldn't disintegrate into ruin, and he prayed that his husband has a hand in giving him an extension to his life support back in the Mortal Realm.

However, this limbo of existence could not last long, as Wei Ying knew that time was ticking, his mortal body has a limited shelf life without its spirit no matter what marvellous magic or science was applied in the world above, and his spirit form was slowly decaying - a scratch here due to cuts from thorny bushes, a lesion there from the abrasive material of his clothes, a slash on the arm when someone tried to rob him in the market because his frail, ghostly appearance made him such an attractive target, another bandage needed on the legs when he was kicked and roughed up by small gangs to pay random protection fees, a sprain on his bruised lower back when he slipped on a rain puddle and fell on his rump; every injury added up, causing precious life energy to leak out, oozing away as he became increasingly fatigued, disoriented and weak.

"One... energy drink, please," Wei Ying grunted tiredly as he leaned heavily against the countertop of a neighbourhood clinic. He held out three crumpled pieces of bank notes he'd hidden inside his shoes - his meagre savings after being harassed by a corrupted policeman, who taunted him for his impoverished appearance and forcibly snatched the daily earnings from his money pouch when he had no cigarette to offer. The nurse refused politely, “Mister, you can’t keep taking those energy drinks; they don’t heal your wounds or stop your life energy from bleeding away, and they last only for a few hours each. You need to see our doctor and get proper treatment,” and she carried the basket of canned drinks away, out of reach of a distressed Wei Ying.

“Please, gu niang , just one... I only have this much, and I cannot afford to see the doctor... I promise,” he panted a little from the exertion of talking this much when in such a feeble state, “... I promise, I’ll rest for the rest of the day, and I’ll feel better tomorrow. Really... so please, just one drink...” and he coughed like a sick man. His complexion was pale and unhealthy, with dark circles beneath his eyes and his fingernails and lips were a little blue. The nurse continued to persuade Wei Ying to sit down and wait for the doctor, but Wei Ying countered again and again, that he would just purchase that can of drink and leave, because he really didn’t want his dirty and smelly presence to disturb the others; he knew that the longer he stayed, the more he attracted curious stares and accusing whispers, and heavens forbid, patients may complain and he could be shut out from his only reliable source of medicines for his ailments.

Just then, a door inside the clinic opened and the doctor emerged to check what was causing the commotion. Wei Ying was prepared to cover his face and scurry away without the needed energy drink, because truthfully, he didn’t have the courage to face a person of such a highly-regarded profession, especially when he was perceived as a vagrant with no societal value.

“... Young Master Lan?”

Wei Ying looked up in surprise - he hadn't heard that name in a while - and saw, to his shock, a wave of sadness, as well as a tsunami of relief - finally, a friendly, familiar face after such a long time living in the dreary Underworld slums - it was Grandma Li, who used to buy his herbal candies for her clinic in Yiling, not too long ago.

.

Meanwhile, back in Gusu, an urgent, delicate life-saving airlift operation was underway. With little or no support from the magnificent Kingdom that maintained a strict no-foreigner policy, Lan Zhan was forced to carry, bridal-style, the dying, battered and bruised body of his spouse while standing, carefully balanced, on a wobbly Bichen encumbered with their salvaged belongings. Barely-breathing, feverish Wei Ying had an alarming ashen pallor on his face, as he continued to bleed from numerous red-soaked bandages and battled bravely, but likely not for much longer, for survival while in a coma; his entire figure was covered with curative herbal patches from head to toe, and his dislocated arms were hooked up to IV drips that hung from the husband's shoulders because there was simply no ambulance or emergency medical services provided to the man formerly recognized as the Grand Matriarch of the Kingdom. Lan Zhan was furious at the outcome - of Wei Ying's defeat in the hands of eight terrible females from a rival family, of his Kingdom's lack of assistance and apathy, and of his work in the Heavens, and later, his inability to control his lusts when offered a fake, imaginary extended family, who brought gifts of warm fertile bodies to procreate with, which caused him to technically abandon his true family when they needed him the most - that he had to rub away hot tears from his eyes and he swore, as he flew through the blizzard, freezing, stormy stratosphere, arms tightly curled around his most precious, the one and only soulmate, wrapped in layers of blankets and his thickest, warmest outer robes - he swore never to fall for such traps that reeked of fame, position, status, money, cheap love and easy gains - he vowed never to deviate from his true path in life, and that path is named Wei Wuxian, signed by the promises and songs named after their combined love.

With the royal Wei siblings declaring zero-interference in matters outside of the jurisdiction of the Kingdom, it was up to the Grand Patriarch, Ernie and little Ni-er to pick up the pieces from a mission gone horribly, horribly wrong. While Lan Zhan punished himself over Wei Ying's suffering, Ernie - who claimed absolute neutrality on the Kingdom's matters since he no longer served anyone - not even the ruling family of the Kingdom, or the Patriarch's uncle who had gone mad - the cold black thing that oozed with emo-teenagehood made his own decision to transform into a giant reptilian, leathery flying beast that looked like a cross between a dragon and a pterodactyl, and grasped an unconscious but gravely injured Jing Yi with one clawed limb, and comatose, bruised and broken Si Zhui in the other. Both boys were unequivocally declared as non-citizens, since they had yet to be processed by Qishan Lan's immigration centres; still, Ernie was kind enough render basic life support and the most urgent, critical medical care to everyone when he found them lying lifelessly outside the town of Caihong, and he received heaps of silent gratitude from the Grand Patriarch for such selfless deeds.

Little Ni-er who blindly followed her gege wherever he went, didn't really care about citizenships since she was too young to know, let alone be involved with, such political and basic human rights matters. She was tasked to carry a cold, stiff Jin Ling who hovered near death after being poisoned and had his body gouged six ways, so she metamorphosed into a larger version of herself - a flying chubby wingless furry white worm that levitates on pure magic power - and strapped the straddling boy upon herself; just as Ernie coated the two Lan boys with heated black slime to keep them warm during the icy flight, Ni-er made sure Jin Ling was adequately and snugly packed into her fuzzy fur and surrounded by layers of built-up fat so that the latter didn't freeze while being transported in sub-zero temperatures.

Slowly, but surely, the family of three made their way with another four incapacitated members, on an arduous, long journey back home to Yiling.

Notes for the Chapter:

From this point onwards, this fic could be known as "Lovely Times with Wangxian" because I'll probably dial back the amount of sex, smut and porn, and stick to plot and fluff.

I won't be asking for Comments, though I would encourage anyone to put in a Kudos if you appreciate the existence of this fic :-)

Happy 1st anniversary to CQL / Untamed, it's been a year since A-Ling started airing on the tv and internet, and you really haven't left us since then!!!

Chapter 127

“Be a good young man and rest, don’t cause trouble to anyone, alright? The last time my stubborn, good-for-nothing son did thuggish things to make my blood boil, like stealing crates of medicines from the shelves to be sold in the lucrative black market, I suffered a heart attack that landed me here, just when autumn was turning to winter. So, believe me when I say that I do not tolerate young men doing naughty things in my proximity!”

Wei Ying sniffled and nodded like a little boy who had his hands slapped because of a little boo-boo. He survived an injection to boost his energy levels - he had to bite into a pillow to muffled his terrified wails -, a few stitches here and there, aided with topical anesthetics, to patch the holes on his skin, a much-needed hygienic wipe down since he hadn’t bathed for ages. He was given a patient gown to wear while his robes were laundered and dried at the back of the clinic; he looked like a pantless man in a drab-looking green top that extended to his knees.

“The gu niang nurse at the counter is a temporary worker since it’s always been her dream to work in the medical profession, and I don’t want her to encounter any unsavoury experiences before she gets picked-up for her reincarnation. So don’t get too cocky and disturb the girls in the neighbourhood, no matter how successful you’ve been in evading the local police - the more bad deeds you accumulate, the faster you’ll lose your humanity and turn into a feral hungry ghost!” she admonished the young man, then, when she realized that the latter had literally shrunk into a shell of a scared child, she exhaled loudly in exasperation and crossed her arms. “Seriously, what on earth happened to you? Did you die at such an early age? Why didn’t your wife conduct a proper funeral and give you something to live by in the afterlife? Shouldn’t you be queuing up to be reincarnated, or have you been granted special orders to stay back, like me and my ancestors? Young man, please say something, otherwise this poor po po (婆婆; grandma)'s heart cannot take it twice in this lifetime, to see her second favourite child in such a tragic situation!" she cried in desperation, wrought with emotion and inexplicable loss.

For reasons not known, ranging from bribes to the Underworld officials for privileges, to legit instructions issued by the Underworld government to waive the reincarnation cycle on certain individuals of 'special status and interests', Grandma Li's spirit continued to work as a doctor even after her passing. She was assigned to that particular clinic only a few weeks ago; the eminent and large, well-established Li clan flourished even in the afterlife as a conglomerate of healthcare providers who own public and private medical facilities and health services to support the governments of the day - in this particular case, the current Lord of Hell and his councillors in keeping the Underworld realm up to par with 51st-century health standards; or at least the basic minimal needs of the population in the fringes of society, such as the slums.

Wei Ying gingerly lifted the offered cup of steaming warm herbal tea and gulped it down appreciatively, before coming up with a downplayed version of his story, at the insistence of the grandmotherly woman. The young man told the kind but rather stern doctor that he and his "wife" made a trip to their hometown just when winter started - which was why he didn't know that the doctor had passed away, because he had been busy packing up for the journey and did not make his regular rounds to Yiling; otherwise he would have paid his last respects too - although the rich Li clan notably holds lavish funerals where more joss papers, paper-money and paper-properties are burnt than can be contained in ten horse-wagons, so his contribution would probably be miniscule at most. To make his white lie consistent with his state of body and mind, he added that he and the "wife" were caught in a terrible snowstorm, and he was separated from his significant other. He probably fell off a cliff, froze in a crevice, and was somehow preserved by ice to this date. "I'm not sure, as my memories are a blur, if you know what I mean," he murmured and looked at her with doleful eyes.

Grandma Li could not help but to take the emptied cup away and give the young man a hug he probably needed, the first time in many months since he arrived and found himself stranded in a world where he was supposed to die and move on, but hasn't. "Spirits who overstayed their welcome in this world have reasons that draw them back to the land of the living, and refuse to pass on. I can tell that you dream of your wife and your family back at home, or you have lingering grudges that must be resolved before you can finally be at peace with yourself. The longer you remain here, the more you lose yourself - your memories, your personality, your character, your spiritual form," she said.

Regrettably, she said, she was unable to help Wei Ying solve his issues, nor help him to move on and proceed with the rebirth cycle. "I'm a full-fledged doctor in this world, and I'm impartial in my approach to patients - I will help with the physical healing, but you need to decide and act on what you feel is the right thing to do. If you turn to a life of crime and devolve into a hungry ghost, I will not hesitate to call the police to safeguard the lives of others who live here peacefully," she added, before handing him a tray containing a bowl of specially-steamed herbal chicken soup, which is said to be ten times better than a can of artificially-sweetened energy drink, that soothes the broken heart with the warmth of nostalgia and memories of home-cooked foods.

Grandma Li said she would not dig further into Wei Ying's past, and she needed to get back to her patients - which consisted mostly of local slum dwellers and rarely, some lost spirits like Wei Ying, who needed a quick boost in morale to avoid turning into low-life hungry ghosts, and be returned to the righteous path towards proper reincarnation. "If you need anything, just knock on the door, and one of the gu niang nurses will attend to you. I want you to stay here and rest like a good boy, you hear me? Although I serve this clinic as a contractual staff, I have every right to instruct the nurses to lock the doors if something untoward happens to anyone under my care - and that includes you ,” she gave him an angry evil-eye and Wei Ying nodded quickly while taking the first bite of real food in months - a perfectly stewed chicken drumstick still with its fatty skin, succulent on the outside, flavourful on the inside, infused with at least seventeen types of herbs and spices, and very, very wholesome and healing in its entirety.

“My brother-in-law will drop by shortly before the clinic’s closing, and we’ll take you to my sister’s apartment where I live. He runs a large grocery store chain inherited from my ancestors, so he owns a horse wagon large enough to take all of us, and a nice spacious place to live, which is more than enough to accommodate you for a while. We’ll look after you and figure out something to help you out - after office hours. No buts,” Grandma Li finally broke into a small but tight grin, with an air of finality in her tone.

Wei Ying became a mess of snot, tears and half-chewed chicken soup by then. Grandma Li dabbed his cheeks with a handkerchief and rubbed soothing circles on his back, “Hush, hush, don’t cry, you big baby. You were such a sweet, nice and helpful person while in the world above, I could never forget you. I only wish that I had a son like you instead of that good-for-nothing that carries my family’s name but none of his parent’s good qualities.”

Wei Ying realized he really needed to be loved; he’d been starved of affection, human contact and to his newfound horror, tendrils of memories of his lao gong too - because he’d been so busy trying to survive day in and day out, that he started to forget who the man named Lan Wang Ji was and how that man looked like -, for the the past few months (probably), had hardened his heart, morphed his mindset, and he was truly afraid that he had unconsciously edged too close to losing his humanity, his self, and down into the bottomless pit of becoming the next hungry ghost from the Underworld. He remembered what a nice, carefree, charming and sweet person he used to be, and he let the grandmother indulge in his first crying session in many months, a cathartic burst in the dam that held back too much, with plenty of back-pats, being coddled by the woman who was known have a grumpy, strict demeanour sometimes, getting peppered with sweet kisses on his forehead, and grandmotherly whispers of “Good boy, you’re a really good boy.” (好孩子, 你是个好孩子)

.

Wei Ying agreed to stay with the Li clan, with Grandma Li as his temporary legal guardian, in her sister’s apartment. At least this branch of the Li clan, located downtown of the Underworld’s capital city though just a stone’s throw away from the slums, Wei Ying noticed that the family was matriarchal in nature. The wizened (deceased) members of Li’s are blessed with great fortunes and wealth, as their well-to-do descendents continue to regularly perform elaborate rites at temples to pray for their ancestors’ prosperity, and burn tonnes of good paper offerings daily, in total. Wei Ying got his fair share by staying with them - he was well fed, clothed with better garments other than the linen robes, got his own bedroom, and the freedom to explore the apartment, which was nearly as large as a mansion in the Underworld night sky.

Grandma Li was, truthfully speaking, reluctant to let Wei Ying go - especially since the latter started calling her po po, which she found to be too endearing, too adorable and too precious, when paired with a million-dollar smile, and now, healthy, rosy cheeks and complexion. She never reported him to the local police or to any Underworld officials - that was Wei Ying’s decision, she reasoned - and allowed him to stay in the apartment all day or to follow any of them to work, under watchful eyes. Wei Ying cleverly addressed the elder sister of Grandma Li, who had passed away a decade earlier and judging by the way she looked and behaved, could be Grandma Li's long-lost twin sister with a more genteel personality - and being cognizant of the female-dominated family structure of the Li's - he addressed the sister as niang niang , which elevated the woman almost to a queen of sorts in the apartment, and Li niang niang too, fell in love with Wei Ying's boyish and pandering charms. Her stoic and less chatty husband, fondly called bo bo , didn't talk much due to his strict upbringing, but he was kind and courteous anyway, let him ride on the horse-wagon to the grocery stores that he operated, and allowed him to tag along in whatever he did, like an intern of sorts.

Being loved sparked an inner joy within Wei Ying, and filled him with a renewed sense of purpose and urgency, akin to the matchstick that was lit and knew it had just a short span of time left to sparkle and burn with unbridled brightness, before fizzling out for good. He wanted to learn, to understand and to live a pseudo-lifestyle he never really had. He needed to ask, to receive, to get his hands on stuff, as greedily as a dying life would, but not by inflicting guilt upon himself or eroding the trust of others from taking advantage of his hosts; so he added plenty of icing on top of his innocuous demanding requests:

“ Po po , po po , can I have some herbal candies from the clinic? I think I'm getting a sore throat after staying indoors for too long with the air-purifier and air-conditioning switched on. Can you share the recipe for herbal soups that's good for colds and coughs? Maybe we can make a pot together for the whole family when you're back from work, and I can start with the preparations in the meantime.”

“ Niang niang , niang niang , can I watch the television? I promise I won't play any games or use the attached holo-phone for fun, I just want to catch up with the latest news. Do you think I can get a sub-account to ErNet? It's such an amazing thing, getting information at one's fingertips! No wonder you're such a brilliant Matriarch in this part of town!”

“ Bo bo , bo bo , can you teach me how to order such fresh vegetables from the wholesalers, even in a world so far away from anything that lives? I read your standard operating procedures and manuals on how the business is run, but I couldn’t really understand that part. You’re a really great boss, to have so many people working under you, and the stores earn huge profits every month!”

Wei Ying buttered up to the Li’s and in return, he had the opportunity to live the life of an upper middle-class family in the Underworld realm. During his days as the Grand Matriarch, he mostly saw the tips of icebergs in his (former) Kingdom - the C-suites of offices and organizations, the elites of society, the annual reports that contain rosy and top-level stuff with little details whatsoever. However, being with the Li’s, he experienced what it’s like to be in the midst of the action - the line managers who had to please the councillors and creditors while running day-to-day operations of businesses that employ hundreds of workers; meeting the average people who truly lived in the bulk of societies and work in them; and actually pouring over newspapers, tabloids, local and satellite television channels, general ordinary forums and social media platforms, manuals, meeting notes, reports, books, literature and real media that tell the true stories behind glossy one-liner headlines that he used to receive during his former capacity as the Grand Matriarch. He enjoyed his stint as a normal, cheerful, hardworking and curious living person, especially when he knew that one day, he may never wake up in the sunless morning of the Underworld; if he would arrested and snatched by the Ox-Head and Horse-Face guards, and ordered complete his journey from the fearsome foot of the hills, then be turned into a shiny twisty crystal upon reincarnation - he wanted to go out with a bang, filled with the knowledge that he had lived a wholesome, virtuous and meaningful life.

Back on earth, Bichen-riding Lan Zhan faced another monumental decision as he and his surviving tribe of conscious immediate family members and knocked-out ones, while descending from the freezing night skies above Yiling and a large swathe of familiar, comforting and homely inky blackness with a few pinpricks of light came into view on the distant horizon - the Burial Mounds. It felt like aeons had passed since he returned to his home base, and he was secretly delighted that the 'Mounds remained relatively undeveloped - sure, there were a few houses here and there, maybe a handful of small factories, warehouse buildings, some unpaved mountainous roads and roadside farms that were either dimly lit after sundown or none at all, with huge yawning gaps of natural zero-light pollution in between.

“Father,” Ernie hissed in his dragon-pterodactyl form and formally addressed the Grand Patriarch since there was no one else around, “What do you wish to do when we return?”

Silence, in response. There was a lot to think, to say, and he was, truthfully, exhausted from the trauma of saving the injured members of his family to mouth more than a few words.

“The boys... do what is needed, Ernie. Get medical help, admit them to our lands and into the Qishan Lan sect following the Kingdom’s laws. Sort out their belongings, accommodation, food and expenses, and their paperwork,” Lan Zhan murmured, barely above the din of howling winds in the nightscape of a cloudy, starless sky.

“Even if it means going through rehab, prolonged hospitalization, being detained in immigration processing centres, and placed on probations?”

To that, Lan Zhan did not respond. He cradled Wei Ying using one strong arm, and used the other to brush aside the spouse's wildly-billowing hair. Lovely Wei Ying's hair had grown quite long since winter started, his face was ashen and deathly pale, yet unwashed and the curled-up body smelled a little ripe, because he was left on the grounds outside Caihong after being brutally savaged and stomped by evil nearly-naked women, and the ill-fated man was deserted at the hour of his greatest need whilst he slowly bled to death from crushed bones and torn internal organs. Lan Zhan, in his grief, harboured an insane amount of hatred for the Tian sisters, and probably all womankind, at that point - as illogical, unfair and disproportionate as it may sound - and that venomous, bitter resentment festered in his heart, entangled his mind, and continued to poison his thoughts throughout the return flight to Yiling; Wei Ying certainly didn't deserve such pain and torture, and any hurt must be returned hundredfold - even if it means breaking family rules against holding grudges and taking revenge -, Lan Zhan told himself again and again.

Ernie merely nodded with a downward dip of his cold black reptilian snout, even without getting an answer. His gigantic claws gripped tighter around the slime-coated forms of Jing Yi and Si Zhui. Ni-er fluffed her fur and made sure to blanket slumbering, but wheezing Jin Ling, with another layer of magical healing blubber - because his lungs were filled with fluids and blood, and his condition wasn't getting any better after having been stabbed numerous times by the Tians, his perforated body riddled with toxic abscesses, ugly burns and puncture wounds.

Lan Zhan focused on Wei Ying's well-being, almost to an obsessive level - he placed tender kisses on the man's grimy forehead to taste the sweat of the one he missed dearly, uncharacteristically whispered sweet nothings despite knowing that he wouldn't be heard, adjusted the supple but lifeless body in his arms and frowned when he tested the weight and knew it was too light for a man of such height, and tried his best to make sure the lovely spouse was most comfortable being cocooned in his loving embrace.

"I will make... some changes... to our lifestyles and living arrangements. I only wish to take Wei Ying home, and hide him away, so that he will never suffer like this, ever. He will only be loved when he's with me," the Grand Patriarch announced with a renewed determination blazing in his eyes.

Another weary pause in silence. The winds have died down a little, as they plunged below the turbulent clouds and emerged into the lower altitudes. The Burial Mounds were clearly in view - a clear demarcation of the darkest shade of black set against a backdrop of the monotonous colours of the starless night, dotted with few specks of amber and gold from the sparse civilization below.

"How many?"

Lan Zhan was aghast that a secret question had been tantalizingly teased out from the depths of his complex, multi-layered spiralling storm of thoughts. It was a question he meant to ask much later, though the timing wouldn't really matter in the end. Ernie's mind-reading ability was, admittedly, top-notch.

"How many Wei Yings will be loved while Mother lies in bed, hidden from sight for weeks, months, even years in this immobile state, without state-sanctioned care because you do not plan to have him recorded then caught by immigration officers, and strapped onto detention chairs meant for illegals and hardcore convicts?” Ernie repeated, with a verbose question.

The Grand Patriarch looked down at his beloved lying peacefully in his arms; under no respectable circumstances he would ever touch the fragile, damaged body, not even in his sleep or in a drunkenness - that would be barbaric, callous, ruthless and merciless. However, as he weaved an idea - rather, portrayed an image - of spending an inordinate amount of time rebuilding what should have been, an idyllic paradise of him and his closest loved ones, far, far away from the hustle and bustle of what currently is, dilemma struck; as long as he currently is - a god, a king, a patriarch -, he could never attain what he should have been - a husband, a father, a lover, an ordinary mortal who only needed and wanted his beloved and no one else, nothing else. He wouldn't know how to solve this lifelong conundrum anyway, because power, people, and riches naturally gravitate to him, and along with that, extraordinary events, troubles brewing from afar, the impossible burdens placed upon his shoulders, the lethal pressures from having zillions of citizens look up to him for leadership, the life and time stolen from him when he couldn't maintain that fabled work-life balance, and deep down, he also knew that god-tiered energies coursing through his veins meant that his god-tiered primal needs and lusts needed to be sated as well.

No wonder the Gusu Lan master of his dreams made a mockery of his status, and said that he didn't know the root of his problems, and couldn't do anything to resolve his complicated, multi-layered issues.

Except - realization dawned upon the Grand Patriarch - except, unless he sought help from others - such as Ernie and possibly other allies - to solve each of his issues. No man is an island, and the great man named Lan Wang Ji is no exception.

Ernie opened the first door to one of his many issues - the issue of his loins, bluntly put; and it was time to man up, to take the bull by the horns; there was no other way around it other than to call a spade a spade. Lan Zhan knew his uncontrollable flares in lusts, his virility and sexual vigour were one source of his headaches, especially when surrounded with harems and variants of his lovely Wei Ying, which directly put the real , original Wei Ying in mortal danger. It was time to address this.

“Nnngh. Do what you must, Ernie. Make every single one count, if there will be many. Make sure that your Mother is above everyone else,” Lan Zhan murmured vaguely, but that was more than enough for the cold black thing to start firing up factories in his underground kingdom, shift massive quantities of souls, bodies and lives he had amassed since his birth during the end of Summer, and the first humongous gears inside his infinite blackness started to spin and truly work faithfully hard for his deserving First Father.

.

Living with the Li's and as the youngest temporary addition to their fold, Wei Ying spent time doing chores for the three elderly (actually, deceased) members of the household when he wasn't out and about, darting between his guardians, the shadows and into closets when Underworld officials or the local police were in the vicinity. At home, he watched the news on television while sweeping the floors with a straw broom (the elderly weren't too keen to take up 51st-century technological solutions, such as purchasing pricey Dustless Broom units, for performing simple tasks), and was dumbfounded when he heard the announcements about the Grand Patriarch taking a well-deserved break and going for a short vacation to an undisclosed location and duration; the newsfeed was full of videos and images of the newly appointed and well-received Regent of the Throne, the leader of the Dream-kin and an excellent clone of the Grand Patriarch himself (even more handsome than the husband, Wei Ying thought); there was actually little fanfare and the inauguration ceremony was rather brief and bland - perfectly suited for Lan-kin's minimalist tastes and interests -, mainly because after signing off some royal documents to affirm his appointment, the Regent immediately started issuing out decrees, new policies, upended inefficient parts of the government and the Wangxian company, ordered everyone to "get back to work", and all the usual stuff that any King or President should anyway - that people soon turned a blind eye on the auspicious event and went on with their mundane daily lives. There were also bits of news that others of the First Father Lan's family, including his four notorious but celebrated siblings, voiced out concerns and dissatisfaction at the sudden change of guard, and called for investigations into perceived corruption and the location of their Grand Patriarch. However, something must have happened within the media, the royal family or the Heavenly Palace, as talks and news on the topic trickled down to a stop - and the channels played reruns of documentaries, musicals, animations and awesome footage of the Kingdom's past achievements and victories.

Wei Ying was secretly worried about Lan Zhan's well-being, however he was at least assured that the husband should be fine if that man was merely taking a break from those distracting official duties, and maybe - just maybe - taking the time to research into ways to bring the spouse back (he hoped, and crossed his fingers many times until they cramped up). He couldn't let his feelings show, lest his cover is blown in front of the ordinary Li's, and he understood that as long as he was stuck in the Underworld, there was little he could do to escape the realm anyway, given that his body was probably beyond repair by then - so he had to swallow down his anxieties, repress his thoughts and memories of his loved ones, and keep his chin up, back straight, and march ahead like a normal youthful man of the Underworld living on borrowed time.

The Li's were a rather sociable lot, and invited other family members and close friends for meals and parties during the weekends. Wei Ying thought that contrary to some of the elder sect leaders he'd known during his life, the older people were, the less concerned they were about themselves, and the more outgoing, amicable, hospitable and companion-needy they became - a sign of old age, perhaps; even when he was introduced as 'a freeloader who is, was, and still is, a wonderful friend of the family, and Li mei mei's favourite godson' (because Grandma Li was considered one of the youngest in a room full of Li forebearers), he received a round of laughter, hearty slaps on the back from the elderly men, and adoring pinches on the cheeks from the elderly women (because they saw Wei Ying as a tiny tot amongst them whose ages easily added up thousands of year, if not more). He got to meet and be acquainted with a number of (deceased) Li family members, and realized how widespread people's connections are; a couple of old men - said to be ancestral relatives of Grandma Li - mentioned a little about their lives as nomadic merchants who indulged in their wanderlust of trading between the Far, Far East and the Far, Far West (an impossible feat these days, given the woeful current political situation), had a brush with death with events related to the emergence and power-struggles for pieces of Yin Metal - and by connecting some dots and maps, Wei Ying found that those two men have met a couple of 'very beautiful and powerful female cultivators of their time', Lan Yi and Baoshan Sanren (insert exclamation marks, in Wei Ying's context).

Mind-blown Wei Ying didn't stop there - the more people he met, the more voracious his appetite was to explore the Underworld and its vibrant culture, stories, lifestyles and people. Eventually, he wagered his luck and okay-ed to a lunch meeting with his bo bo and an official, said to be a trustworthy and very old friend of the family. They made a reservation at a nondescript teahouse and picked a private room, because Li bo bo wanted to show Wei Ying how he sourced fresh vegetables from the farms and orchards located just outside the Heavenly Court, scarcely a stone's throw away from the now-dismantled supermarket that was reported to be destroyed by rampaging monsters and subsequent fires, high, high above their world (impossible, Wei Ying thought, as only gods were eligible to taste the wonderful greens planted in the clouds of Heaven, and not mere mortals, let alone the dead and dying, down, down below).

The moment the door to the private room opened, and Wei Ying found himself staring at a pair of opulently designed and embroidered boots adorned with an assortment of jadestones, quartz and precious gems, he looked up and had to, for a brief moment, hold his breath and not cause a stir by saying anything - Tudigong, the Earth God, dressed in a camouflage of normal businessman attire with dark-coloured robes and pants - except for the striking, probably very expensive boots - strode across the carpeted floor to greet Li bo bo.

.

Of course, it makes sense, Wei Ying berated himself again and again, as he eavesdropped the strictly no-nonsense conversation. There were countless Earth Gods scattered across the Kingdom, each appointed as a divine custodian of a district, a habitable settlement, a parcel of land, sometimes, a building such as a famous temple, even an entire continent or an island, with the responsibility of controlling, to a limited extent, the natural and supernatural phenomena afflicting their designated areas and ensure that life thrives, nature blossoms, civilizations prosper and people's well-being were maintained in blessed balance and harmony. On the flipside, however, in which Wei Ying had never really guessed, is that the vast network of Earth Gods meant that the possible flow of goods and services through them, whether legal or illicit, for better or worse of the Kingdom that they served, became perfect clandestine conduits that would escape even the Jade Emperor's attention and awareness. Earth Gods are, for all accounts and purposes, run-of-the-mill middle-ranking gods, sometimes relegated to the likes of earthly demi-gods due to their lack of firepower and their penchant for involvement in conventional peacetime civil affairs - thus, unsurprisingly, some may decide to join the fray to earn more on the side and gain more favours from their worshippers and to fill their personal coffers, by acting as unscrupulous middlemen, agents, arbitrators and other professions of this ilk.

Therefore, for a crate of Underworld products, such as jars of Breaths of Malaise, bottles containing Ichor of Incurable Pestilence, and bags of Crystalline Sands of Doom, which are key ingredients in certain offensive and malicious magic, Li bo bo was promised baskets of freshly harvested Heavenly fruits and produce in return - a very profitable exchange, given that he only had to package the air surrounding the dirtiest parts of the Underworld, bottle some waste water from the sewers, and compact dirt closest to the dumpsters near the wet markets, to make the trade; the exchanged green produce would be sold to the upper echelon of the Underworld, who pay handsome prices for a taste of the divine that could strengthen their bodies and prolong their lifespans. The two elderly grey-haired men talked over a pot of jasmine tea and a plate of toasted nuts, with very brief introductions to Wei Ying as an unnamed intern to Li bo bo 's company, and they ended by agreeing the date, time and location of the drop-off and pick-up.

Wei Ying kept his eyes to the table, tried to remain inconspicuous, and fervently hoped that the tudigong did not recognize him and call him out; he trembled a little when Li bo bo mentioned that he would like to bring along his intern - fondly termed the 'godson' - when overseeing the exchange operations; Tudigong merely nodded with a firm and knowing "Mmm", and did not ask further. Wei Ying could feel pinpricks of laser-sharp gazes upon him throughout the conversation, and he did not dare to identify who was scrutinizing his every breath, every move and every gesture.

"Now that we have mutually agreed to conclude our meeting, I would like to get to know your protege a little more whilst the tea is still warm. Who knows, he may be picking up my phonecalls in your stead, if what you say is true that he will accompany you and even take on a few routine, simpler tasks. May I have a private word with him?" Tudigong asked politely and with respectable etiquette.

Li bo bo was a man of a few words, and he kept to his promise to Grandma Li never to leave Wei Ying alone with the denizens of the Underworld - or in this case, a possibly corrupt official from Heaven -, "Hmm. Yes, but only in my presence. My sister-in-law loves this boy very much, and would be heartbroken if his fragile spirit is shaken by the rigours of the real world, such as handling tough negotiations and transactions, if you know what I mean." Then, the elderly Li man shuffled away to take a seat at the corner of the room, and pretended to snack on a plate of peanuts at a separate table. He was out of earshot, but his eyes were trained on Wei Ying at all times, ready to call off the conversation the moment the latter reacted badly to his preferred business partner.

Wei Ying's non-existent heart pounded so hard, that he thought he could feel bile and all sorts of entrails bubbling up from his stomach in sheer terror and anxiety. Beads of sweat rolled down the sides of his face, his fingers balled into fists when he was face to face with an expectant tudigong - he didn't want to disappoint the bo bo , and he was afraid that the moment he opened his mouth, his identity would be exposed and everything would come crashing down.

"Come, let me have a look at your face, child. There is nothing to fear from this shushu ," said the raspy but gentle voice.

Wei Ying looked up, his form taut and ready to dash for safety; he had already mentally mapped where the windows were and where the hallways in the teahouse led to.

The grandfatherly Earth God chuckled lightly and his eyes crinkled with glee. “What a handsome young man you’ve become, in just a mere few hours in heaven-time,” he continued, in a low whisper, before leaning closer for a hushed dialogue. Wei Ying’s eyes widened with surprise, but he kept as quiet as a mouse.

“It was only this morning when I watched how an orphaned child was picked up by the famous mortal, Jiang Fengmian of Yunmeng, by a market stall in a town that I can no longer remember its name. At that time, I passed by that same stall with the intention to meet someone, and couldn’t forget that boy’s precious smile when he held that piece of melon offered by the former Jiang Patriarch,” Tudigong calmly recounted his tales, and scratched his beard absentmindedly. He did not seem to notice Wei Ying’s shocked demeanour and a string of stifled, choked stuttering sounds - thankfully concealed from Li bo bo from behind, who was occupied in cracking the shells of peanuts in a rather noisy manner.

“It is sad to hear what has happened to the Mortal Realm from my network of comrades, because I’m usually assigned to carry out duties only in Heaven and sometimes, the Underworld realms. However, let me tell you this - I’ve watched and experienced the ups and downs of many mortals’ lives that I can tell you, no one is alone in his suffering, and that person will never be alone too, because of how life connects all of us - including you and me,” he added, reminiscing the recent past, and pulled on one end of his moustache, his gaze fixed at an astonished Wei Ying.

“And now, close to the end of my working day, when I have scheduled this impromptu meeting with Merchant Li before going home to see my wife and have a nice dinner with my family... miracles of all miracles, I meet the boy again, about quarter of a century in earth-time later!” he beamed a bright wrinkly smile that creased his forehead. Li bo bo peered at the two over a cup of tea, and probably thought someone received a nice, well-meaning praise. Then, slowly, Tudigong inserted a hand into his sleeve and pulled out a red packet (紅包; hong bao).

“I won’t pry into your business of who you really are, what happened to you, and how you got here, because my primary concerns are with the few district offices in Heaven and in the Underworld, which aren’t that closely connected to the core ruling families of the Kingdom. I had an inkling and felt an itch in my nose during lunch, and prepared this just in case I meet the boy again - and I did -, so this is for you,” he said, and handed the rather thick crimson-coloured envelope to a startled Wei Ying. Before the young man knew it, he was already holding the red packet with both hands.

Tudigong looked over the younger man’s shoulder and asked loudly, “Li bo bo , you wouldn’t mind if I gift this kind, charming boy some lucky money, would you? That is, a customary gesture to bless this child and to wish him success in his future.”

The elderly Li waved a hand at them, and replied, “That is fine,” then, he proceeded to snack on the remaining few nuts on the plate.

Tudigong took a swig off his cup of brew and rose from his seat, but not before whispering to Wei Ying, “Keep this, and open it when there is no one else around. I may not be powerful enough to change anything, so this is the least I can do, for old time’s sake.”

.

Later, Wei Ying opened the red packet when he was alone in his bedroom. Sparkly rainbow-like dust gushed out onto his bed mattress and they magically transformed into the objects that had been sealed in the powder - three shabby-looking straw dolls of a man, a woman and a small child, and a worn-out rattle drum Wei Ying thought he'd lost forever from his childhood - the one that connected him to the husband long, long ago before the events of his life started.

Notes for the Chapter:

More world-building for this arc...

Please put in a Kudos if you appreciate the existence of this fic!

Chapter 128

Wei Ying held the return tickets for three persons - a man, a woman and a child's, in the form of enchanted straw dolls. The red packet came with proper instructions for use - which surprised even the former cultivator-cum-master magician; a puff of grey smoke, an Eye and Ear combo spell, a simple Memory spell, and a built-in Energy spell that served as a disposable battery of sorts, formed the fundamentals of a very simple and primitive version of a pre-recorded message.

In the projected video that followed, which was a little grainy and fuzzy in quality, Tudigong was having his lunch of chicken noodle soup, a plate of crispy vegetable fritters and a bowl of fried chicken nuggets, in one deserted corner of a staff canteen somewhere in the vast Heavenly Court office complex. He started by saying something about making a video that could earn him tons of likes and a few extra gold pieces - he didn't disclose where and how - by simply showing people how tasty the staff menu is, especially the bright (probably artificial) colours on the food, and the pleasant slurpy, sloshy and crunchy sounds emitted when one digs in; Wei Ying wasn't sure if Tudigong knew about the concepts of WeiTube, ASMR and mukbang back then, but he'd heard from the husband that the staff menu is highly subsidized, affordable even for the lowest-ranking workers, and features healthy choices as well as classic favourites - probably most gods, demi-gods and celestial servants went to staff canteens to fill their bellies with grub and went on with their day, without really giving a second thought to the intricacies, delicacies and possibilities of the food served in those plain white buildings with rows upon rows of tables and benches.

Just as Tudigong swallowed down a spoonful of chewed noodles - oh heavens, the delicious squishy and sucking sounds! - something happened on the bench, there was a strange inhuman yowl and a loud thud. He clicked his tongue in annoyance and bent down behind the table.

“Ahh,” his strained voice was heard off-screen, “In this bag, I had a bunch of Peaches of Immortality, three leaves from Guanyin’s holy willow branch that my agent managed to collect while she was in the bath, and three tiny strands of hair the barber near the supermarket sold to me, said to be from Lord Buddha’s chin when His Holiness dropped by the hairdresser for a mandated haircut,” he opened a brown bag in front of the recording spell to show a mess of stuff - squashed fruit, spindly pieces and dark specks of what looked like dust or lint - it was a bit dark inside the bag to see exactly what happened to the contents -, but his wrinkled hands balled into fists, upset at the irreparable damage done, “... and a bunch of children’s toys too. Did you see that? It’s that wretched overweight calico cat again! The one that always begs for scraps whenever the staff have their meals here! It knocked over my bag when it hopped from bench to bench, and look what happened!” The demi-god pointed somewhere behind the recording spell as the culprit meowed loudly and disappeared behind furniture and shadows.

Tudigong shook his head helplessly and sighed, his appetite to continue the sumptuous lunch seemed to have evaporated instantly. “To whoever is viewing this show, you should know that it took me days in heaven-time to get hold of the items, and now they’re ruined. My clients will be angry at having to wait for their orders, and I will have less spending money for a while. So, I’m sorry that I can’t finish this lunch episode today,” he said and bowed at the recording spell - which seemed rather bizarre, and indicated, at least to Wei Ying, that the Earth God’s audience was probably those that frequented his side businesses.

The elderly demi-god fished out a juice-covered straw doll and twirled it a little to inspect it. Wei Ying recognized it in a flash of refreshed memory that he wove that toy with tiny nimble fingers, using bits of discarded straw brooms he found in someone’s trash bin, long, long ago. “Well, judging from the looks of it, I’d say this doll, and the other two--” he rummaged the bag and two more straw doll heads poked out into view, “-- have been imbued with the powers to resurrect the dead, and bring their spirits back to the Mortal Realm in their re-created original, or maybe slightly deteriorated bodies. But you'd have to be dead first and your body would have to be obliterated long before, for this to work... which I'm sure none of you are," Tudigong grinned sheepishly at the recording spell, then wiggled the first dirtied straw doll, "If there are any takers for such unlucky items, contact me and I'll give a big discount!"

Tudigong elaborated a bit more about the dolls, probably in the futile hopes that someone would want to buy them as a collectable - which never happened since they were now in Wei Ying's hands; each doll could only be used once, the gender determined the sex of the resurrection target, and the size of the doll could be a measure of the living form or the age of the individual to be resurrected. Soon, the old demi-god signed off with a cheerful wave - with one more bonus offer that he'd pay handsomely to anyone who gets rid of the calico cat terrorizing those patronizing the canteen -, before wishing his viewers a good day, and the projected screen dissipated.

Wei Ying inspected the straw dolls in his bedroom, and realized that he couldn't use it on himself since he hasn't passed on - strangely, he continued to hover between life and death, and prayed ardently again that his lao gong would figure something out soon to save him from an untimely demise. No details were provided about the rattle drum, so he assumed it to be an unpowered artifact - without any spellcasting ability, he wasn't able to investigate whether the toy radiated magical auras or not.

The young man entertained the idea of helping a couple of lost spirits in the Underworld with the straw dolls, however he wasn't sure who he could trust, and how to choose the worthy receiver of such powerful magics. Before long, his imaginations went into overdrive; he started to fantasize mass producing the resurrection spell using his wits and potentially alternative resources found in the Underworld, branding the product so that spirits would flock to him and pay him good money for boxes of homemade straw dolls, becoming a superhero to rescue scores of deserving, kind-hearted spirits, then bringing a whole group of them to the Middle Kingdom to start, and populate a fictional village named after his surname... and with a final yawn, he fell asleep on his comfortable bed like a good boy with the rattle drum in his arms, at nine o' clock sharp in the starless and moonless ever-night of the Underworld.

In the background, a wall-mounted monitor - a miniature television hooked up to one of the apartment's wifi network - droned on about the latest news clips from around the Kingdom:

A picture of disappointed and downtrodden Jiang Cheng walking away from the burning, ruined replicate of the Cloud Recesses, set against a backdrop of smoke, fiery mountains and barren, devastated landscapes, followed by long lines of fatigued, crying, badly beaten-up boys who sported bruises and bandages all over their dirty smudged clothes; apparently, the incubus scourge had grown out of control when the monsters unearthed a replica cache of ancient Gusu Lan treasures and a copy of the Yin Metal piece entrusted to the Lan descendents long ago - which was effectively used to turn all inhabitants into fierce corpses. The battle lost, Jiang Cheng withdrew from the campaign with his lips sealed by a Lan Wang Ji-esque Silence Spell, which the incubus had mastered, and refused all interviews from reporters fielded to the scene of carnage. The reporters were informed by reliable sources, that all remaining monsters and their terrible Dark, Corrupted creations broke out of the barriers earlier using the raw power of ancient Gusu Lan bombs, then stole the magic gourd at the parking lot of the dismantled supermarket - which contained all captured enemies and rescued souls -, and made a beeline for The Well before the Palace guards could apprehend any escapees.

The Regent announced that the war refugees under the leadership of Jiang Cheng would still be recognized for their efforts - they did manage to capture at least fifteen incubus after all, before losing everything - and will be awarded heroic medals and certificates to hasten their admission into full citizenship of the Kingdom. Since the incubi, their armies, and kidnapped inhabitants of the replica Cloud Recesses had reached the other side of the planet - above the open seas which the Dragon King designated as his sea-people's garbage dump, therefore the Regent declared the matter to be irrelevant to the Kingdom's current affairs, to let the monsters infect and fester in the Far, Far West originating from that side of the globe, and at most, to assign the Dragon King and his Sea Realms to keep an eye on the situation;

There was a short blurb for an upcoming two-hour documentary special titled "Inside The Warzone: Battle For the Ancestral Fatherland", which described an intriguing insider look on what actually happened to three young war refugees in their quest to reclaim their homeland; it seemed there would be interviews with newly-minted immigrants Lan Jing Yi and Lan Si Zhui, together with probationary citizen Jin Ru Lan, from their hospital beds while they recuperated from their adventures; teasers included never-seen-before footages of a deserted, desolate Gusu, a visually stimulating, morbid and macabre rundown on the sexy succubi and the Tian-controlled Imperial forces, in-depth analysis of the traumatic experiences and how these will affect the boys' futures, who have been nominated to hold important roles within their clans, and expert opinions from other war veterans, historians and eminent professors from related fields. (Sadly, all mentions of the Grand Matriarch were censored and deleted (and re-written), because as far as the Kingdom is concerned, the man no longer existed in record.) The blurb ends with the now-famous picture of a furious, dishevelled Master Lan Qi Ren in a straightjacket, on his knees, and tied down with chains, with a speech bubble above him that screams "I'll be back!" and a footnote that there will be a special five-minute preview of the next documentary "Black or White? The Sinister Shushu Strikes!", starring that bearded uncle himself;

There are reports of hauntings by the ghosts of two possibly eight-year old children in the streets and alleys of Yiling - who seemed to walk through walls, steal food, clothes and money, make plenty of feral squeals and growls, and appear then disappear at random; which spooked residents enough to set up small, roadside shrines to pray for divine intervention, and to perform rituals to cleanse the disturbances affecting the neighbourhood. Rumours are rife that a third ghost has recently joined the fray, in the form of a male teenager who seems calmer, but still scares away the residents nevertheless. A number of businesses have been reported to pack up and abandon their properties due to such disruptive presence, in the hopes that by leaving them alone, that would appease the adolescent souls and encourage them to pass on. Experts are quick to point out that these individuals could be of Dream-kin origin, however, their scientific advice was ignored when mass hysteria hit out in markets, restaurants and living rooms of the people of Yiling who have not really seen a real specimen of that species before. In the meantime, the leader of the Dream-kin, the current Regent of the Kingdom, is said to be chasing a ghost of his own, at the far side of the planet.

The Wei siblings continued to wage their war against the defiant Tians, now under the leadership of the eight Sisters who had usurped the positions from their great-grandparents. The Tians have renewed efforts to survive and push back the Kingdom-led onslaught - a 'second wave' of the plague emerged in the form of insidious guerilla warfare, mass assassinations by poisoning drinking water and breathable air, hijacking of motherships and resource-rich worlds, spying and hacking into ErNet resources, and other underhanded ways of gaining back their grounds - however, people were beginning to become jaded of war-related news, opinions, recruitment posters and supposedly inspiring messages that were too far away and too irrelevant to their daily lives; hence, the subject of the Lan-Tian (Blue Skies) battlefield has been relegated to the likes of unexciting foreign news that are usually important for the ruling class, but for the layperson on the streets trying to earn his bread and butter, he doesn't give a damn anymore.

With so much going on, including endless streams of live feeds from other universes, galaxies, civilizations, worlds and realms besides the tiny dot known as the Middle Kingdom of the Mortal Realm, naturally, everything that was familiar to Wei Ying would be drowned out due to the sheer volume of more interesting news elsewhere; even the news byte of Gusu getting rebooted and a poll being conducted to determine whether the same should be done for the rest of the Wei and Lan-kin populated Middle Kingdom, is easily missed and forgotten. The Regent appeared in more than half of such feeds, and had garnered so many more likes than the previous ruler due to his ruthless efficiency in doing the right things the right way; the Kingdom prospered shortly after his ascension, from a political, economic and socio-cultural standpoint.

.

Wei Ying did somersaults inside his head when he learned how goods are illegally transported between realms by unauthorized persons - by exploiting naturally occurring weaknesses in the crack lines that appear in space-time, amongst other devious strategies employed by those who work in the underbelly of the realms' societies. Initially, Wei Ying assumed that the Tudigong would travel to the Underworld with an enlarged suitcase to pick up contraband, but he wasn't convinced that the demi-god would be able to walk through bands of customs officers and their scanners - even clones of Heavenly Sun-Eating dogs trained in sniffing out smugglers - unscathed; however by relying on age-old hearsays and wisdoms, people have been making use of such secrets to pop in a box of goodies into what looks like a manhole in the middle of the woods, and the entire shipment is instantly transported through the tube-like construct, guided by some simple spells, talismans, good luck and precision timing so that the other side receives it with relative ease. As an unidentified and unnamed spirit - a nobody, really - Wei Ying's presence posed no danger nor notice to anyone, so he could talk freely with the locals to learn more about how such secrets were discovered and how such practices prospered in the past before the long arm of the law loomed above.

Timing was crucial, and secrecy was key - even the local enforcement was vaguely aware of such prohibited activities. Soon, after overseeing his nth shipment under the guise of being a delivery boy for Li niang niang 's cosmetics business - in which he veered off course from the main road and into a well-concealed patch of undergrowth, then met up with an agent from another faraway realm to hand over a carton of lethal Lich King Dragon bone powder, in exchange for bags of powerful drugs, experimental vaccines and banned energy boosters; Grandma Li's clinic needed these life-saving substances because they weren't allowed to be used in the Underworld, and the elderly lady was adamant that the Underworld bureaucracy discriminated against its poor, underprivileged population since the elite class had full access to such 51st-century medicines anyway -, he was spotted by Ox-Head and Horse-Face on a regular patrol, and ran for his life. He speed-dialed Li bo bo using the hacked Weiphone given to him, and fortunately he was picked up by a Li-relative's ride-hailing service just in the nick of time.

“ Bo bo , I think I should lay low for a while, because I'm actually a wanted man who should've queued up for reincarnation long ago. Ox-Head and Horse-Face are chief guards, and they will not let go of me, now that they've picked up my trail. I will hide in the slums where it is safer for me, and harder for them to track me down. Please... tell Li po po not to worry that I cannot return home for dinner tonight... that I'm sorry for the troubles I've caused... and thank you, for taking care of this nameless and small-fry lost spirit.”

Wei Ying rubbed a hot tear off his eyes, and snivelled loudly in the chilly darkness. He left the goods in the ride-hailing taxi to be delivered to its intended recipient, together with his modern, Li-sponsored Underworld-ly belongings including the Weiphone - for fear that he could be traced if he held on to those objects. He tightened his robes to stave off the cold, then walked away from the main roads and headed for the derelict, dilapidated slums, where it all started.

.

In the end, Lan Zhan sighed to himself, does it really matter?

After discarding the luggage from his past - including dropping the three boys off at Yiling's immigration centre and the hospital, then returning to the 'Mounds to find a new place to settle down, in which Ni-er sniffed out a nice spot at the foot of some mysterious, uninhabited mountains located next to beautiful valleys, waterfalls, and lush forests, and began to dig a cavernous hole, while Ernie busied himself with furnishing the expanding dwelling space - Lan Zhan instructed that all connections to ErNet, all manners of communications to the Kingdom, and all duties linked to present roles as the Grand Patriarch, First Father Lan, the Jade Emperor, God of Mercy and Lord Buddha be cut off, disconnected, put on pause, et cetera ad nauseum , during this digital detox retreat in an off-grid paradise in the middle of the wilderness.

For the first time in forever , Lan Zhan experienced absolute silence and peace of mind, especially since nobody from the boisterous outside world could reach him, his holo-phone was switched off, his personal tracking had been disabled, and that he could be in a single room playing his guqin - Ernie had crafted one that's as good as the original - while lovely Wei Ying lay motionless on a rickety bed, because a king-sized double bed had been ordered and would take several days to be delivered to such a remote, obscure location in the middle of nowhere. One could hear the soothing roar of a distant waterfall and the trickling of a stream that flowed from a pool behind the abode to more pools further outside, accompanied by crickets and birdsongs, and feel the gentle breeze blowing through a single door and an opened window, refreshing and invigorating the flow of qi in the vicinity.

A pair of black and white rabbits crouched near Lan Zhan, but he paid no heed to them and continued to play healing songs for his dearly beloved. The white one asked by gesturing with its cute fluffy paws, “How many rooms? How wide and tall, and how many secret chambers? How large is the underground pantry?”, whilst the black one, whose coat is a little colder, blacker and glistened with what looked like moist, oily slime, hissed in an adorable way, “What kinds of furniture? How many cabinets, cupboards and hidden closets? How fully furnished should the kitchen be, how many straw brooms, clothespin, cutlery, pots and pans, plates and bowls? Which collection of books, magazines, paintings, calligraphy and literature to be acquired?”

Lan Zhan ended one song with a perfect, rounded twang ! of finality that majestically echoed off the walls of the cavernous home. He merely murmured, “Does it matter?”, before starting another more serene, slow-paced piece of music. The two rabbits bowed, in their own cute, endearing ways, and hopped off to do their owner’s unsaid bidding.

The man looked up and glimpsed at his lover. Wei Ying had not woken up at all, although his complexion had improved considerably after numerous microsurgeries on the open wounds and lacerations, treatments for poisoning and gangrenous limbs, and surgical reconstructions performed by the tentacle-kin who have since morphed into faithful servants of the four-legged furry kind. Still, Lan Zhan tried his best to care and keep the slumbering spouse fit and clean. Lovely Wei Ying had his hair groomed daily, his nails trimmed when they grew too long, his body wiped down with mild soap water mixed with herbs and curative heated springwaters from the pool, fed with bits of liquid food and soup at regular intervals - even though for most of the time, the food had to be thoroughly chewed and forced down the younger man's throat with deep kisses, and the soup usually spilled out because Wei Ying wasn't conscious enough to move his jaws or swallow anything on his own.

Three times a day, Lan Zhan would perform cultivation and then tried to channel the gained qi energy into the broken body; however Wei Ying wasn't receptive since his meridians had been destroyed - the energy simply dissipated into the surrounding air. To keep the muscles from wasting, Lan Zhan periodically exercised the spouse's joints, massaged his muscles and applied the age-old arts of acupuncture and acupressure; however, with the tendons and ligaments permanently severed, and important weight-bearing bones fractured and crushed, there was little benefit other than to keep up physical appearances even as the man continued to grow thinner and more frail over time. Lan Zhan found it hard to accept there will be lasting impact on Wei Ying's physical and mental state, that the man will be handicapped and disabled for the rest of his life, and that the condition will be irreversible no matter what kind of magic or technology are at their disposal.

The red-eyed black rabbit once said that, perhaps, he could eat a Heavenly biscuit, or be sent to one of the major hospitals in Yiling - after being subjected to terrible immigration procedures, and the long, arduous process of detention and reinstatement of citizenship - to have objects embedded or exchanged to make the body more functional, more viable - but a silent glare from Lan Zhan sent the rabbit scampering away. Lan Zhan promised to himself that Wei Ying's body is sacred - there can be no other, besides the man named Wei Wuxian in his sole, current body - a precious gift from the Mo family that Lan Zhan pledged to honour in this lifetime and beyond, because deep down inside, Lan Zhan did not think he could live through another harrowing episode of losing the dearly beloved right in front of his eyes, ever again.

The music was well played to the last note. Lan Zhan rose from the purple cushion on the floor, and went to sit next to the sleeping form of lovely Wei Ying. He took a thin wrist to check the pulse, then slid a hand beneath the pristine white robes to touch the bony chest marred with healing scars - it was painful that he could feel the ribs beneath the skin, but at least there was a warm heartbeat. He leaned downward to embrace his spouse, sending invisible prayers through their heated skin contact to wish that the latter would wake up soon; he missed Wei Ying's smiles and laughter, his never-ending pranks and shenanigans, and most of all, he missed having Wei Ying by his side as promised too long ago, to be together forever for this lifetime and beyond.

Soon, it was time to part. As one embrace ends, another awaits.

Thanks to his vast knowledge in surviving and thriving in remote locations of the world, and the two magical rabbits in his care, Lan Zhan had been able to satisfy his basic human needs for food, water, sleep, sanitation and the ilk - except for the burning lustful flames welling up from his loins that refused to be extinguished, no matter how many times he meditated or tried to suppress with his limitless golden core qi energy - it was a troublesome consequence to be a god, and to be blessed with god-tiered desires, after all.

Lan Zhan gave a kiss on Wei Ying's cheeks, and whispered sweet words that he would return soon, maybe with a bedtime story, a bowl of tasty pork rib soup, or another guqin piece he would compose specially for the beloved. Then, he averted his gaze from the peacefully resting spouse, left the sombre bedside, and walked to the front door of the home, still under construction, and stood on the dusty floor mat dotted with paw prints. It was designated as a burrow for the rabbits, but it contained an entire universe for his personal use too.

The floor mat glowed when it recognized the master of the house, and Lan Zhan was teleported into an underground kingdom of sorts. He found himself in the middle of a sweltering hot harem of naked Wei Yings - different versions and copies of his spouse, but they're all the same, inside out, he thought. This time, the elder of the two rabbits, the black one, had curated a perfect collection of one hundred of the finest females and a handful of very good-looking males it could source, illegally or not, from the Kingdom and beyond. All of them had been waiting impatiently for their lao gong 's arrival, and the room erupted with glee and squeals when their fated partner finally emerged - a free-for-all procreative buffet, a ritualistic, time-honoured celebration of fertility, merry-making and baby-making, commenced in full force without delay.

Lan Zhan assuaged his fears of committing adultery by convincing himself that he had a basic human need - a primal, persistent and enduring right - to fulfil, and this was the best, most morally-acceptable way to vent his pent-up frustrations, while getting to 'feel good' as well. Through this, he could pour out his grief, anger, hurt, complaints, unease - anything - in the form of thirty jets of thick virile sperm, whether through sweet gentle lovemaking or violating each presented rosebud with the savagery of a professional rapist (he'd learnt that from his dreams) - and let the calming, boneless, relaxing aftermath pacify his shaken soul. If anything, he wasn't cheapening nor degrading the love he has for Wei Ying; in fact, he was multiplying his feelings exponentially by declaring his loyalty and love for that one man in as many facets, and that everything he does, every breath he takes, every moan he makes - it was all in the name of Wei Ying.

In the well-lit and well-ventilated dungeon, he would spend a perceived eternity in this enclosed bubble of space-time, where he could always order fresh new living rosebuds, in batches of hundreds, at the press of a red button after delicately and thoroughly savouring and plundering every single one in the room; stop and slow down the passage of time just so that he could fully enjoy making babies inside those lovely, lovely Wei Yings, and their irresistibly hot, fleshy, tight wombs - artificial or not, does it really matter?; or simply let his hands, lips and tongue guide him to the youngest, most supple and nubile precocious specimen, whether a fertile twelve year old or a horny twenty-one year old, then spread those lovely thighs and peer at the blossoming rose between the legs, juicy and moist, ripe for his taking, and then thrust his hips into the sucking, soul-draining welcoming tunnels that caress and coax his rising seed to spew forth, his exceedingly turgid penis pleased beyond known boundaries by undulating waves of muscles and finger-like protuberances, his steel-hard arousal dipping gingerly, twitching very eagerly, itching to taste the incredible sweetness and the comforting heat of each writhing figure until they climax around him, drawing him closer and closer to his nth set of thirty volleys of shuddering spurts, planting seeds freshly made from his hardworking, aching but pleasantly emptied testicles, and making sure that by the end of hours, even days of having wild unbridled sex, every single lovely Wei Ying he's met briefly in this dungeon would walk away with a belly full of rich creamy semen and a womb that carried his new flesh and blood, in twins, triplets and probably many more.

Lan Zhan truly relished in indulging his carnal instincts to father as many young as he could inside the Wei Yings that obediently approached him and spread their legs for his taking - more so, if he was told that those bodies were virgins until the point he mounted them, stayed inside them, and took his earthly pleasures, as long as he wanted to whet that insatiable appetite for young tight flesh, as long as his loins needed to complete their perennial duty to have every Wei Ying conceive the next generation of fat, healthy babies - despite his reservations of doing too much in a short span of time, he really enjoyed engaging in multiple sexual intercourses with his Wei Yings, breeding them like rabbits and other fecund adorable beasts - and then, from those dirty stories whispered into his reddened ears, his hips bucked wildly, the pleasures spiked, and his flesh-encased erection was given a passionate tug squeezed with loving tightness, and his penis became too excited - he couldn't hold back, and had to accidentally spill globs of unejaculated sperm and deposit them to where they belong, deep inside lovely fertile Wei Yings.

The black rabbit had remarked, off-hand, while cleaning up the room because it always reeked of sticky reproductive bodily fluids, that the harem it provided was of much better quality than the ten individuals the Wei siblings used to try and divert his attention from the true spouse, not too long ago. At Caihong Town, the furred creature reminded him.

A sweaty, grunting Lan Zhan had to pause at mid-fuck to remember that event - especially when one is at the thirteenth ejaculation out of thirty, and there is no way to think straight when volcanoes of pleasure were erupting left, right and center within his nervous system, with stars fluttering in his vision that had rolled back into his head, his back slamming into rosebuds erratically and earnestly, his sexually-flushed body locked in the throes of ecstasy, his silent screams drowned by animalistic, lustful howls of fulfillment that didn't sound like his own - and finally had to recall, that yes, he had fucked a twelve year old girl named Wei Ying too, and fathered a child inside him-her-it - does it really matter, again, that enigmatic gender question.

“Did you know that the twelve-year old actually went abroad to a 51st-century fertility clinic, accelerated her pregnancy from that one-night stand they had in Caihong, and gave birth to quadruplets - before going out to the streets to find more boyfriends and sleeping around with married men, then carrying more children to term, seeded by scores of your Lan-kin descendents?” the black rabbit asked with an accusing tone. Lan Zhan made an incoherent, but incredulous noise at that point; he couldn't think anymore by then.

“A sham! Everything about that low-quality degenerate harem was a sham, just as everything that the Wei siblings have done for you, for the sake of milking you for what you’re worth!” the black rabbit squeaked. By the time the promiscuous girl had sex with Lan Zhan the second time, at the outskirts of Caihong, the man was actually tricked to believe that he was having sex with a girl that carried his child - when in fact, it was someone else’s -, according to the rabbit. “A cheat! A fraud!” it squealed again in frustration of seeing his Father being taken advantage.

Masochistic Lan Zhan’s eyes rolled backwards again, because the thought of getting cuckolded in the most perverse and degrading ways started another countdown inside his swollen genitals, even before he reached spurt number thirty. His crazy deep penetrations and jackhammer-speed thrusts picked up pace, and the Wei Ying beneath him shrieked with mindless joy at being sexually brutalized. More Wei Yings lie on cushions and pillows around him and seductively wiggled their hips then spread their legs, sensing that the man was about to hit a new high - and Lan Zhan was delighted to start fucking multiple partners, a few thrusts each, deflowering more virginal Wei Yings in a fun, and very satisfying roulette game to decide who will receive his sperm and who would be left out dry.

“In fact,” the naughty black rabbit said with a hissy sound, “The entity formerly known as Ernie had spent inordinate amount of time collecting all pure-bred descendents of Lan Zhan and Wei Ying since the beginning of time; a meticulous, time-consuming process to track down every pregnancy, every birth, then using dubious or legal means, procure and safely stow them away into a wonderful hiding places such as magical rabbits’ burrows.” Some had grown, some were still adolescents, however everyone had their identities altered, concealed, so that the Kingdom would never find out the fates of these precious pedigree children of the First Fathers.

“Some of which,” the black rabbit said with a knowing wink and a toothy grin, “... are engaging in reproductive behaviours with you right now and making more downline generations of offsprings; thus securing the future of many fat, healthy blessed babies born under the surname of Lan.” At that point, Lan Zhan blinked his eyes, and seemed to have seen through a magical smokescreen of sorts - some of the lovely Wei Yings in the dungeon had faces unlike his or Wei Ying’s, but a very appealing and desirable mix of both. Bright brown eyes, chubby cheeks, the sexy mole below the lip, serious-looking brows, strong set of jaws, single or double eyelids, a potpourri of cheerful, adventurous and cheeky demeanours as compared to no-nonsense, introverted and disciplined ones, and many iterations in-between from one end of the spectrum to the other.

The implications were astounding and gobsmacking, to the man who realized that he had been bedding not only clones or copies of his lovely Wei Ying, but also their children and probably a few generations down the road. Lan Zhan felt an immense epitome of pure, unadulterated love swelling up from within - he wanted to embrace everyone in the room, as a lover, a father, a grandparent and all that - they were all his, from mind, body and soul, all making love with his seed and then growing from the same seed. His greed knew no bounds, when his masculinity skyrocketed to new unheard-of dimensions, and his beard, moustache and body hair suddenly grew a couple more inches - hormones surging, he surely had to breed every male and female in the room before the next sunrise because his mind was already immersed in fantasies of creating a multi-generational harem - the ultimate glory for the Supreme Grand Patriarch Lan Wang Ji and his undefeatable champion loins.

He raised his arms as a gesture to ‘come to papa’, and all naked Wei Yings - male, female, virginal, pregnant - lay down to spread their legs in an unholy but visually stimulating worship for their one and only King-God-Patriarch; Lan Zhan then leapt with the greatest joy a man could ever experience, dove in with a hunger for an ocean of the greatest sensations to pleasure his body, and gave in to the sweet, sweet surrender of endless lovemaking, of tasting the delectable fruits of his labour now that he knew where those juicy tender morsels came from, and of fathering more children that truly, in a visceral and genetic sense, belonged only to him.

The black rabbit cackled and continued to mop the dungeon's floor filled with spent passions and spilled lusts. "In the end, does it really matter?" it asked, to no one's answer.

.

There were eyes and ears everywhere in the slums, and generally, the denizens of the Underworld would be glad to get rid of another competition, or to tip off the local police and security guards in exchange for some cigarettes or a fistful of hell bank notes. Thus, Wei Ying decided to hurry off to the western edge of town, furthest away from the terrifying foot of the hills leading up to Ten Courts, the Mountains and the Cliffs.

The western part of the slums were frontier lands, unexplored borders to the wilderness of the Underworld, which Wei Ying had never set foot in before. There were forests of dead trees, creepy-looking gnarly branches, hidden grotesque faces on tree barks, and plenty of trip-prone twisted roots above ground. The ground was caked with mud due to perpetual tree rot, unyielding thorny bushes that seem to claw at people's clothes, and carnivorous plants that snap and bite at unsuspecting wanderers; there are unidentifiable masses of grisly dried bloody remains around, with flies hovering above; while winds that blow through to spread the stench become whistling screams and screeches filled with agony and ear-splitting terror; the scenery was still palatable to the man, as it reminded him of his former home in the Burial Mounds, two decades ago.

As he walked, memories of the past surfaced - the happier and simpler times he spent with the Wen survivors, of raising A-Yuan with his cheeky ways including burying the boy like planting a radish, of getting scolded by Wen Qing for not acting his age, of sampling the Wens' homemade fruit wines and cuisine, of parting with Jiang Cheng but not before getting the privilege of seeing his shijie in her magnificent golden-red wedding gown, and soon, he became engrossed with reminiscing his youthful days, when the idea of Twin Heroes of Yunmeng was something he looked forward to, with the elder sister cheering them on from behind, and steaming bowls of their favourite lotus root pork rib soup being served almost every other day with no complaints from either of the boys.

Wei Ying didn't realize that he'd walked into a clearing and nearly fell into a pool of water - a river in the middle of the forest - because it was so dark, because one's senses were easily confused by the echoey screams, and because everything smelled ancient and musty, with a hint of damp fungi and rotting vegetation. He yelped loudly and swung his arms crazily to regain his balance at the edge with one foot hanging off the riverbank - fortunately the waterway looked very calm and quite shallow, though a little murky in colour.

“Mister, mister (先生; xian sheng), please do not fall, otherwise your spirit-body will be drenched by these acidic liquids that drain from the Great Western Misty Mountains of Thousand Year Unrepented Dead, and you will suffer unbearable pain. You will not be able to find safe passage to reincarnation if that happens.”

Wei Ying stumbled back to safety and for a moment, his imaginary heart raced so fast that he thought he might die his second time with a heart attack. He fell to the ground with a thump and looked up - there was a maiden in white linen robes, nearly the same as the ones he had when he first arrived in the Underworld, her face veiled by a straw hat with a layer of silk sewed to its edge. She was a ferrywoman of sorts - she stood, alone, in a boat made of reeds, and she held a long stick to use as a paddle.

“Mister, please get onboard, so that you can be on your way,” the soft, gentle voice said. Wei Ying’s ears pricked, the hairs on the nape rose, and he felt goosebumps all over - there was something familiar, soothing, nostalgic, dearly missed in the graceful, recognizable yet long-forgotten timbre. He held his breath, his fingers trembled as he reached for the source of that voice - and crawled on his knees into the boat, his eyes never left the sight of the white silk that hid a face he truly, madly wanted to, but was too afraid of, with hopes as high as the heavens and disappointment that awaited deeper than Hell - the sturdy boat held two persons’ weight well and hardly swayed as Wei Ying remained on his knees, staring up at the lady that he was sure, based on the voice alone, the outline of her image, the graceful hands that started to weave the long paddle in patterns he’d seen from fishermen and boatmen from his ancestral lakeside hometown, nevermind that her robes were a little too large, regardless if he couldn’t really confirm that it was truly her--

“... shijie ...?”

From a distance, cows moo’ed, horses neigh’ed, men shouted menacingly through the dense, perilous forests, interspersed with the barking of fearsome bloodhounds that the Underworld guards sometimes bring along with them for ever-night hunts for misbehaving lost spirits. The reed boat slowly sailed downstream, away from land, away from the dangers of the unforgiving Underworld.

Notes for the Chapter:

Please put in a Kudos if you appreciate the existence of this fic!

Chapter 129

At one point, Wei Ying was on the verge of tears out of sorrow and frustration, but then, he reminded himself that this wasn't really the shijie he knew , rather, this was the person that her spirit had become .

Jiang Yan Li - at least that's how Wei Ying saw her, after he sneaked a hand behind and pulled off the straw hat and its silk veil; surprisingly, she did not flinch or shriek, as what any respectable gu niang would do when her appearance (also, beauty) is forcibly revealed by a man, no less. Wei Ying's shijie seemed to have been brainwashed and her memory wiped out, which is often the case for spirits who try to move between realms, or in her case, deliberately made to forget and stay that way after remaining in the Underworld for far too long. Wei Ying couldn't blame anyone, since he knew a fair bit about how the Underworld works, and the current state of his shijie wasn't his fault - it was the product of a dead civilization that had evolved alongside the living.

The Underworld population consists mainly of those employed by the government - civil servants, soldiers, guards and officials -, the people that make up the bulk of the Underworlders - families, workers, businessmen, professionals, slum dwellers and the lot -, and the lowest of them all, the unwanted - lost spirits, feral hungry ghosts, beasts and so on. The spirits who transit through the world only to be shepherded through the Ten Courts, then up the Mountains to receive his/her judgement, before leaping off the Cliffs for a spectacular finale, were considered as non-persons; however, depending on various circumstances such as their innate capabilities, fortunes, status, family background, level of filial piety, reverence by religious figures, accumulated heroic or bad deeds, the ability to bribe and pay off officials for freedom, or even special requests from the government, such transitioning spirits can be effortlessly 'plucked out from the queues along bright white lines, and assigned either a role with the government (usually to fill a vacancy, when the former job holder's spirit extinguishes naturally when the time has come, or when he/she is finally reincarnated), or be admitted into the Underworld as a deserving citizen to enjoy a fairly comfortable eternal afterlife (usually by pulling certain strings held by powerful clans and their ancestors, such as the Li's).

Wei Ying understood that his shijie's strength lies in her kindness, and that strength must have carried well with her even in death. The Underworld is a cruel place, one that is filled with perpetual darkness and all things psychologically damaging, creepy crawly, disgusting, poisonous and deadly. Spirits who overstayed are known to be inflicted with so much anguish and sadness, that they easily lose their humanity and go berserk - one only has to look at the new arrivals to gauge how deteriorated people's conditions are initially, and imagine what would happen, say, in just three days' time. Thus, the Underworld government has a policy of selecting the nicest and kindest spirits, then take away their memories of the past, and employ them to welcome visitors to the dreadful realm - an analogy would be the hospitality and service industry of the 21st century, with pretty, young and sweet receptionists, waitresses and air hostesses to welcome people and placate any potentially aggressive or hostile behaviours and thoughts.

Wei Ying tried to talk to Yan Li, but he received what he thought were automated responses - he kept hitting brick walls such as,

“You must be mistaken, I'm not from any sect or clan, and have been working here for as long as I can remember, so I'm not your shijie. You can call me jiejie since you're such a sweet boy, and that's alright even though I don't know you personally. Please, Mister, stay in the boat and don't leave your fingers hanging out on the edges, as there are skeletal possessed fishes and snapping vampiric turtles lurking beneath the waters.”

“I’m sorry, but I don’t understand what you say about... Yun... Meng?... or, the Jiang family... or these strange stories about having parents, siblings, marriage and even a son. I’m just a ferrywoman working for the Underworld government; I have no past, and at present, I give free rides to any lost spirits to the Ten Courts just down the river... Oh, Mister, please do not lean too much on the side or try to step out! The acidic waters are very painful to the touch! Please remain seated during the trip.”

and,

“I appreciate your kind comments about my appearance, but I’m just a nameless ferrywoman. I take any spirits who found their way into the woods, back to the Ten Courts; it’s been my job for many, many years, and I don’t know anything beyond that. Oh, listen to the peaceful, tranquil forests around us, with not even a bird or an insect in sight! Please sit back and relax during this boat trip. We will surely arrive at your destination soon, Mister.”

Wei Ying stared at his shijie with a frown and growing impatience. He’d seen his reflection on the surface of the dark acidic waters and knew he looked recognizable from anywhere, so this confirmed his suspicions that the shijie had been mind-wiped and was left a mere shell of her former self; her soft and captivating voice, her graceful smile and bright glistening dark-brown eyes were still there, her complexion was a little pale, her cheeks a little sunken, and there was a splotch of blood on her chest and her back - wounds that would never heal, and continued to seep through her clean, neat white linen robes; she looked just like the day she fell into his and Jiang Cheng’s arms in the Nightless City, nearly two decades ago, and as beautiful as the perfect maiden corpse that deserved the grandest funeral that the Jin and Jiang families would have made for her.

Finally, he sighed in defeat. He thought he wouldn't be able to turn around his shijie 's situation, and worse, he was on a one-way trip to the one place he hoped to avoid - the Ten Courts and onward to reincarnation - but there was nowhere else to run in the river of acidic death and agony.

“ Jie jie , this boat ride will take some time, so please, let me tell a story. You only have to listen while rowing the boat. It would greatly appease the hurt in my spirit if you could indulge in my request,” he said with a pleading voice and a desperate, pining look on his face. Of course Yan Li could never refuse such an innocent request, and what more, from such a polite and needy man. She nodded, so Wei Ying gladly adjusted his cross-legged sitting position, and took a deep breath.

